the latter brig is said to have had some supernumeraries in her. Both brigs were gallantly fought, and it is admitted that the Boxer was not given up too soon."

Mr. Cooper could publish that the Pelican was about one-fourth larger than the American Argus; why not equally authentic respecting the Enterprise, and declare that she was more than a third larger than the British Boxer? Why, with ungenerous prevarication, say that the Enterprise "had probably also a few more men than the Boxer," when James, whom Cooper never contradicts or confutes, states that the American had double the crew of the British? Why hesitate to enumerate the known number killed in the Boxer, viz., the Commander and three men? Because the prisoners received on board the Enterprise, amounting to 62, and the four killed, would demonstrate that her crew actually on board at the commencement of the action consisted of 66 persons only. Why not attribute the loss of the British Boxer on this occasion to the absence of the officers, as he did the loss of the American *Argus? Because TRUTH is too bright a standard for exhibition in his American Naval History!—TRISTRAM. (To be continued.)

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I have just read, in a work entitled "The Victories of the British Army," the account of the Battle of Waterloo; and I confess it has filled me with astonishment. I little expected to find Mr. Maxwell having recourse to some of the earlier histories of that victory, indeed, almost literally transcribing their remarks, and thus assisting to perpetuate the errors in which they abound. As an instance of the latter failing, I may advert to his description of the repulse of the last attack made by the Imperial Guard, in which he says (p. 186)—"With the 42d and 95th, the British leader threw himself on Ney's flank, and rout and destruction succeeded." It is a pity he did not apply to some Waterloo man for information on this point, when he would have been told that the 42d Reg. was in a totally different part of the field, and was not in any way concerned in that attack; and if it was his wish to particularise the regiments so thrown "forward upon Ney's flank," he ought to have named the 52d and 71st Regiments, and the 2d and 3d battalions of the 95th Reg. (the 1st battalion of the latter corps was also in quite a different part of the field). But the whole affair is most incorrectly and confusedly described. Of the Duke's admirable retreat on the 17th from Quatre Bras to the position at Waterloo, he absolutely knows nothing! He merely presents to the public a meagre and imperfect outline of the campaign, which may pass with civilians, but cannot be otherwise than most unsatisfactory to Military men. His work should have been entitled "Outlines of British Victories." As regards the battle of Waterloo, it does not contain a single new feature, and is altogether a very sorry affair, utterly unworthy of Maxwell's pen. MILES.

THE ARMY AND NAVY CLUB.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Permit me to ask, through the columns of your influential journal, whether the Army and Navy Club is merely an Irish club? Of five provincial papers, only one English print is taken, while there are three Irish, and two of them of the most obscure class. Now, Sir, this is monstrous, and I dare say if any one were told that such papers as the Newagh Guardian were taken, when there is not a single print from the midland counties or universities of England, it would hardly be believed. It is, nevertheless, true; and it seems useless to ask for anything better. This is the reason why I address this letter to you, well knowing that a public (and if necessary repeated) notice of the affair will prove beneficial to the members at large. Why is there not an Oxford paper? There is hardly a Parisian or Berlin club without the newspapers of the English seats of learning, and these prints are even to be found at the petty coffee-houses. ARISTIDES.

THE NAVY LIST.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I think, out of respect to all officers under the Crown, the Navy List ought to give as much information as possible, but this is not the case now, if it was once. Steele used to give the principal officers and others who resided in our Naval yards, the dates of their appointment and profession; Murray, I believe, continued it for a short time, but now the only master artisan mentioned is the shipwright. How is this, Sir? When a tradesman gains the height of his profession under the Crown, he should be noticed as such in the Navy List. Likewise there should be a column set apart for all Masters of Trades, with the dates of their seniority; this would make it complete, and be the means of selling a few more of the Navy Lists. I will relate a circumstance, which will show men do not like neglect in any form. I called on a friend of mine the other day at Woolwich, and, in the course of conversation, I happened to ask him for Murray's List. His answer was, "I have not one. When Mr. Murray thinks proper to notice my office and appointment, then, and not till then, will I patronise his List!" A SUBSCRIBER.

* James—"The Boxer had eight seamen absent in a prize, and the only passenger (an Army Officer), her Surgeon, and two Mids, on shore 'shooting pigeons' at Manhegan. The Acting Master's Mate and three seamen, as proved at the Court-Martial, 'to have withdrawn themselves from the engagement through cowardice, negligence, or disaffection.' Her Commander was killed, and she had but one Lieutenant to perform all the various duties of the absent Commander and officers, whilst the Enterprise, after her Commander was wounded, had two Lieutenants, and five Mids to carry on the action and manœuvres."

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 8.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Can it be fair or just that gentlemen, who have served their country for a number of years in all climates, should be subject to having their warrants taken from them, and their prospects for ever damned, by their Captain's representations to the Commander-in-Chief and Admiralty and dismissal of them from the service without a Court-Martial? It is too much power to place in the hands of any one man. All men have their prejudices, and may listen to and believe reports affecting the character of an officer, that are without the slightest foundation. It is injurious to the service in more ways than one, as a Captain can, by an unfavourable report, get any Mate or Midshipman discharged from the service, so he can protect any one that may be a friend or relation, however unworthy he may be to continue in it. What are the consequences? That I know many in the service who have committed thefts, forged bills, and done several other disgraceful things that would have sent them to the gallows or to New South Wales for life, in place of their being in the service to this day, promoted over the heads of honest men. Suppose an old Commander to have a youngster under his charge, upon whose father he is dependent for promotion; he will do all in his power to serve him, and will, as I have known it happen, protect him, when he ought to have been discharged from the service. This young man is the son of Lord A. or B., and wanting to have a cruise on shore, finds he has no money; he is by disposition a thief, and breaks open a messmate's desk, where he finds and helps himself to whatever money he wants; he is found out and reported, but the matter is hushed up by his refunding, or being removed into another ship, as the Commander is afraid of losing his promotion. Now had it been the custom to try Mates and Midshipmen by a Court-Martial when they commit a breach of the Articles of War, the person whose box was broken open would have written for a Court-Martial, and the expectant Commander would not have been in danger of losing his promotion. I know twenty instances in the service of persons committing thefts, &c., who are still in it; one, the son of a peer, robbed a dozen people before they could get him discharged.

Having mentioned a Court-Martial, I will say a few words upon the subject, although it is too grave for my pen to dwell long upon, and worthy of the consideration of older heads than mine. I will ask one question—Can any good arise from justice being difficult, nay almost impossible to be obtained? And it always must remain so, until, like the sister service, all grades of officers compose a Court-Martial. Surely we are not deficient to them in intellect. According to the present system, it is scarcely even possible to assemble Captains sufficient for the purpose on foreign stations, and to do so must be detrimental to the service, by recalling ships from different parts of the station where they are required to protect the British interest. Look to the recent case of the Lily; her services have been lost to the country for twelve months, for the very reason that I have now given. Because Captains could not be found on the African station to compose a Court-Martial, she was obliged to return to England, during which time a good and zealous officer is kept under arrest.

I have no doubt that there are numbers of Captains on the list, who seldom or ever composed a Court-Martial in their lives; suppose one of them to go out in command of a ship on a foreign station, and find himself Senior Captain; in event of a Court-Martial being ordered by the Commander-in-Chief, he becomes President; can he be a fit person for so responsible a situation? Now it all grades of officers were liable to be called upon, it is reasonable to suppose that they would not arrive at that rank without having composed many. I have now done with the subject, hoping the day is not far distant when there will be an alteration in Naval jurisprudence. Z. Z.

TEETH.

MR. CLARK, SURGEON DENTIST (late assistant to Mr. Cartwright), respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the Profession on the most modern and scientific principles.

23, Sackville-street, Piccadilly; and E. Clark, 19, Old Steine, Brighton. At home from Ten till Five.

WHITE'S ESSENCE OF EGLANTINE.

A highly fashionable and peculiar Handkerchief Scent, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, durable, and refreshing. In Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 8s., and in elegant Toilette Bottles, 14s. each.

WHITE'S AROMATIC PUNGENT ESSENCE.—So exceedingly useful in Head-aches, Fainting, &c., and particularly reviving in crowded or sick rooms. In neat stoppered Bottles enclosed in Morocco Cases, at 3s. each.

The above prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. And now Sold by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the Kingdom.

COOL SOFT HANDS.—BURTON'S SAND WASH BALLS, recommended highly by the profession, for removing that redness and natural inclination to heat of the skin at this season of the year to ladies gardening and gentlemen cricketing, rowing, &c., or where any exertion is taken, so prejudicial to the hands of the superior classes, the Sand Balls at once remove any hardness or bad consequences to the skin produced thereby, and leave it pleasingly soft, cool, and pliable.—Sold at 1s. each, or 10s. per dozen, by all Perfumers, &c., and by the inventor, H. Burton (late Berry and Burton), at his Original Old Brown Windsor Soap and Wash Ball Manufactory, 18, Greek-st. Soho-square, London.

Sole Proprietor of the late S. Berry's Palm Soap.

A STOVE on PRINCIPLES ENTIRELY NEW, and UNEQUALLED for COMFORT and ECONOMY. By HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.—The Chunk Patent Stove, invented by Mr. B. Prosser, Civil Engineer, is distinguished from all others by its entire freedom from dust or smoke, its great economy of fuel, and its perfect safety from fire. It has been a source of great comfort in the nursery and bed-room of the invalid, affording an uniform temperature through the day and night, with only one supply, while the most delicate test cannot detect anything arising from its use which is injurious to health; it merely warms the air without decomposing it; and, as there is no door, none of the gases generated by combustion can pass into the apartment. Wherever warmth is required, this stove is applicable. It is as desirable for the drawing room as for the laundry; for warming greenhouses it possesses extraordinary claims, the very great expense of building flues, and afterwards the immense consumption of fuel being avoided. For workshops and ships' cabins it is invaluable; it requires attention once in twenty-four hours, during which time the cost will not exceed twopence. Price plain, 3l.; fluted, 3l. 16s. Manufactured by the sole proprietors, Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street. Of whom may be had, detailed catalogues of the prices of fenders, fire-irons, warranted table cutlery, superior nickel silver, &c., 20 per cent. under any other old-established house, and can be forwarded for a single postage. Established 1829.

THE AWFUL EFFECTS OF FIRE.—The frequent occurrence of Fire from Accidents, Carelessness, or from Incendiarism, is enough to rouse the attention of every thinking mind. The greatest impediment to the extinguishing of Fires in London is the want of an immediate supply of Water; and in the Country Engines are seldom in a state fit for immediate use. J. RAND begs to inform the Public that he has made such improvements in his DOUBLE-ACTION ENGINES suitable for Villages, Mansions, Factories, &c., that a powerful Engine will pass through a doorway three feet wide. They are also adapted for Steam-vessels, Sailing-yachts, &c., as they are so portable as not to occupy a larger space than the Trunk which contains the cable-chain; and may be instantly conveyed to any part of the deck. With a Suction-tube to reach the Water, and a proper length of discharge Hose, water may be thrown to any part of a Steam-vessel or Merchant-ship, for extinguishing Fire or for wetting the Sails.—May be seen and proved at 35, Regent Circus, Piccadilly.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 4s. each; cane seat ditto, 8s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; leather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 28s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 14s. each.

INDIGESTION and DIARRHŒA.—The ill effects of eating imprudently of fruit, shell-fish, and other food of an irritable nature to the bowels, are immediately removed by a wine-glass dose or two of a pleasant and palatable remedy, BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB, the only equally agreeable and efficacious form in which that invaluable medicine, Rhubarb, can be administered. From its specific tendency to assist, rather than force the efforts of nature, it is rapidly superseding the baneful use of deleterious and violent purgatives, which too often aggravate the diseases they are expected to cure. Sold in Bottles at 1s. 6d. and 2s. 9d., by J. King, Proprietor, 73, Queen-street, Cheapside; Sibley, Farringdon-street; and all Chemists.

OXYGENOUS AERATED WATER.—SEARLE'S PATENT.—This most salutary beverage is a condensed and sparkling solution of Vital Air as it exists in the Nitrous Oxide of Sir Humphry Davy, and possesses in a moderate degree the exhilarating properties of that gas upon the system. It is accordingly recommended to the Depressed in Spirits, to the Debilitated, and to the Exhausted by fatigue, too late hours, or intense application to business. The sufferers by Asthma and the Dyspeptic have derived singular benefit by its use, as well as the Consumptive. It possesses also the antacid qualities of Soda Water, and may be taken at all times by the most delicate. Manufactured by the Patentee, No. 8, Fitzroy-street, and sold at 6s. per dozen by all respectable Chemists in London; and by Brew and Co., Brighton; Maddock, Tonbridge Wells; Twenterow, Leamington; Tylee and Co., Bath; Ferris and Co., Bristol; Spence, York; Law, Manchester; Greville, Northampton; Butler, Edinburgh; and King, Rochester.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.—IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French Physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by Rheumatism and Paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies, had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by appointment of JEAN LEFAY, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries, if by letter, post paid, respecting it, and also shew letters received from numerous patients who have benefited by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London, carriage free. Sold in pots at 4s. 6d. each.

Notice.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name, "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

THIS Elegant, Fragrant, and Pellucid Oil—is in Universal High Repute for its unequalled Restorative, Preservative, and Beautifying Properties. It prevents HAIR from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life; changes grey hair to it original colour, fixes it from scurf, and renders it beautifully Soft, Curly, and Glossy. In dressing Hair, it keeps it firm in the curl, uninjured by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To Children it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a beautiful Head of Hair.

CAUTION.—Ask for "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," and observe that each bottle is (with a Treatise on the Hair, 31st edition,) inclosed in a Wrapper, on which are their Names and Address, in Red, thus— A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, Counter-signed, ALEX. ROWLAND.

The lowest price is 3s. 6d.—the next price is 7s.—family bottles, containing four small, 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

Impostors call their trash the GENUINE, and omit the "&" in the signature, offering it for sale under the lure of being cheap.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. 'JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 13, 1838."

From Bransby B. Cooper, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases, with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1835."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

CAUTION.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application.—The universally acknowledged efficacy of this extraordinary, safe, and never-failing remedy for the speedy and certain cure of Corns and Bunions, however obstinate and long standing, induces the Proprietor of this highly important chemical discovery, to caution the Public against base and spurious imitations, injurious in their effects, and most dangerous to those who, either through ignorance or the fraudulent pretences of others, are induced to apply them.

The Proprietor has received Testimonials from the most respectable Families in the Kingdom; the genuine has the signature of J. A. SHARWOOD on the outside wrapper. Sold at 55, Bishopsgate Without; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and most Medicine Venders.

ADVICE to the BRITISH SOLDIER.

By a NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER.

"Mr John Fletcher, Quartermaster-Serjeant of the 59th Regiment, the author of this moral manual for the young soldier, is evidently well informed on the subject he undertakes to expound, and peculiarly well qualified to apply that knowledge to the benefit of those to whom it is addressed. It points out, correctly, to the soldier how he should conduct himself under every circumstance likely to befall him, and what advantages would probably follow such praiseworthy behaviour, and it would form the most appropriate present that a kind hearted officer could give to the men under his command. We are pleased to see that the authorities at the Horse Guards have appointed the author to a commission."—Freemason's Quarterly Review.

Advantages of this Association.

An ample subscribed capital for the security of the assured with the eventual advantages of a mutual life association.

Assurers admitted to the same rights as the shareholders, and eligible to become Directors and Auditors.

Four-fifths of the profits divided every five years, by addition to policies, or reduction of premiums.

Advances made to be assured, on giving security for future premiums and interest.

An important and peculiar feature in this Association is, that the assurers may reside in any part of the globe either by paying an extra premium, or at their option, by an arrangement for a stipulated deduction from the sum assured in case of death abroad, but for Europe, Australia, the Cape of Good Hope, or the British Possessions in North America, no extra premium or deduction is incurred.

Premiums may be paid quarterly, half-yearly, or annually.

ANNUITY BRANCH.

THE PURCHASERS OF ANNUITIES are treated as a separate body, their funds are kept distinct from those of the Life Association, and, in addition to the following advantageous Scale of Rates, four-fifths of the profits are divided among the annuitants every three years by way of bonus.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.
FROM COLONEL GALLOWAY, C.B., OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

THE ELECTION of a DIRECTOR of the EAST INDIA COMPANY, to FILL the VACANCY occasioned by the death of Josias Du Pré Alexander, Esq., being fixed for Wednesday, the 11th September, I beg to intimate my determination to PROCEED to the BALLOT on that day.

The time is now arrived when I stand in need of your effectual aid. The very numerous promises I have received justly afford me that most confident hope of success; and, at this crisis, I most respectfully and earnestly beg to submit to you that, though your Army of Bengal is your principal Army, on which the stability of the Government in India depends, yet there is no individual in the Direction who has ever belonged to it.

I have the honour to remain,
With the highest esteem and gratitude,
Your obliged and most faithful servant,
A. GALLOWAY, Colonel, Bengal Army.

4, Upper Harley-street, September 7, 1839.

SHOOTING SEASON, 1839.
F. JOYCE'S ANTI-CORROSIVE PERCUSSION CAPS

SPORTSMEN are respectfully informed, that to prevent the recurrence of those distressing accidents which so frequently happen from the use of imperfect and unsafe Caps, and seconded by the wishes of a number of those engaged in the Gun Trade, he has reduced the price to 2s. to 3s 6d. per box, signed and sealed as usual, and trusts that this reduction will induce those who now resort to the use of low-priced caps to consider the value of the risk they inevitably run in so doing. To do all that lies in his power, F. J. has taken off a similar per centage from the former wholesale price, thus reducing the cost of the best goods, on which perfect reliance can be placed, to within a trifle of the sum usually paid for those dangerous articles frequently sold to the detriment both of consumer and retailer. May be had of Messrs. Blanch, Gracechurch Street; Beckwith, Skinner Street; Stevens, High Holborn; Parker, High Holborn; Reilly, Holborn; Green, Leicester Square; London, London Wall; Benton, Strand; Tetham, Charing Cross.

Purchasers are requested to observe the name of F. Joyce, original inventor and sole manufacturer, on each sealed packet.—This precaution is rendered necessary by some unprincipled individuals having imitated the labels and wrappers.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY REQUISITES. ISAAC LEVY, Successor to E. Levy, No. 2, Hemming's Row, [illegible] Begs to call the attention of [illegible] Levy, &c., to his Old Established [illegible] every article of Naval and Military [illegible] Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, [illegible] Officers and others attending [illegible] supplied with every article required.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 188, New Bond-street, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 188, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much-approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At Metcalfe's, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

Portsmouth, Sept. 13.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Lily returned to Spithead on Friday evening, for the purpose of trying the Gunner, Mr. W. Penny, by a Court-Martial, for disobedience of orders and absenting himself without leave: this Court-Martial took place on board the Britannia on Tuesday, and the result was, that Mr. Penny, in consequence of his long services and previous good character, was only adjudged to be dismissed the Lily, and mulcted of three months' pay. It was intended that the brig should put to sea immediately after; but she is detained at Spithead, in consequence of the illness of the Commander. The Admiralty concluded their business at this port on Saturday (on that morning they attended the examination of the Mates studying at the College, and were highly gratified with it), and arranged to have gone to Plymouth in the afternoon by the Firebrand, but Lord Minto was telegraphed to London; and as it blew great guns on Saturday evening, Sir C. Adam and Sir W. Parker, with the staff, remained snug in port until Sunday morning, when the party separated, Lord Minto and Mr. Tufnell going to London, and the others to Devonport. They sent the Phœnix to the Downs, to take in tow and bring round a lighter having Mr. P. Thomson's baggage on board. This done, she (the Phœnix) went into harbour to have her mizen-mast removed and some slight alteration made in her after-rails; when this is done, which may be this afternoon or to-morrow, she will go to the North Coast of Spain to land some Marines, and afterwards proceed to the Mediterranean. On Monday a Court-Martial was held on board the Britannia, Rear-Adm. the Hon. P. P. Bouverie being President, for the trial of Second Lieut. Rider, of the Marines embarked on board the Madagascar, on eight charges produced by her Captain (Wallis), principally of unofficer-like and ungentlemanly conduct. This affair occupied all Monday and part of Tuesday; and the end of it was, that six of the charges were proved, and Lieut. Rider, in consequence of his youth and inexperience, was only sentenced to be severely reprimanded and placed at the bottom of the list of Second Lieutenants of Marines. The Madagascar returned stores, cleared ship, and was paid off yesterday. Pique was paid wages on Tuesday. In the evening Mr. P. Thomson and Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. Jackson, and their Staff, came down. Their baggage, &c. were taken on board by the Fearless steamer, and this morning, the Right Hon. Gentleman and the gallant General having embarked, the frigate put to sea; she is to return with Lieut.-General Sir J. Colborne and staff, if they think fit to do so. Edinburgh was paid wages on Thursday, having been previously inspected by Admiral Fleming; she has her orders for Lisbon, and then to the Mediterranean, and will probably get away in the morning. Melville is also ready, or Monday to Plymouth, and if she can there obtain men to complete her crew, will also be sent to Lisbon. Athol troop-ship is here from the eastward with stores; she is to take in some provisions and bread from Gravil, and return to Sheerness. Avon got back from Cork on Tuesday, having landed the last draft of the 67th on Saturday: she has gone to Chatham, to take part of the 27th depot from that garrison to Cork. Stromboli is cuppered, and has been moved into the basin; she is rigging by the Master, and some of the people belonging to the Victory, and when ready Mr. Armstrong is to take charge of her, and navigate her to Glasgow for machinery, boilers, &c. Rattlesnake is out of dock, and will be ready for sea next week. Several parts of beams, deck-timbers, &c. &c., have been landed at the Dock-yard jetty, being such portions of the wreck of the Royal George as Colonel Pasley has already succeeded in detaching. He is now going to adopt small charges, and, in consequence, Mr. Stebbing, of Portsmouth, has orders to make twenty cylinders, each capable of containing 260lbs. of gunpowder; they are more handy than the large cylinder, and less liable to accident; they are at work on the wreck this day. Cracker cutter is here to refit. Hercules is expected in on her way to Sheerness to be paid off. Ships in Port—Edinburgh, Blenheim, Lily, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Phœnix, Athol, Rattlesnake, Messenger, Cracker, in harbour.

Plymouth, Sept. 12.—(From our own Correspondent.)—6th—Arrived Netley, tender to Impregnable, from Falmouth. Sailed the Tor lighter, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard. 7th—Sailed Goodwill lighter, with stores for Portsmouth and Chatham Dock-yards. The Partridge, 10, Lieut.-Com. Wm. Morris (a), moved from the harbour, and anchored between the island and main. 9th—Arrived Firebrand st.-v., Mr. J. Saunders, Master, from Portsmouth, with Vice-Adm. Sir Charles Adam, and Rear-Adm. Sir Wm. Parker, accompanied by Sir Wm. Symonds, surveyor of the Navy, on their annual official visit. On entering the Sound they received the usual salutes from the Impregnable and the garrison; before they landed at the dock-yard, they visited the Breakwater and Bovisand. The three following days they visited and inspected all the public departments, mustered the artificers in the dock-yard and the Ordinary. Sailed Swale, tender to the Astræa, for Falmouth, with stores, and returned to this port on the 12th, embarked a detachment of troops the following day, to relieve those on duty at Pendennis Castle, and sailed immediately on her return to Falmouth. 10th—Sailed Boadicea transport, with 200 convicts for Bermuda. 12th—Hecla st.-v., Lieut.-Com. J. B. Cragg, was paid wages and sailed for the W. Indies. Arrived Exmouth, outward-bound East Indiaman; in working down channel, and during a heavy fog, she got on shore near the Mewstone; there being a little wind, and a flood-tide making, she was soon got off again; it is said she must be taken into dock to have her bottom examined before she proceeds on her voyage. Nimrod, 20, lately paid off at this port, is ordered to be brought forward for re-commission. Blenheim, 72, Capt. Sephouse, is daily expected here to complete her complement. Hastings, 72, Capt. J. Lawrence, has sailed from Lisbon for the Mediterranean. It is expected the Belleisle, 72, Capt J. T. Nicolas, will sail on the 14th inst. for Lisbon. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Apollo, Carron st.-v. In Barnpool—Belleisle. At the Island—Partridge.

Deptford, Sept. 11.—Sailed the Crescent to take emigrants from Dublin, and the Canton for Portsmouth, to embark convicts. Remain Sovereign and Numa transports, the former for Rio Janeiro; Nautilus and Woodbridge convict-ships, the former has embarked her guard.

13th Sept.—The Lords of the Admiralty will leave Plymouth for Falmouth in the course of the day,

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Monday and Tuesday:—Messrs. Henry Chads, R. W. Courtenay, and M. Burrows, Edinburgh; Mr. A. Wilmshurst, late Wanderer; Mr. John Pode, Hercules; Mr. H. J. Douglas, Caryafort; Mr. C. T. Bench, Belleisle; Mr. G. C. Kerr, Britannia.

The Wanderer at Sheerness is daily expected to be commissioned,

H.M.S. Edinburgh.—Much has been said of equipping and getting ships ready for sea. The Edinburgh came out of dock with a clean-swept hold on Friday the 23d August, embarked all her guns and stores, re-shipped her men, and was ready to sail in perfect order out of harbour on the 30th. Is not this a proof there are still men ready and willing to serve as in olden times?

The subscribers to Lloyd's are about presenting an elegant and appropriate medal to Lieut. David Rymer, R.N., as a lasting mark of their approbation of his great exertions and conduct in rescuing the crew of the Margaret of Dundee, wrecked in Berwick Bay, 8th April, 1838.

The Rima has arrived at Sheerness from the coast of Yorkshire, and having received more marines and guns on board, will, when refitted, resume her above station for fishing protection.

The Fearless steamer has towed the Adventure naval transport from Woolwich to Sheerness, to be fitted out in lieu of the Diligence, which requires thorough repair. The Fearless has returned to Woolwich.

The Crescent frigate (46) is taken into the basin at Sheerness, to be fitted as a depot for captured slaves, and to lay as such at Rio Janeiro, which will prevent any poor slaves captured on that coast being sent all the way back to Sierra Leone. They will be placed on board the Crescent until they can be apprenticed or sent back (should they wish it) to their own country. An immense trade in slaves has long been carried on in South America, from Mozambique and coast of Africa. The Crescent will be fitted with the Raleigh's rigging, sails, and masts.

An English sailor, says an Alexandria letter of 16th ult., was ill-treated, a few days since, and wounded by a Turkish sailor. The British Consul and the Captain of the ship to which the man belonged went immediately to the Pacha, and required that the culprit should be punished. He was directly taken and subjected to the bastinade; but the English sailor having afterwards died of his wounds, the Turk was tried, condemned, and hung.

TOULON, Sept. 5.—The Castor, commanded by Lieut. Serval, quitted Constantinople on the 23d ult. At her departure the French and English squadrons were anchored at Cape Besicha, coast of Troy. Their amount is as follows:—

	Ships of the Line.	Frigates.	Corvettes.	Steamers.
English	10	1	3	0
French	7	1	1	3

Total—35 sail. But as the anchorage is not sure in bad weather, if the squadron do not go up to Constantinople, they will be obliged to winter in the Gulf of Smyrna.

Sir W. Burnett, the Physician-General of the Fleet, is on an official tour of inspection of the hospital departments in the several ports in the kingdom.

The Earl of Minto, and three other Lords of the Admiralty, have visited Chatham, and inspected the Erebus and the Terror, previous to their voyage to the North Pole.

The Stag, Orestes, Sparrow, and Wizard, were all well on the South American station on the 18th July.

LISBON, Sept. 2.—In Port—Donegal, Hercules, and Hastings.

MALTA, Aug. 21.—In Port—Ceylon and Hydra. Volcano, Acheron, Blazer, Hermes, and Megæra steamers.

The Navy will be gratified to learn that a flag-officer, distinguished as well for benevolence and humanity, as for valour in the service of his country, has lately expressed his determination to contribute 500*l.* towards founding an institution for providing for the daughters of Naval Officers a superior education, combined with religious instruction in the tenets of the Church of England: whereby they may be qualified, not only to fulfil with propriety the important duties of wives and mothers, but also to become competent instructors of the youth of their own sex, in families of respectability and distinction. Those who are acquainted with the difficulties that Naval Officers have to contend with, in procuring for their children, in England, even an ordinary education; and who know that in the free schools of France and Belgium, whither they are compelled to resort (in which the French language is the medium of general instruction), they often lose their native language, their religion, and that love of home which a foreign education always impairs or destroys; will appreciate the feelings which have dictated so munificent and benevolent an offer, and the benefits that the proposed institution would confer upon the rising generation, and upon the whole of the Naval service.

On the evening of Thursday, the 5th inst., just before the prisoners on board the Fortitude hulk were about to be let out of their wards, for the purpose of attending Divine service in the chapel, a communication was sent by one of them to Mr. Owen, the Overseer, that a body of them, headed by the deserters lately received from Canada, were about to take advantage of the darkness of the night, to overpower the officers, rush out of the chapel, and attempt a general escape. In consequence of this information Divine service was dispensed with, and their movements more closely (if possible) watched. Being thus frustrated, their next plan was to make an attempt in the same way on Sunday last; precautionary measures were adopted by the Overseer and his Officers to resist such an attempt, and when they were all collected into the chapel, Mr. Owen addressed them thus:—

Prisoners!—Before the service commences, I have a few words to say to you. Information has been sent to me, that a conspiracy exists in the ship, which has for its object the overpowering me and my Officers, for the vain and futile purpose of attempting an escape. The information goes on further to state, that it is to be headed by some of those prisoners lately received from Canada. Whether this information be correct or not I cannot say; but I should hope that the excellent account given by Captain Dawson of your conduct during your passage home, will not be sullied by any act of insubordination here. There are a number of disorderly and disaffected prisoners in the ship, some whose names I know, others whom I strongly suspect, who would not hesitate to seduce you, thinking, from your former occupations and habits, you would be valuable auxiliaries to them in such a cause. If such an attempt should be made as the information states, we are fully prepared to resist it, and upon you rest the consequences. I am an old man to very many of you, but I, and those under me, am resolved to sacrifice our lives in doing our duty. I have only to add, that arrangements have been made for the attendance of the police and military at the first appearance of an outbreak.

Subsequent inquiries, and the confessions of several of the deserters from Canada, prove that such a conspiracy did exist, and no doubt would have been attempted in the manner described. The awful consequences that would have occurred, had they succeeded in putting their plans into execution, were providentially prevented by the information of one of their own body, and the prompt and energetic measures of the Overseer and his Officers—for against a body of such desperate characters, resolutely determined in their purpose, there is no knowing to what extent they might had to have stretched their authority, to enforce obedience and restore order.

CAVALRY.

5th Drag. Guards—Major Hon. J. Y. Scarlett, M.P., eldest son of Lord Abinger, took the oaths at the sessions for the hundred of Salford, at the New Bailey, on Tuesday, and qualified as a magistrate for the county of Lancaster.

7th Drag. Guards—Capt. Le Marchant, an officer of 12 years' full-pay service, has been appointed A.D.C. to Mr. Thomson, the new Governor-General of Canada.

2d Dragoons.—On leave:—Lt.-Col. Wyndham; Capt. Forde; Lieuts. Forlong, Lord Glenlyon, Campbell, and Lord W. F. A. M. Hill; Cornet Craven; and Vet. Surg. Home. Captain Hobart and Lieut. Trafford are among the Stewards for Kilkenny Races, commencing 1st Oct. Cornet Millbank is attending a General Court-Martial at Cork.

6th Drags.—Lieut. M. Archdall, M.P., and Cornet Davidson, are on leave. The non-commissioned officers are about to raise a suitable monument to their late Paymaster Serj. James Emerson, whom they interred with Military honours at St. Paul's Church, Dublin, last week; his father, a retired veteran Inniskilliner, who fought with the regiment at Waterloo, attending as chief mourner.

13th Light Dragoons.—Two squadrons of the 13th Light Dragoons, with a troop of Horse Artillery, left Bangalore on the 7th March, at only three days' notice, with orders to proceed on service to Bellary. They left Bangalore in the highest spirits, fully anticipating no end of fun and prize-money, and great indeed has been their disappointment. Never could men have been more healthy than the 13th during the march, and for the first three or four days after their arrival at Bellary, whilst under canvas in a fine airy situation. On the 2d of April, orders were issued by Major-General Wilson, commanding the division, for the right wing 13th Drags., to march the following morning into the lower fort, to occupy the right-wing barrack, and to picket their horses in a small piece of ground just within the east fort-gate. It is in this fort that H.M.'s Infantry regiment are always quartered at Bellary, at the loss of, we are afraid to say how many, men annually. It is built immediately under an immense rock, on the top of which is the Upper or Hill Fort, which, with the ramparts, prevents a free circulation of air, a matter of so much importance in a tropical clime; the glare and heat reflected from the rock is almost unbearable. The barrack is divided into two wings, quite detached from each other, and each capable of containing from 400 to 450 men only, yet the whole of H.M.'s 39th regiment were crammed, or rather stowed (as the Inspector-General of Hospitals observed) into the left-wing barrack to leave the right wing vacant for the Dragoons. Two cases of cholera had occurred in the 39th regiment; thinking, therefore, it would be most injudicious to put a detachment of 253 healthy men into a small fort where cholera was already known to exist, more particularly as crowding more men and 249 horses into it would not be likely to purify the air, but would in all probability be the cause of a great increase of disease, the officer commanding the Dragoons wrote to the General, earnestly begging he would not do so, reminding him that there were Dragoon barracks,* composed of nine troop-rooms and a hospital, that only one room and the hospital were occupied by the troops of Horse Artillery lately arrived, the remainder being only used to contain the arms of the two native Infantry corps, which could not possibly be injured by being put into tents, and at all events, were of less value than the lives of Europeans sent there with orders to be prepared for immediate active service, and that he therefore hoped that five of the rooms might be given up for the 13th. This, to the surprise of every one, was refused. The Dragoons moved into the fort, and had been there only a few days, when the cholera broke out with awful violence. The 39th regiment lost, in two months, a Lieut.-Colonel, a Lieutenant, and 40 men; the 13th Dragoons, an Assistant-Surgeon and 20 men, from the ninth of April to the 8th May. Both regiments were then ordered out, and encamped on some high ground in the neighbourhood, to endeavour to check the disease, and we are happy to say with great success. The Horse Artillery, who on their arrival were put into the Dragoon barracks, which are built in a fine airy situation, have not lost a man, and have never had above 13 in hospital. The officers sent with the two squadrons of Dragoons were—Col. Maclean, Major Stopes, Capts. Hamilton, Weston, and Penn, Lieuts. Campbell, Browne, Macartney, Acting-Quartermaster, and Cameron; Cornet Shute, Acting-Adjutant. By a late letter we understand that orders have been received from Army Head-quarters to put the 13th into the Dragoon barracks; they were to move in a few days; but out of the two squadrons of the 13th, there were on 15th May only 63 men who had not, within two months, been in hospital under treatment for acute disease, and consequently rendered unfit for hard service.

15th Hussars—Lieut. Robertson is on leave to Oct. 31. This officer was wounded in action at Coorg, Madras, April, 1834.

17th Lancers—On leave: Lieuts. J. D. Brett and the Earl of Cassilis, Cornet Boucherett, and Capt. Chandler. The latter officer, who is Paymaster of this corps, has served in the army as Ensign, Lieutenant, and Captain. He was in the Helder expedition, 1799; at the siege of Malta, the battle of Maida, expedition to Egypt, and wounded before Rosetta in 1807, and in 1810, at the siege and capture of Santa Maura.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards, 3d Batt.—Capt. Spottiswoode and Lieut. Viscount Cantilupe are on leave of absence to Dec. 25.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The service cos., under the command of Lieut.-Col. J. Carter, at present in Glasgow, were expected to leave that city on the 12th for Cork, en route to Gibraltar. The reserve cos., under the command of Major Mullen, arrived at Paisley on Tuesday and Thursday se'nnight, and are expected to pass the ensuing winter there.

3d.—We noticed in our last the death of Ensign Flood; the following further particulars of the melancholy occurrence have reached us. The unfortunate gentleman was found dead in a cud on the road to Mussoorie, and is supposed to have been attacked with apoplexy or giddiness, and to have fallen over. It was long before the body was found, and the only information that could be obtained was, that the deceased left the halting bungalow at Rajpore alone, in apparent good health. Ensign Flood was for many years Quartermaster to the reg., and only lately received his commission: he has left a large family wholly unprovided for.

5th Depot—Brev.-Major Harris, Capts. Spence and Blair, Ser. Lieuts. Osborn and Sutton, are on leave.

Sir Charles Colville has received a cross and one clasp for Martinique, Fuentes d'Onor, Badajoz (severely wounded by a musket-ball through the left thigh, and lost a finger off the right hand), Vittoria (wounded), and Nivelle.—Col. Sutherland served in the Ashantee War, on the Gold Coast, in 1824.—Maj. Johnson served in the expedition to South America, and was engaged at Buenos Ayres, 6th July, 1806. Present at Roliça, Vimiera, Lugo, Corunna, Busaco, Sabugal (wounded), Fuentes d'Onor, Elbodon, Ciudad Rodrigo (severely wounded at the assault), Badajoz, and Salamanca.—Captain Spence served against the Ashantees from November, 1822, to 1824.—Captain Cauch served in the Peninsula from Sept., 1809, to Dec., 1812, and from Oct., 1813, to May, 1814, including Busaco, Redinha, Sabugal (wounded), siege of Badajoz, May, 1811 (severely contused), Fuentes d'Onor, El Bodon, Ciudad Rodrigo (wounded at the assault), siege and capture of Badajoz (wounded), Salamanca, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulosa. Served in the American war, and was present at Plattsburgh.—Paymaster Pennington served in the Peninsula from June, 1809, to May, 1814, including Busaco, Redinha, Foz de Ron, Sabugal, Fuentes d'Onor, siege of Badajoz, May and June, 1811, El Bodon, siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, Jan., 1812 (received two contusions on the 11th Jan., in the trenches, from the explosion of a 13-inch shell), siege of Badajoz, March and April, 1812, Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse.—New Army List.

6th Depot—Capt. Crofton embarks on Tuesday, in the Magistrate, for Bombay.

7th—On leave: Major Baker; Capts. M. R. S. Whitmore, Ponsonby, Paget, and Wilbraham; Lieuts. Troubridge, Hon. H. C. Boyle, Maclaine, Hon. C. L. Hare, and Keating. Capt. Sir W. O'Malley, and Lieut. Lord James Butler, have joined from leave.

9th—Lieut. Hosken, recruiting at Boyle, is called in.

10th—Capt. Dunne is recovering at Barnsley from a severe attack of small-pox.

14th Depot—Ensign Half is on leave.

18th Depot—Capt. N. R. Tomlinson is on leave.

19th—On leave: Lt.-Col. T. Hamilton, Major S. J. Hodgson, Capts. Semple and Lovelace, Lieuts. Walshe, Langley, Bowdoin, and Byrne; Ens. Stoney; and Surg. Wyer.

22d—On leave: Capts. Reburn and Poole; Lieuts. Gardiner, Powell, and Macdonald; Ens. Coote, Dunbar, Harding, Jermingham, and Somerville.

23d Depot—Capt. Willoughby, Lieut. W. H. Duff, and Sec. Lieut. A. J. Campbell, are on leave.

27th Depot—remained at Dover until after the banquet to the Duke of Wellington, at his particular request. They furnished the guard of honour on the occasion, being a Waterloo regiment.

* These barracks were built some years back for the 2nd Drags., and were occupied by them for some time.

30th Depot—On leave: Brev.-Major Waymouth; Capt. Macready: Lieuts. Steele, Heard, and Grant; Ensigns Edwardes, White, and Hunter.

38th—On leave; Lt.-Col. Piper; Capt. Lowth; Lieuts. J. G. Lecky, O'Connell, and Piper; Ens. Sinclair and Pinchard; Lieut. and Paym. Vernon.

Sir Henry Pigot accompanied the brigade of Guards to Holland in 1793, and was present at the siege of Valenciennes, the action of Lincelles, and all the other engagements in which the brigade was engaged in the campaigns of 1793 and 94.—Colonel Piper served in the American war, including the capture of Moore Island; also throughout the Burmese war.—Major Young served at the battle of Fuentes d'Onor; siege of Badajoz; attack of the forts at; and battle of, Salamanca; capture of Madrid; siege of Burgos; twice engaged, and once wounded, on the retreat from Burgos; operations in front, investment of, and sortie from Bayonne. Served in the Burmese war.—Captain Matthew served at Badajoz, Salamanca, and Bayonne; at Graham's Town, when attacked by Caffres, in 1819; and throughout the Burmese war.—Captain Campbell served the campaign of 1814, in the South of France, including the investment of Bayonne. Served throughout the Burmese war.—Captain Louth served throughout the Burmese war.—Captain O'Halloran served at the siege and storming of Bhurtpore.—Captain Woodhouse served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1809, to Dec., 1811, including the battles of Talavera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, and siege of Badajoz.—Lieutenant Tudor served throughout the Burmese war.—Lieutenant Southall served in the Burmese war from Nov., 1825.—Dr. Roe's services:—Campaign and battle of Corunna; expedition to Walcheren; Peninsula from May, 1811, to the end of the war, including the battle of Albuhera; sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz; battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse.—New Army List.

41st Depot—Ens. Tuckey has embarked for India.

42d—Capts. Campbell, Tulloch, and Lord C. Gordon; Lieuts. Hon. R. Rollo, Lord C. L. Kerr, and Drummond, are on leave. Two men, 42d, were flogged, pursuant to sentence of Court-Martial, for a breach of the Articles of War, on route from Newcastle to Limerick, in the town of Rathkeale. A Limerick paper asserts that the reg. had been halted on the march, and a Court-Martial held at the drum-head to administer summary justice.

45th—The Duke of Wellington arrived at Apsley House on Wednesday from Walmer Castle, expressly to present a new staud of colours to this regiment.

47th Depot—On leave: Lieuts. M'Nally, Rooke, and Vernon; Ens. Austen.

48th Depot—Major Mac Dougall has returned from leave, and resumed the command.

52d Depot—On leave: Lieuts. W. H. F. Cavendish and Campbell, Ens. De Winton, and Dr. Brown. The latter served at the siege of Hattrass, in the Mahratta campaign of 1817-18, and in the Burmese war, 1825-26.

56th Depot—Capts. Vicars and Henry, and Lieut. A. D. Cuddy, are on leave.

59th Depot—Lieut. Mockler is appointed Acting Adjutant. Capt. R. S. Boland, Lieuts. Poyntz, W. W. Lodder, Hon. J. P. Maxwell, and Isaac, are on leave.

60th, 2d Batt. Depot—On leave: Capt. Atkins, Lieuts. Hon. C. Maude and Bateson.

61st Depot—Assist.-Surg. Molyneaux died at Cork Barracks on 3d inst. This is the third death which has taken place in the Medical Department of the regiment within the last six months.

62d—Out of the number of the 621 embarked in the summer of 1830 for India, only 11 officers and 134 men are now effective: the remainder of the men (except about 90 sent home) have died during the period of 8¼ years.

67th Depot—The remaining division and head-qrs. arrived at Cork from Gosport on 7th inst., on board H.M.'s steam-vessel Avon, and which were disembarked same day, and proceeded to Buttevant, Sept. 9 and 10. The depot is to be commanded by Major Orange, just arrived from Barbadoes. The 67th proceed to Canada. Four Captains from the depot are to join there.

71st Depot—from Stirling to Dundee, on being relieved by 93d Depot.

73d Depot—will move to Dover on the departure of the 27th for Ireland.

74th Depot—On leave: Major E. J. Clubbe and Ensign Hancock.—The proceedings of the General Court Martial, which was held at Cork on 30th July, for the trial of Sergt. Donnelly, for attempting to shoot Lieut. Fordyce, were promulgated to the Depot on 5th inst.

"Charge.—For having at Cork barracks, on or about the morning of 8th July, 1839, in an excited manner, entered the room of Lieut. and Adj. George Wm. Fordyce, 74th regt., his superior officer, and then and there offered violence against the said Lieut. and Adj. Fordyce, when in the execution of his office, by drawing a pistol from his coattee, and saying, that 'he would not leave the room (being previously ordered by the said Lieut. and Adj. Fordyce to do so,) until he had his revenge.' All such conduct being of a most outrageous character, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

The prisoner was found guilty, and the following is the sentence of the Court:—

"The Court having found the prisoner guilty of the charge preferred against him, which being in breach of the Articles of War, and taking into consideration his general good character, do now sentence him the prisoner, Sergt. Robt. Donnelly, No. 1164, 74th regt., to be reduced from the rank of sergeant to the rank and pay of a private sentinel, and further, to be transported as a felon for seven years, as Her Most Gracious Majesty may please to direct;"

which sentence has been approved of by her Majesty, and the prisoner has been lodged in Cork gaol, there to remain until he is transported.

76th—To the deaths of officers in this corps recorded in our last, we regret to add Lt.-Col. Dansey and Capt. R. Bruce. The Lieut.-Colonel served with the 88th in South America, 1806 and 1807; and in Portugal and Spain from 1808 to 1814. Capt. Bruce was an officer of eleven years' full-pay service. Both were much esteemed in the corps. At the period of the Lieut.-Colonel's demise, he was about to succeed Lieut.-Col. Tyler in command of the troops in British Guiana. At Demerara the troops had been very unhealthy; previous to the 67th reg. leaving it, they buried sometimes six and seven men daily, and such is the present deplorable mortality that the officers' mess (76th) is broken up, and the officers are gone out of barracks into private lodgings.

78th—Four cos., which lately left Glasgow for Edinburgh, have received orders to return, to relieve the Royals, bound for foreign service.

82d—On the 31st ult. Capt. C. F. Maxwell was robbed of a Russia leather pocket-book, containing four 10*l.* Bank of England notes, six or seven 1*l.* Scotch notes, and several memorandums of Greek and Neapolitan bonds, &c. Paym. Holdsworth has landed from Gibraltar at Cork. This officer has been 32 years on full-pay: his services we gave in the N. & M. G. of the 3d ult.

83d Depot—On leave: Capts. Richardson and Grey, Lieut. Hamilton, and Ens. Hon. W. Gage.

84th—Lieut.-Col. MacBean, K.H., and Lieut. Hawker, are on leave. Maj. Franklyn and Lieut. Hon. H. S. Blackwood will act as Stewards at the approaching Kilkenny Races.

87th Depot—2 cos. and hd.-qrs. (about 150) from Drogheda to Pigeon-house, Dublin, Sept. 6 and 7. Lieut. Lee is about to resign the Acting-Adjutancy of that regiment, and will proceed to Antrim on the recruiting establishment. Capt. Campbell's company and the invalids remain at Drogheda. Capt. Keating's company to Dundalk. A recruiting party has gone to Aldee. Maj. Magenis commands the other two cos. at the Pigeon-house, Dublin.

89th Depot—Capt. Kenny is on leave. This officer served in the Peninsula war, and was severely wounded. He also served in the East Indies.

91st—From Dundee to Fort George.

93d Depot—Ens. Seton has received leave of absence from the 1st to the 30th of the present month. The depot at Paisley, relieved by the depot of the Royals, moves to Stirling.

94th—"We understand that the greatest harmony prevailed on board H.M.S. Jupiter, carrying the 94th to Cannanore. On their disembarking at that place, the officers of the 94th, as also those of the 57th Reg., stationed there, invited Capt. Fulton to a dinner, thus expressing their sense of his attention to them during their passage. The General Commanding the Forces also received and treated him with the most marked hospitality and kindness. We mention these circumstances with the greater pleasure as we are aware there are strong feelings abroad respecting Capt. Fulton and his mode of behaviour to his passengers from England, founded on circumstances which have recently transpired in a certain court of inquiry. These circumstances are thus described in a Bombay paper:—'On the voyage of the Jupiter, with the 95th Reg., from England to Ceylon, the Master ordered up 40 sailors to put the Colonel in irons, for some real or supposed insult; when the Colonel ordered up 100 men with drawn bayonets, and drove them over the side—they were in fact all but coming to bloodshed.'"—Ceylon Herald.

94th Depot—will remain at Chatham, the East India Company having, as we stated some weeks since, refused the augmentation, it being a regiment more than they agree for. This will enable some other regiment, probably the 54th, to return home, or else the 94th will return to Ceylon.

96th—The regiment cannot yet be spared from the Chartist districts.

99th—On leave: Major Sir J. G. Le Marchant, Capt. E. Last, Lieuts. Mair and Beatty, Ens. Rathborne, and Lieut. and Paym. Webster. Lieut. Hussey Burgh and Mr. Daly rode a race at Kilkoom last week, Lieut. Burgh's Helen winning first heat; Mr. Daly's Kitten the second and third. The regiment have recruited to the new establishment, viz. 800 r. and f., having enlisted at head-quarters 71 men within the last month. Few corps raised so many men in so short a period, and, generally speaking, they are fine-looking men, from 5 feet 8 to 5 feet 10 in. in height.—Capts. Reeves and Nicholson have joined from leave.

Rifle Brigade, 1st Batt.—Last week two cos., under the command of Capt. Warren, left Nottingham, and on Thursday week passed through Leicester on their way to Weedon Barracks.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Last week the prize gold medal was shot for at the Butt, in the Rl. Arsenal, Woolwich, by one man from each company, and in possession of silver medals, who had been the best marksman of the season; which was won by Serj. Rutledge. The measurement of his six shots, at 200 yards (reckoning from the centre of the target), was 66¾ inches, or, on an average, each shot was within one foot of the bull's eye. The officers afterwards fired for a sweepstake of 5s. each, at 200 yards, with the regimental rifle; which was won by Lieut. and Adjutant Beckwith, the measurement of his six shots being only 47½ inches, that is, nine inches less than the winner of the best prize. Subsequently the non-commissioned officers and men who fired in the first instance, retired to 300 yards to fire for small prizes given by Major Stevenson; the principal of which was won by Serj. Faulkner, the former holder of the gold medal, which is transferrable unless held for a period of two years; as are also the silver ones, if not kept for the same period. The firing-party were entertained at the Serjeants' mess, at the commanding-officer's expense.—A general Court-Martial consisting of the following detail, assembled at the Rl. Artillery Barrack, Woolwich, on Thursday, for the trial of a private of the 2d Battalion of the Rifle Brigade for desertion, viz.:—

Col. Cleaveland, Rl. Artillery, President;
Rl. Artillery, 2 Field Officers, 2 Captains, 1 Sub. } Members.
Rl. Marines, 1 ditto, 1 ditto, 1 do. }
Rifle Brigade, 1 ditto, 2 do.

Brevet-Col. Cruttenden, Rl. Artillery, officiated as Deputy Judge Advocate.

1st West India Reg.—Captain Downie Blythe, Assistant-Surgeon Campbell, 1st W.I. Reg., have proceeded to Europe, at the recommendation of the Medical Board.

2d West India Reg.—The Jamaica Times states that Dr. Tothill, Assist.-Surgeon, has performed some very skilful operations at Port Antonio, and that the inhabitants generally are most grateful for his exertions.

Rl. Artillery—2d Captain Garstin, 2d Lieut. Clerk, and detachment, proceeded to Portsmouth on Monday, to embark on board the Phœnix steamer for the North Coast of Spain. Major the Hon. W. Arbuthnot's troop of Rl. Horse Artillery, consisting of 2 officers, 60 men, 36 troop horses, 7 officers' horses, two 6-pounders, and 1 forage waggon, arrived at Dublin on 6th inst. from Liverpool, and are stationed in the garrison. Officers belonging to the troop: Capt. E. Morgan, Lieuts. I. E. Dupuis, F. Ramsay, and T. D. Cleaveland. Serj. W. Lloyd, 5th Batt., has received a handsome silver snuff-box, inscribed with the gratitude and esteem of his late company. He is posted from Major Wright's comp. to Major Gray's.

The following Regimental Order was issued after the inspection of Major Sandiland's troop last week:—

"His Lordship the Commandant requests that Lieut.-Col. Whinyates will convey to Capt. Macbean, the officers, and non-commissioned officers and men, of Major Sandiland's troop Rl. Horse Artillery, his unqualified approval of their appearance this morning, after their march from Liverpool, to join this garrison; when both men and horses appeared in perfect order."

Gen. Order, Sept. 5th, 1839.—Second Lieut. John Turner, is transferred from Capt. Law's company, 2nd battalion, to Capt. Stephen's company, 4th battalion; by order of the Master-General. J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adj.-Gen.

Major Whitty's company 6th Batt., is expected to leave Woolwich for Dublin, by steam conveyance on Saturday the 21st inst., to relieve Major Hardinge's company, 3d Batt., which is to join at Woolwich preparatory to embarkation for Ceylon. A Field Battery, under the command of Capt. Wright, was stationed in the dock-yard on Wednesday, for the purpose of saluting the Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha, &c. &c., on embarkation in H.M. steam ship Lightning, for the Continent. Her Majesty the Queen having unexpectedly accompanied her royal relatives, was saluted on her arrival and departure from the dock-yard.

Royal Engineers—Capt. Stotherd, Lieuts. Boteler and Durnford, continue attached to the Sappers and Miners company employed in the southern district of Ireland upon the trigonometrical survey. Capt. Tucker, Lieuts. Bennett and Downes, are on the survey at Dublin; Capt. Waters, Lieuts. Fenwick and Wynne, at Poarlington. Lieut. Le Mesurier has joined to do duty, and will be stationed in Dublin, in succession to Capt. Stehelin, ordered on foreign service.

Rl. Sappers and Miners—Capt. Patteu's comp. will have completed the fortifications of the Island of Vido, this year. The 8th company has arrived at Woolwich from Chatham, having completed their field and pontooning courses. This company will be completed to the establishment, and proceed to Bermuda in Oct. The 10th company have moved to Chatham to go through a course of field instruction.

Yeomanry.—Earl De Grey's regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry, the Yorkshire Hussars, assemble at York for their usual term of duty on the 16th of the ensuing month. There will be a grand review and ball in the succeeding week.

Lieut.-Gen. John Meister has been appointed to the command of the forces in the windward and Leeward Islands, in succession to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Samuel Ford Whittingham, K.C.B. and K.C.H.

Barracks.—Mr. John Kelly, late Barrack-Master at Christ Church, is promoted to Coventry, v. Major Macleod. Mr. J. Eddis is appointed Barrack-Master of Berbice, v. Holwell. Capt. Kilkelly, late Barrack-Master at Youghal and Dungarvan, has taken charge of the Cashel, Fethard, and Tipperary Barracks, being replaced at Youghal by Major Gossett of Cashel, &c. Lieut. O'Donnell, Barrack-Master of Newcastle, is gone to Carrick-on-Suir on leave. The situation of Barrack-Master-General of N.S. Wales is vacant by the death of Major Marley.

Colonel Sir Charles O'Donnell, who has been residing amongst us for some time, as Brigade-Major of the district, goes out with Lieut.-Gen. Sir R. Jackson, as Military Secretary, and Capt. Brooke Taylor of the 81st, as Aid-de-Camp. Of Sir Charles it is impossible to speak in too high terms. As a gentleman, he has won the esteem of all in this neighbourhood who were honoured with his acquaintance; and, as an officer, his indefatigable attention to his several duties at an important period, render him entitled to great commendation.—Nottingham Mercury.

Out-Pensioners of Chelsea Hospital.—We understand that in consequence of its being found that individuals, not entitled to pensions from Chelsea Hospital, have fraudulently attempted to obtain payment thereof, by personating deceased pensioners, and that such attempts have been made in consequence of the facilities afforded to the out-pensioners by allowing them to change their places of payment, without being subject to restriction, and also in consequence of fresh instruction-papers having been furnished, upon the parties making application for the same—the Lords Commissioners have ordered, that no out-pensioner shall be allowed to change the district in which he last received his pension, without first applying to the collector of excise (in Great Britain), or chief constable of police (in Ireland), through whom he was paid, and stating the grounds of his making the change, and the place to which he proposes to remove; and the collector of excise or chief constable, upon being satisfied therewith, and of his identity as an out-pensioner, will then transmit to the head establishment a certificate, setting forth the description, &c., of the pensioner, and the particulars required; and, with the view to prevent irregularity, no alteration of place of payment will be allowed, except at the commencement of each quarter, unless under special circumstances. Their Lordships have likewise ordered, that no new instruction-paper shall be furnished upon the application of any individual, except upon a certificate signed by the collector of excise or chief constable of the district wherein he resided, to the effect that such individual has been examined, and has established his identity as the pensioner described.

A Court of Inquiry, consisting of Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield, Col. Paterson, and Lieut.-Col. Cruttenden, Rl. Artillery; Col. Fanshawe, and Major Matson, Rl. Engineers; has been sitting at the Rl. Military Academy, Woolwich, by order of the Master-General, to report on certain matters relating to the establishment. On Monday last the Master-General visited the institution, and made a strong address to the young men, which it is to be hoped may make a salutary impression on them.

Lieut.-Col. Tyler, commanding the troops in British Guiana, is recalled in consequence of ill-health; and by the last accounts Lieut.-Col. Dansey, 76th (since dead), was to succeed him.

Queen's and E. I. Company's Officers.—In some of the letters written from the Indian Army advancing upon Cabul great complaints are made of preferences shown by the Commander-in-Chief of the Queen's troops over the East India regiments in the selections for service, by which the latter are precluded from their fair share of the promotions to which the chances of war may lead. This is a grievance which officers in any department, either of the Army or Navy, will readily enter into, and if it should really appear, on inquiry, to exist, it should demand instant attention from those who desire the welfare of the country, which must ever mainly depend on the efficiency of the Military service. To illustrate the point at issue, it is enough to quote a passage from a letter written by one of the East India Company's officers, whose phrases cannot be better chosen for the purpose, and which says:—"We are full of groans about the treatment of our old officers whenever an army is formed for service. Every opportunity is taken of degrading our officers. There are 16 Queen's regiments in Bengal, and there are 99 regiments and battalions in the Company's service, and yet, whenever our troops move for service, they have the 'lion's share.' At Bhurtpore they had six general officers, including the Commander-in-Chief, while we had only one, General Adams, and he was only a brigadier, both the brigadiers of cavalry were Queen's officers. In Ava, including Arracan, that is, in the Burmese war, five general officers of the King's service were employed, and none of ours. In the Army of the Indus Sir John Keane commands, and the following general officers are employed in the command of divisions:—Major-Gen. Cotton (Queen's), the Bengal Infantry; Major-Gen. Wiltshire, the Bombay Infantry; Major-Gen. Thackwell, the Bengal Cavalry division, his corps being at Martaban, while Nott, who is a Queen's Major-General, but a Company's officer, is only a Brigadier, and is left behind. The disgust which all this occasions is, I assure you, deeply felt. Memorials have been sent home about it. It is the most cruel blow, because the most degrading to the whole Army, that has ever been inflicted. The Horse-Guards are, of course, delighted." Such letters as these, as has already been intimated, must force attention, but it is difficult to collect from them where the fault lies, whether in the Commander-in-Chief's office at home, or the board in Leadenhall-street. If publicity, however, is but freely given to them, it cannot long remain in doubt on what quarter the responsibility should fall.—Times.

British Force in Spain.—Hernani, Sept. 7.—The detachment of Rl. Engineers, under Lieut. Vicars, was quartered in Andoain last night, as well as a division of the field battery of Rl. Marine Artillery, under Capt. Caitlass. Another division of the field battery, under Lieut. Young, with the mountain howitzer division under Capt. Somers, were attached to the garrison of this place. The Rl. Marines under Col. Parke, who was in command of the position, are at Andoain. Col. Colquhoun, commanding the Artillery, remained here in Andoain. The inhabitants speak in the highest terms of the conduct of the Marines, Engineers, and Artillery; their soldier-like appearance has not a little astonished them.

General Pinson Bonham, formerly of the 69th, and Major-General Mark Napier, have been placed on the list of General Officers receiving rewards for "distinguished services."

Maj. Fraser is appointed Assist. Quartermaster-General at Montreal.

The Late General D. D. Wemyss.—Our last No. contained a correct record of this officer's career. On Monday forenoon his remains were removed for interment by the side of his deceased lady, in the family vault in the cemetery at Kensall-green. Col. Wemyss, Sir A. Forbes, General Walker, Colonel Scott, General Warboy, and other friends of the deceased, attended the funeral.

The Master-General of the Ordnance has left town, on a tour of inspection of the several barracks of the kingdom.

The Military force in Ireland this month consists of three regiments of Cavalry, nine of Infantry, 814 rank and file Rl. Artillery, and twenty-seven depots.

Lieut.-Col. Mansel, K.H., has resumed his duties as Assist. Adj.-General of the south-west district, Ireland.

The Carlow recruiting station is transferred from the centre to the southern district.

On the arrival of the 27th depot at Cork, from Dover, the exchange of depots between England and Ireland will be completed for this year.

Military Grievances—The Military Commission.—While this commission is sitting, there is one subject so vitally important to young officers, that we think it is well deserving of serious consideration—moreover, one, as it is a hardship which presses peculiarly on officers of the line, and from which the Artillery and Marines are exempt. The grievance is this:—If a man in any company die, desert, or be discharged, while in debt to the Crown for his regimental necessaries, no matter what may be the amount of that debt, the officer commanding the company is obliged to make good the deficiency from his private purse. We know it may be said that, as a set-off against this, there is an allowance of one shilling and sixpence a man, for the repair of arms, purchase of books, stationery, &c., and a Pay-Sergeant, for any one of necessaries it is totally inadequate, and how much more not at all. But if from this fund he is expected to be indemnified for all such losses as may arise from the causes we have enumerated, how forlorn is the hope of indemnity! This, however, is not all. The means of many of our most promising officers are limited indeed, and from the losses thus suffered, we have known many a Subaltern thrown into irretrievable embarrassment by having to take charge of a company for a month or two, when desertions, deaths, or discharges have occurred. This grievance bears particularly heavy on North American depots. There, though desertion has been prevalent, the allowance is only 1s. per day, and instances have come within our knowledge where sums of six or seven pounds per month !!! have been lost from such causes. Is it, we ask, justice? No, no. This must not be so. Yet, if a soldier have a credit unclaimed, the Secretary-at-War takes possession of it, and we suppose we shall be told this is justice.—Limerick Standard.

The following facts show that the taste for study is becoming very general in the French army. In 1826, 327 officers and 95 non-commissioned officers, of 34 regiments of infantry and cavalry, executed topographical works; in 1827, 918 officers and 478 non-commissioned officers, of 75 regiments, took part in such occupations; and in 1828 the number so engaged was 1,101 officers and 650 non-commissioned officers, belonging to 94 regiments.—Nouvelliste.

Montreal, Aug. 30.—The whole of the military in garrison will be reviewed by Major-Gen. Sir James Macdonnell to-morrow, at 11 o'clock, on the Priests' Farm. The first brigade, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Clive, Grenadier Guards, will consist of the Grenadier Guards and the 24th Reg.; the second brigade, under the command of Col. Wetherall, will consist of the Royals and 15th Regts. The 7th Hussars, Rl. Artillery, and 71st Highland Light Infantry, will also be present. If the weather prove fine, the sight of so many troops going through the field manœuvres will be a very interesting one.

Brussels, Sept. 7.—The militiamen of the class of 1833, who formed part of the regiments in garrison at Brussels and Vilvorde, are gone to Louvain to deposit their arms in the magazines of the corps, and then return home with unlimited furloughs. All the regiments of cavalry, except the Guides, are to send 600 men each to their homes on furlough, which will reduce them from 1,500 to 900 men.

British Auxiliary Legion.—The Spanish commission, like all others of the same genus, has turned out to be a complete failure. The Commissioners having made a show of doing business for the last nine months, now announce their intention of closing their labours on the 6th of Sept. Within the period mentioned they have granted little, more than 2,000 certificates, although upwards of 16,000 individuals are entitled to receive documents of that description. It is, therefore, pretty clear that 8,000 are yet unaccounted for. This may in some measure explain the haste of the gentlemen to close, as the Spanish Government expect to retain, as forfeited, all claims not presented before the time named for closing. We believe it is not generally known that the next of kin of deceased men are entitled not only to their arrears, but also to a gratuity according to the circumstances under which they met their death—if from disease three months pay—if killed in battle or dying from wounds six months. We therefore strongly advise those who have claims under such circumstances to lose no time in applying, not that we think the Commissioners would dare close on the day they propose. By the way, we are sorry to learn that Mr. Alcock, who has succeeded Col. Wetherall as Commissioner, is giving as little satisfaction as his predecessor; and we also regret that Gen. Alava, after all the praises lavished on him at the beginning, has turned out to be—a mere Spaniard.—Cork Standard.

Toasts.—One that was helped out.—We read in some report of a toast, or rather a part of one, that was given at a Military celebration at the North some years since. A British Colonel was called upon for a sentiment. He arose, and thinking it must be something speaking of a Military character, commenced with, "The Military o. our country—may they never want—" Here he stuck. "May they never want—" Stuck again. He looked imploringly around the table, when a friend, who noticed his dilemma, whispered, "and never be wanted." "And never be wanted," shouted the Colonel at the top of his lungs. "Two heads are better than one," is an old saying, and the correctness of it was proved in this instance, as between them they manufactured the following capital toast: "The Military of our country—may they never want, and may they never be wanted."

LOYAL ASSOCIATIONS, THE BAYONET, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Allow me to call your attention to the extraordinary conduct of the self-dissolved Loyal Association at Mansfield, in refusing the arms proffered them by the Home Secretary, and declining to continue their services unless furnished with fusils. Can these gentlemen have forgotten, that if they will not exert themselves for preservation of order, the Government must supply their place by employment of a gendarmerie ten times more costly, yet not one tenth part so efficient? Do they suppose themselves greater proficients in irregular warfare than the great Duke himself, who recommended the mode of equipment which they so scornfully decline? To make any corps of fusiliers in the slightest degree useful, requires at least a month of incessant drill, and if called out in a half-disciplined state they will invariably be found dangerous to their friends. Adapted only for combined action, their arms are useless for that individual conflict by which alone they can aid the regulars. How can a volunteer, with his two-handed musket, grapple with a rioter whom he wants to seize? What is to become of a bayoneteer corps suddenly summoned to their rendezvous through streets swarming with bludgeon-men? The armed constable, on the contrary, possesses two chiefs for one, and if both his pistols miss fire his cutlass protects him, whilst it annoys the adversary. A bayonet is liable to get entangled, and is not easily withdrawn; whilst the cutlass may be employed to cut and come again a dozen times in a minute. Above all, bullets and bayonets cannot be employed without peril of coroners' inquests; whilst cutlass blows may be given by the score without causing any legal results.

In J. E. A.'s letter, the Baron de Berenger's exercise is stated to render a fusilier invincible by the sabre, yet exposed to peril from the small sword. My own impression is the reverse;—nor can I conceive how the rapier can turn off a powerful vertical cut to beat down the guard followed by a lunge in tierce. The cutlass, on the other hand, should be employed against the bayonet, sailor-fashion, squatting down as far as possible, meeting the point with a parry, followed by cut three at the fingers or wrist, and a spring forward to bring on personal conflict. Let the broadswordsmen once seize the bayonet with his left hand, and the farce is finished. Of course I speak only of single combat, since, in close order, the bayonet exercise enabling the rear rank, unless incumbered with packs, to strike four feet beyond the breasts of the front, renders it impossible for the sabreurs to break in and employ the steel. As well might hatchet-men seek to cut down a self-motive chevaux-de-frise. Arthur.

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRIEVANCES.—No. 9.

Sir,—I now come to one of the most unfair regulations that ever affected any class of officers in any public service. A Mate is the only person who is made to do a duty, and take a responsibility that he is not paid for. If a Captain "invalids," a Commander receives an acting order from the Commander-in-Chief, receiving the pay, and wearing the uniform of a Captain. If a Commander "invalids," a Lieutenant wears the uniform, and receives the pay of Commander. This is also the case with a Surgeon and Assistant, Master and Second Master, Purser and Clerk; but should a Lieutenant "invalid," a Mate is made to take his duty and responsibility, not to be removed from the mess, alter his uniform, or receive one farthing extra pay. This order came from a Board of Admiralty in a liberal Administration, pressing to correct abuses. Why should a Mate be the only person that a Commander-in-Chief cannot give an acting order to, except in death vacancies? Are they too well off, after having passed through the ordeal I have endeavoured to describe in these letters?

Their uniform is also of a piece with the treatment they receive; it is shabby and unmeaning in the extreme. Why should not every class of officer in the Navy, as well as in the later service, wear two epaulettes, and not remain any longer lob-sided, as Lieutenants, &c., are at present. It must be borne in mind, that other persons on board ships wear two epaulettes as well as the Captains: I mean Marine officers; but they are altogether favoured persons. Surely rank can as well be distinguished in one service as the other, by the size of the bullion and device on the epaulettes. Nothing would add more to the appearance of Lieutenants, Mates, &c., than this alteration in their uniform: at all events, some change should be made in the Mates' so that when they receive their hard-earned promotion, they may not be put to any unnecessary expense for alterations: at present their coat cannot be changed into a Lieutenant's.

I have now brought my list of grievances to a close. A

Mate who has undergone them, or many of them, to his promotion, is then far from being well off or happy: he has to join a ward or gun-room mess, and fit himself out with uniform, &c. Where is the money to come from for this purpose? It will cost him at least 100*l*. If his friends cannot supply him, he must borrow it from his agent, paying him, I rather think, 7 or 7½ per cent. By living in the most economical way, he can hardly save enough out of his pay to return the capital after three years' servitude in a foreign climate.

The expenses of both a Lieutenant's and Midshipman's mess might be very much reduced by their Lordships finding them chairs to sit on, and mess-traps, cooking utensils, &c. Every ship should have a plain set, marked with her name, and the names of the mess. The establishment to be returned, or paid for by the officers, on the ship being paid off. The Captain's mess should be provided for in the same way, as they are as badly off as any other class of officers. I think it quite impossible for a Captain to commission a ship, without running himself in debt. Z. Z.

MILFORD AS A FOREIGN STEAM PACKET STATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Referring to the very able article, which appeared in your Gazette of 31st August, on the superior eligibility of Milford over every other port in the kingdom for the establishment of the foreign steam-packet station—a cause I have frequently advocated in your valuable columns—permit me to add, that besides those you enumerate, Milford possesses other advantages equally paramount. Among the foremost of these are the following:—

1st. Its Naval yard and splendid dry-dock, capable of containing the largest ships ever built, and into which the Great Western floated with ease last winter for repairs. It, as one of your able correspondents, An Old Sailor, justly observes, "that port were made a steam-fitting establishment," nothing further would be wanting to render our steam armada properly efficient. The dock-yard is of such an extent (and is all the property of the Government), that there is abundance of room for an engine manufactory, even without the addition that is in contemplation; and Government ought to have a manufactory of its own, to render it independent of contractors. When, then, so fitting a time to commence it as the present one of peace, with war in perspective?

2d. Its being well lighted from seaward, viz., St. Ann's Head, the Smalls, Lundy Island, St. David's Head, &c.

3d. Its proximity to Truon as well as Llanelly, whence coal is obtained at an equally cheap rate. This is the description, I believe, used by the steam-packets already on that station, and which the contractor supplies under the same contract prices as that from Llanelly.

4th. Its commodious pier, coal-shed, offices, store-houses, &c.

And if, as you say, anthracite coal should come into use—which I firmly believe must ere long be the case—then Milford will have her resources within the limits of her own shores! I find anthracite coal is used for all the steam-engines working the bed at Begelly, Kilgetly, and other places in that county. These things only require to be made known, to induce capitalists at once to take the matter in hand. Craving the insertion of this hastily-written statement in your pages. Philotherus.

MILITARY EXERCISES, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The interesting letter of J. E. A., and of Perseus, published in your 346th Number, afforded me some consolation, after my having looked anxiously, yet under mortifying disappointment, for a continuance of your able and generous pleadings in behalf of our poor fishermen, and for which, by my letter of the 11th of March last (your No. 322 granting it a place, folio 183), I conveyed warm and merited acknowledgments; and also for having advocated "the claims which Baron de Berenger unquestionably has on this Government." His salvation of my only daughter from a watery grave was then given as the leading of many other reasons why I shall feel great delight on seeing him remunerated for his many and most generously-afforded services, and particularly if, by some distinguished appointment, he is enabled to impart to the Army and Navy his theoretical, practical, and profound knowledge, not only of bayonet-fencing gymnastics, carrousel and other riding, swimming, rifle, pistol, and other shooting, but, I may venture to say, of nearly every other manly, skilful, and therefore useful exercise. It affords me pleasure to have to add that similar feelings and desires are as daily proclaimed by many members of the Service Clubs, as discernable they are in almost every number of your valuable periodical. On the other hand, more than surprise is expressed generally that the tournamental preparatory practice, with other patronage, has not been bestowed on the Stadium alone, since it is notorious that the Baron, by his revival (ever since 1831) of the carrousel practice there, by his improving it materially, and by his writings (of about the same date) urging tournamental renewals, did entitle himself to a liberal preference, and in every way; wherefore he now, and fairly, may be asked whether he declined or was denied general encouragement.

The honourable declaration by Perseus, that "the Baron de Berenger should be made Instructor-General, as a reward for his exertions in the Army's welfare," no doubt will be responded to as honourably by the authorities; at any rate, a more fit candidate for that important post it will prove truly difficult to find; for although old, few are so tough, and I know none more active, methodical, discerning, patient, yet most indefatigably persevering; an excellent instructor; besides being skilful himself, he knows also how to excite in others not only skill, but also ambition, honourable manliness, and patriotic courage; confirmed not only by his writings, but by his having, as I am assured, entitled himself to and enjoyed the willing favour of the superiors, and the esteem as well as obedience of the inferiors of all those he ever served with.

Now, mark the difference, Mr. Editor! General Le Marchant not only was remunerated, but rapidly advanced in the British Service: for what? Merely for introducing (importing rather) the Austrian broadsword exercise! The French Government not only raised Monsieur Amoros to the rank of Colonel, for introducing into the French Service an early, and on that account a partial imitation of our Chelsea Stadium's gymnastics, but it raised him also not only a "Stadium" (for he candidly copied even the name), but it erected besides several gymnasia for him at Paris, at the Camp of St. Omer, at Eringhem, &c., where to instruct soldiers, mark! in gymnastics only! for Government at a salary of 30,000 francs (1,200*l.* sterling!) per annum, teaching private pupils there by way of additional emolument; whilst our poor enthusiast, the extensively-enlightened and endowed martyr of his benevolent purpose, not only has been left to struggle on for years as [illegible] he may be; contrasting with such treatment Napoleon's having granted pensions for patriotic ballads, [illegible] doomed to be mortified alike by others diverting from [illegible] the patronage due to his exertions and fidelity, and by seeing himself circumvented alike by unprincipled but favoured plagiarists, and (as just now is attempted) by ungrateful and treacherous persons, whom, compassionately, he had succoured and employed!

Is such a man to be left to feed on the hope of obtaining a crust, at a period only when to his toothless jaws it may prove useless? Alas! "Hope long deferred maketh the heart sick!" May his be less so than, just now, is that of An Old Hand.

COMPOSITION FUEL FOR STEAMERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In your last number (345) there appeared a short paragraph respecting the recent trials in Woolwich Dock-yard with a prepared fuel. You state that you are not acquainted with the name of the party. I will give you a short account of the results of the experiments. This will not come either from a chemist or a stoker, but from one who takes much interest in everything that is likely to be beneficial to mankind. The name of the gentleman who prepared this fuel I understand is Oram, and the nature of his invention is to bring into use the very small coal, which at present is of little or no value, and thousands of tons are annually destroyed. The results of the trials at Woolwich have clearly proved the valuable purpose to which this can be applied, and its superior advantages over coal in its crude state for steam navigation.

The test applied to this fuel of Mr. Oram was by evaporating a given quantity of water each day, namely, 88 cubic feet, and working a 20-horse engine. The first six days the evaporation was not satisfactory; I understand this arose from the fuel being damp, and the stoker not acquainted with the best mode of treating it. The conversion of water into steam averaged about 7lbs. of water by 1lb. of fuel; the next six days averaged 10lbs. of water evaporated with 1lb. of fuel; the following five days the quantity of water converted into steam was 11¼lbs. with 1lb. of fuel; and the last day of the trials, the 88 cubic feet of water, or 5,500lbs., was generated into steam in the very short space of time of three hours and fifteen minutes, with 417lbs of fuel. The feed water, when entering the boiler, was from 60 to 62 degrees; this is much greater than anything we have on record. The fuel consumed on this day I understand was not made in the dock-yard, but sent there by Mr. Oram. The next test was to ascertain if it was capable of withstanding the heat of the coal bunkers, and its measurement as regards stowage. A cubic foot of the fuel was placed on the main hole of the boiler, the [illegible] bricks being exposed to a temperature of 220 degrees [illegible] heat, and was loaded with 6 cwt., and remained there five days, and when removed was found as perfect and firm as when placed. A cubic yard of the fuel was then stacked, and was found to contain 15 cwt. 1 qr. 14lb.; thus proving that a ton of the fuel can be stowed in 35 cubic feet—coals requiring 47 cubic feet. Having now furnished you with the principal points, particularly attended to during the 19 days of working this fuel, I shall leave you and your readers to judge of its merits;

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It has long since struck me that the only thing required in the British Army is an improvement in its "morale," to attain which end would be to remedy the present defects in the system arising from the want of it, and place it without doubt at the head of all armies. The army of the present day whose "morale" stands the highest, is the Prussian. But the British have what the Prussians have not—that bull-dog determination which ensures the "fight." Now I, for one, maintain that, be our recruits ever so low in the scale of society, it would be an easy matter to make them what they are never made at present; and I should bring it about, almost solely, by giving the man such an opinion of himself, that, insensibly rising in his own mind, crime would be considered as a shame by him, and scarcely ever occur. That this end has not been attained is evident from the state of our Army, and a proof, therefore, that whatever has been done with a tendency to raise its "morale" has not been sufficient. To give the soldier, therefore, this opinion of his own merit, would be, among other things, not as now to "shave his head" and destroy his good looks, but to allow that certain sufficiency of hair which becomes the face; to consider his dress and appointments much more to the appearance, without at all endangering their utility. "Make your soldiers dandies"—this explains what I mean. Expend all your endeavours on that—it is no such easy task—and you need never fear that John Bull can become "effeminate" by overdoing it: on the contrary, my experience among several countries of Europe has gone to prove this, that we are a brave straightforward nation, but our want of smartness as soldiers and military character makes us a laughingstock to our neighbours, and causes [illegible] soldiers to commit crimes which are as "unmilitary" [illegible] disgraceful. The very circumstance of our Grenadiers having their upper-lip is enough to make a "vieux moustache" stare. I hope to live to see this remedied, and to see our Army "look" what it "is," and "be" what it would then "look." A British Officer.

THE REGULATIONS FOR FIELD EXERCISE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In a recent number of your Gazette, a correspondent has pointed out some slight errors and misprints in the Book of Field Exercise and Evolutions; but the more serious blunders in that compilation appear to have escaped his notice. I shall take the liberty of passing them in review, small and great, in regular succession.

Part 1st, Section 19.—Wheeling of a single rank in slow time from the halt.—The outward wheeling man steps the usual pace of 30 inches. In "Torrens" the outward wheeling man was directed to take a pace of 33 inches, and 21 inches (the space a man is supposed to occupy in the ranks) being radius, 33 inches will be the quarter circle; and unless the pace of the outer file is lengthened to 33 inches, I venture to assert that no wheel can be made with mathematical accuracy.

Now, to prove that the pace of 30 inches must be incorrect for the outer wheeling file, observe that 20 files will take 22 paces to complete the wheel of the second circle, 30 files 33 paces, 40 files 44 paces, and so on; but if an odd number of files be taken, as 15, what is the result? Why 16½ paces are required to complete the wheel. Now, it is evident that a division must either overstep the quarter circle, or not complete it, in nine cases out of ten. The following table will exemplify this fact.

No. of Files.	Paces of 30 inches required to complete the wheel of ¼ circle.
16	17 3-8ths.
17	18 21-30ths.
18	19 4 5ths.
19	20 27-30ths.
21	23 1-10th.
22	24 1-5th.
24	26 2-3ths.

Having proved the pace of 30 inches cannot be accurate, I venture to suggest that the halt of thirty-three inches be restored, as it possesses, besides this additional advantage, that the number of paces taken by the outward wheeling man, in describing the second circle, corresponds exactly with the number of files of which that division is composed. Serjeants, who from the 8th file step the number of paces a division is to wheel into echellon, should also take a pace of 33 inches.

Part 3d, Section 16.—Upon which the leading division, which has continued to march on steadily, will receive the word "Halt—dress up" from its leader.

This is most probably a misprint; the word should be "Halt—Dress," for the leading division is the base upon which the formation is made.

Part 3d, Section 22.—Form square two deep on the two centre companies. Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 form the right face, Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 the left face, and the Grenadier and Light Infantry the rear face of the square.

Now there is evidently a blunder here. The correct formation of the square two deep is as follows. Nos. 4 and 5 form the front face; Nos. 1, 2, and 3 the right face; Nos. 6, 7, and 8 the left face; and the Grenadiers and Light Infantry the rear face.

Part 9th, Section 2.—No. 9 incline to the right. If on the march, left shoulders forward. If halted, the skirmishers will take ground to the right in file. No. 10—incline to the left, right shoulders forward, or left face, according as the skirmishers may be in motion or halted.

These directions are to me utterly incomprehensible, as they do not at all agree with those which follow, pages 266 and 267, to incline to the right and to the left; the latter are evidently correct.

No. 9, Section 2, Part 8, ought to be expunged from the book: it is arrant nonsense. A SOLDIER.

EAST INDIA COMPANY'S BENGAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—Having perused the letter in your Gazette of Saturday the 27th July, regarding the appointment of Cadets to the Bengal Artillery, I beg to add, as an officer of that corps, my feeble testimony to the truth of the statements contained therein; and if I can be the means of saving an unnecessary expense to any parent who can ill spare it, in sending his son to Addiscombe in the wish to obtain an Artillery Cadetship, my letter will answer one good purpose.

I was myself intended for a more lucrative situation in life than the Army, but as from unforeseen circumstances this prospect failed, I received a nomination to the Infantry in India, much wishing it had been the Cavalry; but on the subject of this latter service my friends had a strange notion that a small fortune was required to support it; an erroneous impression, for it is decidedly the best-paid service in India—I mean for work done, or not on the staff. I was not at the time of sufficient age to go out, and was quietly remaining doing nothing, when one day my father came in great delight to announce his having procured me an Addiscombe Cadetship. I was not rejoiced at the prospect, in my boyish fancy preferring the Infantry much, as I did, when at Addiscombe, prefer the Artillery to the Engineers. I have since learnt better. I obtained an Artillery Cadetship, and embarked with several Infantry Cadets in 1823. I joined at Dum Dum head-quarters soon after, the most expensive station, with exception of Barrackpore, in the Army, from its vicinity to Calcutta. I was four years and a half a Second Lieutenant, on 200 rupees (or 20*l.*) a month, whilst all my fellow-passengers were almost immediately promoted to Lieutenancies, and having also charge of companies, were in the receipt of 300 rupees (or 30*l.*) a month. One of the Cadets in the Infantry has long been a Captain, and was Adjutant of his corps most of the time he was a Subaltern; but take one of the unfortunate in promotion, and say both are eighteen years obtaining their companies, the pay of the Infantry officer is always better than the foot Artillery officer, as the Infantry officer has almost always a company, and sometimes two. The Artillery officer is also liable to constant marches, by being removed from one troop or company to another. I have known one officer actually marching five months in one season; the same officer was removed also the year before and the year after, besides moving in the regular relief. This of course depends a good deal on the Commandant of Artillery, but I mention it to show what expense the Artillery officer is often put to. Allow me to instance the cases of three officers who went from Addiscombe about the year 1821; one in the Cavalry was promoted to Lieutenant soon after his arrival, held his troop and the Adjutancy together, and whilst a Subaltern almost always in the receipt of 800 rupees (or 80*l.*) a month, was a Subaltern about seven years, and is now expecting his Majority; the Infantry officer the same, except in his pay, which was uniformly, whilst a Subaltern, 300 rupees a month, with many acting appointments, and Captain's pay for some years. The Artillery Cadet was several years a Second Lieutenant on 2[illegible] rupees a month, and since that has (since his promo[illegible] to First Lieutenant) been only in the receipt of 265 r[illegible] month, with occasionally also of a company, a[illegible] Lieutenant to his regime[illegible] eighteen years' [illegible] sure the Court of Di[illegible] themselves are [illegible] disadvantages the Art[illegible] labour under, or, [illegible]end to be so, for it is conside[illegible] a greater patronage [illegible]ly an appointment to Addiscombe. I knew a civilian of high rank in India, whose three sons all came out in the Artillery; however, as they all got appointments, it mattered little the branch they came out in. At one time, many years ago, in 1810 and 1811, the Artillery was a very fortunate corps, and in great luck, and probably its good fortune remained in idea at all events. The Engineers are the first in every way of the Military, as they ought to be; and the young man who goes out in that branch, must get on with common attention. The Artillery is the worst in the way of pay and promotion, nevertheless a very delightful corps, and if parents are willing and able to pay the few hundred pounds extra to send their sons to Addiscombe, so much the better, though they need hardly grieve if their sons do not obtain an Artillery Cadetship. Being chiefly Europeans in the Artillery, and having two months' practice every year in the cold season, gives an Artillery officer more to do than his brethren of the Cavalry and Artillery, which is some advantage. I could dwell on many hardships to which the Artillery are subject, but as the remedy lies only with the Court of Directors, I will not notice them further than that if a Subaltern or Captain is fortunate enough to obtain an appointment to the Horse Artillery, and is obliged to come down, instead of drawing pay as a Cavalry officer, [illegible] Infantry pay, and on returning, his Horse Artillery uniform is useless to him, and he must get a new Foot Artillery supply. That there are not half enough officers to perform the duties of an Artillery company, no one will deny; and I have lately known an instance of a Subaltern who was Adjutant to the battalion, also commanding it for several months, and drawing the command allowance, 400 rupees a month. You may say this is not variance with the position of officers seldom holding such posts. Within the last few years, the senior Lieutenants and Brevet Captains have certainly had charge of them, but how long were they without? And to expensive and troublesome is the charge of an European company, that I have often heard an officer say he would gladly be without the charge, and do his Subaltern's duty under a Captain. Surely a committee might be appointed by the Court of Directors to examine into these points, and rectify them where necessary;—but who is there to advocate the rights of the Artillery? That the Infantry have many just causes of complaint I do not deny, but an abler pen than mine must point them out. BLUE.

NAVAL REGISTRY.

SIR,—The preamble of my letter is a hope that harmless errors will be charitably corrected, as in so momentous a subject, unwarrantable will bring; the cause is dearest to my heart, I therefore feel a few preliminary observations necessary, as [illegible] the British seaman's praise.

And, in contradiction to Capt. Marryat's unjust reflection, add, it is A theme renowned in story.

With these feelings have I ever possessed a heartfelt in sharing their adventures, and fearlessly assert, in [illegible] since, not one in fifty has proved a Judas. Would could say so of his officers! Then

To them our dearest rights we owe,
Shield them from poverty and pain;
'Tis policy to do it;
Or when again you're plunged in war,
Oh, Britons! ye will rue it.

My aim is to establish it as a right of the "British sailors acknowledged by law" employment on waters in certain occupations, within reach of their native element the ocean to be their property, and not ploughed by landsmen, who never smelt the sea-breeze, without such acknowledgment or tribute, which I shall here term rental, as will reward and provide for in the latter years of life, those who have toiled with tolerable character in bringing riches, luxuries, comforts, and, above all, protection, to their native land, without difficulty to Government or expense. It therefore remains for me to offer such suggestions (after last week's assertion) as, amended in explanation by better heads than my own, and enforced by law, may protect the old and duly authorised, and compel the young to share the perils of the briny ocean a portion of time, ere they dare to approach or bully the nearly worn-out servant of his country, as is the case every day at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham, &c.

We must, Sir, have a "General Registry" to work on. Every seaman possessing a legal parchment certificate of servitude at sea to be filled up on his return, or when he may leave, by the Customs; if none, by his master, a Naval Officer, or Consul, with the amount of time in such vessel; and as I propose pensioning the merchant sailor who completes from 14 to 21 years (foreign merchant trade) one-half or two-thirds the amount of Naval pension, this will, I hope, act as a most effectual check to desertion, which takes place from every merchant ship, and naturally, where there is no inducement or reward to steady servitude or good conduct.

Thirdly—For the protection of the man-of-war's man, this licence not to give privilege at a Naval port unless served in the Navy, or bought by high licence. Merchant-sailors, merchant-ports—Naval-sailors, naval-ports.

Fourthly—All licence-monies payable to Government, but kept apart from revenue; applicable solely to the benefit of seamen; one-third to meet the intended system of pension in Navy; or any sum more advisable; remainder to pension merchant sailors, or right of admission to Greenwich or other national institution.

Fifthly—That all boat-fares be increased by regulation of Mayor, Aldermen, &c. &c., three-and-a-half pence (the same specified here) in the shilling.

The system of pensioning and distinguishing amount for Naval or Mercantile servitude requires thorough revision, too long for this, but another letter on which shall follow next week, as I much fear you will say I am too tedious, still I hope you will be able to understand my ultimate intentions. THE NEGLECT OF THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The last week's Naval Obituary records the name of a Lieutenant, chief officer of the Coast-Guard, whose "premature death was caused by his great exertions in saving the crew of a French brig, when his own boat was swamped. For his conduct on the occasion he received a gold medal from the National Institution; the French Government also transmitting to him, through the Admiralty, a gold medal, which his Inspecting Commander had the satisfaction of putting into his hands two days before his death;"—a testimonial as gratifying, no doubt, to the unfortunate officer as honourable to the Government which presented it, and an example it would be well in our own liberal Government to follow on such occasions, but which it has never yet done; on the contrary, whilst a host of idlers, who for sunning themselves on the golden shores of the Tagus in our unemployed guard-ships, by the influence of a lady commandant are allowed to have their unearned honours recorded in stars and crosses in the Navy List, its columns may not be sullied with the names of those who have gained their medals for honourable service; names which these other Governments, and our own institutions, have "loved to honour," but on whom the sun of interest has never shone, or the rays of patronage dispensed their influence. One naturally inquires, what reward his gallantry obtained for him from his own country during the ebbing of his sacrificed existence? Promotion? No! He had entered a service, the service of the forlorn without a hope, whose ranks, filled with servants of the war, numbered not the scions of nobility, of the wealthy municipalist, or mayhap of that third class whose ears are tickled by the Parliamentary candidate as "Freeholders and Electors," (the happier classes to whom rank and employment in the "regular line" was always open), a service without a friend at the Admiralty, or an advocate in "the House," even among the members of "the mercantile and shipping interest," for which interest his after life has been risked, and, as in the present case, too often sacrificed, without obtaining for its officers that sympathy which would procure for them a fair share of the only reward a brave man should look to, honour and promotion in his service. Alas that a British officer should have to seek his reward in an Admiralty Court instead of from an Admiralty Board!

It might naturally be supposed that the widow would derive some additional provision under such circumstances. Not so—not a sou; and if her husband (by a late regulation) had not held his commission ten years, she may be destitute of any provision whatever, and however that may be, the injustice done to her husband is continued to the day of her death. In olden times these deeds were not unrequited; the soul of liberality had not departed from Lloyd's, and the country knew how to appreciate. The good and great Lord Exmouth, from all his brilliant acts of his early life, selected the wreck of the Dutton (or his great, and when his deeds of fame were crowned by the exploit of Algiers, refused, in adding to his arms, to change it, "until it could be shown how men could serve his country better than by saving her enemies." That act first brought into notice, and afterwards into imperishable fame, the intrepid Coghlan. Verily, they had their reward, and whose but the paltry economists' shall be the boast to have "changé tout cela?" Are there no Lenton's for the Navy? Where is my Lord Colchester? Where the Earl of Hardwicke? There are, although forgotten amongst the coast officers, those who remember him and the "One rallying shout, for messmates and for life, Old England, hail! Exmouth and victory!"

Where is the active Peshell? Where the Flemings, Codringtons, Dundases, Cochranes, Ingestries, to stand by those who heretofore stood by them? This is no party subject, Whig or Tory, but an "essentially Naval" one. The term which one would suppose in bitter irony has been officially, by the Treasury and Admiralty, affixed to the Coast-Guard service in legislating a grant of one promotion annually, and "but one," to 400 Lieutenants, thus excluding the 399 from all the chances which at the Coronation were opened to half-pay Lieutenants, and Lieutenants in every other description of employment, however unconnected with public service.

I am aware that in urging promotion for the successful officers, and provision for the family of the unfortunate one, engaged on occasions similar to the occurrence my letter refers to, the plea of excitement to emulation cannot avail, as all the withering effects of exclusion will never prevent our Naval officers from risking themselves to save their fellow-creatures from impending death; but when I look to the long list of noble patrons to the National, Humane, and other societies, I feel assured that any measure brought forward for such a purpose would meet with ample support.

To Readers and Correspondents.

Last week our correspondent at Plymouth, in correcting an erroneous paragraph respecting Lieut. Shambler that appeared in the U. S. Gazette, described that publication as the U. S. Journal. The similarity of the titles of the two publications leads to continual mistakes of this sort, and we are, therefore, requested to caution our correspondents on the subject.

We should be happy to forward a letter to our friend " Chevron."—"G. L. S." will always be welcome. The matters to which he refers are suitable, but we do not understand his hieroglyphics. We have made the arrangement he requires.—Has " T." received a packet forwarded for him three weeks since?

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1839.

To the numerous inquiries that have reached us this week, respecting the Naval and Military Commission, we can only answer, that there is not the slightest prospect of the Report being before the public for some time; but what we have stated as its substance may be depended upon.

The appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Campbell, as Commander of the Forces at Bombay, will not take place.

Some of our contemporaries having, in that bitterness of party-spirit which is so detrimental to the United Service, spoken rather slightingly of the merits of Lieut.-General Sir Richard Downes Jackson, the new Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in all British North America, we shall, as the best answer, place before our readers the opinion entertained by the Duke of Wellington. His Grace, in a letter, 6th Dec. 1812, to the Military Secretary at the Horse Guards, writes—

"I enclose a letter which has been put into my hands by Lieut.-Colonel Jackson *, who is now doing the duty of Assistant-Quartermaster-General with Lieut.-General Sir Rowland Hill's detachment. He is called from that duty to perform that of a mounted officer, with a battalion of Guards. I have always been in the habit of considering the wish of one of their Royal Highnesses respecting their regiment as a law, and have acted accordingly, when it has not militated with His Majesty's regulations. I beg you, however, to represent to the Commander-in-Chief, that Lieut.-General Sir R. Hill has informed me that he shall feel the greatest inconvenience from the want of the assistance of Lieut.-Colonel Jackson, and I certainly do not know where I shall find an officer qualified to replace him in that situation. It may not be difficult to find one to replace him as a mounted officer with the Coldstream Guards."—Dispatches, vol. 12. p. 602.

Sir Richard has been forty-five years in the service, and to his many excellent qualities as a soldier we may add that of being free from all party bias.

Calculations have been recently published in several works, enumerating the various items of expense incurred in steam navigation, on the assumption of long voyages; and we perceive, that the cost of fuel forms so important a charge in the whole of these calculations, as to strengthen the opinion expressed in our Gazette of the 31st ult. as to the eligibility of Milford as a Steam Packet Station, was it for no other reason than its immediate vicinity to the great South Wales coal-bed.

An article on Steam Navigation to India, very ably written, recently appeared in the Athenæum. The author quotes Mr. Holmes's minute detail of the cost of vessels intended for a line to the East Indies via Egypt, by which it appears, that iron vessels are far preferable for steamers, and by all accounts likely to be generally adopted ere long. The item with which we have to do, however, is the proportion of cost calculated for fuel. On the annual charges of twelve vessels, to be employed on that line, whilst 176,000*l.* is set down for the cost of wear and tear, wages and victualling, insurance, interest on capital, expenses in Egypt, and of the establishments at the several intermediate stations—in fact, every other expense,—no less than 108,000*l.* is charged for coal! The fuel proposed for the voyages is Welsh coal—universally admitted as the best for the purpose—to be taken on board at Falmouth.

Now, as we have before observed, the expense of freight in conveying this coal from the ports in the Bristol Channel round the Land's-end to Falmouth, is a charge that may be considerably reduced, by receiving it at Milford, and, assuming two-thirds of the cost of freight to be thus saved, the difference will be somewhat about 30,000*l.*,—no small item, it will be granted.

But it is evident, that, until a railway communication is established between the designed port and the metropolis, neither Milford, nor Falmouth, nor Plymouth will be selected, but a Port which has, or will soon have its railway communication completed. In the meantime, the designed continuations of the Great Western line are only for the most part in embryo; and we perceive that members are stimulating their constituents to take active measures to accomplish railways, in the hope of inducing Government to give the preference to the towns they represent.

On the map of projected lines to the coast, we perceive that the Welsh line is carried to Fisguard, probably because the ground affords greater facilities for levelling. This is not very material, provided a safe port can be formed there, capable of receiving and docking large steam-vessels, because the coal can be delivered at Fisguard for the same price as at Milford. We have our doubts, however, of the eligibility of the northern port, which we believe would require no small expense to form it, and as Milford already possesses every facility required—ample space, safe anchorage, warehouses, piers, and hotels, convenience for building, docking, and repairing, besides a Government department already established; and is, moreover, capable of being strongly fortified by very simple means,—we must, under our present impressions, give the preference decidedly to that port as a steam-packet station between Great Britain and all parts of the world, so soon as a railway has been established with the metropolis, and branches connecting it with the great manufacturing towns.

We annex an address from one of the members for Cornwall:—

Lieut.-General the Rt. Hon. Sir Hussey Vivian, to the Landed Proprietors, Merchants, Miners, Farmers, &c., of the county of Cornwall.

Gentlemen,—A measure of the utmost importance to the interests of our county is in contemplation,—I mean the removal of the Packets from Falmouth. Should they be removed, the consequences will be most materially injurious to your prosperity.

We have been too much in the habit of viewing this question as affecting the town of Falmouth alone, without considering how much every other town in the county (and especially those on the great line of communication), and all persons connected with their commerce and their markets, are interested in it.

The efforts now making may, perhaps, succeed in retaining the packets, for the present, at Falmouth; but their continuance there can, I am convinced, be secured only by the communication between that port and the metropolis being quickened, and this must be done by a railway through the county.

I well know I may be told the difficulty and expense in constructing such a road would be very great, and the number of travellers that might be calculated on not sufficiently large to hold out much encouragement to parties to vest their money in it. Supposing this to be the case (although I must here observe that on all our railroads the number of travellers has, I believe, been found greatly to exceed that calculated on), I still think, even if the direct profits that might be expected are not such as to induce persons to subscribe, indirectly there is not one amongst you to whom I now address this letter, that would not be most materially benefited; whilst, on the other hand, unless we have a railroad, there is scarcely one that will not be a sufferer. First or last, indeed, a railroad we must have;—it is not possible to conceive that we shall so long consent to remain in so disadvantageous a position, when compared with other parts of the kingdom, as to communicate only at the rate of eight or nine miles an hour, at the utmost, whilst our neighbours travel at the rate of twenty-five. In self-defence, then, to the construction of a railroad we shall be driven, and the sooner we determine on it the better. By delay, we assist in diverting into other channels that commerce, and those advantages, which a little spirit and enterprise would enable us to secure to ourselves; but which once diverted, we may never have it in our power to reclaim.

Of the great benefits derived to a country from the establishment of a railroad, I have lately had an opportunity of witnessing an instance in Belgium, where a case presents itself more analogous to that of the people of Cornwall than is afforded by comparison with any of our own railroads. In Belgium *, as with us, the rate of travelling was very slow, the means of communication by no means good, and the persons travelling were but few. Since railroads have been constructed, the number of travellers has increased in a degree infinitely beyond the utmost calculation, and much exceeding the proportion even on our railroads; and the commerce of the country, and the inhabitants, have been benefited accordingly.

Gentlemen, my sense of duty, as one of your representatives, added to the interest, in common with you all, I have in the prosperity of our native county, has induced me now to address you. I need not, I hope, add, that should you determine on the measure on which, in my opinion, that prosperity so very much depends, I shall have the greatest pleasure in affording every assistance in my power to carry it into effect.

I have the honor to remain, Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
HUSSEY VIVIAN.

Ordnance Office, August 23, 1839.

P.S.—Since this letter was written, I have learnt the proceedings at the meeting at Falmouth. The spirit with which the subject has been taken up in that town will, I trust, soon spread itself throughout the county. When Mr. M'Adam first introduced his improvements in road making, we were by no means behindhand in adopting them. Let us not now be found wanting.

We publish another letter from our correspondent T., which very distinctly states a grievance under which the Peninsular Officers have long laboured. The supersession of the Subalterns and Captains, who fought in the last war, commenced even earlier than the period stated by T., and so resistless was the pressure from the economists in and out of Parliament, that promotion was completely at a stand-still from 1816 to 1825,—Ensigns of ten and twelve years were then serving—and vacancies could scarcely be refused to them. The Army was reduced to the lowest scale, and half-pay Officers in vain sought restoration to full-pay. We scarcely blame the Military authorities for the state in which the Peninsular Subalterns were left. If every vacancy had been filled up by them, they would have little benefited in the end, for by so doing promotion necessarily ceased. These time and war-worn Officers should have been granted full-pay, while the young and active should have had a fair share of the vacancies, and the option of commuting their commissions, while health and strength remained to enable them to enter on other professions. As they have been retained on half-pay, and only permitted in advanced years to retire, we think that now, as an act of justice, some provision should be made for the heroes of "the hundred fights."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I am much obliged by the notice you have taken of my remarks respecting the toast given at the banquet to the Duke of Wellington at Dover. The compliment was an empty one, and you have amply proved it. There is another point, which I believe has never been exactly stated, to which I wish to draw your attention, with, alas! but a very faint hope that it will benefit, in the least, one,—even one,—of that luckless class of officers, the acknowledged brave defenders of their country, but who now are only objects to be recollected at the convivial board, or as creatures who have ceased to be. I will put the case as clearly as I can, leaving you to make use of the fact, without considering it necessary to publish my letter, for I am totally inadequate so to express myself as to be worthy of a place in your columns.

A young gentleman, appointed to an Ensigncy in 1812, and succeeding to a Lieutenancy, is allowed to purchase an Unattached Company in 1825 (or even before that time), restored to full pay say in 1827 or 1828, he, as a matter of course, is included in the Coronation Brevet, and takes precedence of many a Peninsularman, who still drudging on, in the rank of Captain, sees this lucky Major, who, but mayhap for the war and its effects, would not have the means to overstep them in promotion. What must be the feelings of such men, on reading the Duke's testimony to their merits, when he acknowledged the toast? Let the grateful nation respond to that, and the powers at the Horse Guards explain the reason why these men who helped the Duke to his greatness, and are still able to support him in his position, are neglected and passed over!

* Now Lieut.-General Sir Richard Jackson, K.C.B.

* In Belgium the railroads are constructed by the Government. No profit is expected beyond what is required for their maintenance. On the principle of the Penny Post, the benefit derived to the people from the facility of communication is considered an ample repayment; and such should be the case with our own railroads. It is a grievous mistake to have permitted the great lines of communication from the centre to the extremity of the empire to become private property, to fall into the hands of different parties, having their own immediate interests to consider, rather than those of the country generally.

I have not an Army List at hand, but you can convince yourself in a moment, that there are many Captains in the Line, and in the Artillery, who have been thirty years, or thereabouts, in the service. Some of these may be eligible for Chelsea or Kilmainham, and they most certainly are deserving of reward.—Now, if I have made the case clear, you will see that not only one but many officers in the Army, now calling themselves Majors, have only been present with their corps from three to five years, whilst the old and tried soldiers have been enduring regimental duty in every clime; and those Nursery Field Officers have been enjoying themselves at home, or storming the Horse Guards for employment like a pleasant part of the world, to the detriment of the service, and to the disgust of the Army.—I am, &c. T.

London, Sept. 9, 1839.

In the "Foreign Miscellany" of the United Service Journal for the present month, we observe a statement, relative to the alleged decrease of stature of the French nation, founded on the observations of M. Villermé, a medical man of some note. It would be rash to say, that this gentleman has proved nothing, unless we were presented with the whole of his reasoning, and the facts on which it is founded; but the mere circumstance of the lowering of the standard height for grenadiers does not absolutely demonstrate the incorrectness of our own opinion (which we know to be far from singular), viz. that the population of France generally has improved rather than degenerated in personal advantages since the Revolution, although there can be no doubt that the manufacturing towns of that country share in the evil effects which such pursuits must produce everywhere. Yet this is nearly all here quoted in favour of his position, except the circumstance of the French regulation-caps being too small for the heads of most of our soldiers, which may prove (what few doubted) actual superiority of the size of the British over the French race, but not the degeneracy of the French from their own immediate ancestors. *

Thickness of skull, however, whether literal or figurative, is not always accompanied by corresponding capacity of chest; on the contrary, the circumference of the thorax of the smallest-headed men is often immense.

We presume the remark, that "it is matter of notoriety, besides, that the English troops are smaller of size than many continental, particularly the German and Hungarian," is M. Villermé's own, because we know that this "matter of notoriety," (however likely to be true hereafter, if the present state of things in England continue,) is, as yet, contrary to the opinions of most of the writers in the United Service Journal, as well as to those of many other British Officers, who have paid attention to the subject. To our own observation it is also opposed. Of the Hungarians, indeed, we know little personally; but the country is peopled by many tribes, differing widely in origin and stature, and we have always understood that, although the picked grenadiers of the Emperor's guard are fine and tall men (inferior, however our own Household Cavalry) the men of most the other regiments are of low stature.

It is a curious phrase, this "matter of notoriety," though often convenient in disposing of a question off-hand. How many "matters of notoriety" are far from being matters of fact! How few facts are correctly ascertained, even when they lie most easy of access! For instance, in the article we have been discussing, five feet five inches, French measure, is stated to be about five feet ten inches and a half, English; although, in fact, it is scarcely five feet nine inches and a quarter English; the other measurements must therefore be proportionally reduced, before we shall have a correct idea of the varying standard of the French grenadiers, which we rather suspect, after all, refers not to all their troops so styled.

* Malte-Brun, whose general accuracy is, we believe, acknowledged, describes the nation as "not a tall race of men, but active, muscular, and robust."

The Revenge has been less successful than Powerful in enlisting men at Cork, and we perceive that the Irish papers have taken up the lament of the want of seamen, and are ringing the changes on all the calamities to be apprehended on that score.

The scarcity of seamen proceeds from three causes;—first, that whilst several line-of-battle ships have been commissioned this year, none have been paid off; secondly, the progressive and vast increase of our trading ships, causing a more than [illegible] raising the wages [illegible] the merchant service to the Royal Navy; and thirdly, the number that desert from our shipping in the ports of British North America, and find their way into the United States, where they meet with ready employment, for the Americans appear to depend entirely upon British seamen for the majority of their crews.

The working of our apprentice laws produces about five thousand seamen annually—we mean that number emerge from boys to manhood, from apprentices to able-seamen, every succeeding year, [illegible] is may be about double the number that go [illegible] the ordinary course of events, by death, old [illegible] isability, shipwreck, &c.; but this increase, [illegible] as it is, does not appear to keep pace with the demand, for the three causes we have stated. The scale of apprentices is regulated by Act of Parliament, and it can be extended, but the policy of this is doubtful, because the three causes may not always operate, and our shipping prosperity might—as has often been the case before—receive a check, and then thousands of seamen would be thrown out of employment. The same reasoning applies to increase of wages in the Navy; for if the pay is once increased, it will be difficult to reduce it. In merchant ships the men engage for the voyage only, and the wages are great or small according to the demand for seamen. Still we think that, under present circumstances, and even with a view to the future, the able seaman's pay should be 40*s.* per month in the Royal Navy, and increased on renewed terms of entry, under conditions somewhat similar to the good-conduct warrant, which has worked so admirably in the Army. With the prospective advantages of pension, Greenwich, &c., this increase of pay, which [illegible] ld apply to able seamen and petty officers only, [illegible] ld have a great effect in inducing prime men enter the Navy. In war, when large numbers are required, and when the pay rises with the demand in merchant ships, and generally becomes exorbitant, other means will be necessary. But extraordinary cases demand extraordinary measures; we are only now arguing with reference to our present position, supposing it necessary to maintain the Naval force we have now afloat, and that our commercial marine continues to flourish and increase, as it has done for several years past.

The difficulty of manning ships is, however, experienced by rival nations as well as ourselves. France, even with a system of coercion, obtains but indifferent crews, and that after considerable delay. As for America, she cannot man her single vessels for ordinary reliefs, and they are detained for months, and even then made up by foreigners, whilst not a single foreigner is allowed to be entered in our ships-of-war.

We give ready insertion to the letter appended, and to which we direct the attention of those who see nothing but fault at home, and everything that is excellent on the part of our rivals, in the management of their Naval affairs. It is not at all surprising that the state of matters in America, after so long a peace, should be such as our correspondent describes. A few ships may be kept in tolerable condition at the small cost which Jonathan is willing to apply to his Naval Department; but to maintain a Navy of ships of the line to any extent, prodigious expense is required, not only in the first outlay, to provide arsenals, docks, &c., all which, even in such wealthy countries as England and France, being only accomplished in centuries, but to keep up the store of materials is a never-ending expense, and one which involves great care and foresight in the management, even when the means at command are ample. If the stores and appurtenances of our several Dock-yards were valued at even half their cost, they would amount to many millions; such a sum, indeed, as Jonathan will be unable to apply to the like purpose for many years to come. Until America can effect this, and, moreover, until her population becomes more dense, and a large portion of her citizens are driven to engage in a sea life, she must content herself with following, at a humble distance, the example of older and richer States, which have been accustomed for centuries to maintain large fleets, in peace and war.

A FEW OBSERVATIONS UPON THE PRESENT REAL CONDITION OF THE UNITED STATES' NAVY.

By Burrowes W. Sleigh, Esq.

For the Naval and Military Gazette.

It would appear, from what has already been said upon the American Navy, almost superfluous to make any further remarks upon this important question. But in answering the charge of arrogance, as some may ascribe my motives to, I shall merely preface my remarks by mentioning I have resided in the United States for many years, and have been located near several of the chief American Naval stations; I have been through a great many of their vessels of war, and have had great opportunities of learning the real condition of the American Navy, not only from an enlarged circle of American Naval friends, but also from the strictest personal observation.

The great question to be answered is,—Is the American Navy, or has it a likelihood to be, for many years, in a proper condition to enter upon a war with Great Britain? I answer fearlessly, No! The American Navy consists of about 50 vessels of war, and from what some travellers have stated you would be led to suspect the above vessels were in a very flattering condition; but such is not the case. "'Tis true they have a few good frigates," five; two or three good ships of the line, but the great bulk of their ships are worthless. I shall extract an account of the condition of the American Navy from the Philadelphia Transcript and Public Ledger; the Editor is an officer in the United States' service, and last, though not least, the paper is free from political prejudices; one of a completely independent stamp, and published in the city where one of the chief Naval stations is situated.

This paper observes, June 25th, 1838:—"To protect our commerce what have we got? 50 vessels of war, one third of which are worthless, and another third of which are not fit for sea. A dozen crazy ships of the line, most of which were rotten before they could be rigged, and scarcely one of which can be kept upright in the water; some half-dozen frigates, too large for what they are named, too small for ships of the line, and thus unfit for anything. A dozen sloops, so clumsily constructed after the whims of ignorant and self-sufficient pretenders, as to be exceeded in speed by any Delaware mud scow. The Columbus and Ohio cannot go to sea for fear of sinking, or from danger of oversetting, so clumsily constructed. Independence (ship of the line) cannot use her armament for fear of sinking. The Delaware and North Carolina cannot get out of Gosport without running ashore, &c. Three or four Navy yards, not one of which contains a rope-walk, scarcely one of which has a timber-shed, not one of which contains sufficient materials for fitting out two ships of the line, and one, our own, not materials for the armament of a revenue cutter, or cutlasses enough to arm a steam boat. Yes, listen, ye boasters of our mighty Navy, and hide your heads in shame at the disgraceful fact!" Here is the REAL picture of their "wonderful" Navy.

Yes, the sum total of the American Navy is—Vessels of war, 50; "a third of which are worthless, another third not fit for sea;" divided into 12 ships of the line, most of which "are rotten;" "scarcely one of which can keep upright in the water!" 6 frigates, "not worth anything;" 12 sloops, "so clumsily constructed as to be exceeded in speed by any Delaware mud scow;" 20 gun boats, &c., not fit for action, being "half rotten;" making a total of 50 vessels.

I was in Philadelphia when the thrilling report reached that city that the Susquehannah packet ship was captured off Cape May by a "long, low, piratical, black-looking schooner." The Yankees called an immediate meeting at the Exchange, and agreed to arm a vessel to proceed after the pirates, and for that purpose hired the South Carolina, steam packet boat, Charlestown. The question now was where to get arms, "Why, where is the Navy Yard? that is a pretty considerable smart place," said a Baltimorian. "I calculate as how you bee's right," answered a Yankee down-easter; and off they posted to the Navy Yard. When, lo and behold! to their utter astonishment, there were not arms and cutlasses enough to arm a cutter! When this important fact became known, the citizens returned home disconsolate, the Charlestown was saved from being the receptacle of the hot-headed heroes, and the Susquehannah was left to her fate.

The Americans "talk big" when there is no chance of a war, and when they fully expected one to arise out of the American interference in the Canadian rebellion, they acknowledged they were not fit to meet England at sea, that they were in no condition to chance a Naval struggle.

The Philadelphian, March, 1838, says:—"If war be intended by England, we are in no condition to meet it on the ocean. The French Navy would be a powerful auxiliary. The duty of our government is to be obliged to rely upon another nation for protection." A Member of Congress said, while speaking of the Canadian rebellion, and cutting out of the pirate steamer Caroline by the gallant Captain Drew, R.N., "Our Navy is a rotten, contemptible, imbecile, concern; our Army is lost, scattered, bogged, scalped, in the fens of Florida; and our Marine right arm of defence is a sheer hulk." This opinion was delivered in the Hall of Congress, Washington, and not one member could dare to contradict this statement. Reported in the United States' Gazette, Jan. 17th, 1838.

The Globe, Jan. 18th, 1838, says "In our case, a miserable case, in the contingency of a sudden war." Now I beg to observe, that these accounts are from different papers, of every political party. 1st. The Public Ledger, an independent paper, free from politics; 2d. United States' Gazette, J. R. Chandler, Editor, a paper fierce in the democratic cause, that is, for the return of Harrison and Clay to the Presidency; 3d. Washington Globe, a Government paper, for Van Buren; 4th. A talented Member of the United States' Congress.

From these different sources, I take the liberty of concluding that the American Navy is not in the excellent condition which some parties conclude, and furthermore that it is in a very miserable condition. I shall not make any observations upon the evidence I have brought forward, I leave the facts to speak for themselves.

Before I conclude these observations, I beg leave to differ from a gallant Captain who represented the English sailors as a body of the most depraved renegades, or words to such effect. I do think the talented and gallant Captain made this remark under a feeling, I must allow, of just indignation at the British sailors serving for American pay. But I do think the English tar is not the "most" depraved sailor in existence; and I, on the contrary, think that the British tar is the noblest specimen of warm-hearted and noble souls, men who scorn danger, and that would fight to the very last inch with their country's flag nailed mast high, before they would compromise the honour, or disgrace the colours of that nation,—

> "Whose flag has braved a thousand years
> The battle and the breeze."

'Tis true a great number of our seamen entered the American Navy during the last war; but they were criminals, obliged to fly from the outraged laws of their country.

The American vessels are manned by English sailors, but in the Englishmen serving in their Marine, I say it is not from an unpatriotic feeling against their country, but from dire necessity. For instance, I left New York for Liverpool in the packet ship Hibernia, Captain Cobb, August, 1838; he had a crew of twenty men, all British subjects, and only two Yankees in the ship, the Captain and First Mate. The great part of them had their families in England, and from conversation I had with them, I found them one and all true and patriotic, and that would fight for England if a war commenced: he had three supernumeraries from the American frigate Constitution, just paid off. These men had before served in British men-of-war, and were allured by the high pay of the Americans to join their service. They assured me that the treatment they received was the most tyrannical and brutal. During a cruise of three years, 25,000 lashes were distributed through the crew, from a calculation made by the most intelligent of them. They were going home to rejoin their country's service, quite sickened with the American Navy.

I shall conclude these remarks upon the American Navy, and all I ask is for an impartial reading by those gentlemen who should honour these lines with a perusal, and to remember what I have brought forward is upon the evidence of American authorities, coupled with my own personal observations.

August 20th, 1839.

We ardently desire to see a fund established for the Army and Navy, from which benefits may be safely granted for any length of time; and five-and-twenty years ago we were active supporters of a measure of this kind, then put forth under the countenance of the Prince Regent, the Royal Dukes, a large number of Generals, several hundred officers, and half the regiments of the British Army. The calculations were not only approved, but extolled by the celebrated Mr. Morgan, of the Equitable Assurance Office. With all these encouragements the plan was extinguished, because His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, an acknowledged friend, considered that the sanction of the Government was absolutely necessary, and the Minister of the day, Mr. Percival, refused that sanction, on the strange and illiberal ground that the funds, as shown by the approval of the first actuary in Europe, would give to officers "too great an influence in the State."

When, therefore, some months since, it was proposed to establish a Benefit Fund for the United Service, we were the first to give it support. A code of regulations, issued under the sanction of Major-General Wright, and agreed to at public meetings, appeared in this paper on the 18th and 25th May. These regulations, however, required considerable revision; for, among other absurdities, the old and the young were to subscribe alike,—the result of which must have been, that the promoters of such an institution would, in a very few years, have been charged by the subscribers either with gross ignorance or knavery. Our advice to the Directors, that they should revise the crude regulations, was adopted, and the officers who were then in the direction very rightly determined not to receive any more subscriptions.

We do not know whether any of the gentlemen whose names appeared in our paper of 25th May are now in the direction: we have understood that the chief, if not all, have retired, and that Major-General Wright is gone to Canada. A new prospectus, however, has been sent to us, without the name of any Director attached to it; but, we are told, all communications are to be made to a gentleman "of the Hon. E. I. Company's Retired Service," and that a general meeting is to be called for the 21st September next, when the new rules are to be taken into consideration. It is with these rules, therefore, that we have to deal.

We lament that the institution was not in the first instance taken up by officers of rank and influence, for there can be no doubt that it would give to the Army and Navy great benefits, if established on sound principles; and with this impression we shall submit some suggestions and remarks on the new rules, with the hope of their being remodelled by competent individuals.

In looking at some of the rules issued by the "Honorary Secretary," we should say this may be a most excellent institution for the benefit of those who are already independent; for though Art. 28 says, "if possessing a clear 100*l.* a-year the child shall not benefit," yet, if the child (no mention being made of the widow—we presume she is not to be excluded, even though her income should reach as high as 1,000*l.* or 2,000*l.* a-year) draws an income of 90*l.* a-year, she may then likewise receive the annuity from the institution, which may amount to any extent (Art. 18) the subscriber may choose to insure for, viz. "as many children as he pleases at annuitants for any amount." Thus any decrepid officer, with an East India liver (no medical certificate being required), whose age may be 50, but whose constitution is gone, having some 10,000*l.* money, and a rental of 400*l.* a-year coming in, chooses to live up to his income; but seeing he cannot hold out much longer, lays out five sets of five daughters, 2,000*l.*, paying on the average 7*l.* (at the age of 50) a-share for each 10*l.* annuity, and probably dies a few months after. This, in round numbers, will secure for each say 250 shares, or 2,500*l.* a-year annuity. Now, the rental of 400*l.* a-year being likewise left for distribution among the five daughters, it is evident that neither will have 100*l.* a-year from that source, but 80*l.* only, consequently they will not be excluded from receiving from the institution each her 2,500*l.* a-year. There are several such officers of the "regular Army," (Art. 7,) retired officers, &c., who have held situations in India of a lucrative, though constitutionally destructive nature. Wherefore it is preposterous to take men as subscribers to-day, who, in all probability will not live out the next twelvemonths. Valetudinarians will swamp the funds, if the rule dispensing with medical certificates be not rescinded.

But the rules are calculated for none other than rich men. An entrance donation (Art. 8) of three guineas, in addition to the annual payments of four, (for an officer of 45 years old, and his wife 40), to insure an annuity of 100*l.*, provided the widow lives, and then only for so long as she shall live, seems to us absurd when we look at the tables of the Crown Insurance Company, as we find by them that the same half-pay officer of 45, by paying only 3*l.* 15*s.* a-year, and no donation, can insure the solid payment of 100*l.* to any individual whom he may leave it to by will; and if she whom he originally intended it for should die, some other will benefit. This 100*l.*, if the widow or daughter propose to set up an establishment, say a school, &c., will not only be preferable to a 10*l. annuity*, as enabling her to commence business with, but it will, in all probability, be productive of a return even more than the amount of 10*l.* annuity on the outlay, besides laying the foundation of future independence, and the maintenance of a family.

To become subscribers, officers who inhabit a 10*l.* house, if in the country, must retreat into a hut—if in town, retire into a garret, as the amount is far too great a deduction from their half-pay. There are, we regret to say, many five and even six-shilling Lieutenants who keep no servant; and some, whose families are large, are unable to send their children to school—not even a day-school. How, then, can such men become subscribers?

Art. 18, which sets no bounds to the "amount of shares," should limit the number to some specified extent for each subscriber, and old age and decrepitude should be excluded (if not altogether) from coming in upon the same terms of payment as the strong and vigorous, for it is the constitution, and not the number of years a man has lived, which should be considered. Art. 26, we presume, is incomplete, and requires the addition—"But in the event of the death of her husband, she reverts back on the institution as an annuitant;" for we do not imagine it is intended that, because she marries, she is never again to have her claim re-established. Art. 30 proposes to "amend and alter," &c. We have seen the bad effects of "altering and amending," as it was called, and do not approve of the practice. After having once established rules, let them be adhered to and stand fixed, because there are very many institutions already established, by which to be guided. Art. 18 talks very largely about paying six guineas entrance, if circumstances or inclination induce officers to delay subscribing till 1841, together with twelve days' arrears of pay, and compound interest, which, at the lowest calculation, for a five-shilling Lieutenant will stand thus, viz.—

Arrears of 12 days' subscription per ann. 2 years, or 24 days at 5*s.*	6	0	0
Compound interest, about	1	5	0
By way of commencement, and a supposed indulgence	13	11	0

Can anything be more ridiculous? Where is a five-shilling Lieutenant, with a family (and if he has none he does not require to become a subscriber) to find 13*l.* 11*s.* as an initiatory fee, prior to the further payment of the annual 3, 4, or 5*l.*? Now the fact that it is not the want of inclination, but the want of means, is borne out by reference to the Royal Naval Benevolent Society, where we find no less than 154 Admirals out of the 211 subscribing; 840 Captains also, out of the 691; and 340 Commanders out of the 810 on the list;—whereas there are only 822 Lieuts. out of the 3120, including the seven-shilling Commanders: showing the proportion of subscribing Admirals to be three-fourths; of the Captains exactly one-half; of Commanders two-fifths; and of Lieutenants not more than one-fourth.

But, however, the following examples will perhaps tend better to illustrate the working of the proposed scheme than any long discussion, viz.

A Lieutenant, aged 28, unmarried, pays donation (Art. 8), and subscribes	£1 1 9
At 31 he marries a woman, aged 25, and pays difference of donation (Art. 9)	2 2 0
During the three intervening years he paid, for 18 days' pay at 5*s.* Lieut.'s pay (does not say which, full or half)	4 10 0
At the age of 40 his wife dies, leaving a daughter 18 years old. Paid Ann. Sub. for 17 years at 3*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.*, that being the annual premium, per table, for his age, 31, and her age, 18 years	59 5 0
This money is then lost	£66 18 9

The Lieut. being now 46 years old, and his daughter 18, he pays*, according to the difference between her age and his:—that is, he 28, pays for 33 years' difference, which per table, is 4*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.* per annum during five years, at which time she, being 23, marries, and her claim ceases—five years' subscription . . . 24 15 5

At 55 the Lieutenant dies, being two years after the marriage of his daughter. (Query, must he still go on paying for the daughter, after married, to establish her claim in the event of widowhood, up to the day of his death, or does the daughter thenceforth lose all claim from date of marriage?)—two years' subscrip. . 9 18 2

A dead loss of . . £101 13 4

But if the same Lieut. at 28 insures his life in 100*l.*, he pays (per Tables of Insurance) 2*l.* per annum during 27 years, at which time being 55, he dies (paid) . 54 0 0

Insurance Office pays to his daughter (the wife, as above, being dead, although married . . . 100 0 0

Gain, less interest . . £46 0 0

But let us now take another view of the scheme, and suppose a Lieut. gets his commission at 20, and pays . 1 1 1

At 25 he marries a woman of 20, pays diff. of donation . 2 2 0

Paid during five years unmarried, 6 days' pay yearly, or 30 days at 5*s.* half-pay† 7 10 0

He dies at 55; consequently has paid, during 30 years the annual subscription as per table (he 25, wife 20), 3*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* 99 18 0

Money lent . . £116 2 1

For the sacrifice, then, of 116*l.*, if the wife lives, she gets, a widow, 10*l* a-year; but what are the chances that she will only outlive her husband, but, moreover, survive him by 11 years, without doing which, she does not get back the subscribed? And surely money sunk is worth 10*l.* per cent. any speculator as prompt payment, without running the chance whether you get a shilling of it or not, at some long distant period. The number on the "per contra" side of the question will be but very small, as compared with the losers.

Finally, we beg the attention of the officers [illegible] attend the meeting on the 21st of this month [illegible] lowing sensible letter. To establish [illegible] on sound principles they must reject the proposed "Rules," and the tables that accompany them.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am no financier myself, wherefore the observations I am about to offer may, for aught I can say, be altogether illusory. When we know that a system of insurance exists, for securing certain sums of money on the demise of individuals, by the payment, during life, of small annual advances; and that the insurers, moreover, have established the system with the view to their own personal profit—that they have, in fact, made it a professional source of emolument—even though encumbered as it is with incidental expenses for offices, agents, clerks, advertisements, and other costly contingences, it appears to me reasonable to suppose that some similar scheme may be advantageously adopted among so numerous a body as the United Services, the Army and Navy, for the benefit of their survivors, widows, or children; and that it may be done at a still less annual advance of premium than is required by the present insurance offices; because the object of any such institution among us, is that of benefiting our survivors only, and not, like those incorporated bodies, to create incomes for ourselves, or even increasing the means of personal subsistence; nor would our institution require the expensive outlay which insurance offices cannot fail to encounter; consequently all returns derivable from annual advances, put out at interest, would go to the establishment of a positive fund. Suppose a thousand healthy persons, at the age of 30, pay (as per insurance office tables) 2*l.* a-year each. I find, by the Northampton tables, that the extension of life, at that age, is 28 years additional (this supposes that one-half will die younger than 28, and the other half so much beyond it, that the latter continuing to pay the difference constituted the average), and that 2*l.* a-year premium will, at five per cent., compound interest, amount in that time to 116*l.* (in round numbers) each subscriber; consequently to a gross sum of 116,000*l.* by accumulation to this period,—with some trifling deductions for incidental expenses, of no comparative moment. Such a sum will afford a donation of 100*l.* to each claimant at the death of the subscriber; and still leave 16,000 to meet extraordinary demands, arising out of the chances of extra deaths by casualties incidental to active service (and this it is which will constitute the feature of "Benevolent" Institution—for otherwise we may subscribe to the ex*surance offices*, but cannot pay the difference requirec for "active service;" and this alone renders a professional institution expedient) but which would accrue to that extra demand on the funds. With such a prospect of securing a sum, of respectable amount, at small annual cost, many will readily sacrifice their comforts, and contest during the bare necessaries of existence, to secure some adequate by which their families may have it in their power to [illegible] business or profession for their future subsistence, when they shall have been themselves laid in the grave.

Such an institution would indeed merit the designation of "Benevolent," and would render officers comparatively free from care, and that feverish anxiety with which many are now labouring; as it would then rest with themselves to make provision to a greater or lesser extent, proportionate to their personal privations. If the payment of large sums, instead of annuities, be an objection, the scale of a annuity is easily calculated, for instance, suppose the subscriber, as above, has a daughter five years old when he commenced paying premiums, and he dies at the age of 55; she will then be 28; at which age the scale of annuity at the insurances offices is 8*l.* 10*s.* for her 100*l.*; but a good round sum, of adequate means to form an establishment or partnership, &c., whereby the females of a family may earn an independent subsistence, must be preferable to an annuity as being more beneficial, both to the females themselves and to society generally.

If, however, such institution is to be established, let not the Directors commit the gross error of dispensing with "health certificates" of bodily health is of far greater consideration than age. Take a well-cored veteran of the Navy, whose age is 50, but sinews as tough as the salt junk he fed upon at the commencement of last war, and put him in competition with a slop-consuming tee-totaller of consumptive habit, and only numbering 30 summers, which is the better life of the two? Whether or not, there is no necessity for complicated machinery in the formation of such institution; insurance offices are numerous; if the scale they have adopted proves profitable, as a lucrative business, surely, with the many thousands who compose the Army and Navy, the same scale may be safely adopted by us; and the several ages, 28, 30, 32, &c. pay 1*l.* 11*s.*—1*l.* 15*s.*—2*l.*, &c., as per scale now before me, provided the subscribers be in good bodily health at the time of insuring. But as for married men paying this and unmarried men paying that, it won't do; neither do we want an institution that compliments by a premium to name mothers, sisters, or grand-aunts; we want to insure a sum of money, or an annuity, for whomsoever we may choose to leave it to, without the chance-medley, head or tale hazard, of losing all benefit, and substitution-money too, because the particular individual, intended to be benefited, happens to die prematurely. If some such equitable scheme be not adopted, our brother officers need give themselves no further trouble in the affair, as the benevolent offices have only to make a liberal arrangement for officers to go on active service, to get numerous contributors to their institutions. As for the ridiculous nonsense, that "if a girl marries (Art. 26, G.S. Regs.) she must lose her annuity from the funds of the Benevolent Institution"—without any intention on the part of the framers of the rules, they have given them an air of sobriety; it does very well for Government, who supplies the funds for payment of widows, to establish such an arrangement; but in the case of a Benevolent Institution, we supply the funds ourselves, and are not going to be made the dupes of the flattering epithet "Benevolent;" and, after contributing our money, for the raising which we have undergone severe mortifications, to hold "our daughters shall participate so long and no more." subscribe, we shall expect to leave to our nominees an equivalent for their benefit, no longer as they shall continue in existence, whether married or single. This is an affair of business, not of compliment, and entirely bordering on charity.—If my daughter dies after me, there is an end of the affair, and my money sunk; if she dies before I am [illegible] to transfer the annuity to another.

A TYRO IN FIGURES.

"Of all stations in the New, aye, or Old World, commend us" (says a correspondent) "to Honduras. If you jump out of the window of your quarters, it is up to your neck in mud; a rain falls, the narrow causeway to the mess-room is changed into a moving bog; during the day the flies contend with you for the food you vainly attempt to devour, and at night the musquitoes are in such force, that the black troops sleep under netting, and the sentries mount guard with a brush to keep off these invaders. Turtle and tough beef form the food; one day tough beef, and turtle the next. The iron constitutions of Africans can alone resist the inroads of the climate; and the officers who have been at Sierra Leone consider it a most desirable station when compared with the Musquito shore."

What a beautiful motto it, "Quo fas et gloria ducunt;" but may our gloria never lead us to the land of mahogany logs and jungle fever.

The Court.

Her Majesty, her august mother, and their royal relatives are, we are happy to state, in the possession of perfect health.

On Wednesday morning the Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Cobourg Gotha, with the Princess Victoire and Prince Augustus, and Prince Leopold, of Saxe Coburg, left Windsor Castle for Woolwich, to embark for the Continent. Her Majesty, and the King and Queen of the Belgians, and the Duchess of Kent, accompanied their illustrious relatives to the place of embarkation, and returned to the Castle in the afternoon.

The Queen Dowager has paid visits during the week the Queen, the King and Queen of the Belgians, and Duchess of Kent, at Windsor Castle, and to the ke and Duchess of Cambridge, at Kew. Their Maties the King and Queen of the Belgians and the chess of Kent arrived at Bushy House yesterday rning from Windsor Castle. In the afternoon King opold left Bushy for his seat at Claremont; and the Queen of the Belgians and the Duchess of Kent took their departures for Windsor Castle.

The New Governor-General of Canada.—The Glasgow petition against Mr. Thomson's appointment has been signed by many leading commercial men of all shades of politics. The petition says:—"We would respectfully call to your Majesty's remembrance that the known and deliberately expressed opinions of the Rt. Hon. C. P. Thomson, in his place in Parliament, on subjects involving the vital interests of the colonies, and especially of Canada, are such as, depriving him of the confidence of the colonies, and their hearty co-operation, must render it impossible for him to administer the Government of Canada at this critical period with advantage to the empire, or with safety to the lives and properties of your loyal Canadian subjects. We therefore earnestly implore your Majesty to rescind the appointment of the Rt. Hon. C. P. Thomson as Governor and Captain-General of the Canadas, and to confer that most important Government on a person whose opinions are not inimical to those great interests which he is sent to protect."

The following has been addressed to the Editor of the Morning Chronicle:—

"SIR,—I have seen with the utmost astonishment, this morning, in your paper of the 4th instant, a statement that Mr. Poulett Thomson had accepted the Government of Canada at my earnest request.

"I desire you will contradict that statement on my behalf, from whatever quarter your information may have been derived.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"Inverness-shire, Sept. 6, 1839."

Despatches were received on Saturday at the Colonial Department from Jamaica and Barbadoes, the windward and Leeward Islands, and St. Helena; and on Monday from Sir John Colborne, the Governor of the Canadas, and from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in North America. Despatches were forwarded yesterday from the Foreign Department for Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople; and for the Marquis of Clanricarde, the English Minister at St. Petersburg; also from the India Board for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay.

The Queen has conferred the honour of Knighthood upon Michael Mac Turk, Esq., of British Guiana.

Her Majesty has given the "Camoys" Peerage to Mr. Stonor, who was proved to be the representative of the elder co-heirs. There were two other claimants, one of whom was Sir Jacob Astley. Her Majesty has decided the Peerage of "Braye," also a considerable time in abeyance, in favour of Mrs. Otway Cave, mother of Mr. Robert Otway Cave, M.P. for Tipperary.

A successor to Lord Howick, as Secretary-at-War, has not yet been appointed. Mr. Charles Wood, M.P., had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer yesterday in Downing-street.

The King of Sardinia has had a gold medal struck for such Knights of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus as have been 50 years in the Army. It bears on one side the legend of "St. Maurice, the Protector of our Armies;" and on the reverse, "To ——, Knight of St. Maurice, for ten lustres of Military service."

The Wellington Pavilion.—A grand ball took place in the Wellington Pavilion, at Dover, on the 6th inst. All the decorations remained precisely in the same state as on the occasion of the banquet, the bands of the 90th and 27th played alternately. Dancing was kept up with spirit until a late hour. Among the company were the Duke of Wellington, in the uniform of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, Col. Monro and Officers of the Royal Artillery, Gen. Frederick and family, Col. Best, Capt. Hamilton, Col. Bingham, Major Deedes, the Officers of the 11th Light Dragoons, Admiral Hancock, Capt. Boteler and Officers of the Packet Service, the Officers of the 27th and 90th Regiments.

Robbery and Attempt at Murder at the United Service Club.—About seven o'clock on Thursday morning, the policeman on duty in Pall-mall perceived marks of blood on the door of this house. While he was examining them a servant came out, and, in evident terror, stated that the steward, Mr. Charles Fenn, was lying in his bed-chamber, apparently murdered. On entering the sleeping-room of the steward, which was on the ground-floor, the unfortunate man was found lying on the floor, deluged in blood from wounds on the head, and in a state of insensibility. On examining the doors, which the perpetrator, to make his escape, was obliged to open, five or six in number, they were all found to be marked with blood, as was the outer door through which escape had been effected. It has been ascertained that nothing has been removed from the room, except the cash and notes from the cash-box, which had been opened by the proper key, which, Mr. Fenn states, must have been taken from the pocket of [illegible]

* Art. 19 speaks of "annual subscription, according to the tables, for the difference of the age of subscriber and that of the nominee;" but on referring to the table, we there find set down, "Age of Subscriber, ——. Of Nominee, ——. Ann. Prem." but not a word about the difference of age.

† Art. 9 sets forth the payment of six days' pay, but does not specify whether full-pay or half-pay. If it be intended that officers on full-pay are to pay full, and those on half-pay only half, it alone will be sufficient objection to the scheme—payments should be specific.

also states, that on his being attacked by the ruffians, he instantly jumped out of bed and grappled with his assailants, with whom he struggled for full ten minutes, when he was overcome by the effects of the repeated blows he had received, and the loss of blood. It is, however, remarkable that neither the struggle nor his cries were heard by any of the other inmates of the establishment, who are numerous. Another singular circumstance is, that the bell-rope, which hung by the side of the head of Mr. Fenn's bed, was found to have been cut off, and was lying on the floor. The whole of the servants residing both in and out of the house, between thirty and forty in number, have been examined before Superintendent Baker; but their answers have been so plain and straightforward, that all suspicion has been removed from any of them, although the police are still convinced that the outrage must have been committed by some persons well acquainted with the premises. The following official circular has been forwarded to each of the police station-houses :—

The numbers of the notes are not known. At the same time the steward was attacked, and received several blows about the head and arms, supposed by a stick which was left behind in the room. The above was committed by two men, of whom no description can be given.

On Wednesday morning the daughter of Mr. Moyes, a baker in Hemmings-row, Charing-cross, committed suicide by throwing herself off the top of the monument. She quitted her home at an early hour in the morning, and left a letter behind stating that her family should never see her again. An inquest has been held on the body, and the jury have returned a verdict of " Temporary insanity," with an earnest recommendation to the corporation of London to adopt such measures as might seem necessary to prevent the perpetration of similar acts in future. On the following evening the father, Mr. Moyes, expired. He had for some weeks been confined to his bed through illness, occasioned, it is said, by sorrow for the loss of his wife, and vexation at the publications in a libellous periodical, reflecting on the character of his family; and his being made acquainted with his daughter's melancholy death so affected him as to cause an almost immediate dissolution.

Cowes, Sept 8.—At a general meeting of the members of the Royal Yacht Squadron, held on 6th inst. at the club-house, the following members were present :—The Earls of Rchester and Durham, Vice-Adm. Sir G. Hamond, Lieut.-Gen. Sir W. Johnstone, Spenser de Horsey, Esq., M.P., — Murray, Esq., M.P., Capt. Corry, R.N., J. Moore, J. Lindegren, G. Bentinck, J. Tollemache, E. N. Harvey, L. Upton, and T. Hallifax, Jun., Esqrs. The following were elected members :—J. P. Delme Radcliffe, Esq., Fanny cutter yacht, 75 tons; Sir S. Clarke, Bart., new schooner yacht, of 95 tons, building; and James Nicl, Esq., Louisa, new schooner yacht, of 140 tons, building; honorary, Rear-Adm. the Hon. D. P. Bouverie.

Metropolitan Police Force.—The salaries have been increased in the following manner, viz. :—The superintendent of the A division to 300*l.* per annum in lieu of 250*l.*; the superintendents of the other divisions 250*l.* instead of 200*l.* Each inspector from 100*l.* to 118*l.* 6*s.* a year. Serjeants to have 24*s.* 6*d.* per week, being an increase of 2*s.* a week to their wages. First-class constables, 21*s.* a week in lieu of 19*s.* There are to be a second and third class of constables at 19*s.* and 17*s.* a week; and hereafter all persons joining the force will be attached to the latter class, who will by length of servitude and good conduct be entitled to the increased pay of the first class.

Explosion at Messrs. Pigou and Wilks's Powder Mills at Dartford.—On Monday morning an awful explosion took place on the premises of the above-named gentlemen, which threw down and scattered the corning-house, the whole of the implements and materials contained therein, in every direction, and we regret to add five lives have been sacrificed.

Integrity of the Old Police.—When Plank, the officer, waited on Fauntleroy, who suffered for forgery, he was asked by the banker if he could not take his word for appearing to answer the charge. " It is impossible," was the reply. The banker then pointed to a box, and intimated that it contained 70,000*l.*, which he might call his own if he abandoned his duty. The answer and the result need not be stated.

Haymarket.—Macready and Miss E. Tree continue, even in this dull season, to fill the house nightly with excellent company.

English Opera.—A burlesque of the Eglinton Tournament was a complete failure; but another new piece, The Lass of Gowrie, with some very sweet Scottish music, has proved most successful, and the house has been well attended throughout the week.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

Spain.—Translation of the articles of the treaty concluded between Espartero and the traitor Maroto :—

" 1. The Captain-General Don Baldomino Espartero will warmly recommend to the Government to carry into effect their former engagement, to propose to the Cortes of the kingdom the concession or modification of the Fueros. . . 2. The employments, rank, and military decorations of the General Officers and other individuals of the army under the command of Lieut.-General Don Rafael Maroto will be recognised, on his presenting lists expressing the branches to which they belong, leaving it to their choice either to continue serving and defending the constitution of 1837, the throne of Isabella Segunda, and the Regency of her august mother, or retire to their homes. . . 3. Those who shall adopt the first course, and continue in the service, will be drafted into the corps of the army as effective, or supernumeraries, according to their seniority in the scale of the instructions of the branches of the army to which they may belong. . . 4. Those who shall prefer to return to their homes will, if Generals or Brigadiers, obtain their half-pay according to the regulations of the service, at whatever place they may prefer; if officers under the grade of Brigadier, they will obtain unlimited leave of absence or half-pay, according to the regulations: if any of them should desire temporary leave of absence they will demand it through their inspectors, and it will be granted to them, excepting only those applying for leave to quit the country, in which case the application is to be made through the Captain-General, Don Baldomino Espartero, who will grant them passports, and forward their applications, recommending them for the approval of Her Majesty. . . 5. As those who may ask for temporary leave of absence for a foreign country cannot, according to the royal order, receive any pay until they return, the Captain-General, Don Baldomino Espartero, will have them furnished with four months' pay, in virtue of the authority with which he has been invested. This article includes all ranks, from General to Ensign. . . 6. All the preceding articles apply to all the civil employés who shall present themselves within twelve days after the ratification of this convention. . . 7. If the Navarrese and Alavese division shall present themselves in the same form as the Castilian, Biscayan, and Guipuscoan divisions, they will be entitled to all the concessions expressed in the foregoing articles. . . 8. All parks of artillery, magazines, depots of arms, clothing, and provisions, in the power of Lieut.-Gen. Don Rafael Maroto, will be placed at the disposal of Captain-General Don Baldomino Espartero. . . 9. The prisoners belonging to the corps of Biscay, Guipuscoa, and of the Castilian division, who shall conform to all the articles of this convention, will be liberated, and will enjoy the benefits contained therein; but those who do not conform to the articles will be continued as prisoners. . . 10. Captain-Gen. Don Baldomino Espartero will represent to Government, for them to lay before the Cortes, the consideration to which may be entitled the widows and orphans of those who have died in the present war, and who belonged to the corps comprised in this convention. . . This convention is ratified at the head-quarters of Bergara, 31st of August, 1839. " The Duke de la Victoria.

" Rafael Maroto."

Espartero sent on the 8th inst. to Don Carlos a message offering him a free sortie either for France or England, and the French and English Commissioners had undertaken to grant him in either case all the facilities in their power. Espartero ordered his Aide-de-Camp, who was the bearer of the despatches, to inform the officer into whose hands he was to deliver them, that in the event of Don Carlos refusing to withdraw quietly, he would in less than five days be attacked by irresistible forces, and Espartero could no longer answer for his personal safety. The wife of General Moreno, who has been assassinated by some of the soldiers of Maroto, was with him when he was shot, and also his daughter.

The opening of the Cortes took place on the 1st inst. The Queen Regent's speech contained no allusion to the diplomatic operations of Espartero, alluded only generally to the Military success of that officer, and was mainly taken up with congratulations on the improved moral and financial state of the country.

Switzerland.—A disturbance has broken out at Zurich, and, after the loss of some lives, the authorities were overthrown, and a central committee of government appointed. The people are said to be exasperated at the heavy taxation, and the general conduct of government.

Turkey.—Admiral Roussin is recalled from the post of French Ambassador at Constantinople. His sending his Aide-de-Camp, M. Anselme, to Alexandria with the mandates of the Five Powers, requiring Mehemet Ali to surrender the Turkish fleet, is stated to be the blunder which has occasioned his recal. With the French Government Egypt holds the first place, whilst Constantinople is quite secondary. M. Pontois, the successor of Admiral Roussin, is to be Minister, not Ambassador.

Dr. Ainsworth, Lieutenant Russell, and M. Rapain, then on a scientific and geographical tour in Asia Minor, were present at the battle of Nezib. When the Egyptians made their first attack on the Turkish front in vain and retired, the Englishgentlemen asked the Pacha to allow them to send their baggage to Bir for safety. This offended Hafiz, who declared he was certain of beating the Egyptians; and the removal of the baggage might have tended to dishearten the troops. The next day the Egyptians marched to the other side. Ibrahim stopped on the banks of the river, surrounded his infantry by his cavalry and artillery, and let loose his irregulars into the country. The Prussian officers Muhlbael and Molk advised the Pacha to attack in the night, or else retire upon Bir. Hafiz, after some hesitation, did commence a night attack with artillery, and, had he followed it up with any other force, he would have probably conquered. The next morning the Egyptians attacked with their artillery in front. The Kurd irregulars of the Turkish side disbanded, and began to pillage the camp. Hafiz, seeing that Ibrahim was leading his troops to attack the Turkish left, sent Scheriff Pacha with a regiment of cavalry to the aid of the left. But the regiment disbanded and fled, bringing off many with it. They ran to their tents on seeing the kurds pillage the camp, but they came up as soon as the others. The three gentlemen then retreated, the little they saved at first being afterwards pillaged, so that they reached Malatia without baggage or money, and were obliged to return to Constantinople.

Russia.—The following account of the Armies of Russia in the Caucasus, on the coast of the Black Sea, and in Armenia, is from a letter dated St. Petersburg, 24th ult. :—

The Army of the Caucasus, commanded by General Golowine, at Tiflis, is composed of 3,000 infantry, 800 dragoons, 1,500 Cossacks, and a half brigade of artillery. General Fest, at Derbent Boujnesk'i, occupies the coast of the Caspian Sea as far as Bacon, with 12,000 men and 36 pieces of artillery. In the fortresses of Cabasbdah there are 15,000 men in garrison with their artillery. Upon the lines of Tereku and the outposts, there are 2,500 Cossacks of the line. The Army of the Black Sea consists of 8,000 men and 24 pieces of artillery at Anapa, under General Grabbe; 12,000 men and 48 pieces of artillery on the line of Kouban, under General Rajewski: 9,000 men and 36 pieces of artillery on the coast and lines of Sundja, under General Sobolewski, and 3,500 Cossacks of the line in the plains of Alazan, under the Hetman Wierzouline. The Army of Armenia is composed of 20,000 men and 60 pieces of artillery, under General Ratzowski, at Erivan, and upon the line of Udaxes. This account does not include the irregular and native troops, which are calculated at from 45,000 to 20,000 cavalry.

General the Marquis of Londonderry's answer to an address of the Clergy of Ripon, Thirsk, and neighbourhood, upon the subject of the late duel:—

" Wynyard-park, August 16, 1839.

" Sir,—I have received, with becoming gratitude, and with the respect to which it is entitled, your letter of yesterday's date, accompanied by a representation to me of the clergy of Ripon, Thirsk, and their neighbourhoods, for my unchristian proceeding in violating the laws of God, by accepting a challenge and fighting a duel with Mr. H. Grattan. That any action of mine should so far interest the great body of clergymen who have signed the document must be to me a flattering circumstance, inasmuch as it is not called for by any connexion between the parties and the individual; as was the case, if my memory serves me, in Bath, upon a similar remonstrance made by the clergy, &c., of that city, to Lord Powerscourt, their member. Your exordium, therefore, to myself must be the more flattering; while if you, and the other clergymen who are signing parties to the representation, had ever read Lord Powerscourt's answer on the occasion I have alluded to, I am sure you would all have admitted nothing of reasoning or logic could be added to the irrefragable facts that are there laid down so truly and so admirably by so young a man, and that man not in my profession of arms.

" You call upon me, as a Christian senator and a nobleman, instead of bowing to the evil requirements of a worldly code, to have substituted exalted station and religious principles. But you forgot that this course might, in all probability, have entailed personal chastisement and insult. Allow me to observe, Sir, to your cloth, this may pass over. Civil action may redress. But to ours, this can never be risked.

" Did the clergy of any part of the empire remonstrate with the hero of 100 fights when he met Lord Winchilsea in a duel? From whence, then, may I ask, arises the extreme anxiety at this moment, upon a far humbler and less important matter? The clergy remonstrating seem to wish for publicity, and your letter informs me my reply may have an influence on society. But I should lose the degree of character I have (I hope) obtained through life for candour and straightforwardness, if I did not at once declare that while you, as clergymen, are compelled to view this transaction as unsanctioned and unauthorized by God, we as soldiers are bound to fight to uphold the altar and throne when attacked, and for this high duty our garments must be unsullied as yours: and while you in the due exercise of your high calling are bound to preach the gospel and administer consolation to the repentant sinner, you must leave to the British soldier the unfettered right of being the best judge and arbiter of his own honour, while he religiously believes, that in doing his duty in that state of life to which Providence has called him, he will find mercy in the Redeemer, instead of drawing down the wrath of God, as you seem to announce. I have the honour to be, Sir your obedient humble servant, VANE LONDONDERRY."

The letter has given rise to the following :—

THE MARQUIS TO THE ANTI-DUELLISTS.

Sir, I have received your kind letter about
My fighting a duel, when lately called out;
The same course you elsewhere have thought fit to try
And Powerscourt gave you a biting reply.

As Christian you wish me to stand on my rank;
That done, might produce an attack on my flank,
Which your cloth might patiently bear without tripping,
But soldiers can't very well risk a horse-whipping.

When Wellington Winchilsea fought, did we see
The clergy come forward? Then why bother me?
Why thus bust me up? At the truth I must hint—
The fact is, they're anxious to figure in print.

I beg to remark, that to pray they are right,
But soldiers must ever be ready to fight;
Then leave your long yarns, if you please, Sir, and bore
With counsel and rigmarole lectures no more.

A soldier, by Providence placed, honour's laws
Must keep, and be constantly prompt in their cause.
Then mind your own business with souls; spare our bodies,
And trouble your noddles no more with us swaddies.

Riding.—An officer on a field-day happened to be thrown from his horse, and as he lay sprawling on the ground, said to a friend who ran to his assistance, " I thought I had improved in my riding, but I find I have fallen off."

Literary Notices.

The Modern Literature of France. By George W. M. Reynolds, Member of the French Statistical and Agricultural Societies, &c., Author of "Pickwick Abroad," "Alfred de Rosann," &c. 2 vols. Henderson.

A THOUSAND times have we thanked Heaven most fervently, that English women are not French women—that the morals of England have no affinity with those of France. Had our thanks for those blessings never arisen to Heaven before, they would have been elicited most abundantly by the perusal of the work just now demanding our notice—a work so utterly un-English in its character, political, moral, and religious, that we grieve to see an Englishman's name in its title-page. Mr. Reynolds evidently thinks as a Frenchman, feels as a Frenchman, and writes as a Frenchman. In fact, he appears to have resided so long in France, that he has become denaturalised in politics, morals, and religion.

These volumes profess to be a review, or exposé, with examples, of the modern literature of France; that is, of "the literature of France since the revolution of 1830; which," says the writer, "is quite distinct from that under the fallen dynasty." In the true spirit of a Frenchman of the new school, Mr. Reynolds regards la jeune France as all-in-all upon every possible subject; and, as they who are themselves the most grossly prejudiced, are always the first to raise the war-whoop of "prejudice" and "narrow-mindedness" against those who may have the misfortune (quere?) to differ from them in opinion, sentiment or feeling, so he is in a towering passion with such of his countrymen as have presumed to express a belief that all the delicacy, purity, and virtue—all the genius and talent—all the integrity and honour upon the face of the earth, are not monopolised by the French under the dynasty of Louis Philippe.

"Prejudice," says Mr. Reynolds, "which a celebrated political writer very happily denominated 'the spider of the mind,' has done much to depreciate the value of foreign systems and institutions in the minds of the English. Hence it is that we daily hear even men of most liberal opinions expressing sentiments anything but impartial and just in reference to the French." "When," he proceeds, "we find the leading journals and periodicals of the English press still leaguing together against the French, with all the bitterness and hate which characterised the sentiments of the nation in those times when Napoleon rolled his war-chariot from the gates of Madrid to the palace of the Kremlin, and when our armies and household troops were called forth to protect the coasts against the menaced invasion of the imperial hero, —we feel our regret at such injustice commingled with a sentiment of pity, or indeed of CONTEMPT for the narrow-mindedness of our fellow-countrymen." This is all very dreadful.

Do our readers happen to recollect a particularly able, spirited, and graphic article which, we are here reminded, appeared in the "Quarterly Review" about three years ago, exposing the moral infamy of much of this same "modern literature of France," of which Mr. Reynolds now stands forward as the bold but injudicious and reckless champion? This is the source of all his ire. The article here alluded to he stigmatises as "the most desperate attack ever made upon a foreign nation by the pen" —as an "assault on the literature and morals of the French, disgraceful in the extreme." And he fondly hopes, that his "sketch of modern French authors will remove many of the prejudices existing against them in the minds of Englishmen."

Well has it been said—"Protect us against our friends!" Most unluckily for Mr. Reynolds, for his "sketch," and for his "modern French authors," our Englishman has himself fixed—irremovably fixed—the seal of truth upon the abused article in the "Quarterly Review." Had we required aught in corroboration of the astounding facts adduced in that article, we should have found it to satiety in Mr. Reynolds's volumes. Many of the translated extracts which he has given prove all—and more than all—that its most inveterately prejudiced enemies could wish to see proved against "the literature of France since the revolution of 1830." Some of the passages, notwithstanding Mr. Reynolds's admission that, "in a few (quere?) instances, expunged (quere expurgated?) translations are given," are such as place modern French authors—ay, and modern French women, too—in nearly the lowest possible grade in point of delicacy, decency, modesty, purity, virtue, and honour. But, we crave pardon, we are Englishmen, and, as a matter of course, ignorant, prejudiced, and narrow-minded. Under the influence, therefore, of our national ignorance, prejudice, and narrow-mindedness, we close, as we commenced, by thanking Heaven most fervently that English women are not French women—that the morals of England have no affinity with the morals of France, as exemplified in the literature of the Louis Philippe dynasty.

The Royal Armouries of Great Britain, from the time of the Ancient Britons. By Alexander Burnet. H. K. Causton.

WE by no means admit the author's introduction, that until the reign of Her present Majesty there existed no history of the armorial bearings so profusely scattered over the three kingdoms. We could put our hands on many works containing all the information now presented to us; but the merit of this neat little publication is, that every thing essential to be known respecting the Royal Armourie is therein carefully condensed, and that it also contains much other useful heraldic information. The volume is neatly illustrated, and has a copious and most useful index.

Colburn's Standard Novelists.—The fifteenth volume of this collection contains the third series of "Sayings and Doings." No less than 562 pages, with a capital portrait of the witty author. "Cousin William" and "Gervase Skinner" are equal to any of the very clever productions of Mr. Hook.

Pictures of the French. Drawn by Themselves. W. S. Orr and Co.—The fourth part of this attractive work, translated from the French, introduces us to the Virtuoso, the Duchess, the Midwife, and the Horticulturist. These characteristics are admirably hit off, and the illustrations as usual are excellent. The work is full of entertainment, and gives a better idea of the habits and notions of our neighbours than any other we could name.

Arabian Nights' Entertainments. J. Thomas.—This excellent, cheap, and revised edition is now within a number of its completion. With good type, good paper, very spirited and happily-designed illustrations, the success of these delightful and popular tales is certain.

Smith's Standard Library.—The new issue includes the Life of Benvenuto Cellini, Stephens' Incidents of Travel, Scott's Vision of Don Roderick, and Miss Sedgwick's Home. Benvenuto Cellini, as described by Horace Walpole, is more entertaining than any novel, and at the same time conducive to the improvement of the mind. Mr. Stephens' work is an excellent narrative of the every-day incidents that occur to a traveller in the east; and in "Home," we have the most correct view of American life. Such works must command an extensive circulation at their present price, which, in some instances, is less than one-tenth of the sum at which they were originally published. The Standard Library will find its way into the hands of all classes of the community.

Thomas's Life of Napoleon. Part IV. Tyas's History of Napoleon. Part VII.—We have frequently noticed these works, and we are glad to find that there is no decrease in their respective claims for public favour. The pictorial embellishments, chiefly Military subjects, are the most characteristic that we have ever met with, and, as truly said, leave scarcely a passage of the stirring life of Napoleon, 'from the cradle to the grave,' undepicted. Both work's are very spiritedly conducted, and deserve to be in every soldier's library.

The Illustrated Shakspere. Tyas.—"Twelfth Night," exquisitely embellished by Kenny Meadows, forms the fifth part of this surprisingly cheap and beautiful edition of the works of our great dramatist. The introductory remarks to the play are excellent.

Harry Lorrequer, No. VII. Curry, Dublin.—The humour of these "Confessions," with the illustrations by "Phiz," are irresistible. This is by far the best of the "Pickwick school," now in course of publication.

Pocket Diary, 1839.—A little tract distributed by the National Endowment and Assurance Society, embodying much sensible instruction, with excellent tables for Life Assurance and Immediate Annuities.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR ISAAC COFFIN.

THERE were some things about this personage too much out of the common course to allow of letting him go down to his grave without a volley. Our readers all know that the Admiral was a Bostonian. He loved to speak of the times when he was "a dirty-faced little rascal, licking molasses with the boys on Long-wharf." This was before the revolution. The veterans say that his family, which we have always heard was rather of humble condition than otherwise, resided in Province House Court.

Isaac was not destined, however, to be always licking molasses. There was a spirit in him which yearned for activity and adventure, and we find him in the British Navy at a very early date. In this service no man more thoroughly earned that advancement and reputation which are both so hard to be earned. He went regularly and rigorously, we believe, through all the ordinary grades, till he reached the fourth step from the summit of a list which is always long enough to discourage the hardiest aspirant. During this long service he must have lived over strange scenes. Indeed, we know very well that he did so, and can only regret that we hear nothing of a memoir appearing which should embody the spirit of these things.

At one time the Duke of Clarence was under him—as Midshipman, we believe. William got greatly attached to his Commander, too, who, though "rude in speech" sometimes, had yet, as the Indians say, a soft heart, and a large one. As Duke and King, the Middy afterward did all he could for Coffin's promotion, nor was he content to relinquish his society after coming to the throne. It is about three years since William, inviting him to dine, was informed by the Admiral that the gout, his great enemy, had wholly disabled him; he was obliged to be trundled about in his easy-chair. "Well, then, come with your easy-chair, if you can," the royal sailor's response to his old comrade; and so with his easy-chair he did. He had long before this received a splendid medal from his Sovereign's hand. This he carried with him on land and sea, and he had it when he was cast adrift on the Atlantic ten years ago or more, by the burning of the Boston. It was the only article then saved from all his chattels, but his happiness was complete when it was held up to him on Captain Mackay's deck, while the helpless hero lay there flat on his back.

This we have from a spectator of the scene. Our neighbour Osgood, the artist, was on board the Boston. He describes the fire (lightning in a cotton-ship), and the whole scene as terrific. The sea ran mountains high, and it seemed doubtful if a boat could live, yet the Admiral never blenched. He was disabled, and his companions were very anxious to save him. Mr. O. says, that as several were about to go below for that purpose, they encountered the veteran at the head of the cabin stairs. He, having heard of the danger, had ascended thus far, by the assistance of his servant, and with great and painful exertion. A mattress was laid in the whale-boat, which was on the quarter. On this he was placed, with his servant by his side, while a man was stationed at each tackle. He at the bows seemed well aware of the critical situation in which they were placed; but the man at the stern took out his knife, and when the wave rose to the boat cut the tackle, so that when the latter rose again, the other end being fast, the boat was half filled with water, and the sailor at the stern thrown into the deep. By this time the bow tackle was unhooked, the boat cleared from the side, and the old tar taken half drowned from the sea, to receive a pretty severe reprimand from the fearless man whom he had so unintentionally immersed in a cold bath.

Thus this scene went on till all were afloat in boats 200 miles from land. One soon died of exhaustion; the rest were on allowance of a third of a biscuit and a gill of water a day. The Admiral not only shared all, but he alone kept up the life of the company, giving them every encouragement, and winding up occasionally with one of his best songs. "Off, my lads," he roared out at one time, "don't look so eagerly at my old carcase. Here's a young painter will make a much better meal!" Fortunately this lasted but a night and a day. The passengers got into this port not long after. The Admiral went to the Tremont again, just as if all was not lost. Moreover, he sat to the artist, and paid him double price. He also gave Captain Mackay, who rescued the company, a douceur of 500 dollars and a splendid gold watch.

This is a long story, but it shows the whole man. He was a sailor of the old school. Smollet would have gloried in him, but he was too good for Smollet. With all his little eccentricities, and ill-disciplined as he was, there was a sound sense and sterling Yankee spirit at the bottom, which still kept him erect and sent him a-head. Yet, to his shrewdness was added a gallantry and generosity that clinched from nothing. His impulses were noble, and he yielded to them. He once commanded a ship when a man was knocked overboard in a gale; his comrade hesitated, but not Coffin; in five minutes he had the fellow on deck again, heels over head. "Ah, you blackguard," he cried, as he shook the water out of his trousers, "you've cost me a new hat."

At another time he had a fire suddenly discovered below, which proved to be close to the magazine, and even the old sailors were so frightened that 60 of them swam ashore. The Admiral, however, led on to the rescue, and the fire was with great exertions extinguished. As to liberality, his character is well known. We see that he has lately been publicly thanked as a leading benefactor of the Naval School. Every body knows that the Coffin school, consisting chiefly of persons of that family, has long been flourishing by his beneficence, at Nantucket, where there are said to be at least 500 of the name. The old man loved America best after all. There was nothing like Boston to him. Much more might be added to this gossip, but enough. We hope that some of the Admiral's contemporaries, who are qualified, will let us hear from them. Meanwhile, as we said before, they'll excuse this "volley."—Boston Transcript.

ADDRESS TO A SNUFF-TAKER'S NOSE.

"Knows he who never took a pinch,
Nosey! the pleasure thence which flows?
Knows he the titillating joys
Which my nose knows?

"Oh, nose! I am so proud of thee
As any mountain of its snows;
I gaze on thee, and feel that joy—
New Monthly. A Roman knows."

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday a General Court of Proprietors was held at the East India House, for the election of a Director in the room of Josias Du Pré Alexander, Esq., deceased, when, after proceeding to the ballot, James Weir Hogg, Esq. was declared elected by a majority of votes. The other candidates were—Col. Sykes, Col. Galloway, and Major-Gen. Archibald Robertson.

On Tuesday last, the Company's new steam-ship Semeetris was launched from the Messrs. Pitcher's yard at Northfleet. Her engines have been constructed by Messrs. Maudsley and Field, and are ready to be put into her immediately. Capt. Moresby, R.N., is to command her, and she will be despatched with the least possible delay to her destination.

H.M.'s sloop-of-war, the Favourite, has sailed for Rangoon, for the protection, as it is said, of our commerce, lest recent occurrences at China should induce the Burmese to display a little sauciness. Sir F. Maitland proceeds in the flag-ship Wellesley to adjust matters with the Chinese, and, as we understand, to make an energetic remonstrance against the harsh measures of the Chinese Commissioner. In all other quarters, matters have the same tranquil aspect that they have hitherto borne. Col. Sutherland has contrived to adjust the Joudpore affair, so that there is little chance of future disturbance.—Oriental Observer, June 8.

A gentleman high in the medical profession at Madras has been recently tried by a General Court-Martial, for disobedience of orders, in refusing to sit on a Committee, in which a junior was ordered as President. The proceedings were suppressed; but the individual in question was ordered to join the Garrison Battalion at Kunnur, which by many is considered an arbitrary stretch of authority.

We have to announce the death of Ens. Mercer, 70th N.I., on board the Lady Kennaway, on her way to sea, and of Ens. Forbes, 10th N.I., at Lucknow, on 8th inst.—Englishman, June 21.

Civil Service Annuity Fund.—It will be interesting to the members of the Bengal Civil Service to learn, that private letters, received by the last overland mail, mention that the Court of Directors have at length determined upon allowing a limited number of annuities to be granted annually at a quarter of the values thereof, so long as the assets of their annuity fund will bear it.—Calcutta Courier, June 20.

It is purposed to erect a new cathedral on the esplanade near the site of the late Chowringhee Theatre, which has been destroyed by fire. The Bishop of Calcutta has subscribed one lac of rupees, and will even advance still more should it be required.

China.—Nothing of interest occurred till Saturday, May 4, when an edict from the Commissioner who is at Bogue receiving the surrendered opium, reached Canton. It communicates his commands for re-opening the trade, orders the boats and guards surrounding the factories to be withdrawn, and permits the passage-boats to resume running under certain restrictions, and the ships at Whampoa to receive and discharge cargo. Capt. Elliot is allowed to pass to and fro to facilitate the final delivery of the 20,283 chests; but, till that is completed, 16 hostages are to be retained in Canton, and none of the vessels outside are permitted to come in. The edict in question was immediately followed by a public notice from Capt. Elliott, stating that, under existing circumstances, he had only to refer Her Majesty's subjects to his proclamation of March 28 for their general guidance, and that he would give the earliest information in his power as to the probable period of his departure from Canton, and as he has elsewhere stated that after this event it will be impracticable for any of his countrymen to remain there, and he will not allow any British vessel to enter the river, a protracted suspension of the trade seems certain after the surrender of the drug is completed, and the vessels now at Whampoa have cleared out.

The field force in Mykee Kaunta, under the command of Capt. Apthorp of the 20th N.I., had an engagement with the Bheels on the 13th inst., in which the troops had a few killed and wounded. The loss on the part of the insurgents is stated to be very considerable.—Bombay Times, May 26.

The following extract from a letter from a British officer contains some very interesting facts connected with Shah Soojah's occupation of Candahar.

"The triumphal entry of the King into Candahar presented a scene of enthusiasm and loyalty which nothing could surpass, and more than justified the expectation which had been formed, though the progress of affairs for the last ten days seemed at one time to lead to the inevitable result of a siege with all its horrors. Up to the 18th April the Chiefs had by no means abandoned the hope of raising a religious war, as was discovered by intercepted letters to persons in authority in our rear. Our approach to the Kojuk Pass on the 16th, had, however the effect of stirring up the Sirdars in their resolution to oppose us, and during the 18th and 19th two of the Chiefs were within twelve miles of the British camp with a body of 3,000 Cavalry. Our camp-followers were cut off by the Candahar authorities, and our troops exposed to considerable inconvenience.

"On the morning of the 20th, a Syed appeared at the pickets, representing himself to be an agent of Hajee Khan Kakur, and he was soon discovered to be what he pretended to. A messenger was despatched in return with one of his people, and in a couple of hours Hajee Khan entered the British camp with about 120 followers. The defection of Hajee Khan panic-struck the Affghan Cavalry, and believing themselves circumvented by us on all sides, fled to the city with the greatest precipitation. Council succeeded council on their arrival at Candahar, and the chiefs soon and justly concluding that their adherents would not stand by them, and they therefore prepared for flight.

On the morning of the 24th, the King approached Candahar, but without any intention of marching to the city. The scarcity of water, however, compelled his Majesty to come within three miles of it, and by a happy combination of circumstances, nothing could have turned out more fortunately. The British Army was behind—the King entrapped his own force, and was preceded by no one. The morning had scarcely dawned, when parties of horse were discovered on our flanks; they were not enemies but friends. They galloped towards the cortège, dismounted, drew up in line, prayed for the King, who welcomed them, and then joined in rear of the procession, and ere we sighted Candahar, Shah Soojah had been joined by about 1,500 men, well-mounted, dressed, and caparisoned, and his only attendants on the part of the British were Mr. M'Naghten and the officers of the mission, with a small honorary escort."

Art of Floating.—Any human being who will have the presence of mind to clasp the hands behind the back, and turn the face towards the zenith, may float at ease, and in perfect safety, in tolerably still water—ay, and sleep there, no matter how long. If not knowing how to swim, you would escape drowning when you find yourself in deep water, you have only to consider yourself an empty pitcher: let your mouth and nose, not the top part of your heavy head, be the highest part of you, and you are safe; but thrust up one of your bony hands, and down you go—turning up the handle tips over the pitcher. Having had the happiness to prevent one or two drownings by this simple instruction, we publish it for the benefit of all who either love aquatic sports or dread them.—Walker.

BY COUNT BJORNSTJERNA, Swedish Ambassador.

3d. What prospect of stability has the British power in India? This extensive question must be considered from two points of view; that of the inward state of British India; and that of its outward political state. With regard to the former, the present flourishing state of this kingdom, the mildness of its government, and the order generally prevailing there, ought certainly to ensure the stability of the British empire; for what better can India wish than the continuance of the present state of things. But he must be indeed ignorant of the human heart who should believe that these advantages, how great soever they may be, should be able perfectly to compensate a nation for the loss of its independence, and reconcile it with the thought of having been conquered, and that too by a nation coming from a great distance, belonging to quite another race, and professing another religion, —a nation which is even considered to be unclean, and is avoided by the Hindu as causing moral contamination. Besides this general cause, there are several others which more or less contribute to the undermining of the British power in India. Among these may be mentioned the numbers of deposed kings and princes, degraded governors, rayas, nabobs, and zemindars, that are in the country, who, although they are well used by the British government, cannot forget the loss of their musnuds (thrones); and they and their followers are therefore ready to take the first opportunity of regaining their regretted power. India is also full of discharged soldiers from the times of the Mahrattas and Pindaries, who, as belonging to a warrior caste, and besides accustomed to a lawless and wandering way of life, now seek revenge against those who caused their ruin. Neither is the Mussulman population attached to the British government, themselves formerly commanders, see now with regret how this power has fallen into the hands of others, and wish nothing more earnestly than to establish Timur's throne in Delhi, and that of Aureng Zeb in Agra.

These united causes for fermentation certainly make the power of Britain in India appear far from being yet perfectly established. The Hindu race, which forms the great mass, can, however, be considered as rather attached than disinclined to it, especially the lower castes, whose protector the English government has always been. The fidelity of the Army is certain *. The greatest security for the continuance of the British power in India, lies, however, without doubt, in the exceedingly mild and easy character of the Hindus (especially among the inhabitants of Bengal, the very pith of the British power); in the division into castes: and on their belief in the transmigration of souls. The castes prevent the desire of the low-born from aiming at higher ranks in society (a common cause of disquiet in Europe); those in the higher classes consider life as so insignificant a part of their eternal being, that it is not worth while to trouble themselves much about it, and are consequently inspired with a stoical and slavish indifference, which promotes obedience to the temporal powers, and prevents the breaking out of insurrection.

The question now is, Whether the elements of stability overbalance the materials for fermentation existing in India? I, for my part, consider this very probable, provided the British government continues to treat India in the same wise and mild way as hitherto, and prepare the way for the natives to obtain, through ability and merit, a greater share in the government of the country than that at present enjoyed, which extends only to the lowest places in the civil and law department, and the lower in the Army.

The power of England over India is a power depending on opinion. Should the Hindu cease to entertain the conviction of the intellectual and moral superiority of the English, it would be impossible for the trifling number of the latter now in India, amounting in all to 100,000 (government, officers of the Army, soldiers, tradesmen, planters, &c. &c., included), to retain the government of 100,000,000 of natives, more than half of whom belong to warlike nations. It is, therefore, particularly necessary to endeavour to keep up this power of opinion, which can be done only by means of just government in general, and moral individual conduct. That time must, however, come at last, when a separation will take place, to which the increasing prosperity and enlightenment of the Hindu nation will contribute; for when a nation has arrived at maturity, independence forms the principal object of its wishes. It is at such a period that India, like America formerly, will deliver itself from the colonial leading-strings of the mother-country. That such will be the case must be seen by every thinking Englishman, and seen, too, without regret; for England can be great, and powerful, and happy without India, as it has been so without America. Britain has been called by Providence to spread the blessings of civilization throughout the surface of the earth; she has planted the tender flower on the northern continent of America, has afterwards taken it to Asia's ancient abodes, and is now preparing its advancement on the extensive coast of Australia. To determine the period when the separation of India from England will take place, is beyond the limits of man's shortsighted glance into futurity; it may take centuries, and it may possibly occur within decennia,—late alone can determine this; but the probability is, that it is distant. The Anglo-Indian kingdom is still full of youthful strength, it has not arrived at the zenith of its power, and it is not till then that the point of culmination is reached. What would, without doubt, hasten this period, are outward political circumstances of a dangerous nature; a war against India,—which, besides its direct influence, might possibly bring with it an indirect effect, that of putting in motion the materials of fermentation already existing in the bosom of India itself, and mislead the dissatisfied there to raise the banner of revolt. Such circumstances affect too nearly the subject now under consideration,—What prospect of stability has the British power in India? to be passed over by me in silence.

A glance at the map of India will show that the boundaries of that country form a kind of irregular square, the south-east and south-west sides of which are bounded by the Indian ocean; the north-east protected by the Himalaya and the Araccanian mountains; and the north-west by the river Indus. The two first-mentioned sides are perfectly free from the possibility of attack so long as England retains the command or superiority at sea; the third side is equally free from attack, partly from the insurmountable chain of mountains forming its boundary, and; artly from the weakness of the neighbouring countries, Tibet and Ava†; there remains, therefore, only the fourth side (the north-western), where attack can be made.

It is, therefore, this boundary which we are to examine.

Although the Indus forms the north-west boundary of Hindu, it is not that of the British possessions, which do not extend so far, finishing partly behind Sutledge (with the kingdom of Lahore between it and the river Indus), and partly on the borders of Sind, leaving this country between it and the last-mentioned river ‡.

In case any threatening clouds should collect in the north-west against the British possessions in India, which, on account of the great preparations necessary, and the distance, which is very considerable, cannot take place otherwise than slowly, the Anglo-Indian government will probably not neglect to take the necessary precautions; which should especially consist of, either by mildness or force, securing to themselves the attachment of those countries which separate the British possessions from the Indus, making this their natural boundary, to which the British defensive powers must advance if military and political reasons continue to have any influence in the council at Calcutta §.

The Indus being proved navigable for more than 200 geographical miles (see Burns's description), makes it not only an easily defended boundary, but, what is still more important, renders it easier to keep up, and supply, with ammunition, artillery, and other necessaries for war, the Army collected beyond its banks.

The Anglo-Indian Army consists, as we have seen above, of 180,000 men (besides contingent troops), and can easily be restored to its former strength of 240,000. A third part of this Army, united with the troops of Runjet Sing and those of the Ameers in Sind, offers a force of 100,000 men at the river Indus, which supplied with all necessaries, would form an almost invincible barrier for India†. The second third part of the Army (from 70 to 80,000) might, in such a case, form the line of reserve, behind the Sutledge and Loony, within the Company's own territory: and the last third remain in the interior of the country to keep all quiet. It is in this position that the Anglo-Indian Army might be ready to meet any attempt made on India: and for the sake of still greater security, extend its outposts to Peshawer and the Soliman mountains. As the British Commander can judge, from the direction of the hostile preparations, on which part of the Indus (the upper, middle, or lower) the attack is intended, he will always have an opportunity of so dividing his own forces as always to meet the enemy at the proper point.

Having now shown the strategical movements of the Anglo-Indian Army, we ought to examine what power could undertake

* In the presidency of Bombay, the English officers, dissatisfied on account of some retrenchment that was made, had openly revolted (1790), and refused to march on an expedition against a Dutch colony. The Hindu soldiers would not join in the revolt of their officers, and maintained the strictest fidelity towards the government: such examples of faithfulness are uncommon in every army.

* The Birman war (against the King of Ava) certainly cost much money, because they were obliged to send all the necessaries of life from Calcutta and Madras to Rangoon; but no danger whatever was caused by it to the British government in India.

† Maysur, Malva, as also the possessions of Scindia, likewise lie between the Indus and the direct territories of the British Company; but as these countries form parts of the British confederation, they are mentioned here as lying within its own boundaries.

‡ I doubt this so much the less, as the present Governor-General, Lord Auckland, is a man possessing both political penetration and strength of character.

§ According to what is said, Lord Moira's Army against the Pindaries, in 1817, consisted of not less than 61,000 infantry, 23,000 cavalry, and 300 field-pieces. How much easier ought it not to be, and also how much more important, in case of a warlike attempt against the Indus, to collect a similar force there now?

a war against India: and in what manner this power should proceed in order, with any chance of success, to venture on such an undertaking.—(To be continued.)

COURT-MARTIAL.

Head-Quarters, Meerut, 28th May.—At a General Court-Martial assembled at Cawnpore, 15th May, 1839, Lieut. A. J. Michell, 72d N.I., was arraigned on the following charges:—

1st.—For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, in the station billiard-room at Allahabad, on the night of the 10th March, in the hearing of several gentlemen, repeatedly uttered concerning Lieut. G. H. Whistler, who was not then present, the words "coward" and "blackguard," and other insulting expressions; and in having said to Lieut. S. Nation (one of the company, who had declared that he would inform Lieut. Whistler) that he would apply the same expressions to him, if he did not that night bring him a hostile message from Lieut. Whistler, which Lieut. Nation had previously refused to do.

2d.—For insubordinate, unofficerlike, and disorderly conduct, in having, on the same night, returned to the billiard room, for the purpose of renewing his offensive language towards Lieut. Nation, after he had been directed by his commanding officer, Capt. P. Abbott, to go to his quarters in arrest.

Finding.—The Court, on the evidence before it, is of opinion, that Lieut H. J. Michell is guilty of the first charge; also that he is guilty of the second charge, with the exception of the words "for the purpose of renewing his offensive language towards Lieut Nation," of which portion the Court acquits him.

Sentence.—The Court sentences Lieut. H. J. Michell, 72d N.I., to be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances, for six months.

(Confirmed) JOHN RAMSAY, Major-General.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court, taking into consideration the contrition the prisoner has expressed, and the excitement of mind under which he was labouring, from a sense of the injury which he believed himself to have received from the prosecutor, would respectfully recommend his case to the favourable consideration of the Commander of the Forces.

Remarks by the Commander of the Forces.—In consideration of the recommendation by the Court, the Commander of the Forces is pleased to remit that part of the sentence which adjudges Lieut. Michell to be suspended from allowances, but a regard of what is due to discipline and the peace of society forbids him to remit the whole sentence: Lieut. Michell has been convicted of a flagrant breach of duty as an officer and a gentleman, in the absence of any immediate provocation, and in violation of an oath, by which he had bound himself not to resent the injury which he believed himself to have received from the prosecutor.

The suspension of Lieut. Michell from rank and pay will take effect from the date of publication of this order at Allahabad.

TEETH.

MR. CLARK, SURGEON DENTIST (late assistant to Mr. Cartwright), respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the Profession on the most modern and scientific principles.

62, Sackville-street, Piccadilly; and 2, Clark, 19, Old Steine, Brighton. At home from Ten till Five.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchiefs, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1835, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Mara, Piccadilly; Vahl, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Laxenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

WHITE'S ESSENCE OF EGLANTINE. A highly fashionable and peculiar handkerchief Scent, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, durable, and refreshing. In Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 6s., and in elegant Toilette Bottles, 14s. each.

WHITE'S AROMATIC PUNGENT ESSENCE.—So exceedingly useful in Head-aches, Fainting, &c., and particularly reviving in crowded or sick rooms. In neat stoppered Bottles enclosed in Morocco Cases, at 2s. each.

The above prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. And now Sold by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the Kingdom.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS, the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for Affections of the Kidneys, Lumbago, Weakness, Irritation, and all diseases arising from local debility, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. These pills having been employed in upwards of 1,500 cases in private practice, within three years prior to being advertised, and in many thousand cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are strongly recommended as a far more efficacious remedy than balsam of copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. O. WRAY, 116, Holborn-hill; and sold, Wholesale, by Sangar, 130, Oxford-street; Strahan, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent medicine venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—Advice given to persons sailing between the hours of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in the evening.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.—IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French Physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by Rheumatism and Paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, stramonium, and all the usual remedies, had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by appointment of JEAN LEFAY, the inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries, if by letter, post paid, respecting it, and also shew letters received from numerous patients who have benefited by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London, carriage free. Sold in pots at 4s. 6d. each.

Notice.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name, "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application.—The universally acknowledged efficacy of this extraordinary, safe, and never-failing remedy for the speedy and certain cure of Corns and Bunions, however obstinate and long standing, induces the Proprietor of this highly-important chemical discovery, to caution the Public against base and spurious imitations, injurious in their effects, and most dangerous to those who, either through ignorance of the fraudulent pretences of others, are induced to apply them.

The Proprietor has received Testimonials from the most respectable Families in the Kingdom; the genuine has the signature of J. A. ALLINGHAM on the outside wrapper. Sold at 25, Bishopsgate Without; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and most Medicine Venders.

INDIGESTION and DIARRHŒA.—The ill effects of eating imprudently of fruit, shell-fish, and other food of an irritable nature to the bowels, are immediately removed by a wine-glass dose or two of a pleasant and palatable remedy. BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB, the only equally agreeable and efficacious form in which that invaluable medicine, Rhubarb, can be administered, from its specific tendency to assist, rather than force the efforts of nature; it is rapidly superseding the hurtful use of deleterious and violent purgatives, which too often aggravate the disease they are expected to cure. Sold in Bottles at 4s. 6d. and 9s. 9d., by J. King, Proprietor, 73, Queen-street, Cheapside; Barclay, Farringdon-street; and all Chemists

WHITE TEETH.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A WHITE POWDER, of Oriental Herbs of the most Delightful Fragrance, and free from any mineral or pernicious ingredient. It eradicates Tartar and decayed Spots from the Teeth, preserves the Enamel, and fixes the Teeth firmly in their sockets, rendering them PEARLY WHITE. Being an anti-scorbutic, it eradicates the Scurvy from the Gums, strengthens, braces, and renders them of a healthy red; it removes unpleasant tastes from the mouth, which often remain after fevers, taking medicine, &c., and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath.

Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ALKANA EXTRACT immediately relieves the most violent Toothache, Gum Boils, Swelled Face, &c.; it is also an excellent Stomachic, in cases of Flatulency, Spasmodic Affections, &c., and gives instantaneous relief. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 14s. 6d. per bottle.

 Notice.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on each, also printed in red on the Wrapper in which this article is enclosed. ☞ Be sure to ask for "ROWLANDS."

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From JOSIAH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba." "JOSIAH HENRY GREEN.

"48, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 18, 1838."

From BRANSBY B. COOPER, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases, with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1838."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 96, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

CAUTION.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

The Society, early in 1837, originated a new system of Life Assurance, which has become extremely popular. On attaining the Age of 65, the Assured himself receives the the amount of the Assurance, with the accumulated profits; or, in case of death at any time before that age, it is paid to his representatives. The rates of Premiums (of which the following are examples) are even less in young lives than those usually required for the whole term of life.

Annual Premiums to secure 100*l.* at the Age of Sixty-five, or earlier, in case of death.

Age 15	20	25	30	35	40
£1 15 0	2 0 0	2 5 0	2 11 6	3 1 6	3 15 0

The Society also effects Assurances for the whole of life, and for shorter periods, on lower terms than those generally charged. It likewise grants immediate survivorship, and deferred annuities, provides endowments, and transacts all other Life Assurance business.

SHOOTING SEASON, 1839.
F. JOYCE'S ANTI-CORROSIVE PERCUSSION CAPS.

SPORTSMEN are respectfully informed, that to prevent the recurrence of those distressing accidents which so frequently happen from the use of imperfect and unsafe Caps, and seconded by the wishes of a number of those engaged in the Gun Trade, he has reduced the price to 2s. to 3s. 6d. per box, signed and sealed as usual, and trusts that this reduction will induce those who now resort to the use of low-priced caps to consider the value of the risk they inevitably run in so doing. To do all that lies in his power, F. J. has taken off a similar per centage from the former wholesale price, thus reducing the cost of the best goods, on which perfect reliance can be placed, to within a trifle of the sum usually paid for those dangerous articles frequently sold to the detriment both of consumer and retailer. May be had of Messrs. Blanch, Gracechurch Street; Beckwith, Skinner Street; Stevens, High Holborn; Parker, High Holborn; Reilly, Holborn; Green, Leicester Square; London, London Wall; Benton, Strand; Tetham, Charing Cross.
Purchasers are requested to observe the name of F. JOYCE, original inventor and sole manufacturer, on each sealed packet.—This precaution is rendered necessary by some unprincipled individuals having imitated the labels and wrappers.
Chemically prepared Wadding of a superior description.

COOL SOFT HANDS.—BURTON'S SAND WASH BALLS, recommended highly by the profession, for removing that redness and natural inclination to heat of the skin at this season of the year to ladies gardening and gentlemen cricketing, rowing, &c., or where any exertion is taken, so prejudicial to the hands of the superior classes, the Sand Balls at once remove any hurdnces or bad consequences to the skin produced thereby, and leave it pleasingly soft, cool, and pliable.—Sold at 1s. each, or 10s. per dozen, by all Perfumers, &c., and by the inventor, H. Burton (late Berry and Burton), at his Original Old Brown Windsor Soap and Wash Ball Manufactory, 18, Greek-st. Soho-square, London.
Sole Proprietor of the late S. Berry's Palm Soap.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. PATENT BRASS AND IRON BEDSTEADS, &c.

WINFIELD & SIMMS, 26, New Bond-street, the Patentees, and for many years Manufacturers to the Trade, beg respectfully to call the attention of Gentlemen in the Army, and those about joining, to their NEW PATENT BEDSTEAD, which is the only plan that will remain firm for any length of time, a fact well-known to Gentlemen who have tried them, and have experienced the instability of others.—Every description of Portable Furniture, Bedding, &c. at full 20 per cent. under Houses pretending to this particular Branch, who, from want of experience, supply many articles that will prove to be useless. ELEGANT HOUSE BEDSTEADS, and for Servants, from 28s.

Noblemen and Gentlemen can have a Pattern Book of Bedsteads, with Estimates, forwarded to them in the country if required.

H. N. Hayes, Agent.

An excellent large Mesquire for Sale, cheap.

EAST INDIA ARMY AGENCY.—CALCUTTA and LONDON.—J. H. Greenwell and Co. beg to announce to their Friends that, in consequence of the rapid extension of their business, and the increase of their Subscription List to upwards of 1,900 names, they have deemed it right to consult the convenience and accommodation of their supporters by REMOVING their West-end Office from No. 6, Craig's court, to a spacious Suite of Rooms in PALL-MALL EAST (entrance No. 26, Suffolk-street). The Reading-room and principal Office at No. 65, King William-street, City, will remain as before.

September 2, 1839.

DRESS COATS, cut in the first style of fashion 30s.; superfine, 40s. to 55s.; frock coats, silk facing, 38s. to 47s.; superfine, silk velvet collar and silk facing, 50s.; milled cloth great coats, 40s. to 60s.; trowsers, 6s. 6d. to 12s.; fashionable doeskin and kerseymere, 18s. to 25s.; waistcoats 5s. 6d. to 12s. 6d.; Petersham great coats, 25s. and 30s.; pilot coats, 36s., 42s., and 60s.; cloth cloaks, 32s. to 63s.; shooting jackets, 15s.; dressing gowns, 40s. 6d.; boys' and youths' clothing, cloth tunic dresses, 20s. to 42s.; a suit of clothes, 2l. 17s.; superfine black, 3l. 3s.—At FISHER and CO.'s, Tailors, 13, King William-street, City, ten doors from London Bridge.

NOBLEMEN & GENTLEMEN who have not been able to procure Gentlemanly and Fashionable Coats, &c., except at very high Prices, thereby paying for many who never pay at all, are respectfully requested to make a trial at FLETCHER'S, 128, New Bond-street, who have for some years supplied their Patrons with very First-rate Clothing at the annexed Prices, for Ready Money:—Coloured Dress Coats, 3l. 5s.; Blue or Black do., 3l. 10s. 6d.; Coloured Frocks, 4l. 4s.; Blue or Black do., 4l. 18s.; Vests, from 18s. 6d.; Trowsers, from 18s. to 1l. 16s. A Suit of Footman's Livery, from 4l. 4s. The new Deputy-Lieutenant's Uniform, complete for 30 Guineas.

Copy the Address.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.—Military and Naval Officers, Writers, Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, and Passengers proceeding to India and the Colonies, are strongly recommended (previous to encumbering themselves with the old-fashioned Cabin Sofas, Iron Bedsteads, &c., advertised as "Patents," and which they will find are quite useless to them after the voyage) to inspect the new Patent Metallic Folding-Hinged Bedsteads, Couches, Cots, &c., which will answer the threefold purpose of a Cabin Sofa, Swing Cot, and Bed, when on shore, and for a warm climate possess the inestimable advantage of requiring neither mattress nor bolster.

These Bedsteads, Couches, &c., so well known as "Morriman's Patent," can be obtained only of E. Johnson, Patentee, 185, Leadenhall-street, sole Manufacturer. And where may also be had good Solid Mahogany Portable Drawers, brass bound, at Five Guineas. Wash-hand Tables, with fittings complete, from 30s. to 130s., together with every description of Cabin Furniture at equally reasonable prices. All made on the premises, and warranted of the best seasoned materials.

All letters must be post-paid. E. Johnson, 185, Leadenhall-street.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 158, New Bond-street, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 158, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprise their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the Faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Tooth Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The most approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the Faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleachable Russian bristles, that do not soften in washing or use like common hair. A new and large importation of fine Turkey Sponge; and Combs of all descriptions.—At Metcalfe's, No. 130, Oxford-street, nearly opposite Hanover-square.

TO NOBLEMEN, FAMILIES, GENTLEMEN, &c.—J. Albert, Tailor, 5, King William-street, London Bridge, respectfully submits the following brief List of Cash Prices for Gentlemen's Dress, cut to fit in the most approved style of fashion, and made equal to any house in the trade. Gentlemen can select their cloth, cassimere, waistcoatings, &c., at this establishment from the largest and best-assorted stock, without exception, of any house in London.

GOVERNOR'S HOUSE, BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, TO BE SOLD.

BY ORDER of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, that Large House, formerly the Residence of the Governors of Berwick-upon-Tweed, with the Large Garden, Stable, and Coach House attached thereto.

The House is substantial and commodious, and contains Dining-Room, Drawing Room, Breakfast-Parlour, 8 Bed-Rooms, 2 Bed-Closets, Dressing-Room, Large Kitchen, and every necessary accommodation for Servants, with good Cellarage, and a sufficient supply of Water, conveyed to the House by Leaden Pipes.

The Premises are enclosed with a Boundary Wall, and measure one acre and two roods, or thereabouts, of English Statute Measure.

To suit the convenience of purchasers, the Honourable Board of Ordnance will have no objection to grant permission for opening an Archway, not exceeding 10 feet 6 inches in width, and 11 feet in height, through the Ramparts to the Harbour, subject, however, to the conditions under which the property is offered for Sale.

Further Particulars may be had by applying at the Office of the Secretary to the Board of Ordnance, in Pall-Mall, London; to the Ordnance Storekeeper, at Edinburgh; and to David Logan, Esq., Barrack-Master, Berwick-upon-Tweed, who will also show a Plan of the Premises.

Tenders for the Property, addressed to the Secretary to the Board of Ordnance, Pall Mall, aforesaid, will be received until the 12th day of October next.

By Order of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance,
R. BYHAM, Secretary.

Office of Ordnance, 30th August, 1839.

CAVALRY.

3d Drag. Guards—Lieut. Rodon is on leave.

4th Drag. Guards—Maj. C. Makepeace is on leave. This officer purchased all his commissions, and has been 23 years on full-pay.

3d Lt. Drag. Depot—Lt. J. R. H. Rose has joined at Maidstone.

4th Light Drags.—A detachment, under Major Daly (Services, N. and M. G., 31st ult.), had a smart skirmish with a large body of the Beloochee robbers, who had attacked a Serjeant's party of 12, engaged watching the camels. One of the party having rode in to apprise Major D. of the arrival of the villains, he sallied forth at the head of a troop, and came on them in a large nullah about five miles from camp. At this time the troop had divided into parties of ten in different directions. The robbers were about 300, armed with matchlocks, swords, and pistols. They allowed the Dragoons to come close upon them, when they gave them a volley, one horse was shot through the head, another was shot in the knee, a third had an awful gash in his hip; one of the men was struck on the head by a ball, but it only grazed him. Major D. had a narrow escape, a ball passed across his chest, ploughing up the skin; he, however, had his revenge, the Dragoons got down into the nullah, and shot and cut to pieces about 40 of them. Maj. Daly killed himself six of them with a boar-spear.—Bombay Paper, 22d June.

9th Lt. Dragoons—have taken possession of the new barracks at Loughborough, which is in future to be a Military station.

10th Hussars—Capt. G. L. L. Kaye is on leave.

15th Hussars—Cornet T. R. Crawley is on leave. The following compliment to Capt. Brander, who has been 28 years in the service, and never on half-pay, is from the Montreal Gazette:—

"The King's Dragoon Guards experienced a great loss in the departure (13th Aug.) for England of Lieut. Brander, of that corps, who has lately been appointed, without purchase, to a Captaincy in the 15th. This truly deserving officer was present, with the reg., at Waterloo, in the engagements of the 17th and 18th June, on which latter day he was severely wounded. From his gentlemanly and officer-like conduct towards his superiors and equals, and from his never-failing kindness and impartiality towards his inferiors, during upwards of twenty-seven years in the King's Dragoon Guards, officers and men have reason to regret his leaving them, although they may rejoice in his promotion. On leaving the Barrack-square, at Chambly, the band struck up 'Should auld acquaintance be forgot,' and many an affectionate exclamation of regret at his departure might be heard from the assembled soldiers."

INFANTRY.

2d—Lieut. Macdonald will embark in the Catherine for Bombay on the 25th proximo, and take out a large draft for that Presidency.

Sir James Kempt has received a Cross and three Clasps for Maida, Badajos, Vittoria, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse, and was severely wounded at Waterloo.—Capt. Willshire's services:—Battles of Roleia and Vimiera; campaign and battle of Corunna; expedition to Walcheren; Peninsula from June, 1812, to May, 1814, including battle of Salamanca (twice wounded); retreat from Burgos, and action at Villa Murilla, Oct 25, 1812; battle of Vittoria; first assault of San Sebastian; also second assault and capture; crossing the Bidassoa; Nivelle, Nive, 9th, 10th, and 11th Dec., 1813. Repulsed with 300 men the attack of 10,000 Caffres upon the open village of Graham's Town, on the frontiers of the Cape of Good Hope, capture of Kittoor, in the Deccan, E. Ind., Dec. 1824.—Col. Baumgardt was present at every siege, battle, and in every campaign in which the 8th Hussars were engaged in India.—Capt. Lloyd was at Waterloo 18th June; taking of Cambray, 24th June, 1815, and capture of Paris. Served one campaign latter part of 1826 against the Rajah of Kolapore.—Capt. Keith was present on the 15th (slightly wounded), 17th, and 18th June, at Waterloo.—Paymaster Darby was at the siege and reduction of the fort and town of Hatrass in 1818, siege and reduction of Ralunga in the Gourkah Territory, 1815; grand Mahratta campaign in 1817 and 18.—Dr. Young served in the Peninsula from March, 1811, to Feb. 1813, including the siege of Badajoz, April 1812, and battle of Salamanca. Served also the campaigns of 1813 and 13 in Germany and Holland, including the attack on Bergen-op-Zoom. Present on the 18th June at Waterloo.—New Army List.

3d—The Buffs are commanded by the senior Captain, owing to the absence of all the Field Officers.

3d Depot—Lieut. Beers has now the command of Upnor Castle.

6th—On Tuesday 200 men, under the command of Capt. Crofton, 6th reg., were to have embarked in the Magistrate for Bombay, but the vessel has not yet arrived at Gravesend. The depot of this corps is now commanded by Lieut. Hamilton, of the 2d.

7th Depot—Lt. Donkin is appointed Acting Adjutant, and Lieut. Stuart Acting Paymaster.

8th Depot—Ens. Seymour is on leave.

9th—Sir John Cameron was at the taking of Martinique, St. Lucia, and Guadaloupe, where he was severely wounded and taken prisoner. Sir John has received a cross and three clasps for Vimiera, Corunna, Busaco, Salamanca, Vittoria, St. Sebastian (wounded), and Nive.—Col. M'Caskill was at the landing at Porto Rico, and siege of St. Juan, May, 1797. On passage to India when the fleet under convoy of Sir T. Trowbridge was attacked by the French Admiral Linois, in the Marengo, 84, a heavy frigate, and another ship, Aug., 1805; present at the sieges and captures of Forts Sattarah, Singhur, Woosseotah, and a great many others. Also at the reduction of the strong fortress of Sholapore, and the attack and dispersion of 5,000 of the Peshwa's choicest troops strongly posted with their guns, fifteen of which were captured under the walls of the fort, 11th May, 1818.—Sir Edm. Williams served the campaign of 1799 in Holland, including the actions of the 2d and 6th October (wounded); present at the battle of Maida in 1806, and the taking of Iechia in 1809. Served throughout the war in the Peninsula, including the following battles, sieges, &c., viz., Busaco (wounded), Badajos, 1811, Salamanca (twice wounded, once severely), Burgos, Vittoria, Tolosa, St. Sebastian, 1st, 3d (wounded), and 3d assaults, Bidassoa, Nivelle, Nive, Adour, and wounded at the investment of Bayonne.—Major Taylor served in the American war, including the battles of Chrystler's Farm, and Niagara (severely wounded through the right leg), siege of Fort Erie, September, 1814; present at the capture of Forts Loghur, Koarree, and Ryghur, in the East Indies, in 1818; also assault and capture of Roree, in 1819. Served the campaigns in Ava, including the action at Dalla (wounded), attack on Panlang, Yangavchong, and Donebew.—Major Davis served in the Peninsula the latter part of 1809, until taken prisoner at Lugo, 9th Jan., 1809, where he was left dangerously ill; prisoner of war in France until April, 1814.—Quartermaster Scott was at the battle of Vimiera, capture of Oporto, battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, battles of the Nive 9th, 10th, and 11th Dec., 1813.—New Army List.

10th—On leave: Capts. Staunton and Wilmot, and Assist. Surg. Dr. Teevan.

11th—Bt. Lt.-Col. Bishopp, C.B., is on leave till the beginning of next month.

12th—Report states that this corps will proceed to India from the Mauritius early next year.

13th Depot—Ens. E. B. Cureton and R. S. Parker will embark with the detachments in the Magistrate for Bombay.

16th—Two more drafts for this regt. are in orders to embark for Bengal.

18th Depot—Lt. and Adj. G. W. Davis is on leave.

19th Depot—The cos. have rejoined head-qrs. at the Bl. Barracks, Dublin, having been relieved at the Pigeon-house Fort, by the depot of the 87th.

31st—Capt. L'Estrange is in orders to embark for India.

23d Depot—Dr. Chermside, Surgeon, is for the present to be attached to the depot.

27th Depot—Maj. McPherson, Capts. Smith, Vereker, and Durnford, Lt. and Adj. Williamson, Ensigns Irwin, Cane, Somerville, and Manly, with 120 men, arrived in Chatham on the 11th inst., from Dover, on their way to Cork. They are detained at Chatham until the arrival of the Athol.

28th—This highly-distinguished regt., it is said, will not proceed to India, in consequence of arrangements for the extension of the rotation system of relief to the East.

30th—Lt. P. C. Cavan has arrived from Bermuda on six months' leave.

31st—Assist.-Surg. T. F. Ayre, embarked on board the Mount Stuart Elphinstone on the 11th inst. for India. Lieut. Scott is to be detained at the depot until further orders, in consequence of being engaged in a literary undertaking.

35th—Major Tennant, and a draft of officers and men for the Mauritius, are held in readiness to embark.

36th—Lt. P. L. M'Dougall is on leave to 31st Dec.

37th Depot—The recruiting party is ordered from Limerick to Templemore; and a party of the 48th from Templemore to Limerick.

39th—Lt. Griffiths has embarked in the Marion for Madras.

41st Depot—Ens. G. W. Hessing embarks for India. Capt. Wetherall is held in readiness to embark for Madras.

44th Depot—The leave of Ens. W. MacMahon is extended to 31st May next.

45th—Lt. H. J. Shaw is on leave.

48th—Bt.-Maj. Duncan (Services N. and M. G. 24th ult.) has arrived on leave at Fermoy.

50th Depot—Ens. J. G. Smyth embarked for Bengal on board the Mount Stuart Elphinstone on 11th inst. There can now be little doubt of this regt. proceeding to India, Ens. Smyth having been ordered there to await the arrival of his regiment.

54th—The regiment, very weak in numbers, was in June last at Madras, expecting daily the order to return home. We understand, however, that it was to remain in India till November or December next.

54th Depot—Ensigns C. L. Cocks and G. Poulett are on leave.

61st—The Jupiter tr.-ship was at Columbo on 3d May, waiting orders, as it was uncertain whether the return of this regiment to England would be permitted.

61st Depot—Capt. F. Barlow has joined from leave.

63d Depot—Capt. R. Fry's leave is extended for six months. This officer has been thirty years in the service on full pay.

68th Depot—Private M'Gill, servant to Ens. C. O. Bridgeman, has deserted from Cork, taking with him his master's gold watch, with a quantity of wearing apparel.

69th—We have elsewhere noticed the destructive fire on the 17th August at St. John, New Brunswick. The conduct of the military is thus described in the St. John Gazette of 22d of that month:—

"The detachment of Bl. Artillery, with the Ordnance engine, were early at the post of danger on York Point, and assisted by many daring individuals, contributed most essentially to the preservation of that portion of the city. The gallant 69th Regt. performed very efficient services in assisting to extinguish the fire, and in protecting the valuable property rescued from the flames; detachments, sentinels belonging to that corps were stationed wherever their services could be available; and we are confident that the inhabitants of this city feel that they owe a debt of gratitude to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates composing this garrison, which, although they may acknowledge, they cannot easily repay."

At a Common Council, holden on 20th Aug., 1839.—"Resolved unanimously, that the highly exemplary conduct of Major Brookes, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 69th Reg., the officers and men of the Bl. Artillery and Engineers during the late awful conflagration on Saturday evening last, in arresting the progress of the flames and in rescuing and protecting property from destruction, deservedly entitle them to the thanks of the community, and that the Common Council, now for the first time assembled since that calamitous event, would be doing a great injustice to the feelings and opinions of the citizens whom they represent, if they did not, on behalf of the whole people, convey to Major Brookes the deep sense so entertained of the obligations which they are under for the meritorious exertions of the military, and request that he will communicate such their opinions to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men."

72d Depot—On leave Capts. Lacy and Frith.

73d Depot—Lieut. O. B. D'Arcy has been ordered to join, and is succeeded at Kilkenny by Lt. E. J. Cruice, 95th.

76th—The following extracts of a letter written by a member of the corps, furnish additional evidence to what we have already published of the distressing mortality at Demerara:—

"Demerara, July 15, 1839.

"My last letter went to you by the last mail, and this will go by a private letter. Since I wrote, many fine fellows have breathed their last. Hopkins died on 29th June, Dickenson on 10th July, and Col. Dansey on the 12th. The following are very bad indeed:—Capt. Bruce, Lieut. Tidd, Ens. Whittle, Doctors Burrill and Preston; and the Misses and Mrs. Preston are also in fever. They, you may well imagine, have plenty to do, there being no Colonel, no Major, no Captain, no Paymaster, Quartermaster, Serjeant, Serjeant-Major, or Doctor. There are not enough of men to inter the dead, and black troops are employed for that purpose. The Commandant has been prevailed on to allow the remainder of the regiment to be removed from its barracks. The men will move to-morrow into the town. There were fifty men detached yesterday, and fifty more will move to-morrow, to outposts for change of air. There will then be only fifty men at head-quarters.

"July 16.—Five men have died since I commenced this letter, and many, I fear, will follow.

"July 20.—The vessel to convey this has been detained, and I have opened it to tell you that poor Bruce died last night, after five days' illness. He was nephew of Gen. Cuppage, who lives at Colcock, near Dublin. This yellow fever is a frightful disease. Poor Col. Dansey was but 48 hours ill. The command of the reg. has devolved on Lieut. and Adjutant J. Gore Forsey until the arrival of Capt. Gardiner from Berbice. It is a rare occurrence that a Lieutenant commands a regiment. The Court of Policy are paying for lodgings for the men in the town.

"Six o'clock.—I am just returned from burying poor Bruce and five others. We hardly get coffins made fast enough."

76th Depot—A draft for the service cos. is ordered to embark at Cork.

77th Depot—Having inserted in the N. & M. G. of the 7th inst. the letter addressed to us by the Officers of this depot, we feel ourselves called upon to publish the amende made by our contemporary:—

"[From the United Service Gazette.]—We regret exceedingly that a paragraph in our last Gazette in an allusion to the negociation for an exchange between Major Wilson of this regiment, and Major Streatfield of the 45th, contained a passage which, in the hurry of Saturday morning's publication, escaped the eye, not only of the Editor, but also of the gentleman who prepares our military movements for the press. Nothing could be further from our wish or intention than to give offence to Major Wilson, of whom we know nothing. The conduct of the correspondent who supplied this insinuation is most disgraceful. He has evidently sought to indulge some private animosity at our expense. Under such circumstances, we feel bound to copy the disclaimer which has been published in the columns of a contemporary. (Here follows the letter addressed by the officers to the N. & M. G.) The course we deem it our duty to adopt on this occasion is, to trace out, if possible, the author of this paragraph; and, unless he can offer us a much more satisfactory explanation than we can anticipate, transmit his name and manuscript to the party most interested in the matter. Meantime this amende, perfectly spontaneous on our part, will, we trust, prove how little participation we really had in the matter."

The detached wing of the depots at Stockton-on-Tees, which has been so much moved about the disturbed districts in the North, is held in readiness to move down to Scarboro' Castle, their original destination, where these two cos. will most likely remain for the winter, the two hd.-qr. cos. being stationed at Hull.—The co. left at Carlisle (Lieut. Nepean and Ens. Baillie), is called into hd. qrs., in consequence of the return to Carlisle of the co. 95th, detached at Cockermouth.—Major Ramsay and his bride have departed for a tour on the Continent.

79th—On leave, Capt. E. Cameron and Lieut. Douglas.

84th—Lieut. R. J. Hanley has left hd.-qrs. to take the superintendence of the recruiting service at Cavan.

87th Depot—Assist. Surg. S. Lawson is on leave.

94th Depot—On leave, Maj. Gascoyne and Capt. R. D. Macdonald.

96th—On leave, Capt. E. Hill, Lieut. J. Clyde, and Ens. J. Paspley.

98th—The court-martial on Paymaster Dunlevie, (Col. Sir Hew Ross, President), was still sitting last Thursday.—Lieut.-Colonel Colin Campbell is spoken of in the highest manner by Lord John Russell, in his letter to Lord Hill, of 31st ult., for his distinguished services during the late disturbances. In the neighbourhood of Newcastle-on-Tyne the gallant officer's unremitting exertions are duly appreciated, and will be long remembered.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Col. Brown's leave has been extended another month. Sec. Lieut. Lloyd is on leave. Lieut. St. George is on the recruiting service at Stafford.

Col. Brown was at the siege and capture of Copenhagen in 1807; battle of Vimiera, Aug. 21, 1808; passage of the Douro and capture of Oporto, with the previous and subsequent actions; battle of Talavera, 27th and 28th July, 1809 (severely wounded through both thighs); the action of the Light Division at the Bridge of Almaraz, 24th July, 1810; battle of Busaco, and the different actions during the retreat of the French Army from Portugal; actions at Sabugal, 3d April, and battles of Fuentes d'Onor, 5th May, 1811; San Sebastian, Sept., 1813; Nivelle, 10th Nov.; Nive, 9th Dec., 1813, and investment of Bayonne. Served in the last American war, including the battle of Bladensburg and capture of Washington, 24th Aug., 1814; slightly wounded in the head, and very severely in the left groin at Bladensburg.—New Army List.

Rl. Artillery—Maj. Louis, R.H.A., has arrived from leave, and taken the command of his troops in Limerick garrison. The Major has been 35 years in the service, 32 of which on full-pay. He served in the Peninsula, and was also at Waterloo. Lieut. Powlie Ellis has returned to England from Barbadoes, for the benefit of his health, at the recommendation of a Medical Board. Major Whitty's comp., 6th batt., for Liverpool, en route to Dublin, left Woolwich on Thursday at 2 P.M., to proceed by the rail-road. Maj. Whitty, Sec. Capt. Stewart, and Sec. Lieut. Thompson, have gone with it. The following Field Officers on foreign command, whose periods of service are about to expire, will be shortly relieved; viz., Col. J. Power, Mauritius, by Lt.-Col. A. F. Crawford; Lt.-Col. Brandreth, Cape of Good Hope, by Lt. Col. Petley; Lt.-Col. W. D. Nicolls, Jamaica, by Lt.-Col. Russell; Lt.-Col. H. A. Scott, at Gibraltar, by Lt.-Col. P. Faddy. Lieut. Rodwell, lately promoted, has arrived from the West Indies. Capt. J. Wynne retires on half-pay, as also Lt. W. Patten, at present at Jamaica.

From the Columbo Gazette.—"We have been much gratified with the account, which a correspondent has sent us, of the presentation of a silver cup to Company-Serj. James Ferrah, 1st Batt. Rl. Artil., by the Non-commissioned Officers and Gunners of his company. Serj. Ferrah, after a service of nearly eleven years in this Island, is about to return to Europe for the benefit of his health. As soon as his intention was made known, the Non-commissioned Officers and Gunners, deeply impressed with a grateful sense of his uniform kindness to them, unanimously resolved to present him with a token of their respect, affection, and gratitude. This was communicated to the then Commanding Officer, Lieut. Rogers, and it met with his most cordial approbation. This circumstance speaks volumes in behalf of Serj. Ferrah, as Lieut. Rogers, being the only officer now in Ceylon who came out with the company, is on that account the best qualified to judge of the Serjeant's merits. Pursuant to regimental orders, the company was formed on parade on Friday evening, when Col. J. Power, C.B. and K.H., commanding Rl. Artil. in Ceylon, presented the cup, with a few words highly gratifying to the Serjeant's feelings. On one side is the following inscription:—

"'Presented by the Non-commissioned Officers and Gunners of No. 6 Comp., 1st Batt., Rl. Artillery, to Company-Serjeant James Ferrah, on the eve of his departure from Ceylon, as a just tribute to his many amiable and excellent qualities, during his service of fourteen years as a Non-Commissioned Officer.'

"It rarely happens that a Non-commissioned officer, placed in the highly responsible situation which Serj. Ferrah filled, can so temper zeal, in the discharge of his duty, with moderation, and even affability to those under him, as to secure their affection and respect, while, at the same time, his officers regard his exertions with unqualified approbation. This difficult task Serj. Ferrah has achieved; and perhaps no period of his Military career can be looked to by him with feelings of more honest pride, than that of his connection with his late company. To all in similar stations we would say, in the emphatic language of scripture—'Go thou, and do likewise.'"

G.O., Sept. 13, 1839.—Sec. Lieut. Thompson is transferred from Maj. Raynes's comp., 2d batt., to Maj. Whitty's comp., 6th batt. By order of the Master-General, J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., Assist. Adj. Gen.

G.O., Sept. 19, 1839.—The fitting the clothing of the regiment is to commence at head-quarters on Monday, the 23d inst. The several battalions and corps will in the interim collect their tailors, and finish any work they may have on hand.

J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col. A. A. Gen.

Rl. Engineers—Maj. Victor has replaced Capt. Hotham at Hull, and Capt. Tait has replaced Maj. Cole at Newcastle. First Lieut. Menzies has been ordered to Canada, and has embarked in the Prince George freight-ship, for Quebec. Lt. Mudie and a detachment embarked on 3rd Oct. for the W. Indies.

Yeomanry—The officers of the North Devon Yeomanry Cavalry have presented their Colonel, Lord Rolle, with a splendid sword, in token of their estimation of his Lordship's character.

The review of the troops stationed at Birmingham, on Friday the 4th inst., was a most interesting and beautiful sight. The 4th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards were commanded by Colonel Chatterton (and we are happy to see the gallant officer again out, after his severe indisposition) and the Rifle Brigade by Capt. Walpole. After marching by the reviewing officer, Colonel Thorn, the Dragoon Guards performed the newly-established sword exercise for the Cavalry with the greatest accuracy and skill; they then retired and dismounted. The Rifle Brigade advancing, went through a great variety of manœuvres, firing, skirmishing, &c., belonging to that particular branch of the service. These were done in an excellent and masterly style. The 4th Dragoon Guards then mounted, and came forward, and executed a series of evolutions in an admirable manner; the accuracy with which the various advances and charges at full speed were made was the admiration of everybody, proving the high state of discipline of this splendid regiment. Upon this occasion an immense number of spectators were attracted to Moseley-heath, numerous splendid equipages, and a great many of the nobility and gentry, were on the ground, which, added to the extreme fineness of the day, made up a beautiful spectacle. Upon returning to the barracks, the troops, under the direction of Colonel Chatterton, passed through the town in a body as on actual service, which novel and imposing sight was most pleasing and attractive to the large population which poured out to witness it.—Birmingham Advertiser.

The General Court-Martial (Col. Oliver, R.A., President), which stood adjourned from 5th July last, has been ordered to re-assemble for the purpose of revising their proceedings. The members have accordingly met at Ballincollig.

Mr. E. J. M'Mahon, Dep.-Assist. Commissary-General, has returned from Garabia, for the benefit of his health.

Staff-Assist. Robertson, M.D., has been ordered to proceed from Chatham, to relieve Staff-Surgeon Dr. Jeyes, in the medical charge of the Edinburgh recruiting district.

Mr. Thurlow Dowling, son of the Barrackmaster of St. James's, has been appointed Clerk in the Ordnance, in the room of Mr. Edmonds, who has retired after forty years' service in that department.

The recruiting department at Poyle is vacant by the removal of Lieut. Cruice, 95th, to Kilkenny.

The embarkations from the several depots of regiments in India, will cease early in November next, and not be resumed till March or April, 1840. This information may be useful to several officers now on leave.

It is said that several changes at the Horse Guards will take place. We have heard them named, but forbear the publication, not putting faith in them to so great an extent.

It is rumoured that Sir Benjamin D'Urban is to be the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay.

We regret to announce the death of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Joseph Maclean, K.C.H., Commandant of the 8th Batt. Royal Artillery, and Inspector of the Artillery Department, Royal Arsenal, which took place early on the morning of Thursday, the 19th inst. He was appointed a Gentleman Cadet the 24 of August, 1779; obtained his commission as Second Lieutenant, 24th May, 1781; First Lieut. 13th March, 1790; Capt. Lieut., 20th Oct., 1794; Capt., 1st Aug., 1800; Maj., 1st June, 1806—by Brevet, 1st Jan., 1805; Lieut.-Col., 1st Feb., 1808; Col., 24th Feb., 1820; Maj.-Gen., 27th May, 1825; Lieut.-Gen., 28th June, 1838. Commandant of Woolwich Garrison from 1st of May, 1834, to March, 1838, when he was appointed Inspector of Artillery, on the death of the late Lieut.-Gen. Millar. He served on the expedition to the Helder in 1799, as Aide-de-Camp to General Farrington, and in 1803 was appointed Brigade-Major to the Artillery in Ireland, and Inspector of the Gun-carriage Department. [The daily papers erroneously state that the demise of Sir Joseph was sudden, whereas he had been some time confined. He is also stated to have a son in the Artillery, which is not true; but he has left two sons, and three or four daughters. The papers further make him Director General of the Field Train Department, which appointment is held by Sir A. Dickson. The appointment of Sir Joseph was Inspector of Artillery, as we have stated above. There is some expectation that Lt.-Col. Dundas will be the Inspector of Artillery, and Brev. Lt.-Col. Colquhoun (now in Spain) the Assist. Inspector in place of Lt.-Col. Dundas.]

The Armée contains a curious article on the height at which conscripts are admitted into the service of the state. According to the law of the 10th of March, 1818, the height required was 1 metre 57 centimetres (5 feet 1¾ inches English), but in 1831 it was reduced by law to 1 metre 56 centimetres. This paper states that the reduction in the standard has been found very useful, as the vigour of the soldier is not increased by his height, and where there have been least exceptions as to the standard, there have been most discharges from the service for physical defects.

At the Woolwich Petty Sessions on Monday last a case involving a question of right respecting the gentlemen Cadets disposing of any portion of their regimental necessaries during the time they are at the Rl. Military College came on, and was listened to with great interest, it being one of a novel description. Mr. W. Toader, of Artillery-place, Woolwich, appeared to an information laid under the recent Mutiny Act, clauses 32 and 66, for having, on the 9th Aug. last, purchased a military regimental cloak of Cadet Arthur George St. John Mildmay, contrary to the statute therein provided. The case was clearly proved, and the Magistrates convicted the defendant in the mitigated penalty of five pounds.

Head-quarters, Nottingham, Sept. 9, 1839.

DISTRICT ORDER.—It is with great pleasure that the Major-General obeys the order which he has received to communicate the contents of the following letters relative to the conduct of the troops under his command in this district.

(EXTRACT.) Horse Guards, Sept. 5, 1839.

SIR,—By Lord Hill's desire, I have the honour herewith to transmit to you a copy of a letter which has been received by the General Commanding-in-Chief from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, whereby Lord Hill is gratified to find that the services of the detachments stationed in the different towns within the district and under your command have met with your own approbation, and that of the Civil authorities with whom they were acting.

Lord Hill desires that you will be pleased to take the earliest opportunity of communicating to the respective Commanders of corps and detachments concerned, the contents of Lord John Russell's letter, expressing more particularly to the officers therein named, the sense which both the Secretary of State and the General Commanding-in-Chief entertain of their valuable services upon the late occasion.

Lord Hill has not failed to observe the prominency of Colonel Wemyss's services upon the occasion. J. M'DONALD, A. Gen.

Sir Charles Napier, K.C.B., &c. &c. Nottingham.

Whitehall, Aug. 31, 1839.

MY LORD,—I have had great satisfaction in receiving from Sir Charles Napier a letter, in which he speaks highly of the services of the Commanders of detachments stationed in the different towns, and of the assistance which he has received from them, namely especially—Sir Charles O'Donnell, Sir Rose Ross, Col. Wemyss, and Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell of the 75th Regiment, and stating that the heaviest share of the labour has fallen on Colonel Wemyss.

I have therefore to request your Lordship to express to the Commanding Officers, and especially to the officers above named, the high sense I entertain of their services. I must request your Lordship to express to Col. Thorn the high sense I entertain of his services at Birmingham. (Signed) J. RUSSELL.

The General Commanding-in-Chief, Horse Guards.

[From the tenor of this order, and the calling in of detachments, it would appear that Government consider the late disturbances terminated.—Ed. N. & M. G.]

CIRCULAR. War Office, Aug. 29.

SIR,—Several claims having been preferred to this Office for the compensation for the loss by shipwreck, in their transit from one foreign station to another, of the extra articles of necessaries provided for soldiers, under the 23rd, 24th, and 25th Art. of the Clothing Warrant, dated the 12th of March, 1834, I am directed to acquaint you, that, in all such cases, the articles in question should be insured, and that, in future, unless it can be satisfactorily shown, that it was not possible to effect such insurance, no compensation can be granted by the public. S. SULIVAN.

CIRCULAR. War Office, Aug. 29.

SIR,—The insertions in that part of the Soldier's Pocket Ledger, appropriated to the particulars of his next of kin, are frequently found to be erroneous, in consequence of which much correspondence is occasioned in order to trace the individuals properly entitled to his effects: I am therefore directed by the Secretary-at-War to draw your particular attention to this subject, and to request that you will cause this part of the Soldier's Pocket Ledger to be carefully read over to every effective soldier under your command, soon after the 1st January in each year; and every variation which to his knowledge has occurred, in the particulars therein entered, to be accurately noted in the Ledger by the Pay-Serjeant of his company. S. SULIVAN.

RETURN of all Officers of the late Corps of Rl. Artillery Drivers who have been restored to Active Full-Pay since 1816:—

Quartermaster Alexander Clark, removed as Quartermaster to Rl. Artillery; since retired.

Veterinary Surgeons—William Stockley, removed as Veterinary Surgeon to Rl. Artillery. Richard Cordeaux, removed as Veterinary Surgeon to Rl. Artillery; since dead. Henry Coward, removed as Veterinary Surgeon to Rl. Artillery; since dead. James Hart, removed as Veterinary Surgeon to Rl. Artillery. Charles O'Connor, removed as Veterinary Surgeon to Rl. Artillery; since retired.

N.B.—The following appointments have been conferred on the under-mentioned Officers of the late Driver Corps:—viz.

First Lieut.	—B. O. Nicoll, half-pay, appointed Barrackmaster.
Ditto	G. Wilkinson, half pay	ditto since dead.
Ditto	W. Smith, half-pay, Consul at Lisbon.
Ditto	G. Aynge, half-pay, Master-Gunner, Dartmouth.
Ditto	A. Mathison, half-pay, Barrackmaster, Jamaica;	since dead.

There are other cases of Officers of the late corps of Rl. Artillery Drivers having been appointed to commissions in the Line; but there is no record of those appointments in the office of the Deputy Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery.

By Order of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance,
Office of Ordnance, April 5, 1839. R. BYHAM, Secretary.

Ship Letters from Grenada: Port Phillip, March 27, by the LADY OF THE LAKE, Harburgh, arrived at New Romney. Sydney, April 24—by the ABEL GOWER, Henderson, arrived at Deal.

PORTSMOUTH, Sept. 20.—(From our own Correspondent.—Gales of wind, sleet, and heavy rain have prevailed all the week. Edinburgh, Blenheim, and Phœnix, have, however, contrived to leave the port. Edinburgh put back to St. Helens for a few hours, but got away for good on Monday. The others have not been seen since. Lily is still at Spithead, detained in consequence of the accident which her commander has met with. Hecate, steamer, has been through Spithead, on her way from Greenock to Woolwich. No ships have been commissioned, although Blonde and Magicienne are both ready and masted. Stromboli, steamer, is ready to go to Glasgow, for her machinery, &c.; but nothing can move in such weather as we have had lately. Rattlesnake is the only vessel fitting in the port, and she is ready for service. Considerable progress is making in preparing the Queen for commission. Col. Pasley was very successful yesterday in separating some massive pieces of the wreck of the Royal George. They will be got up by the lighters when the weather will permit. The guinea, coined in 1777, got up last week, has been sent to the Admiralty. It has been announced officially, that Capt. Loch, late of the Hastings, is to supersede Capt. Serle, in charge of the Ordinary, and Capt. of the Victory. Ships in port—Lily, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George, yacht, Rattlesnake, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Sept. 17.—(From our own Correspondent).—13th—The Nimrod, 20, recently paid off at this port, was hauled into dock to have her defects made good, previously to her being recommissioned. Sailed for Falmouth Firebrand steamer, Mr. J. Saunders, Master, with Vice-Admiral Sir C. Adam, R.-Adm. Sir W. Parker, Lords of the Admiralty, and Capt. Sir Wm. Symonds, Surveyor of the Navy, to inspect the Naval depot at that port. 14th—Arrived Hecate steamer, in charge of Mr. Henderson, Sec. Master-Attendant in this Dock-yard, from Glasgow, where she has been fitted with machinery; she took on board some stores, and started for Woolwich the 16th, where she will shortly be commissioned. 17th—Arrived Phœnix steam-frigate, Com. R. S. Robinson, from Portsmouth, and sailed for north coast of Spain the next day, and after landing some marines for the battalion at San Sebastian, she is to proceed to Malta. Belleisle, 72, Captain J. T. Nicolas, moved from Barnpool into the Sound, and sailed on the 19th for Lisbon, her ultimate destination being to join the fleet, under the command of Admiral Sir. R. Stopford. Talavera, 72, Capt. W. B. Mends, ordered to this port to be paid off, was met at sea by Gorgon, steamer, and countermanded, and has returned to Malta. Benbow, 72, Capt. H. Stewart, arrived at Lisbon, on 8th inst.; and Hastings, 72, Capt. John Lawrence, sailed from Lisbon for Malta, on 9th inst. Stirling Castle, 72, which has been fitting for convicts, will be ready to receive them early in October. Arrived the Alfred, with emigrants bound to Australia. In harbour—Impregnable, Sans Josef, Apollo, Carron, sl.-v. At the island—Partridge. In the Sound—Exmouth, Indiaman.

MILFORD HAVEN, 18th Sept., 1839.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Monday morning a Board of Admiralty, consisting of Sir Charles Adam and Sir William Parker, attended by Sir Wm. Symonds and Capt. Brandreth, arrived at Pembroke-yard in the Firebrand steamer, and on passing the Royal Fort were saluted with 19 guns. The Lordships landed in the dock-yard at half-past eleven, when the "foul anchor flag" was immediately displayed. Their attention was principally occupied during the day in the official department of the establishment, and the proposed improvements in the dock-yard; among the foremost of which is that of extending its limits to the westward. On inspecting the Marine detachment and the present temporary barracks, become so dreadfully wet, cold, and uncomfortable, the Lordships seemed inclined to listen to the recommendation of building new quarters, a consummation devoutly to be wished. They next visited the packet-station and the new pier, and in the evening mustered the workmen of the arsenal. At 7 they dined with the Superintendent, and at 10 came down here in the Firebrand for Holyhead. The Lordships were highly pleased with the result of their visit, and the efficient state of the whole establishment. Sir Wm. Symonds, too, expressed his approbation of the ship-building department. The Firebrand did not quit this place until yesterday morning, in consequence of stress of weather. The extra labourers hired for the purpose of stacking timber, &c., were discharged on Saturday. The Pigmy mail steam-packet had her bulwarks carried away last week on passage to Waterford. The Persian is to be launched from Pembroke-yard on 10th Oct. Lord Minto was not with the Board, having been recalled from Portsmouth by telegraph.

DEPTFORD, Sept. 18th.—Arrived and fitting for an emigrant-ship for Australia, the James Pattison. Sailed Nautilus convict-ship for Dublin, to embark emigrants. The Sovereign transport is loading for Rio Janeiro, and the Numa do. refitting; also the Woodbridge for a convict-ship.

SHEERNESS, Sept. 17.—The steam-ship Prometheus will be launched on the 21st inst. She is of the following dimensions:—Length between perpendiculars, 164 feet: length of the keel for tonnage, 141 feet 4 inches; extreme breadth, 32 feet 8 inches; breadth for tonnage, 32 feet 6 inches; moulded, 31 feet 10 inches; depth in hold, 21 feet 10 inches; burthen in tons, 792 46-94. Her keel was laid down on the 15th of July last, and she will be launched on the 21st instant, and in one week afterwards be ready for her engines, which are of 200-horse power, and to be provided by Messrs. Seaward. She is destined for H.M.'s packet office packet service, and does great credit to both officers and men who have the superintendence and performance of the work.

Orders have been received at this yard to superannuate Mr. James Simmonds, Foreman of the Shipwrights, who has for many years been a resident here, having been employed in H.M.'s service 68 years and 6 months. He has been granted 140*l.* per annum.

FALMOUTH, Sept. 21.—The steamer Tagus, Lieut. Mac Leod, arrived last night from Gibraltar—Sept. 6th, left there H.M.S. Wasp; Cadiz 6th, where remained H.M.S. Trincala; Lisbon 9th, the Donegal, Hercules, Benbow, and Espoir. At Lisbon all was quiet; the feeling relative to the slave-trade was much subsided. H.M.S. Hastings sailed from Lisbon on 8th for the Mediterranean. Benbow arrived on that day at Lisbon; Talavera was at Gibraltar on her way home on the 31st ult., but afterwards returned to the Mediterranean for orders. The Lapwing, Lieut. Coghlan, arrived to-day from Halifax, sailed Aug. 28. She had four passengers. H.M.S. Crocodile, Capt. Milne, had arrived up in fourteen days from Havannah.

MALTA, Aug. 31, 1839.—Hazard sloop-of-war, arrived from Biskia Bay on 22d inst., whence she sailed on 14th, leaving in that anchorage the British squadron, consisting of 10 line-of-battle ships (Ganges, Powerful, and Implacable having arrived), frigates, 3 sloops, and 2 steamers, and the French squadron, consisting of 5 liners, the Jena (flag-ship), the Generous, Jupiter, Trident, and Triton; the Amazon, 60-gun frigate; the Cuirassier, brig; the Pajun, steam-frigate; and another steamer-of-war. Conflance had joined the squadron from Constantinople on 17th inst., and on 19th Dido from Alexandria, preceded by the Tyne from the same port, and a French steamer-of-war direct from Toulon, with despatches for the French Admiral. Perfect tranquillity reigned both at Alexandria and Constantinople.

Malta, 6th Sept.—British and French squadrons lying at Tenedos:—English—Ten ships of-the-line, namely, the Princess Charlotte, Rodney, Bellerophon, Asia, Minden, Pembroke, Vanguard, Ganges, Powerful, and Implacable. French—Eight ships-of-the-line, namely, l'Iéna, le Montebello, le Tréton, l'Hercule, le Jupiter, le Trident, le Genereux, and le Diademe. Besides the foregoing there are at anchor off Tenedos 14 frigates, brigs, sloops, and steamers, belonging to the two nations, making in all a force of 32 vessels. There are, moreover, an English sloop and two steamers at Constantinople, and another English sloop at Smyrna, and the French have a brig in the Dardanelles, a steamer at Constantinople, a sloop at Beyout, and a brig at Alexandria. The Austrian Commodore Buniera is at Smyrna, with a frigate and two smaller vessels, having detached a sloop to Alexandria.

We hope the circumstance recorded in this paper last week will awake the attention of the Admiralty to the necessity of re-establishing the Lower Dock Guard House at Chatham in its original place. Had the convicts on board the Fortitude succeeded in their intentions of overpowering their officers and made a footing on shore, they had but to put aside one policeman and one sentry in the convict-square; they would have met with no other opposition until they arrived at the Lower Dock gates; one sentry and one policeman constituted all the force to oppose them there. Lots of spunds were in their road, of which (from their employment in the yard by day) they would have been fully aware, with which they could have battered a hole in the gates in five minutes sufficiently large to suit their purpose.

According to the Augsburg Gazette, Admiral Stopford had declared his purpose of entering the Dardanelles, should any one of three events occur—1st, In case of Ibrahim's marching on Constantinople; 2d, In case of insurrection in the capital; and 3d, In case of a Russian fleet entering the Bosphorus.

VICE-ADMIRAL SIR THOMAS MASTERMAN HARDY, BART., G.C.B.—At a few minutes before two o'clock yesterday afternoon, this meritorious and gallant officer, governor of the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, breathed his last. Admiral Hardy succeeded the late Sir Richard Keats as governor of this institution, in March, 1834. On Friday last the Admiral was seen in apparent good health, walking in the hospital grounds. On the evening of the same day he became indisposed, and was attended by Sir Richard Dobson, the surgeon of the hospital, and Drs. Gladstone and Darville, his complaint was constipation of the bowels, and he continued to get worse until Thursday afternoon, when he had an interview with Lady Hardy and his two daughters, and expressed to them, in the most firm and heroic manner, his conviction that he must die on the morrow. On Thursday night his brother, a wealthy landed proprietor in Dorsetshire, also arrived, and had an interview with him; and, at the time of his death, it is said that all the members of his family, and his medical attendants, were at his bedside. Previous to Admiral Hardy's appointment as Governor of the Hospital, he was one of the Lords of the Admiralty. In 1796 he was Lieut. of the Minerva, in the action with two Spanish frigates; he was promoted to the rank of Commander for cutting out the Mutine French brig-of-war from the roads at Santa Cruz, in which he was wounded; was present in nearly all the naval engagements of Lord Nelson; and at the battle of Copenhagen, and also at the battle of Trafalgar, he was Nelson's flag captain. It was he who endeavoured to persuade Nelson not to appear on deck in his full naval uniform; and when the hero received the fatal shot, he fell into Capt. Hardy's arms; and on hearing the triumphant shout of victory, he inquired what number of the enemy had struck, and being answered, "twenty-one," he faintly ejaculated, "Kiss me, Hardy," and expired. A correct representation of this painfully interesting scene, with a faithful likeness of the devoted Hardy leaning over his lamented commander, occupies a conspicuous position in the painted hall of the Royal Hospital. He entered the Navy 30th Nov., 1781; was made Lieut. 10th Nov., 1793; Commander, 10th July, 1797; Capt., 2d Oct., 1798; Rear-Admiral, 27th May, 1825; and Vice-Admiral, 10th Jan., 1837.

An address of thanks has been signed by the fishermen of Worthing, expressing their gratitude to those noblemen and gentlemen who have kindly lent their assistance in forming the fishing convention with the French Government, and particularly to Lord Palmerston, for the very great trouble and continued pains he has taken to bring it into effect, and to Capt. Pechell, for his indefatigable and unceasing exertions on every occasion to promote the fishermen's welfare.

The rendezvous opened in Limerick by Lieut. Lavie, R.N., for able seamen and petty officers for H.M.S. Revenge, 78, at Cove is broken up, and the party have returned to Cork, having only procured five volunteers.

The Salamander steamer is to come to Woolwich when relieved by the Phœnix on the Coast of Spain, and the Hercules, 74, is expected at Sheerness from Lisbon to be paid off.

The Apollo tr.-ship, refitting at Plymouth, is ordered to be in readiness for the reception of troops by 1st Oct. She will either embark the 7th Fusiliers for Gibraltar, or a regiment for the Cape of Good Hope.

When the Gorgon passed up the Straits with despatches for Sir Robert Stopford, she left orders at Gibraltar to stop the Talavera, 72, from coming out of the Mediterranean, and to send her back to rejoin the fleet at the mouth of the Dardanelles.

QUEBEC, Aug. 14.—The Buffalo tr.-ship arrived here during the night. She brings detachments of the Coldstream and Grenadier Guards: left Plymouth on 14th June.

Mr. Hull, Chief Officer of Coast Guard, is removed from Milltown Malbay to Brandon station, Kerry, vice Dwyer, removed to Castle Townsend. Mr. Hull was the Chief Officer at Ballycotton at the melancholy wreck of the Killarney steamer, and succeeded in saving Baron Spolanco, with other passengers.

Naval armaments on a large scale are rapidly proceeding at Toulon and Brest.

The Lords of the Admiralty arrived on the night of the 13th at Falmouth in the Firebrand steamer. The Astræa saluted at eight o'clock on the occasion, and subsequently, when their lordships left the guard-ship. The several officers belonging to the packet-station and to the Peninsula steam-ships, paid their respects in full dress on board the Firebrand. Their lordships then visited the Arsenal and Dock-yard at Mylor; and finally the Astræa, whence they returned and landed at Capt. Plumridge's. The following appointments were made the next day. Lieut. William Downey, retiring from the command of the Linnet packet, is succeeded by Lieut. Forrester, of the Lyra; and to the command of the latter Lieut. Collier, late of the Goldfinch, has been appointed. On the 16th then Lords ships arrived at Pembroke. The fort fired a salute of 19 guns immediately on their arrival, 7 A.M.

The allowance for making up Marine clothing is increased from 3*s.* 5*d.* to 3*s.* 11*d.* per suit, in consequence of a drab jacket having been substituted for the waistcoat formerly issued with the annual clothing.

THE ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.—On the 16th inst. the Terror Capt. Crozier, dropped down from the Dock-yard, at Chatham, to Gillingham, with all her white canvass spread; and on the 19th her companion, the Erebus, Capt. James Clark Ross, was appointed to follow, and then proceed on their voyage together.

The Erebus and Terror seem to be twin ships, alike in build, in colours, in masts and rigging, and, indeed, in every external appearance. An inexperienced eye could not tell the one from the other. The Erebus is about 370 tons; the Terror, 340. In each the full complement of officers and men is 64: 128 in all*. Nothing that the art of the shipwright could accomplish has been omitted to fit them for their perilous undertaking. Below, not only have the ribs been strengthened by transverse timbers, but these again have been interlaced by cross beams at certain angles, so as to offer resistance to any invading body, such as ice, which would require a mighty force to overcome. Thus, internally powerful beyond any former example, the outward hull has also been so shaped (curving from near the centre, something like the turning-off edge of a glass or tea-cup) as to throw the converging ice from the chain-plates, and thus protect the rigging from being crushed or invaded. The deck, too, is double; the whole has a compactness and firmness which gives assurance of security from the worst elements to which their gallant crews can ever be exposed. A spare rudder, which could be shipped immediately in case of accident to the other, is safely stowed amidships: each vessel is provided with eight boats, two of them whalers, and framed to encounter rough seas and weather in separate expeditions, to explore passages and lands where the ships cannot penetrate. Six guns and [illegible] in each; viz. four six-pounders, and two [illegible] apparatus for keeping vessels at an equable te[illegible]able, and co[illegible] square iron tube, above [illegible]ming air to sides, and distributing [illegible]h to every be[illegible] the ship. The ventilation [illegible]o. There are stoves in the Captains' cabin[illegible]room messes † which adjoin; and the cooking con[illegible]ort as ample and fit for every purpose as they could be on shore. There is a large kettle to dissolve ice into fresh water; another for dressing salt-meat; another for fish; another for fresh meat; and ovens for baking. The Mates' cabins are well constructed, and those for the officers to sleep in, though small, are arranged with all a seaman's skill and dexterity in making much of a little. The sick-berths are forward, and so contrived that the invalids may be kept apart from the healthy, for their own sake as well as for the general safety. Immense ice-saws are ranged along the lower deck, some of them thirty, or more, feet long, and looking like the jaws of sharks, competent to cut through any besetting adversary. They are victualled with fresh provisions for three years; and pemmican and prepared meat in cases are stowed away in the least possible compass. The provision of scientific instruments, under the superintendence of the Royal Society, is very complete; there are double sets, to supply the loss of any which may be broken or rendered useless.

A pleasant circumstance to record is the friendship subsisting between Captains Ross and Crozier. They have been messmates and intimate together. Crozier was a Midshipman in the ship where Ross was a Lieutenant; he was a Lieutenant where Ross was Captain; and now he is Captain where Ross is Commodore of the expedition. They have [illegible]ed together, know ar[illegible] each other, and this is an aus[illegible]s promise for their good understanding and cordi[illegible]ation to the end bound together in their brave

The earlier proceedings of the [illegible]page will lead them to St. Helena, where Lieut. Eardley W. [illegible]not, Rl. Engineers, who goes out in the Erebus, will be left in charge of the new Observatory. Next, at the Cape, another officer will be landed for the like purpose. The vessels then make their way across the Ocean, touching at, and examining, Kerguelen's Land, Amsterdam, and other islands, either known, or imperfectly reported, in that vast expanse of water. Arrived at Van Diemen's Land, the instruments, &c. for the observatory will be sent ashore; and, whilst it is erecting, they will cruise to various points where the scientific pursuits of the expedition are most likely to be advanced. On their return, they will start de novo in a direct southern course, between 120 and 160 degrees east longitude, towards the Antarctic Pole: and it is a singular and fortunate thing that in this direction, during the present season, a ship of Mr. Enderby's has discovered land on both sides of the longitudes we have indicated, in about 65 and 68 degrees of south latitude. These shores have been named Sabrina Land, seen March, 1839, and Balleny Isle, seen February, 1839; and between them, as well as upon them, the efforts of the Erebus and Terror will, in the first instance, be employed. How far they may penetrate is in the hands of Providence. They will afterwards circumnavigate the Pole, and try in every quarter to reach the highest point, whether near Enderby's Land, discovered in 1832, or by Capt. Weddell's furthest reach, about 78 degs. in 1823. It is [illegible]en Sabrina Land and Balleny Isle, to the northward, in ab[illegible]56, and E. long. 140 degrees. It is expected [illegible] will be found, [illegible]orth, or so near as to [illegible] and also ascertain the [illegible] sought phenomenon. [illegible]forgotten to mention that the vessels are constructed on a plan which divides them into three compartments; so that either extremity or the middle might be stove in, and yet the remainder be a safe hold for the crew.

The expedition proceeds, we believe, on its voyage this day. At the Cape of Good Hope the vessels will probably not remain more than three or four days, merely to land the observatory and instruments. They will then trace their course by Marion and Prince Edward's Island, Crozet Isles, and so on to Kerguelen's Land (S. lat. 49 deg. 50 min., and E. long. 70 deg.), which being in a vast expanse of ocean, and equidistant from the two great continents of Africa and Australia, is considered a most eligible site for taking observations. Had the expedition been able to sail at an earlier period, it would probably from hence have explored the regions ten or fifteen degrees to the south, where are laid down Bellingshausen's course and views of land in Feb. 1820; Briscoe's course, in Feb. and March 1831; Kemp's track and land seen in Dec. 1838; Enderby's Land, and other interesting points in that direction, of which we have as yet only geographical glimmerings. But as the time will not now admit of this, the voyage will be continued in lower latitudes to Van Diemen's Land, taking the opportunity, in crossing them, to ascertain the lines of magnetism converging towards the polar circle.

At Van Diemen's Land the observatory, &c., will be landed, and whilst it is erecting, the Erebus and Terror will take a cruise along the Australian coast, Port Jackson, &c., look after Howe Island, Admiralty Rocks, Curtis Island, L'Espérance Rocks, Chatham Island, Cornwallis Isles, Antipodes' Island, Campbell Island, Emerald Island, and other very imperfectly known lands all scattered round New Zealand. On this route they will have opportunities to ascertain the lines of magnetism converging in an opposite direction to those obtained before, and pointing from the westward as the former from the eastward to the magnetic pole.

About Nov. 1840, it may be expected that, having revisited Van Diemen's Land, and completed their observations in the new observatory, the expedition will sail to fix the precise spot where that pole exists. The summer months of December, January, February, March, and April will be spent in this investigation, searching for the lands Sabrina and Balleny. If they [illegible]ate to the south, perhaps the expedition will winter [illegible] the ices of the South Pole. All beyond is as yet [illegible]n to man.

[illegible] Rev. Thomas Chambers, M.A., of St. J[illegible] Cambridge, has been appointed Head M[illegible]ter of the Naval School.

RL. MARINES.—Lieut.-Col. W. M. Burton and Capt. Little have joined from leave, Col. Connolly is on leave and Col. Beatty is in temporary command of the Woolwich Division. Capt. Beadon is recruiting at Chelmsford. Lieut. Wilson has not joined the Ocean, but is still at hd.-qrs. Chatham; and Lieut. Shoveller has joined the Ocean at [illegible].

Court-Martial on Sec. Lieut. W. B. T. Rider.—[This trial was noticed in our Portsmouth letter last week; and we now furnish fuller particulars.]—The charges, preferred by Capt. Provo W. P. Wallis, of the Madagascar, are as follows:—

1st—For unofficerlike conduct on or about the forenoon of the 30th August, 1838, in wrangling with his attendant, private Edward Gibbons, R.M., and making use of improper language. 2d—For unofficerlike conduct on or about the 15th Oct., 1838, in making use of violent and abusive language to private John Jupp, when on his post as sentry at the gun-room door. 3d—For a direct breach of so much of the second article of war, as relates to being guilty of profane oaths, curses, and execrations, on or about the 29th Oct., 1838. 4th—For contempt to his superior officer on the evening of the before-mentioned 29th Oct., when sitting at the gun-room table. 5th—For unofficerlike conduct between the 18th and 25th January, 1839, in infusing discontent into the mind of his attendant, private Thomas Maubury, R.M., respecting the said Thomas Maubury's being sent on fatigue duty. 6th—For unofficerlike conduct, as reported in First Lieutenant Edward Hocker's letter to him (Captain Wallis), on the 3d May, 1839, enclosed to Sir Thomas Harvey in his letter of the 8th June, 1839. 7th—For disobedience of orders and unofficerlike conduct, [illegible]creating a noise on the main-deck, the hands being on deck at [illegible]ne, the ship coming down the St. Lawrence. 8th—For un[illegible]like conduct in repeatedly abusing the gun-room servant, [illegible]especially in the month of April last, and again on or about [illegible] of August last.

The defence, after commenting on the conflicting testimony adduced on some of the charges, and contending that these had not been proved, stated, with regard to others, that he (the prisoner) would not have fallen into error had Lieut. Hocker, R.M., observed a mild and conciliatory conduct towards him, instead of evincing an ill feeling towards him, which he had done from the first, and thereby goaded him (the prisoner) into error. He concluded by entreating the Court to take this into consideration, as well as his youth and inexperience, and by throwing himself on their lenency on these grounds. The prisoner having declined calling any witnesses, the Court cleared to deliberate on the sentence, which was as follows:—

"The Court was of opinion that the first, third, fifth, and eighth of the said charges have been proved—that the second and sixth of the said charges have been proved in part; and that the fourth and seventh of the said charges have not been proved. But in consideration of the youth and inexperience of the said W. B. T. Rider, the Court did only order and adjudge him, the said W. B. [illegible] be severely reprimanded, and to have his name placed [illegible]m of the list of Sec. Lieuts. Rl. Marines; and he, the [illegible]t. W. B. T. Rider, was thereby sentenced accordingly."

ADMIRALTY MEMORANDUM.—In reference to the regulations of [illegible]rvice at sea, chapt 9, sec. 6, the Lords Commissioners of [illegible]dmiralty are pleased to direct that in future, whenever it may be necessary to reduce a Sejeant in the Rl. Marines for misconduct, such reduction shall invariably be to the station of a private.

ADMIRALTY MEMORANDUM.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to direct that half-boots, instead of shoes, shall in future be supplied to Marines serving afloat, as well as those on shore. The Pursers of H.M. ships are to make demands accordingly, and to take care always to have on charge a supply of half-boots, at the rate of at least one pair for each man on board, observing that they are to be issued as necessaries, when required by the Marines, and are to be charged against their wages in the ship's books, at the issuing price of six shillings per pair.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieut.-Gen. Sir Samuel Ford Whittingham, K.C.B. and K.C.H., was unanimously appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces on the Madras establishment.

The state of the ballot at its close on Wednesday 11th inst. at the India House for the election of a Director, was as follows:—

J. W. Hogg, Esq.	795
Colonel Galloway	399
Colonel Sykes	373
Major-General Robertson	287

"A lady, whose husband is with the wing of the 31st N.I., escorting treasure from Shikarpoor through the Bolan Pass, and with which detachment Capt. W. Anderson, commanding Shah Soojah's 2nd Cavalry, proceeded with 400 of his regiment, has had a letter from him, mentioning that a small party of Sowars under that officer had had a brush with the Belochees, killing sixteen of them, two of whom Capt. Anderson himself cut down, and having broken his sword on a third, was obliged to put him out of pain with his pistol. Capt. Anderson was selected to command the 2nd Cavalry of Shah Soojah's force from the 2nd Local Horse. He was appointed Adjutant to that regiment in Arracan, where he was serving in the Light Inf. under Col. Kemm, when the appointment became vacant by Lieut. Maclean getting some better Staff situation. He served as Adjutant in the 2nd Local Horse from 1824 to 1838, and invariably received the commendations of his own Commanding Officer, and of the different General Officers under whom the 2nd Local Horse has served during that period. We are happy to add that in this affair he escaped unhurt."—Courier, June 4.

Lieut. Chapman, who had been confined in Fort St. George, has made his escape. Having added an opiate to the drink of the sentinels, he mounted and forced a passage through the roof of his room whilst they were insensible, and at length he descended by means of a rope he had previously prepared into the court-yard, where he succeeded in imposing upon and passing the sentinel. All subsequent search for him had proved vain, and it is supposed he had got clear of the islands.

Poona.—Tranquillity has at length been restored at Poona. The conspirators are about to be tried, and it is supposed that a severe example will be made of some of them. It is stated confidently that the ex-Peshwa, who resides at Baitool, near Caunpore, on a pension of eight lacs of rupees a year from the British Government, is deeply implicated in them, though it may not be so easy to bring the charge home to him.

Aden is to be strongly fortified, and ordnance for th[illegible] walls is to be despatched as soon as practicable.

* Erebus—Captain, J. C. Ross; Lieutenants, E. T. Bird, J. F. L. Wood, J. Sibbald; Master, H. Mapleton; Surgeon, R. M'Cormick; Purser, T. R. Hallett; Assist.-Surgeon, J. D. Hooker.

Terror—Captain, F. R. M. Crozier; Lieutenants, A. M'Murdo, J. H. Kay; Master, P. P. Cotter; Surgeon, J. Robertson; Assist.-Surgeon, D. Lyall.

† In these, four officers will be accommodated; the fifth keeping the deck.

Burmah.—Intelligence has been received to a late date from the Burmese empire; all was quiet; the Acting Resident was on good terms with the Princes and Ministers, and trade at Rangoon was reviving.

Intelligence has been received from Candahar to the 24th May. Brigadier Sale had taken possession of Girishk without opposition, the Sirdars having decamped before his arrival. Provisions were becoming more plentiful at Candahar. Sir John Keane, it was expected, would advance in the beginning of June, but nothing had been finally decided upon that point. The impression is general that the native troops of the Bombay division will remain at Candahar, and the European portion goon to Ghizni. The Bengal division will proceed to Cabul.—Bombay Times, June 29.

In reply to the reference lately made by the Governor-General, the Court of Directors have a second time ordered a charter to be granted to the existing proprietory of the Bank of Bombay.—Ibid.

A letter of 18th May gives the following greatly improved account of the state of things at Quetta. The writer describes the general feeling of satisfaction prevailing around him at the restoration of Shah Sooja-ool-Moolk, although Quetta and the province of Shawl are within the territory of the unfriendly chief, Mehraub Khan of Khelat. "Even here, where we are living among savages, a salute in honour of the Shah's re-accession was freely taken up by the surrounding forts, and with the exception of a very small portion of the inhabitants, who are closely attached to Mehraub Khan of Kelat, all appear delighted at our visit. Capt. Bean has succeeded in getting in one of the Kakur chiefs, with 400 of those very men who, but one month back were daily butchering our followers, and we now walk about unarmed, without a feeling of fear or danger, and take every opportunity of conversing with the people whom at first we avoided as wild beasts.—Agra Ukhbar.

A memorial has been presented by the Trade Association to the Supreme Council, having for its object the relief of those of the Military service who labour under pecuniary difficulties, and to obviate a resort to the Insolvent Court, a measure which has hitherto been attended with an accumulation of evil to the insolvent, and loss to the creditor.—Englishman, June 8.

We have been favoured by a correspondent with the following memorandum of reliefs to take place at the end of the year amongst the troops of H. H. the Nizam.

Head-quarters of 1st Nizam's Horse from Hingolee to Mominadabad.

Wing of ditto from Bolarum to ditto.

Head-quarters of 4th Nizam's Horse from Mominadabad to Hingolee.

Wing of ditto from Mominadabad to Bolarum.

6th Infantry from Aurungabad to Bolarum.

7th ditto from Hingolee to Aurungabad.

8th ditto from Bolarum to Hingolee.

The Infantry (excepting the 7th, which marches on being relieved) move for their destination on the 1st, and the Cavalry on the 15th November.—Bombay Times.

BENGAL.

Military Appointments and Promotions.—G.O., June 15, 1839—In conformity to instructions from the Court of Directors, published in G.O., May 27, authorising an augmentation of the corps of Engineers, the Hon. the President in Council is pleased to make the following promotions, date of comm., May 20, 1839. To be Majors—Capt W. N. Forbes, Capt, (Brev.-Maj.) A Irvine, C.B., and Capt. E. Sweetenham. To be Captains—First Lieut. (Brev. Capt.) H. Goodwyn, First Lieut. A. H. E. Boileau, first Lieut. P. W. Willis, First Lieut G. B. Tremenheere, First Lieut. W. H. Graham, and First Lieut. W. M. Smith. To be First Lieuts—Sec. Lieuts. W. Abercrombie, J. A. Weller, J. N. Sharp, J. R. Western, H. Rigby, T. Renny, G. H. Fagan, L. Hill, H. Siddons, E. J. Brown, J. Trail, and J. D. Cunningham. Supernum. Sec. Lieuts.—T. H. Sale, A. Cunningham, J. L. D. Sturt, N. C. M'Leod, J. Spens, and W. Jones. The following Supernum. Officers are [illegible] the effective strength of the corps as Sec. Lieuts. [illegible] present [illegible] standing, [illegible] reference to the transfer to [illegible] the Supernumeraries in the corps of Engineers at Madras and Bombay as may avail themselves of the option given them, will be in the order in which they passed at Addiscombe, as directed in the Court's instructions:—Supernum. Sec. Lieuts. C. S. Spotta, S. Pott, R. Pigou, J. S. Broadfoot, and C. B. Young. 13th N.I., Lieut. C. P. Bruere to be Adj., v. Edwardes, prom. 66th N.I., Lieut. C. J. Harrison to be Interp. and Quarter-master, v. Whiteford, prom.; Lieut. R. Y. D. Bush to be Adj., v. Harrison.

Removals and Postings.—G.O., Meerut, June 1, 1839—Lt.-Col. F. Young, on Staff employ, from the 55th to 31st N.I. Lt.-Col. G. R. Pemberton (new prom.) is posted to the 55th N.I.

Furloughs.—G.O., May 28—Gen. B. Marley, Commandant of Allahabad, from July 1, 1839, to Jan. 1, 1840, in extension to remain at the Presid. on méd. cert. 26th N.I., Ens. T. C. Blagrave, from 1st June to 1st Oct., to visit Presid. on med. cert., preparatory to applying for furl. to Europe. 47th N.I., Ens. W. Baillie, from April 1 to May 30, to visit Delhi on med. cert.

"LOVE IN HIGH LIFE."

LADY M. AND JULIA.

Julia.—My dear Mamma, its quite in vain,
I'll only marry Captain Gray—
The Viscount is so very plain.
Lady M.—Don't talk such nonsense, Julia, pray.
Julia.—But, oh! the high, the gallant air—
The style, the dress, too, of the Captain!
His eyes, moustachios, and his hair!—
His very whiskers I am wrapt in!

Lady M.—Well, Julia, as you please, you know,—
But say, content with love and kisses,
Can you resolve to hem and sew,
And abdicate the Opera's blisses?
And won't you miss the Viscount's carriage?
And can you eat your satin dresses?
And can you live on love and marriage,
And be content with simple tresses?

Julia.—For Captain Gray my heart beats high,
He is so very sentimental;
Oh! Captain Gray, for thee I sigh!
What is, Mamma, the Viscount's rental?
But, oh! I beg you'll say no more,
You cannot change my fix'd opinion;
I told you, dear Mamma, before,
My heart owns Captain G.'s dominion!

Lady M.—And then the Viscount may'nt propose?
Know then he does. Will you decline?
Julia.—Yes—no; my thought shall I disclose?
Mamma, his fortune is divine!
Lady M.—But then the Captain?
Julia.— Pooh! Mamma;
I like his waltzing well, you know;
Lady M.—I'll go and tell your dear Papa
Julia.—When shall we order the trousseau?
But is he very liberal?
And will the diamonds he reset?
And when, Mamma, when will he call?
And is he really in my net?
And fifteen thousand pounds a year!
And settlements, Mamma, you say?
Yes! though I shed a silent tear,
Farewell! farewell! poor Captain Gray!

Weekly Paper.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN THE EAST.

By Count Bjornstjerna, Swedish Ambassador.

In the course of the last twelve or fifteen years the central countries of Asia have undergone so great changes, that the opinions expressed before this time, by men well acquainted with the subject, are no longer applicable

These countries are Persia with Khorassan and Kirman, which are partially subjected to it; Afghaunistán, Beluchistan, Koondoos, Khiva, and Bokhara; and the nomadian nations in Turkomania. All that lies to the west of these countries belongs to Turkey, and has less to do with India, while all on the east of them belongs to China*, and forms its own political world.

Of these countries Persia merits, without doubt, the first place. But what a change has not this power undergone within a few years! During the latter part of the reign of its last aged monarch (Feth Ali Shach), Abaz Mirsa, his successor, exercised great influence in Persia's Council-chamber, hostile to Russia, and friendly towards England. It was he who began the war in 1826 against Russia, ending so unhappily for Persia, which (according to the peace at Turkomanchai, in 1828,) was obliged to give up the fertile provinces of Erivan and Nakshivan, and saw the Russian boundary advanced as far as to the river Arras (the Araxes of the ancients), in the neighbourhood of Tabris, and not far from Teheran, the principal cities of Persia. Abaz Mirsa died in 1833; and his young son, Mohamed, became his grandfather's successor at his death, in 1834.

Mohamed ascended the Persian throne, protected both by Russia and England, which jointly endeavoured to put aside the claims of his numerous competitors. Sir Henry Bethune, a distinguished English officer in the service of the Shach, contributed, however, most to this happy result.

It could not then with certainty be known what political system the young Shach would follow, and each party hoped to be honoured with his confidence and favour; which of them, however, was mistaken was soon shewn, when the Shach, contrary to the English Ambassador's serious representations, began his campaign against Herat, the strongest fortification on the great route to India.

Almost the same influence change for England has taken place in India as the other neighbouring state, Afghaunistan. Not more than fifteen years since, this country formed a powerful monarchy, under the title of the Cabul kingdom, the rulers of which have always been on good terms with the British Government in India; but through civil wars, the history of which is too voluminous to be mentioned here, this kingdom has been divided into several principalities, independent of each other. Cabul devolved (1826) on Dost Mahomed Khan, brother of the former King's Vizier; Peshawer has its own Governor (Sirdar), who pays tribute to Runjet Sing in Lahore; Kandahar is under the management of Kohmidal Khan, a brother of Dost Mahomed in Caubul; Herat alone has remained under the power of its old dynasty, and it is now governed, though weakly, by Kamran, son of the last King of Caubul. Ghuzney has obtained its independence, as also have the Amers in Sinde, who were before petty Princes under the power of the Caubul kingdom. This division of the monarchy of the Doroneus† has deprived India of the shelter of a power that was friendly inclined, which, invincible in its mountains, possessed, however, no offensive forces against British India, and was therefore, in a double point of view, important for it.

The other states of Central Asia are of much less importance to India than the two last-mentioned. Beluchistan is inhabited by a predatory people, who rob every traveller, make plundering expeditions to the neighbouring lands, and carry on continual wars between their different khells, or tribes. The Beluch, like the Arab and the Turkoman, is always on horseback, and could therefore present a considerable body of cavalry, if their own disagreements did not prevent it. The nominal Governor of this extensive country is the Khan in Kelut, who possesses a kind of feudal government, but is so imperfectly obeyed by his vassals, that the Khan is almost without power. It is evident that Beluchistan, with such a state of society, is incapable of undertaking anything against the British possessions in India; as it is besides separated from them, as well by the Soliman mountains and the Indus, as by the extensive dominions of the Amers in Sind.

Koondoos has, during the last twelve or fifteen years, considerably increased its power by conquests, which its present King, Mahomet Moorat Bey, has made of Badwkishan, Kholum, Balkh, and other places; so that it includes all the northern branches of Hindoo Koosch, and thence down to the bed of the Oxus. Its Military force is not, however, more than 80,000 men, undisciplined cavalry, without infantry, and, therefore, of but little consequence against India, from which also Koondoos is separated by the great natural hinderances.

Next to Koondoos we find to the east of the Oxus, Bokhara (the ancient Trans-oxiana), with Samarkand, a tributary to it, a fertile country, but surrounded with sand deserts, and inhabited by a fanatic Mahomedan people, who have every Christian power. Bokhara is governed by Usbeck Tartars; and is the staple town for the trade between Western and Chinese Asia. Its Army consists of 22,000 cavalry, 4,000 infantry, and forty field-pieces badly served, and is so much the less capable of undertaking anything against India, as the disposition of the people is rather peaceable than warlike.

To the west of the Oxus, between that river and Persia, we find the nomadian tribes of Turkomans and Kurds, who are certainly capable of making depredations on the dominions of their neighbours, but cannot undertake any campaign against so distant a country as India. Their forces consist of numerous undisciplined Cavalry.

At the mouth of the Oxus, on the shores of the sea of Aral, lies the Khaunt Khiva (called also Orgunje), a fertile oase, surrounded by sand and salt deserts: the whole of its Military force consists of 10,000 Cavalry, which, if even joined to the Turkoman tribes, on whom the khan in Khiva exercises great influence, would nevertheless be unable to effect anything against India. The short sketch here given of the central countries of Asia, will, although very hastily made, be sufficient to show that neither of them is capable of alone undertaking anything against British India; and a union among them is not probable, as both political and religious antipathies would prevent it. It is, consequently, not from them that India has anything to fear; it is to the north of these countries that the power is to be sought, which alone could venture upon an undertaking against India. This power, Russia, is consequently that to which we must now direct our attention.

The conquest of India has long been a general subject of conversation, and a fervent desire for this has been expressed among the nations of Central Asia, as also among their northern neighbours, whose territories extend from Lapland to China. This wish, founded on the memory of former successful conquests, will probably (how prombling so ever it may appear to the people) not be entertained by their leaders and statesmen without great consideration; they certainly see the difference between the past and present, as also the many local and political hindrances which would meet such an undertaking‡.

Those armies which formerly conquered India—Mahmud's (of Ghizni), Tamerlane's, and Nadir Shah's, were composed of only Light Cavalry, and therefore free from all that baggage which usually accompanies a European army; though this, especially as regards artillery and ammunition, is now absolutely necessary, in order to be able afterwards to compete with a force, like organized in the European manner, on the borders of India. These armies of Light Cavalry, which were enabled to surmount those mountains, and to go through those deserts which are everywhere met with on the way to India, could equally well, on their arrival, be compared with the army that was collected there, and yet was composed only of irregular troops. The case is now quite the contrary; India is defended by an army organised in the European ways, well disciplined, and supplied with an excellent artillery, which cannot be attacked with the slightest hope of success by any other force than one formed in the same way. The question is, therefore, whether such a force can possibly press forward through the extensive sand deserts, and over the cloud-capped mountains which separate India from Central Asia?

* Yarkmid, the nearest country east of Koondoos, was, not more than twelve years since, conquered by China, whence an Army was sent of 80,000 men, most of the soldiers of which were armed with fire-arms, of such a weight that it required two men to carry them. Yarkmid is Mahomedan, as also Khoten, situated to the north of Yarkmid. This latter is governed by Usbekian Tartars, and has paid for some years tribute to China.

* This was the name of the Royal line reigning in Candi

† Many plans for the conquest of India have been formed. Potemkin and the Prince of Nassau Siegen (the same that commanded the Russian fleet at Svenskasund) formed more than one for Catherine. The Emperor Paul also entertained such a plan; but they were partly formed without the necessary knowledge, and partly under circumstances so very different from the present, that they are now no longer of any service. General Gardanne, Napoleon's ambassador at the Persian court, also made a plan, which is said to have fallen into the hands of the Russian army during the campaign of 1812, but neither would that answer the existing state of Asia.

The very skilful and equally active Generals of the Russian Army (especially General Yermolon and Field-Marshal Paschkewitsch) know the central lands of Asia, and the roads to India, better than any of their predecessors, and have, in this respect, nothing to learn.

It is the examination of this question we should now briefly undertake.—(To be continued.)

Civilization and Barbarism.—An English lady lately passing to Constantinople in a steam-vessel, was about to sit down on a convenient-looking basket which stood on the deck; when, to her utter astonishment, she was warned by the Commander not to do so, as it contained the head of the Governor of the Dardanelles, on its way to be fixed up before the gates of the seraglio!!

To Readers and Correspondents.

"Arthur" has our best acknowledgments.—We have forwarded the packet to "Bombardier."—The request of "Edinburgh Observer" shall be attended to.—We will address a letter to "Chevron" by Monday's post.

We cannot decipher the post-mark of the letter from an able correspondent in, we believe, North Wales, and from whom we have heard on former occasions under the signature of "Miles:" we, however, offer our sincere thanks, and hope to hear from him more frequently: and as an especial favour request he will not trouble himself to pay the postage of his letters.

Our correspondent "Truth" is thanked: we will not lose sight of the matter.—Several letters have reached us respecting the "Benefit Fund" for the Army and Navy, one of which we insert. The publication of the others might destroy every chance of the Institution being established. Blame is indiscriminately thrown on different individuals, and on some we think very unjustly, knowing them to be honourable men, and believing their motives good; but the general complaint is, that the Rules put forth are untenable; that the scale of subscription is absurd; and that the proposed title, "BENEVOLENT" United Service Institution is derogatory—it should be "Army and Navy Benefit Fund."

"K.C.B.'s" letter might do more injury than good to the party whose cause he advocates: we know already that more than one gallant officer refused the appointment under Mr. Thomson; and as pecuniary gain could not influence the talented and affluent officer to whom it was first offered, we think with "K.C.B." that the reasonable request of a step of rank might, on account of his services, have been granted.

"Aristides" on Tuesday next.

"Vindex" is perfectly correct: we have no connexion with the party, direct or indirect, and the authorities are on the qui vive.

We conceive that Sir Samuel Ford Whittingham will be much obliged to the newspapers if they will discontinue designating him Sir Samford; it is a piece of civilian stupidity very unamusing to the gallant Lieut.-General.

We cannot agree with "Sentinel," but at all events the expected retirement of Lieut.-Colonel —— is not, we submit, a fit subject for public discussion; the retirement will probably take place next year, on the completion of a certain period of service. "Sentinel" will find it generally admitted that the Lieut.-Colonel, though "without service," has, from his conduct in office, won the respect of the officers of the Army. We have elsewhere briefly noticed the rumoured changes at the Horse Guards.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1839.

THE deficiency of our Army, in point of numerical strength, has lately been most glaringly, as well as painfully, exemplified in the impossibility of relieving corps by others at present serving on the Irish establishment. We some time since stated, that one of the plans for the relief of regiments serving in the East Indies is to send on all corps from the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, the Mauritius, and New South Wales, in rotation, when they shall have served so long at those stations respectively as to become the first for India. By this project the regiments now in the East are likely to be left there to complete twenty-three years' service, from the date of their leaving Great Britain.

It would indeed have been a case of gross injustice if the 19th Foot had been sent to the Cape of Good Hope merely for three years on passage to India, when, as the regimental records show, that for a period of fifty-three years, viz. since 1786, it has never served on a good foreign station. It would be equally unjust to send out to the West Indies the 38th Regiment, after three years' service at Gibraltar, that corps having only returned but three years since from long service in the East Indies.

It would be just as unfair to send the 1st Battalion Royals and the 25th to the Cape and Gibraltar on the terms we have already stated, as to send the 19th and 38th. All four regiments have rarely, if ever, had a good foreign station, and have last returned,—the Royals, 19th, and 25th, from ten years' service in the West Indies, and the 38th from nearly twenty years' service in the East.

We must confess that we are at a loss to discover the benefits of the Rotation system, unless there is an end to the favouritism that for many years has characterised the proceedings with respect to the embarkation of regiments for foreign service.

The excuse of not being able to spare regiments from the Irish establishment has not blinded any military man of experience as to the real state of the case, which is this. There are certain regiments, which are not to be sent to bad stations if it can be avoided:—some other corps must therefore take their just turns of foreign service in the East and West Indies, while for the favoured corps is reserved the pastime of serving in America and the Mediterranean.

It may be asserted that it is not the turn for the pet corps, and that when their turn does arrive they will be sent indiscriminately to good or bad stations as occasion may require; but will any man of experience or observation credit the assertion? When the 23rd and 71st were told off for the relief of the 16th and 54th in India, how did the matter terminate? The two favoured corps were sent to Canada, and the 16th and 54th are still left broiling at Bengal and Madras.

But why cannot the authorities send the 42nd, 79th, or 88th, to the Cape of Good Hope, even if it be a month sooner than their turn for foreign service? The 19th, who were selected, and the 42nd returned from foreign service within a few days of each other; while the 88th and 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade have had their three years' home service this very month, and cannot, therefore, with justice complain of being prematurely sent abroad.

The case of the 7th Fusiliers is so glaring as scarcely to require an observation; we shall, therefore, dismiss it in a few words. This fortunate corps went to Malta in June 1825, and remained there, with the exception of the time occupied by a voyage to the Ionian Islands and back (for they were immediately recalled through the influence of their Lieut.-Colonel), until 1836; they are now to proceed to Gibraltar for three years, after which they perhaps will be sent (if they should not be required at Malta) to the West Indies, and after three years more on to Canada, when they will return home, say in 1850. Thus, out of twenty-five years' service, they will have had three in a bad climate, while other unfortunate regiments are left broiling in the West Indies for ten years, and in the East Indies for twenty years, apparently forgotten by the Quarter Master General.

Some time since the 7th Fusiliers received an order for India, in the event of their not being required for service in Canada. Well, they are not required in Canada, it appears; and yet, instead of being sent to India, they are to proceed to Gibraltar. The force of humbug can go no further.

There is no one who has the interest of the Army more at heart than Major Tulloch, and we feel convinced that his idea of a rotation system has never been realised, or we should not have regiments sent alternately to Canada and Gibraltar, while others never see any of our colonies except the East and West Indies.

"Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum."

A CONTEMPORARY last week states that "the Military Commission Report was, we have reason to believe, completed before the termination of the Session." Now, we venture to declare most positively, and we will stake our credit upon the fact, that the Report is not signed at this very moment: and further, we think it most probable that the Commissioners will again meet to discuss certain questions. Why and wherefore the Report is still unsigned, after the length of time the Commission have sat, after the time that has elapsed since all the evidence required was taken, and notwithstanding the great anxiety known to exist in the United Service on the subject, are points for explanation hereafter. But the delay to every one seems most extraordinary after, as we stated in the N. and M. G. of 24th August, Lord Howick's declaration on the 21st of that month, "that no doubt it would be soon completed and signed, but not, he feared, in a sufficiently short space of time to allow its being laid on the table of the House during the present Session," which Session terminated in six days after his Lordship's declaration.

The late Secretary-at-War was a member of this Commission, and his speech might lead any one to believe that there was no obstacle to the completion and signing of the Report. The Duke's aptitude for the despatch of business is well known, and he is not likely to have been guilty of "laborious trifling," an offence imputed to the Commissioners by a contemporary; moreover his Grace's zeal to benefit "those heroes who fought for his fame," ought not for an instant to be doubted: there are others also we could name in the Commission, who are the most zealous friends of the United Service; whence, therefore, is the delay in promulgating the resolutions that have passed? Is there, as we said on the 24th August, a "screw loose" somewhere? Has harmony or discord reigned in the councils of the Commission? Have the zealous defenders of the interests of the service met with the uncompromising opposition of the "economists," and will therefore the anxieties of thousands be as nought, whilst the next four months are spent in discussions to overcome objections, and induce ALL to sign?

ALTHOUGH nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since the battle of Waterloo was fought, a certain faction, notorious for its hatred and detestation of our soldiery, continues most perseveringly to assure us that the victory would have inevitably been lost but for the arrival of the Prussians; and we are further informed that no merit was due to the Duke of Wellington's Army, as it outnumbered the French in the proportion of two men to one.

The English people generally are inconceivably ignorant of all matters relative to their Army; ignorant because totally indifferent as to its fame and its glory—its interests and its welfare; and taught, moreover, from their infancy, to look with a jealous eye on those who have driven the wolf from the threshold of their doors, and won imperishable renown in a succession of brilliant victories over the best and most experienced troops of the continent of Europe.

This feeling is not confined to men of any one particular political creed; yet it would be extremely unjust not to draw a wide distinction between those who, without any positive aversion to the Army, are misled by the false and erroneous accounts of the battle of Waterloo, and of other glorious victories, put forth by a party distinguished more for its abomination of those who fought under the great Wellington, than for any good or kindly feeling.

The officer who constructed the Waterloo model has put us in possession of the exact numbers of the French Army under Napoleon, and that under Wellington, on the morning of the memorable 18th of June, and it appears that Napoleon's consisted of (including Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery) 70,428 men, and of 240 guns; Wellington's consisted of (including all arms) 69,894 men, and of 164 guns. The numbers, therefore, were very nearly balanced, the French having only a few hundred men more than the Duke of Wellington, but they vastly outnumbered him in Artillery, having no less than seventy-six more guns, a fact which appears to have been entirely overlooked by most of those who have written on the subject, and one which we would request those who may take the trouble to peruse this article, particularly to bear in mind; and still more would we call their attention to the component parts of the two Armies.

The French Army consisted entirely of hardy veterans, long inured to war, who for many years had fought under the Imperial Eagles, and who evinced a courage and enthusiasm on that bloody day, such as perhaps they had never so eminently displayed on any former occasion. This highly organised and splendidly equipped force was, by its idol Emperor, und[illegible] were sons, his ablest Field-Marsha[illegible]ls.

The following extra[illegible] from the [illegible] of Wellington to Lord [illegible] written in Belgium some weeks before the [illegible]e, proves what his opinion was of the motley troops placed under his command.

"I have got an infamous Army, very weak and ill-equipped, and a very inexperienced Staff. I really believe that, with the exception of my old Spanish Infantry, I have got not only the worst troops but the worst-equipped Army, with the worst Staff that was ever brought together. My opinion is that the best troops we have—probably the best in the world—are the British Infantry, and especially that which has served in Spain."

We would here remark, that the compliment paid by the Duke of Wellington to the British Infantry, and especially to his old Infantry, which he so often led to victory in the Peninsula, is of the very highest and most flattering kind, and one of which the remnant of that Infantry has just reason to be proud. Will the manifold advantages enjoyed by various other branches of our land forces continue to be withheld from this rampart of the British Army, this "great lover of war," as Marshal Ney styled the Infantry of Armies?

Let us now see of what elements the Duke's Army was composed. Of British Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery, he had 25,389 men; of the King's German Legion, veterans second to none in Europe, 6,793 men; making a total of principally old soldiers, 32,182, with 96 guns; of which, however, there were several second battalions which had seen little or no service. The remainder of the Duke's force, amounting to nearly 38,000 men, with 68 guns, consisted of Brunswickers, Dutch-Belgic, Nassau, and Hanoverians.

Amongst them were very many battalions Dutch-Belgic and of Hanoverian militia; and this far greater half of the Duke's Army was imperfectly organised, many thousands having been very recently raised. Yet we are told by the ignorant, and by the revilers of our troops, that the two Armies were equal, that it was a fair stand-up fight, and that little or no credit was due to Wellington's Army on that day. Others have the impudence and effrontery to declare that the French were out-numbered by our Army as two [illegible]ne!

[illegible]e want of steadiness (not to give it a harsher [illegible]displayed by too many of the foreign troops [illegible]ellington's Army is too well known; nor can we feel much surprised at it when it is considered that most of them were little better than raw levies and that their first essay in battle was against brave and as highly disciplined an Army as the continent of Europe ever produced.

On what portion of our troops the brunt of nearly nine hours' fierce and incessant fighting principally devolved is well known to those who were actors in that bloody drama.

With the exception of La Haye Sainte and the knoll near that building, which fell into the hands of the French at about three o'clock, in consequence of the troops who defended it having expended their ammunition, and there being no mode of supplying them with more, not one inch of ground had been gained by them, although the most desperate attacks had been incessantly made from eleven o'clock until after seven in the evening, which brings us to what has been termed the crisis of the battle. Up to that time, Wellington's Army maintained a firm and unbroken front, having again and again defeated with dreadful carn[illegible] attempt to force their line of battle.

[illegible]oleon, aware that the Prussians were a[illegible]g against his extreme right, near Planche[illegible] resolved to make one more desperate ef[illegible] before their arrival, to crush his stubborn ene[illegible] with twelve battalions of Infantry of his Guard which had not yet been engaged. This attack was supported by the general advance of other large bodies of Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery.

It is almost unnecessary to repeat, that the signal defeat and annihilation of Napoleon's last great stake, on which he so firmly relied for victory, and the utter confusion, disorganisation, and dismay of his whole Army occasioned by it, was solely the work of Wellington's Army, and of no other. This is a fact which it is impossible to controvert.

[illegible]er was an Army so dreadfully beaten[illegible] fallen—never were terror and dismay m[illegible]ly depicted, than in the shattered ranks [illegible] veterans; and that, too, BEFORE the Prussi[illegible]n approached sufficiently near the extreme right of their position to make much, if any, impression on it.

To keep in check the Prussians at that point, Napoleon detached some battalions of his Guards; but, to balance that, be it remembered, that the Duke of Wellington detached, before the battle commenced, a fine and effective division of Infantry, with a due portion of Artillery and some Cavalry, towards Halle, under Sir C. Colville.

No enemy advanced in that direction; consequently those troops took no share in the battle, except one of Sir C. Colville's brigades, which the Duke ordered to reinforce the right of his Army a considerable time after the battle had been in progress. This brigade was not, as a body, severely engaged, although parts of it came into action.

It would be the height of folly and injustice to deny that, had not the Prussians come up towards the left of the British about the period that Napoleon's last great struggle for victory had entirely failed, the Duke's Army, victorious as it was, would not perhaps have ventured to attack the French in their own position, but would have been satisfied at having been able successfully to maintain so unequal a contest for nearly nine hours.

If it be asked why would not the Duke have ventured to assail the French on their own position without the aid of the Prussians, seeing that they were so thoroughly beaten, and thrown into such confusion, the answer is obvious. Half of his Army [illegible], as before stated, imperfectly organised [illegible]gners, and therefore quite unaccustomed to [illegible]e and to manœuvre under a heavy fire, it would [illegible]e been a dangerous experiment, and one which might possibly have materially changed the general aspect of affairs.

If the Duke of Wellington had had under his command on that glorious day the same Army which he led triumphantly across the Pyrenees into France in November, 1813, he would scarcely have hesitated to follow the discomfited legions of Napoleon into their own position, without the aid of the Prussians.

Without the arrival of the Prussians, the victory would have been by no means so complete; yet the Duke's Army had, after seven in the evening, thrown the French into an irremediable state of disorganisation, and had (to use Marshal Ney's own language in the French House of Peers) [illegible]used the most dreadful carnage amongst its [illegible]s ever witnessed." Will any unprejudiced [illegible]on deny that Wellington and his followers did [illegible]eat and nearly destroy that splendid French Army [illegible]ore the Prussians arrived [illegible]d that to them [illegible] glory of the day was [illegible]e?

[illegible] conclusion we will [illegible]ark—first, that [illegible] French Army consist[illegible]ly of veterans long inured to war; secon[illegible] they had seventy-six pieces of Artillery more than their opponents; thirdly, more than half the Duke's Army consisted of imperfectly organised foreigners, little better than raw levies; fourthly and lastly, Napoleon's last great stake, which he threw with desperation, was beaten down and trampled under foot before the Prussians had become seriously engaged.

These are, without doubt, unpalatable facts to some of our countrymen; but neither their malice nor their hatred towards the victors can disprove following up the suggestion relative to the [illegible]nment of Inspectors for the super[illegible] [illegible]-vessels at the various out-ports, and by which a general benefit would accrue to all parties, viz. the Royal Navy would benefit by the encouragement thus proffered for officers perfecting themselves in this all-important branch of their profession; Government would benefit in regard to patronage for the meritorious; the underwriters, relative to security from loss; the owners, by reduced insurance; the travelling public in assured confidence; and even such engineers as may be of dissolute habits will benefit, by being compelled to reform, or lose their situations, &c. The following will serve as an outline on which to base a "Formula" of inspection, viz.—

That on visiting the vessel, the Master or Mate furnish the Inspector with an account of the number of men employed on board; the number for cabin attendance; deck duty; and for engine-room; specifying the gineers, stokers, coal-trimmers (if distinct), and apprentices, if any: what the general character and qualifications of the engineers, whether sober, attentive, and subordinate. By this means, an engineer whom the company may choose to keep, contrary to the merits of the man, may be dismissed without implicating the Commander. 2d. The carpenter to give in a report of the condition of the vessel, as to her sea-worthiness, and the completion of stores in his department. 3d. The boatswain to furnish a similar account as to equipment, &c. 4th. Engineers to show certificates of qualification from under the hands of those by whom they were recommended to so responsible a station, and also under whom brought up as engineers: after which to assist the Inspector in the survey of the engines and boilers; state when boilers were put on board, how often, and to what extent, since repaired; when last inspected internally by himself, or sub-engineer; their general condition; what the average substance of boiler metal: to lift the safety-valves, and show that they work easily; point out how they are secured from being tampered with, or accidentally deranged; and whether worked on deck or from below: what the usual weight with which they are loaded. whether steam is occasionally worked expansively, and if so examine the cam or regulator for its admission at a given portion of the stroke; and what the usual pressure of steam admitted, when working expansively. See whether the boiler is fitted with a vacuum (or reverse) valve for the prevention of collapse; whether a safety (or whistling) pipe, to denote the state of steam or water within the boiler; how many inches, (or what the distance) between the water-spaces from flue to flue; how maintain steam, abundant or otherwise; if badly, to what does he ascribe the cause, whether too small fire-surface, inadequate steam-chest, or too contracted a boiler, &c.; state of the feed-pipes and valves; also of bilge-pipes, and what dimensions; whether adequate to keep the engine-room free in case of springing a leak; likewise, if any extra pipes for that purpose, worked by the air-pump, or sway-beam, &c.; see the pumps and plungers; look to the water-gauges; thermometer or steam-gauge, if in good trim, and graduated; barometer, placed on condenser; if any contrivance for regulating the injection water when rolling; blow-off pipes, see that the main (if so arranged) pipe is of sufficient capacity to receive the gush of water from all the rest, when discharged together; whether fitted with Kingston's valve, for lifting by hand, in case the common valve, by expansion from the hot water, proves to be unmanageable; what the facility of getting at the coals in the event of their igniting in the boxes; as also for consumption in all weathers; examine the bearings and paddle-shafts; what the precautions usually observed on board for steaming by night, in regard to lamps; whether coloured or plain, and the number displayed; where, and how far apart, if under the yard (not to be allowed in the paddle-boxes), what the precautions for extinguishing fire.

Such will serve as a general outline of investigation; and a copy of each inspection should be forwarded to a chief department (say under Captain Pringle and Mr. Barkes) in London, at stated periods, to be there registered; books of an established formula to be furnished to the Inspectors; and, in order to prevent all suspicion of improper connivance at any impropriety, no Inspector should be allowed to hold any share in steam-vessels, and they should be required, moreover, to give each Commander a [illegible] certificate of survey, as his justification, in the event of any subsequent accident; and the real state any defect which may require remedy, as his own justification, should subsequent accident occur.

Our attention has been called to a series of attacks in an obscure journal, named the Patriot, on the noble and gallant Secretary at the Horse Guards. Of the very existence of this paper it is probable that most of our readers are wholly ignorant; but on inquiry we learn that it possesses a decent circulation amongst the Quakers, Muggletonians, and other anti-slavery people, whom it aids in the holy work of stirring up the negroes to revolt. According to this most veracious periodical, the exertions of successive Colonial Secretaries to improve the coloured population have been all rendered abortive through the influence of Lord Fitzroy Somerset, with the various Governors employed to carry Ministerial orders into effect. Why his Lordship should so exert himself it would be difficult to say, and they attempt not to explain. The strong and unqualified denial of his ever having so interfered, which we make unhesitatingly, is needless for those who know anything of the subject, but may suffice to pacify these praters about things or persons, whom they never would be permitted to approach, and measures, which neither their intellect nor means of information enable them to understand.

Happily the libel carries its own refutation, since it accuses Lord Fitzroy Somerset of having coerced Sir George Napier into abandonment of his opinions, renunciation of his principles, and resignation of his post. If there be a soldier, whom, above all others, it must be admitted impracticable to coerce, to terrify, or to alarm; if there be a politician more ready than another to sacrifice all things to principle; if there be a knight incapable of an unchivalrous deed, that soldier, that politician, that knight, is Sir George Napier. Whatever may be the errors of his theoretical opinions, his sternest opponents admire his integrity of purpose, and into whatever mistakes he may by chance be hurried, none will question that his heart is brave, loyal, and true. Yet if vipers must evince their venom, let them continue to gnaw files. The united power of the press could hardly prevail to cast calumny on the native nobleness of a Napier, or to excite suspicion of a chief who, like Lord Fitzroy Somerset, has for long, with more than feudal fidelity, served the throne.

We take the following paragraph from a contemporary, with the view of giving the information required:—

"We should like to be informed why Ensign Baring, son, we believe, of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, should have been appointed to the staff of his uncle, Mr. Poulett Thomson, in direct contravention of the rules and regulations of the service, which strictly enjoin that no officer shall be deemed eligible for a staff situation until he has performed regimental duty for a period of two years. (See page 46 (query 10)) of the General Regulations and Orders for the Army.)"

The regulation referred to is as follows:—

"A Subaltern Officer shall not be considered eligible to hold the appointment of Aide-de-Camp, until he has been present with his regiment at least two years."

Ensign Baring entered the Army on the 15th February last, and, deducting the customary leave on appointment, he has probably seen four months regimental duty. Nevertheless, we believe, he is perfectly "eligible" to hold his present appointment, the regulation not being intended to apply to A.D.C.'s to Civil Governors or Lord Lieutenants of Ireland. At all events, there are precedents "as plentiful as blackberries" for like appointments (ex. gr. (Tory) Lord Ranelagh, (Whig) the Hon. William Cowper), and of which no doubt future Governors, whether Radical, Whig, Tory or "Economists," will readily avail themselves.

Our readers will perceive, by the annexed abstract from the Parliamentary Return, moved for by Mr. Hume, that Liverpool is the port selected on this side the Atlantic, as a packet station for the line between Great Britain, British North America, and the United States.

As Liverpool possesses a railroad communication, not only with the metropolis but with the manufacturing districts; is, moreover, the great emporium of commerce, as regards our trade with America, it is probably, under present circumstances, the best port that could be selected, and it has moreover the advantage of obtaining coal by inland navigation at a cheaper rate than it is to be procured saddled with the sea-freight. Even the Welsh coal is delivered cheaper in that port than in others round the Land's-End. We do not, however, consider Liverpool an eligible port for a permanent and general Steam-Packet Station, on account of the danger of the navigation, and difficulty of access; and we perceive that the Lords of the Admiralty have some apprehension on this score; for the contract stipulates, that the officer in charge of the mails shall have the discretion of landing them at any port which he thinks proper, a circumstance that will often, we doubt not, occur.

Until railroad communications are established with more eligible sites, there is nothing for it but to select the best that is available; but, as we have shown the very considerable item which fuel forms in the expenditure, there cannot be a doubt but that must have had great influence on the contract. It appears, by a memorandum at the head of the Parliamentary Report, that the contract for the conveyance of the West India mails had not been completed, but that their Lordships are in treaty with the parties, with the view to forming one. It also appears that, at the date of the Report, 23rd August last, no offers had been made to the Board for such contract from Bristol or elsewhere, so that the newspapers have been misled, by a set of calculations formed on mere assumption of matters which turn out to be erroneous.

Mail Conveyance Contract.—Under this title the House of Commons has printed the agreement entered into by the Government with Mr. Cunard for the conveyance of the North American mails. It stipulates that the mails shall be despatched twice every month from Liverpool to Halifax, and twice every month from Halifax to Liverpool. For executing this service Mr. Cunard is to provide and keep a sufficient number of good and efficient steam-vessels, furnished with engines of not less than 300-horses' power. Mr. Cunard also undertakes to convey the mails and despatches twice every calendar month to Boston from Halifax, and to Halifax from Boston, and when the St. Lawrence is unobstructed by ice, from Pictou, in Nova Scotia, to Quebec, and from Quebec to Pictou, by good and substantial steam-vessels, provided with engines of not less than 150-horses power. The contract is very specific as to those vessels being properly found, and provided with a sufficient crew of able seamen. The Commissioners of the Admiralty are to appoint the two days in each month when the steamers are to leave Liverpool and Halifax respectively, and they are to proceed, without loss of time, direct to the end of their voyage. The despatch of the mail from Halifax for Boston is to take place as soon as possible after the arrival of the mail at Halifax, which is likewise to be the case with the Quebec mail after the mail has reached Pictou. The Commissioners may also alter the days of sailing at their pleasure, but they must give three months' notice. At the same time they may always delay the departure of the vessel for not more than twenty-four hours. If at any time, from stress of weather or other unavoidable circumstances, the vessel should be unable to reach the Mersey, the Naval Officer in charge of the mails or despatches may order the mails to be landed at Bristol, Falmouth, Plymouth, Southampton, Portsmouth, Dover, or Deal. For the Naval Officer, who is to be sent in charge of the mails and despatches, the contractor is to provide a suitable first-rate cabin, and suitable accommodation for a servant, and is to victual the officer like a cabin passenger. If the Admiralty please to entrust the mails to the Captain of any of the vessels, it is authorised to do so, and the Captain will be bound to take charge of them. A [illegible] of not less than four oars is to be provided for landing the [illegible]r and the mails. Any stoppage, delay, or putting back into [illegible] not sanctioned by the Naval Officer, will be subject to a fine [illegible]l., and a delay of twelve hours in not proceeding on a [illegible]ge from either Liverpool or Halifax after the appointed time, [illegible]fects the contractor to a fine of 500*l.*, as well as a further 500*l.* [illegible]very additional twelve hours' delay. A similar delay in the [illegible]er vessels, carrying the mails from Halifax to Boston, will be subject to a fine of 200*l.*

Not less than four of the large steam-boats for the voyage across the Atlantic are to be always kept sea-worthy, and in complete repair, the number of the smaller ones is not stipulated. The contractor binds himself to introduce and adopt all improvements directed by the Admiralty, or suggested by the progress of science. To secure the goodness of the vessels, the Naval Officer in charge of the mails, calling other persons to his assistance, has full power and authority to survey and examine the vessel whenever he shall think fit; and repairs, which he shall direct in writing, must be made as soon as possible, under a penalty of 100*l.* The Lords of the Admiralty, also, reserve to themselves a power to survey the vessels, and to order any improvements to be made in them which they think expedient, and the contractor must carry those improvements into effect to the satisfaction of the Admiralty, or forfeit 500*l.* All these fines and penalties may be stopped out of the money to be paid to the contractor by the Admiralty.

In addition, the contractor is to carry, if required, two chief-cabin passengers, from Liverpool to Halifax, or Halifax to Liverpool, for 30*l.* each, and two fore-cabin passengers at the rate of 15*l.* each; and each seaman, soldier, or marine, at 4*l.* The price to be charged for such passengers from Halifax to Boston, or from Pictou to Quebec, is to be, respectively, 5*l.*, 3*l.*, and 2*l.* Moreover, the contractor is to take on board, and carry, free of charge, all small packages, directed by the Commissioners; and Naval stores, not exceeding five tons weight, on receiving two days' notice that such stores are to be sent.

In return for all these services, and maintaining all these vessels, the Admiralty agrees to pay to Mr. Cunard 60,000*l.* per annum, in quarterly payments. The contract is to commence on June 1st, 1840, or an earlier day if so agreed on, and to continue in force for seven years from the commencement, and thence-forward until twelve calendar months' notice, in writing, shall be given by either party.

No part of the contract is to be underlet, and no Member of Parliament, agreeably to Act of Parliament, is to have a share of it. The whole concludes by Mr. Cunard binding himself in a penalty of 18,000*l.* to fulfil his part of the contract.

Our correspondent Amphibious is wrong in attaching the importance he does to the appointment of a Field Officer of Marines to the Mediterranean squadron. It has always been the practice, when a squadron is augmented to the size of our Mediterranean fleet, for a Major of Marines to be attached to the flag-ship. He directs the movements of the detachments landed to drill and exercise, but on service they are under the command of some Naval officer, selected by the Admiral. This is the practice with Marines borne and victualled in ships. The case of the battalions, to which Amphibious alludes, is entirely different; they were brigaded with the troops, provided as soldiers, quite independent of the fleet, and they proved themselves equal in all respects to troops of the Line. If our correspondent belongs to the corps, as he asserts, he might easily have learned these matters without appealing to us.

Another considerable step has been made in the progress of steam navigation, by the complete success of the Vernon, an East Indiaman of the largest class, fitted with a small steam-engine, to be used in aid of her sails, which are of the ordinary description. Whilst lying in the East India Dock, this vessel was visited by the Lords of the Admiralty and a vast number of Naval Officers, and others connected with the sea, all of whom expressed their admiration at the compactness of the arrangement, and the very superior manner in which every thing necessary to insure the success of the attempt had been provided by the spirited owners, Messrs. Wigram and Green.

The Vernon is 170 feet long, 36 feet beam, and 22 feet deep; she draws but 15 feet 6 inches of water, whilst ships in the trade of the same tonnage draw upwards of 20 feet. She is registered at 995 tons, and in addition to the space required for fuel, and that occupied by the machinery, &c., she has on board a cargo of 1,000 tons.

The engine is made by Messrs. Seaward, who are continually effecting improvements, the success of which, and the excellence of their work in every respect, places them in the first rank, if not at the very head of their profession. It is of 30-horse power slow pressure, and fixed between the main and fore hatchway, the hold being left clear for cargo. It occupies, altogether, a space of but ten feet wide, and the boiler being covered with some non-conducting material, no inconvenience is felt from the heat even in the cabins abreast of it. The engine makes 30 revolutions a minute, and the consumption of coal is 2¼ cwt. per hour. There is an apparatus attached which produces from the condensed steam about 30 gallons of fresh water per day, sufficiently good for the stock, and for cooking.

The paddles are fixed to a shaft, which projects about three feet, and the contrivance for shipping and unshipping them, like every thing else in this noble vessel, is admirable; for it can be effected in less than an hour. The whole machinery and fuel are estimated at one hundred and fifty tons.

The Vernon left the Docks on the 7th instant, and during her progress to Gravesend had repeated opportunities of proving the value of her steam power in the several reaches of the river, sometimes in aid of the sails, sometimes whilst going head to wind, and occasionally when so closely hauled that the stay-sails only would draw, working the lee wheel.

To prove how superior this manner of applying power is to the usual mode of towing, the Thomas Grenville, a vessel of nearly the like tonnage, and bound to Calcutta also, quitted the Docks at the same time in tow of a steam-tug of 100-horse power; but the Vernon soon left her astern, and arrived at Gravesend twenty minutes before her, making the distance (more than 30 miles) in two hours and fifty minutes.

Since the arrival of the Vernon at Spithead, she has been visited by the Port-Admiral and the Naval and Military authorities, besides a vast number of nautical men attracted by the very satisfactory reports of her progress. On Sunday last she proceeded to sea, in company with Her Majesty's ships Blenheim and Edinburgh, and very soon made apparent the advantage she possessed in her auxiliary power. It is supposed she will reach Calcutta in 70 days from the time of leaving the land.

The result of this experiment renders it probable that a similar apparatus will be applied to line-of-battle ships, which, as at present equipped, are liable to be attacked on their weakest points by steam-vessels moving rapidly around them. The advantage of possessing a means of locomotion capable of defeating such purposes is too obvious to dilate upon. We recollect, now or a dozen years ago, Captain Napier, when he had the Galatea, fitted paddles in connexion with the capstan, and worked by manual labour. But the exertion of propelling a large heavy ship by such means is a severe imposition on the crew; and the report that the gallant Captain intended establishing some kind of nautical treadmill on board the Powerful with this view, had a tendency to prevent men entering for her.

An engine of 50-horse power might be placed without inconvenience on the orlop deck of a line-of-battle ship, and need only be used on emergencies, when any service requires expedition, the value of which can be estimated against the expense. We should imagine no persons more competent than Messrs. Seaward to produce the necessary machinery, and their manufactory being in London, gives facilities to the Board of Admiralty to inspect the design, and overlook its execution at Deptford or Woolwich.—More of this in our next.

The Court.

Her Majesty and her august mother continue in the possession of excellent health. The Duke of Wellington arrived at Windsor Castle on Monday.

Lord Byron and Major Keppel have succeeded Lord Fingall and Sir Robert Otway as the Lord and Groom-in-Waiting. The Hon. Mrs. Campbell has succeeded Lady Harriet Clive as Woman of the Bedchamber, and Lady Sandwich has succeeded Lady Lyttleton as the Lady-in-Waiting on Her Majesty.

Col. Sir Robert Gardiner, K.C.B. and K.C.H., of the Royal Artillery, formerly Equerry to King Leopold, has been appointed first and principal Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. Sir Robert was at the capture of Minorca in 1798; he served in the Peninsula, and was at the battles of Roleia, Vimiera, and Corunna; Barrosa, capture of Badajoz, battle of Salamanca, siege of Burgos, affair of Morales, battles of Vittoria, Orthes, Toulouse, and Waterloo. He also served in the expedition to Walcheren.

Arrival of Don Carlos in France.—The Moniteur Parisien of Sunday night publishes the following telegraphic despatches, received at noon on that day:—

"Bayonne, Sept. 14, at seven in the evening, and Ainhoa on the same day.

"The Sous Prefect of Bayonne to the Minister of the Interior.

"Don Carlos has claimed our hospitality and a refuge. He has just entered France with his family."

Don Carlos was forced to this step by a movement of Espartero, which divided into two the Carlist troops occupying the Bastan. By this manœuvre Don Carlos, finding himself separated from the main body of his army, and driven into Urdux, was obliged to retire on the French territory. He first sent to the French commander, General Harispe, to demand under what title he would be received in France; and the General replied, "With the honours due to a prince who was unfortunate." It was then only that Don Carlos and his family thought proper to cross the Pyrenees, through the only passage left open for him by Espartero. He was accompanied by the Princess of Beira, his son the Prince of the Asturias, and the Infant Don Sebastian. About 3000 soldiers of the Carlist army have laid down their arms on the French frontier. This occurred on the 14th. Other battalions laid down their arms on the two following days; and, on the 16th, Don Carlos, who was uniformly treated with the utmost respect, set out for Bourges, the place appointed by the French government for his residence. There were still eight battalions in Navarre, and General Espartero had set out in pursuit of them. Generals Elio and Negri are amongst the officers who have taken refuge in the French territory.

The King and Queen of the Belgians, and suite, sailed yesterday morning at an early hour from Woolwich for Ostend, in the government steamer Widgeon. The royal party left Windsor Castle at five o'clock, and arrived at Woolwich at eight, accompanied by Col. Cavendish, Col. Wemyss, and other personages of the Court.

Despatches were forwarded on Sunday from the Colonial Department for the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. Despatches were received on Sunday at the Colonial Office from Sir John Harvey, Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick, from Sir Colin Campbell, Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia, from Lieut.-Col. Reid, Governor of Bermuda, and from the Governor of Gibraltar. On Tuesday despatches were received from the Governors of the Cape of Good Hope and Newfoundland, and from the English Ministers resident at the Courts of Switzerland and Greece. Despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for the British Ambassadors at St. Petersburg, Constantinople, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Greece, Rome, Berlin, and Vienna. On Thursday despatches from Gen. Cockburn, Governor of the Bahamas, were received. Yesterday despatches were sent off from the Colonial Office for the Rt. Hon. C. Poulett Thomson, Governor of the Canadas, and for Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada.

The late Alleged Robbery and Attempted Murder at the United Service Club-House.—Mr. Fonn has almost completely recovered from the effects of the wounds which he received in this mysterious affair, but no further particulars of the transaction have been allowed to transpire.

Marriage of the Queen.—"Again! different newspapers insist, that Victoria is about to be married to her cousin, and that her uncle, King Leopold, is to make the preparations. Again I tell your readers, that this is not true, and that I know, from undoubted authority, that which ought to prevent the Queen marrying, or indeed any lady similarly afflicted."—Correspondent, Edinburgh Observer. The latter part of this paragraph is an idle report, and which we merely insert to contradict.

The retiring pension of Sir John Newport, late Comptroller of the Exchequer, is to be 1,000*l.* a-year.

Lloyd's.—On Wednesday the honorary medal in silver was voted to Mr. Edward Quayle, commanding the Mona's Isle steamer, for his prompt, humane, and praiseworthy exertions in saving the crew of the Nancy, from Liverpool to Dundalk, wrecked in Douglas Bay in July last.

The Marquis of Londonderry left town on Saturday for Falmouth, where he is to embark in the Braganza steamer for Lisbon. After a short visit there he will proceed up the Mediterranean and make a long stay.

The Earl of Lauderdale died on the 13th inst. at Lauder Castle, Thirlestane, N.B., after a short illness. His Lordship had nine children, five of whom are living, viz., Viscount Maitland (now Earl of Lauderdale); the Hon. Sir Anthony Maitland, Naval Aide-de-Camp to the late King William IV.; Lady Mary Stanley; the Hon. Col. Maitland, and Lady Eleanor Balfour. The late Earl was uncle of the Marquis of Tweeddale, and brother-in-law of General Sir Wm. Houston, G.C.B.

The papers of the early part of the week were occupied with a correspondence on the sad subject of the late Lady Flora Hastings. First a letter from the Marquis of Hastings, stating that if he brings his case before the Lords, it will be stifled as an attack on the Crown, and that there are technical difficulties that oppose his bringing the affair into a court of law. He therefore resolves on a publication, by which the facts are to be recorded hereafter. He gives a statement in the handwriting of the late Flora in the form of a case submitted to Sir W. Follett, whose opinion was that there was no ground for an action at law: then follow letters between the Marquis of Hastings and Lord Melbourne, and between the Marquis of Hastings and the Marquis of Tavistock, the important part of which is a statement made by Lady Tavistock, declaring that she, as a matter of duty, informed the Prime Minister of an opinion prevalent concerning Lady Flora. Then follows a series of letters between the Marquis and Lord Portman, which concludes with Lady Portman's statement that a belief existed at Court that Lady Flora was privately married, that Sir James Clark believed so, and that it became the duty of the Lady-in-Waiting to request the Duchess of Kent that Lady Flora should not appear in the presence of the Queen until the fact of such marriage was proved or contradicted. Lady Portman performed this duty. The Marquis of Hastings refused to see either the Marchioness of Tavistock or Lady Portman, and would deal only with their Lords, and by letter. Then follow the letters (previously published) of the Marquis and Dowager Marchioness of Hastings to Lord Melbourne and the Queen. Then come extracts from the letters of Lady Flora to her family, and passages from her diary. The whole correspondence appears to serve no purpose whatever but that of keeping up feelings which it would be only wise and proper to suffer now to sleep.

The expedition under Mr. Ainsworth and Mr. Russam sent out last year at the joint expense of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and the Geographical Society, has, owing to the disturbed state of the East, been obliged for the present to return to Constantinople.

Hierosolymites.—"There is much talk of a kind of crusade, which, in conformity with the manners of the age, will this time be performed only with diplomatic arms. It is contemplated to form at Jerusalem the seat of a Christian Government, which would be the Rome of the East. Money has been found for this project, or at least for rendering it popular, and petitions from the new Hierosolymites are already laid at the foot of nearly all the thrones of Europe. The present moment has appeared favourable, on account of the uncertainty which appears to exist on the subject of the definitive possession of Syria, which is at the same time disputed by Turkey and Egypt, and is secretly desired by the other Powers. Something of the kind has already been attempted in Prussia; but the King, although the project appears to be a religious one, has not thought the moment opportune for occupying himself in so Christianlike a manner with Judea."—Capitole.

Doncaster Races have been very numerously and fashionably attended

MONDAY.—The Fitzwilliam Stakes of 10 sovs. each, with 30 added by the Corporation—won by Mr. Orde's b. m. Bee's-wing. A Handicap Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each—won by the Duke of Cleveland's b. c. Kremlin. The Champagne Stakes of 50 sovs. each—won by Lord Westminster's br. c. Launcelot. Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas—Lord Westminster's Cardinal Puff walked over.

TUESDAY.—The two-year-old Produce Stakes of 100 sovs. each—Lord Westminster's Launcelot walked over. The Great St. Leger Stakes of 50 sovs. each, h. ft. for three-year-old colts, 8st. 7lb., and fillies, 8st. 2lb.; the second to receive 100l. out of the stakes. St. Leger Course. One hundred and seven subscribers. Mr. Yarburgh's b. c. Charles the Twelfth, by Voltaire (Scott) 0 1
Mr. Thornhill's ch. c. Euclid, by Emilius (Conelly) . . . 0 2

The following also started, but were not placed:—Mr. W. Ridsdale's Bloomsbury, Mr. Allen's Fitzambo, Mr. G. Clarke's Dragsman, Col. Cradock's The Provost, Lord Eglinton's Malvolio, Col. Crauford's Dolphin, Mr. Dixon's Hyllus, Mr. Wormauld's Bolus, Lord Westminster's The Lord Mayor, Lord Lichfield's The Corsair, Mr. Ramsay's Easingwold, and Lord Kelburne's b. c. by Jerry.

After several fluctuations the odds closed, at starting, at 6 to 4 on Charles XII.; 6 to 1 agst. Bloomsbury; 10 to 1 agst. Malvolio; 13 to 1 agst. Euclid; 30 to 1 agst. The Provost; 35 to 1 agst. Easingwold; 40 to 1 agst. The Lord Mayor; and 40 to 1 agst. the Corsair. At one moment 2 to 1 was betted on Charles, and Malvolio, at 8 to 1, had the call of Bloomsbury. At four o'clock the horses appeared at the starting-post, and, with one slight failure, got off in excellent style. After the first 200 yards, Charles took the lead at a rattling pace, followed by Bloomsbury, Bolus, Euclid (about fourth), The Dolphin, and Malvolio; the ruck behind them consisting of Hyllus, The Corsair, The Provost, Fitzambo, and The Lord Mayor, the Purity colt and Dragsman bringing up the rear. At the foot of the hill, Dragsman and Easingwold were some lengths astern, and the Purity colt pulled up and returned. In the bottom, on the other side of it, Bloomsbury retired from the front rank. Euclid now took the second place, The Dolphin lying third, and Malvolio and the Provost next him, nearly abreast. They ran in this order over the deep ground near the Red House (the only part of the Course that was heavy), and to the turn into the straight run in. Here The Dolphin dropped off, and Malvolio took her place. About a distance and a half from home Malvolio also gave up, leaving The Provost third in the race, and so he continued to the end. Euclid now began to draw upon the "great horse," but, as it is alleged, was driven so close to the rails, that he never fairly collared him till they reached the distance-post. The race was now entirely between these two—the "crack" Yorkshire nag versus the Newmarket "pet," and a better or more intensely interesting struggle was never seen on the Doncaster Course. Euclid appeared to have the best of it at the commencement, but the "great" horse's strides told towards the end, and the judge, unable to award the victory to either, gave the first dead heat ever run for the St. Leger. The Provost was beaten three or four lengths, and defeated Malvolio by nearly two lengths. The Dolphin was fifth, Fitzambo sixth, and Bloomsbury seventh—all beaten off. The betting on the next heat, which was run after the Four-year-old Stakes, began at 6 to 4 on Charles, and finished at 6 to 5 on Euclid. The "little" horse took the lead at a bad pace for the first three-quarters of a mile; he then made it good, still keeping his lead, the "great" horse waiting on him to the distance, where he challenged. A dashing race ensued, the North triumphing over the South by a head only.—The Four-year-old Stakes of 20 sovs. each, h. ft., with 50 added by the Corporation—won by Mr. Ramsay's br. c. Lancrcost.

WEDNESDAY.—The Foal Stakes of 100 sovs. each—Lord Westminster's Sleight-of-hand walked over. The Doncaster Stakes of 10 sovs. each, with 50 added by the Corporation—won by the Duke of Cleveland's Kremlin. The Selling Stakes of 10 sovs. each, with 30 added—won by Mr. Etty's The Quack. The Corporation Plate of 50l.—won by Lord Eglinton's Opera.

THURSDAY.—Three-year old Stakes of 200 sovs. each—won by Mr. Bowes's Epidaurus. The Gascoigne Stakes of 100 sovs. each—won by Lord Westminster's The Lord Mayor. The Two-year-old Stakes—won by the Duke of Cleveland's brother to Euclid. The Cup, value 400 guineas, given by the Stewards, with 50 added; three yrs. 7st., four yrs. 8st. 3lbs., five yrs 8st. 10lb., six yrs. and aged, 9st.—the winner of the St. Leger this year 3lbs. extra. About two miles and five furlongs.

Major Yarburgh's Charles the Twelfth, 3 yrs. . .	1
Mr. Ramsay's Lancrcost, 4 yrs.	2
Mr. Orde's Bee's wing, 6 yrs.	3
Mr. Denham's Compensation, 4 yrs.	4

Won by a head.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

SPAIN.—The commencement of negotiations between Maroto and Espartero arose from the latter having written to the Christ Commander-in-Chief, immediately after the bloody executions ordered by him at Estella, to say that if at any time he should find himself compromised by the consequences of this event, and should wish for a sure place of refuge, he would find it at his own head-quarters. To this overture Maroto replied by a letter of thanks, in which he expressed his regret that two persons like Espartero and himself should find themselves on opposite sides. The Christino General, fancying from this that Maroto would not be indisposed to an arrangement, sent to the latter a scheme of ciphers for carrying on a secret correspondence. This was adopted by Maroto, and communications between the two Generals were constantly kept up until they concluded in the treaty.

The details of Don Carlos's flight are curious. As usual, he did not make up his mind till the last moment, not believing Espartero was at hand till the firing announced his advance. At that sound Don Carlos tore his papers, and abandoned his dinner, already smoking on the table, whilst the Princess of Beira seized the holy standard of the Virgin, and both, hastily mounting on horseback, crossed the frontier, the French disarming their fugitive suite.

King Louis Philippe had conferred the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour on Espartero.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor set out for Moscow, on his way to Borodino, on the 27th ult. The number of regular and irregular troops which are to assemble at the camp may be estimated at 180,000, with 548 pieces of artillery. In this number are comprised 48,000 Cavalry. The Emperor will command the Army in person. The Empress, the Grand Duchesses, and their ladies, will appear before the troops on horseback, and will wear the colours of different regiments.

TURKEY.—Battle of Nezib.—The Augsburg Gazette, of the 11th, contains a full account of this battle, by the Prussian officers who were present at it, with a map of the field.

The Turkish line, on Ibrahim's first approach, was in front of Nezib, facing westward, towards Mizar. Ibrahim, finding it disadvantageous to attack here, took a side march eastward to Kersun-Kopri, and to the high-road which leads from Aleppo to Bir. The Prussian officers in vain entreated Hafiz to attack the Egyptians during this side march. This not being done, and the Egyptian movement menacing the Turks in the rear, and to cut them off from Bir, the Prussians recommended Hafiz to retire upon Bir. The Turks objected to retreat, and Hafiz said that Ibrahim, who would not attack at Nezib, would still less attack at Bir, and that all opportunity of fighting would be lost. The Prussians insisted that Ibrahim must and would fight. At length Hafiz seemed to incline to retreat upon Bir, three leagues distant, and gave the requisite orders. Meantime one of the Prussian officers (Mahlbach, we suppose) rode on to reconnoitre Ibrahim's position at Kersun-Kopri. On his return he was informed by his friend Moltke that Hafiz had changed his mind, and had determined to fight where he was. The Prussian replied by demanding his passport for Constantinople. But the Turk was elate by a promise of victory given by Mollah, and on the evening of the 22nd the Turkish army took up a new position, facing east, and with its rear to its old position. On the 23rd Ibrahim crossed the bridge near Kersun-Kopri, and the Prussians cannonaded here with much effect. On the 24th Ibrahim marched under cover of some gentle heights in front of the Turkish line upon its left; and the fighting, chiefly consisting of cannon-shot, commenced. In half an hour the Turkish left began to give way, and the men to abandon their cannons. Little reliance was placed on the cavalry—once the best of a Turkish army, now the worst. But the artillery and infantry ought to have stood the fire longer than half an hour. Hafiz Pacha, sabre in hand, tried to stop the flight of the irregulars, who thus, when between two foes, fled to escape both. The left wing was routed. Hafiz tried to make fight with the cavalry brigade; but this brigade obeyed the word of command of the cannon-balls—not that of the Pacha—and all fled.

EGYPT.—Mehemed Ali is preparing himself to resist any attempt to force him to any terms not suitable to his desires. He has a hostage in the Turkish fleet, which he seems determined not to give up, and he also has a formidable and victorious army on the confines of the Turkish territory, which at any time may march upon Constantinople, not only without resistance, but with almost a certainty of being joined by the remainder of the Turkish troops, and, perhaps, the mass of the Turkish people. To prevent the continuance of hostilities between the Porte and Mehemet Ali is manifestly the policy of England and France; at the same time that, in order to preserve the integrity of the Ottoman empire, both are desirous of controlling the power of the latter. If Mehemet Ali persists in his refusal to deliver up the Turkish fleet until his demands be complied with, what are the combined powers of England and France to do? They may destroy the Egyptian fleet in Alexandria, if they choose; but would that be a politic proceeding? It is the obvious interest of both countries, but of England particularly, to have the most friendly and intimate relations with Egypt.

GERMANY.—The Chapter Order of Old Nobility of the Emperors is being restored. The Grand Master will probably be a Prince Sovereign of Germany. The seat of the Order is established at Brussels. The Marquis de Villaneuve-Trans has just been created Grand Cross and Grand Chancellor of the Order.

FALKLAND ISLANDS.—The members of the Falkland Islands' Association held a meeting at their offices in Moorgate-street on the 13th inst.: it was numerously and most respectably attended, and resolutions were unanimously passed in favour of active operations for the immediate colonization of these islands.

NEW BRUNSWICK.—On the night of 17th Aug., a fire occurred at St. John's, N.B., which destroyed one hundred houses; the total loss being estimated at from 500,000 to 800,000 dollars. It commenced in the warehouse of Messrs. Hugh Irvine and Brothers, in Nelson-st., and burned all the houses on both sides of Nelson-st., from Market-square to Union-st.; all the buildings on the south side of Union-st., from A. and J. Lawton's new dwelling-houses to the water; and all the buildings and timber on Lawson's, Waterberry's, Donaldson's, Black's, Crookshan's, Walker's, and the North Market wharfs. The number of buildings destroyed in the great fire which occurred three years ago in St. John's, was one hundred and fifteen.

Comparison of Speed.—The ordinary rate is, per second—Of a man walking 4 feet; of a good horse in harness, 12; of a rein-deer in a sledge on the ice, 26; of an English racehorse, 43; of a hare, 88; of a good sailing ship, 14; of the wind, 82; of sound, 1,093; of a 24-pounder cannon-ball, 1,300; of the air which, so divided, returns into space, 1,800.

Literary Notices.

The Ballantyne Humbug Handled. John Murray.
Reply to Mr. Lockhart's pamphlet entitled, The Ballantyne Humbug Handled. Longman and Co.

After an attentive perusal of these two pamphlets, we see little to shake the opinions we expressed last year upon the former statement of the Trustees of Mr. Ballantyne. The circumstance, indeed, which then seemed most discreditable to Scott, viz., that he suffered James Ballantyne to remain in ignorance of the settlement of Abbotsford upon his son, is ridiculed by Lockhart as impossible, but distinctly reasserted by his adversaries. Nevertheless, from the general publicity which evidently attended the affair, we acquit Sir Walter of any intentional unfirmness towards his friend and partner, and attribute the unfortunate ignorance of the latter to accident. It has, we think, been well observed by a contemporary, that "had the Company's books been balanced and regularly kept, the whole dispute might have been adjusted by calling in the aid of an Accountant;" whence it seems certain that much negligence, extravagance, and rashness, were evinced both by Scott and his partners. That the conduct of each might have by turns a baneful effect upon the fortunes of the other, appears by no means unlikely, but we are still of opinion that the Ballantyne party have the best, if not the whole, [illegible] of the dispute, which, for the sake of the fame of Sir Walter Scott, we regret has ever arisen.

But would it have arisen but for the undue exercise of the sarcastic power of his biographer? We think not. There is still more than enough (of uncalled-for satire and invective in Mr. Lockhart's pamphlet, although it is asserted that much more has been omitted, and in particular the sneers (page 16) at John Ballantyne, on the assumption (denied by the other party) of his being a tailor, are unworthy of a man who had been not seldom the guest of the person upon whom, when dead, he studies to throw ridicule, and would seem to prove that Mr. Lockhart, with all his undoubted talents, his aristocratic pretensions, and his apparent refinement, is inwardly, and at heart, but too much swayed by vulgarity of thought and feeling.

For Sir Walter Scott himself, although his reputation will not shine the brighter from this controversy, we still believe him, among many errors, to have possessed an honourable and benevolent mind. That his friendship for the Ballantynes was sincere and lasting, we think there is ample proof; and as to the sobriquets of "picaroon," &c., bestowed by him occasionally on the younger of the brothers, and which the pamphleteers take so much to heart, how many constantly bestow worse epithets, in sport, upon their most valued friends!

Cæsar's Commentaries.—The Hamiltonian System. John Souter.

WE are glad to meet with a new edition of one of the best publications to place in the hands of youth. The Hamiltonian system hardly requires comment, for it has worked beneficially in the best of our scholastic establishments. First learn to translate analytically, never deviating from the precise meaning of the word, nor the grammatical construction of the phrase, and having got the power, then read a great deal. This is the theory, and practice has proved its perfection. The present edition of the Commentaries embraces the Sixth Book of the Gallic War, and every student of Latin will find it a most valuable assistant.

The Mirror of Literature, Amusement, and Instruction. Vol. 33. J. Limbird.

OF the numerous cheap publications, this is not only the oldest but by far the best; it embodies a fund of general information and anecdote, carefully collected from various sources, with original papers relating to matters and things in all parts of the world, to science, to the arts, and manufactures, natural history, &c. The work is very neatly got up, and has an excellent index. We will take from it a paper, "The Origin of Napoleon's Generals," that may serve to encourage the aspirant to Military fame.

"The age of Napoleon was an age of wonders; only witness the following account of the origin of his most celebrated Generals. We see Augereau, the hot, the sanguine Augereau, the son of a poor fruiterer, struggling for his livelihood; we see him urging on his course, and at the age of 35, still a private soldier, not despairing of success; we see him at last, in four years, rise from the lowest rank to the highest grade of Military command, and created a Duke. Then comes Bernadotte, who was destined to be one of the greatest, and by far the most fortunate of Napoleon's Lieutenants; he was born at Pau, the capital of Berne, Jan. 26, 1764. In his sixteenth year he enlisted as a private soldier into the Royal Marines. In 1798 he was a Colonel. In 1805 he was created Prince of Ponto Corvo, and lastly, was elected King of Sweden. Then follows Berthier, the son of a porter of the Hotel de la Guerre, who for his signal services was created Marshal of the Empire, Grand Huntsman, and Prince, first of the Neufchatel, then of Wagram. The next in succession is Bessieres, born at Preissac, Aug. 6, 1768. He was a private soldier in 1792. In the north of Spain, through his exemplary conduct, he rose to the station of Captain in 1795; was created Marshal in 1804, and afterwards Duke of Istria. Kellermann, the son of a citizen of Strasburg, next follows; he rose from the rank of a private soldier to that of Duke of Valmy. The impetuous and valiant Lannes now excites our admiration and wonder; born at Lectoure, April 11, 1769, of indigent parents. He at an early age enlisted into the Army. He was sent Ambassador into Portegal, and on his return became Marshal of France, and ere long Duke of Montebello. Macdonald, whom we shall next cite, was born in the little town of Sancerre, Nov. 17, 1765. At an early age he entered into the Army as Lieutenant; he was created Marshal, and after Duke of Tarentum. Lefebvre was born of humble parents, on Oct. 25, 1755. We see him in September, 1793, raised to the rank of Captain; in December, the same year, to the rank of General, and lastly to the Dukedom of Dantzic. Massena, one of the ablest of Napoleon's Generals, was born at Nice, May 6, 1758. At an early age, he was, by a relative, introduced to a maritime life, but soon becoming disgusted with the sea, he subsequently entered the Army as a private soldier. His promotion at first was not at all rapid; and having lost all hopes, retired to his own nation, and married. The stirring affairs of the revolution called his attention once more to a soldier's life; his promotion was now astonishingly rapid, for in 1798 he became General, soon after, Duke of Rivoli; and to close his career, was created Prince of Essling. Moncey was born at Besançon, July 31, 1754. The education he received was good, as his father was a lawyer. He enlisted as a private soldier, of his own accord; his parents, however, obtained his discharge. But at last, in 1790, when at the age of 40, he became a Sub-Lieutenant of Dragoons, and in 1804 was created Duke of Conéglisno. Mortier was born at Cambrai, 1768. In the year 1791 he was Captain, and lastly, received the title of Duke of Sterno. The great Murat next engages our attention, he was born March 25, 1767, of humble parents, his father being only an inn-keeper, of Bastide, near Cahors. When he was in his 20th year, he enlisted into a regiment of Chasseurs, and shortly after, for his gallantry and bravery, was made General of Division; in 1805 created Grand Duke of Berg and Cleves; and in 1808 had the crown of Naples conferred on him. The end of this extraordinary man, whose life must have appeared to him a dream, was, as is well known, tragical, he was shot, and himself gave the word to the soldiers to fire, saying, 'Save my face—aim at my heart—fire!' The errors of Murat may be ascribed to a bad education; he wanted moral energy, reflection, and patience.

"Ney, the 'bravest of the brave,' was born at Sarre Louis, Jan. 10, 1769. His father was a poor tradesman. In 1787 he filled the inferior station of private soldier, and in 1793 was Lieutenant. The year following he was brought under the notice of General Kleber, and in 1796 received the title of General himself. He was also created Prince of Moskwa. A miserable and untimely end, however, awaited this prodigy of Military genius; like Murat, he was shot, and when at the place of execution, in a firm voice, gave the word, saying, 'Soldiers, fire!' His father died in 1826, aged nearly 100 years. His love for his son was so great, that at his death, in 1815, his family, fearing the effect which the sad event might produce on him, kept it a secret amongst themselves. By the mourning of his daughter, however, he understood that some tragical event had taken place, but he never made any inquiries, and seldom mentioned the name of his son. He lived till 1826, and expired without ever being acquainted with his son's death. Oudinot now claims our notice; he was born April 2, 1767, and distinguished himself so much as a private soldier, that he was created Count of the Empire in 1804, and for his brave valour at Wagram, Duke of Reggio. Soult. This daring and enterprising soldier was born March 29, 1769, at St. Antan's. His origin was mean. In his 16th year he entered the Army as a private soldier, and rose gradually, from rank to rank, till the year 1791, when he was made General; he was afterwards honoured with the title of Duke of Dalmatia. Suchet, who was the son of a silk manufacturer of Lyons, was born March 2, 1772. In 1792 he enlisted as a private soldier; his promotion was rapid, though not perhaps so much so as some others. In 1798 he gained the rank of General; and in 1812 the title of Duke of Albufera. These are the principal and most celebrated of Napoleon's Lieutenants, nearly all of whom rose from the rank of private soldiers to the possession of the sword of a General, the staff of a Marshal, and even the sceptre of a King."

Every Lady her own Flower Gardener. By Louisa Johnson. W. S. Orr.

EXACTLY what its title portends, and the little book all lady floriculturists should possess. Although addressed to the industrious and economic only, it may serve to encourage the affluent to innocent amusements, and at the same time promote their health.

A General Outline of the Animal Kingdom. John Van Voorst. Part VII. contains the true Insecta, the Arachnida, and the Crustacea. Professor Jones has treated these interesting subjects with his usual ability, and the illustrative figures are remarkably well-executed. To the student of comparative anatomy this work must be of incalculable value.

The Life and Adventures of Peter Wilkins. Joseph Thomas. Another very acceptable addition to the "Child's Pictorial Library." "Peter Wilkins," though published more than a century, has retained its popularity; and in the present edition such incidents have been judiciously expunged as are unsuited to the perusal of children, for whom alone the book was not originally written. The style of the narrative and the marvellous adventures are calculated to interest the juvenile mind.

The militia officers are not the proudest men in the world. The following anecdote goes far to prove that their humility is occasionally imitated as well in its practical as in its perceptive sense:—"Cuff," said one of these dignitaries to a negro at his side, as he prepared to swallow his fifth invoice of "hardware,"—"Cuff, you're a good honest fellow, and I like to compliment a man what's lived a honest life, if he is black; you shall take a glass o' sumthing to drink with me, eh?" "Well, Captan," replied Cuff, wiping his mouth with the nether end of his shining coat sleeve, "I'se berry dry, so I won't be ugly 'bout it. Some niggers is too proud to drink with a milishy ossifer—but I tink a milishy ossifer, when he's sober, is jis as good as nigger—'specially if de nigger's dry." Exeunt the liquors.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE DUKE OF SUSSEX'S MARRIAGE.

Frimley, Bagshot, Sept. 10, 1839.

SIR,—From your Journal of the 7th inst., which I have just read, I copy the following extract—"Sir Augustus D'Este, the son of the Duke of Sussex by Lady Augusta Murray," &c. &c. Now, as the above would seem to imply that that lady was not the wife of the Duke, and being convinced, from a general perusal of your Journal, that you possess too independent a mind unnecessarily to wound the feelings of any part of the family of that now deceased lady, I trust you will give insertion to this, in which I beg to acquaint you, that it is a matter of history that the lady in question was twice married to His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex—first, at Rome, in the year 1793, and, secondly, in the parish church of St. George in Hanover-square, agreeably to the forms of the Established Church, by the publishment of banns.

It is true that, by the authorities that then were in this Christian land, a Christian Judge was found to set aside the validity of such second marriage, though no part of the divine law which would have justified such judgment was assigned as a cause for such divorcement by either of the parties; on the contrary, they both protested against it.

But be this as it may, it often happens to us short-minded mortals, that when attempting to commit an act of injustice, the result turns out to be the contrary, as it did in the present case. For, as the late Lord Chancellor Thurlow observed—"the fools (referring to the members composing the Privy Council appointed to investigate the subject of such last marriage) have contrived to establish and prove the solemnization of the former one at Rome, of which they cannot take any cognisance." And the result was, that the parties continued to reside together, his Royal Highness always treating and calling her by the endearing appellation of ma femme, and presenting her as such to strangers, while giving to her the appellation of Princess in speaking of her, as well as that of Prince to their son, to whom your extract refers,—or assure yourself, Sir, the person who now addresses you would never have been a second time a visitor at His Royal Highness's, where he was not unfrequently a guest when he was in town, though well assured at the time that no means, however unjustifiable, but were resorted to by a great majority of the members of the Royal Family, to induce His Royal Highness to forsake his wife and children (save and except his late Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, who ever treated her with the greatest kindness and consideration); but subsequently His Royal Highness and his wife, being fully convinced that there was no chance of his getting his establishment so long as he resided with her, such being the determination of the King, as signified to him from His Majesty, His Royal Highness made up his mind to proceed to Lisbon, where, not long after his arrival, he was created Duke of Sussex, with an allowance of 12,000*l.* per annum; and who subsequently executed a deed, in which was fully stated the two marriages before-mentioned, and then goes on to settle 4,000*l.* per annum, out of the 12,000*l.* so granted to himself, as a proper separate provision for his wife, the Duchess of Sussex, and their children. But from causes which it is not necessary to advert to, no part of the 4,000*l.* being forthcoming for several years, a petition was presented to the Lord Chancellor, praying that an injunction might be issued, that the 12,000*l.* payable to the Duke of Sussex should be stopped in the Exchequer; which prayer (notwithstanding the most powerful opposition to it) was acceded to, and there the money was supposed to be locked up, while the Duchess was left to struggle and contend, as she best might, with the most distressing pecuniary difficulties, and all the wanton persecutions which power could inflict upon her—by getting her arrested and exposed to every species of contumely, doubtless with the hope that she would have sunk under the evil with which she was assailed.

About this period it was that the Duke of Kent, having been made acquainted with the difficulties under which she was labouring, had it intimated to her, through one of her friends, that there was no probability, from the determination of the King, that she would ever get any of the money which was locked up in the Exchequer, until she ceased to designate herself as Duchess of Sussex, ceased to use the royal liveries, and accepted of another title—a measure which his Royal Highness strongly urged her adoption of, as circumstances might arrive at some future day which would justify her resumption of what might, in some measure, be considered as forced upon her; and notwithstanding my exertions to the contrary, she acceded to the recommendation of the Duke, and subsequently assumed the title of the Baroness D'Amelande—one derived from the House of Orange—her husband, the Duke of Sussex's progenitor, having intermarried with the elder daughter of the illustrious Prince William of Nassau, while he, the Duchess's progenitor, had intermarried with a younger daughter.

From the life of this great Prince and Protestant leader, we learn that Francis Guion, whom he considered to be one of his own creed, had been two years in the Prince's service before he could find a favourable opportunity for assassinating him, which he did when the Prince was getting up from the dinner-table, in the presence of the Princess, when he, Guion, avowed himself a Catholic, and gloried in the deed which he had perpetrated, as he said he had obtained absolution from the Priest before he would undertake the proposed murder.

Is the recent prognostication only a precursor? But to return from a digression which a strange coincidence has betrayed me into, and fearful that I have already too largely wished to quarter myself on your columns, I shall only add, that I am seriously apprehensive that I have in the above narrated what others would rather I had not have done, and may thereby wound the feelings of those to whom I am so sincerely attached, but trust that the paramount duty and regard which is due from me to the memory and character of my amiable and affectionately-attached sister, will plead the excuse of him who is, Sir, &c.,

A. MURRAY.

UNITED SERVICE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

SIR,—I belong to, I believe, a very numerous class of officers who, from want of time, inclination, or financial abilities, are unable to enter into a minute examination of the plan proposed for a "United Servite Benevolent Institution," and without either feeling competent to decide on the prospective advantages and security it offers in preference to other associations of a similar nature, or pretending to question the ultimate benefits to be derived by the families of subscribers on the proposed plan, must be guided in giving or withholding our support by very simple calculations.

Being a sincere well-wisher to the success of such an institution, I regret extremely that a very limited knowledge of figures makes me apprehensive that some objections present themselves in the plan proposed, which will probably deter many from lending their aid in support of the institution; but as these objections have been already noticed in your columns, and as my purpose is not to criticise, but to offer a suggestion, I shall at once proceed to do so, fully confident, from your well-known zeal wherever the interests of the service are concerned, that if of any value it will meet with due consideration at your hands.

On looking at the advertisements of all or most of these Life Annuity, Reversionary Interest, Equitable Loan, Pelican, Sun, Phœnix, and Fire Offices, &c., &c., I see one with capital 500,000*l.*!! another capital a million!! and so on. Now, if the Army and Navy Institution could prefix something of the same sort to their prospectus before going to work, it would be greatly to their advantage. It may be said this is only a mare's nest; however, query—would it not be better to lay aside tables and so forth for a short time, and set on foot, in the first place, a subscription towards the formation of a Fund for the benefit of Widows and Orphans of Officers of the Army and Navy? The Cabinet Council may perhaps not think fit to allow our most gracious Queen to become the Patroness of such an institution, but surely they cannot prevent Her Majesty from subscribing. The generosity and munificence of the Queen Dowager on like occasions would most probably be extended to an institution founded on such honourable and charitable principles. The nobles of the land and the aristocracy of wealth, we may reasonably suppose, would lend their patronage and support to a society formed with a design to rescue from want and misery in this world, and perhaps worse hereafter, the families of the defenders of the country, the protectors of our colonies. From the officers of the Army and Navy, a day's pay each at least might be expected, but from many no doubt considerably more.

Not being much acquainted with business phrases, I must crave indulgence if I misapply any of the technical terms used on these occasions, but I should say—let bankers be requested to receive donations, and trustees (if possible none under the rank of Lieut.-Colonel) be appointed in whose names these sums shall be invested; let the names of the donors be published from time to time; let it be agreed that when a certain sum is raised, business is to commence, and that each donor of a certain sum is to have a voice in the settlement of rules, tables, premiums, or whatever else they may be termed. Without some such solid basis on which to raise the superstructure, the difficulties that present themselves to the formation of an institution in every way so desirable appear almost insuperable. As you have pointed out in the article on the subject in your last number, that the amount of annual subscription is far beyond the means of those officers in general, for whose benefit the fund is more particularly intended, it would be a supererogation to add more on that point than that although half-pay officers who have no parades to attend may, by hiding themselves, as you say, in a hut, or a garret, contrive to pay up their subscription, it amounts almost to an impossibility that married officers, destitute of private fortune, and on full-pay, should become contributors on the proposed scale, their mode of life, as it is, being, in many instances a struggle for existence. INFLUENCE OF THE CURRENT.

British V. Consulate, Fayal and Pico, Aug., 29, 1839.

Sir,—I herewith transmit you a copy of a paper presented this day at my Consular Office. It was picked up by a Pico fishing-boat off this island, and is in a state of perfect preservation.

I request you may be so good to give the enclosed copy early insertion in the Naval and Military Gazette, in order to shew the influence of the current. The original paper I have registered in the archives of this Consulate, and can be referred to at any future period. I am, Sir, &c.

John T. Mischin, V. Consul.

"H.M.S. Hercules, 74 guns, from Barbadoes, bound to Halifax, with the 36th regiment on board, all well; in lat. 40 N., lon. 61 W. in the Gulf Stream, 29th of Nov., 1838.

"Whoever picks this up is requested to make it known to the Naval and Military Gazette, in order to shew the influence of the current."

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 6.

Sir,—In Barrow's Life of Lord Howe, "it was a kind of joke in Lord St. Vincent's fleet off Cadiz, that though blockading was a stupid kind of work, it was enlivened by a pleasing variety of hanging and praying, fighting and flogging." Similarly Mr. Cooper relieves his ridiculous misstatements of British armament and forces, to vainly assist his countrymen's farcical claims to glory and victory, by an agreeable diversity of anecdote and humour, story and burlesque, a selection from which I will overhaul in this letter, to enliven my pen for a dash at the frigate fights.

Nailing the flag to the mast.—"When the Enterprise hailed to know if the Boxer had struck, one of the officers of the latter sprang on a gun, shook both fists at the Americans, and cried out 'No, no, no!' with the addition of some pretty strong terms of opprobrium. So powerful was this gentleman's excitement, that his superior had to order him down, lest he might be the means of drawing a fire on the vessel. It is scarcely necessary to add that the officers and men of the Enterprise laughed at this ludicrous scene, which was rendered so much the more piquant by the process of lowering colours that had been nailed aloft. These expedients may produce good, with particular crews and in peculiar circumstances, but, as rules, challenges should not be given, nor colours nailed to the mast." Cooper and Tristram are of the same opinion as to the latter points, but who was the officer who "shook his fist" at the Enterprise, and used "terms of opprobrium?" The Captain was killed; four officers were on shore "shooting pigeons;" the only Lieutenant was the superior who ordered the boatar to desist; was he the Quartermaster, the acting Master's Mate? There was not a Midshipman on board her; who then was this boasting pugilist? Certainly not a quarter-deck gentleman. Captain Blythe's display of four ensigns, and nailing his colours aloft, is what was practised by more than one American, and copied by more than one British officer.' What vanity if victorious, what vexation if defeated! The national banner is as safe suspended with gossamer threads over the head of a brave man, as with adamantine chains. The occasional gasconade on both sides during the contest, affords much matter for risible mockery. It is generally believed that a foretopsail had the word "Guerriere" conspicuously painted in black letters thereon. If it were so, the Yankees buried it in David's locker with colours flying. There let the word rest unrecorded; defunct boasting is better without an epitaph!

The Essex hoisted a motto flag, "Free trade and sailors' rights." The Phœbe displayed her's—"God and country: British sailors' best rights; traitors offend both." "In fealty to this motto," says Captain David Porter, "I nailed it at my mizen 'God, our country, and liberty: tyrants offend them.'" At 'em again, ye hunting warriors! David "wrote to the Hon. Secretary of the Navy of the United States, Washington, 'that the Cherub and Phœbe's display of their motto-flags, and the number of jacks at all their mast-heads, was truly ridiculous.'" Mr. Madison exclaimed, that "Captain David Porter maintained a sanguinary contest against two ships, one of them superior to his own, and other severe advantages, till humanity tore down the colours which valour had nailed to the mast." The one weather-beaten ensign of the Shannon, floating aloft in modest pride, was a chaste satire upon all this wanton flag-and-motto vanity.

British seamen's like and dislike for the American or British Navy.—Vol. II., p. 158.—"While in England, an occurrence took place on board the Essex, 32, Captain Smith, that is worthy of being recorded, as proving that something more than American artificers were at the bottom of the reluctance of the English seamen to serve in their own vessels of war.

"It was accidentally ascertained that one of the Essex's crew was a deserter from a British man-of-war, and he was formally demanded. Being within the jurisdiction of Great Britain, Captain Smith, an officer of great spirit and of high reputation in the service, did not feel himself justified in refusing to deliver up the seaman. The man protested that he was an American, and that he had not voluntarily entered the English service, though he did not deny his identity, and the desertion. It being thought impossible to protect him, the seaman was sent below to get his clothes, and obeyed. On reaching the gun-deck, his eye fell upon the carpenter's bench, and going to it, he seized an axe, and at one blow cut off his left hand. Taking up the severed limb in the remaining hand, he went upon the quarter-deck, and presented himself to the British officer bleeding and maimed. The latter left the Essex, shocked and astonished, while the affair made a deep impression on all who witnessed it."

Greatly as this act of frantic passion is to be regretted by human feelings, it is evident that it was the act of a criminal who was certain of condign punishment for the crime of deserting from his king and country. One who was, no doubt, a British subject, as it was thought, by Captain Smith himself, "impossible to protect him," that is by proving him to be a native of the United States. In the same page of this off-hand story considerable horrifying and shocking, we have another particular cute and sharp. "About this time the Constitution, while lying at anchor in the roads (Spithead), a man let himself into the water, and swam with the tide to the Madagascar frigate, which was lying directly astern of the Constitution. The deserter was too much exhausted when first taken up to state his object, and the Madagascar sent a boat to acquaint the officers of the Constitution that one of their men had fallen overboard, and had been picked up by that ship. Accordingly a cutter was sent in the morning to procure the man, when the officer was told that he had claimed protection as an Englishman, and that he had been sent on board the guard-ship. Captain Hull was not on board at the time, and Mr. Morris, the First Lieutenant, sought an interview with Sir Roger Curtis, the Admiral then in command at Portsmouth. Mr. Morris was very politely received, and he stated his errand. The Admiral informed Mr. Morris that it was not in his power to give up a deserter who claimed to be a British subject. 'Have you any evidence, Sir Roger, beyond the man's own word, that he is actually an Englishman?' 'None whatever, Sir, but we are obliged to take his declaration to that effect.' Nothing remained for the American officer but to return on board his own ship." "That night extra sentinels were posted, with positive orders to fire at anything that might be seen floating near the ship. About midnight two or three muskets were discharged, and, on inquiry, it was found that there was a man in the water close alongside. A boat was lowered, and it brought on board a seaman of the Madagascar, who had contrived to buoy himself up by means of some shells of blocks, and probing by a turn in the tide, to drift down upon the Constitution. This man was asked what countryman he was, and he answered, in a strong Irish accent, 'An American, your honour.' He was sent below, with orders to take good care of him. The next day the deserter was inquired after, and it was intimated that as he said he was an American he could not be given up. It is believed, however, that no formal demand was made for the Irishman."

By the admission of the Constitution's officers that the deserter from the Madagascar did answer to a strong Irish accent, (they might have added in the Irish vernacular also), there was strong presumptive proof that they were unjustly receiving and harbouring a known British subject, a deserter from a British ship-of-war, within a British port. In the case of the deserter from the Constitution to the Madagascar, there was no proof of any description offered by the American officers of his being an American, and the man did not betray himself by American accent or idiom. We have, however, here an Englishman deserting the American service to the British service, and an Irishman, Mr. Cooper, your honour, deserting the latter for the former. As a "proof that something more than American artificers were at the bottom of the reluctance of the English seamen to serve in American vessels of war," and as a conspicuous set-off to the delinquent preferring to sever his left hand to remain in the American, than to return to the British service, to receive the just punishment due to his unpardonable crime of desertion, we have an honest Englishman preferring to be tarred and feathered, naked from the waist, and ignominiously towed ashore on a grating, stern foremost, by the wilful orders of Captain David Porter, rather than serve in the American service against his king and country. This act of brutality, too, by the sanctified, patriotic, and liberal Jonathan skipper, who sported at his fore "Free trade and sailors' rights;" who "wrote at his mizen—'God, our country, and liberty!!'"—Tristram. RANK OF BARRACK-MASTERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I believe Lord Hill has laid down a regulation as regards the rank of Barrack-Masters, and I should be glad to see the scale published in your valuable paper, for many are not aware of it. A Barrack-Master.

[The following is the classification:—Barrack-Masters of 1st class as Majors; Barrack-Masters of 2d class as Captains; Barrack-Masters of 3d class as Lieutenants. An absurd statement on this subject appeared some time since in an Irish paper, and was copied by some of our London contemporaries.—Ed.]

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

Sir,—Permit me to congratulate you on the result of a portion of your manifold labours in the cause of the recruit, viz., the increase of bounty, and consequent decrease of debt, that curse to soldier as well as civilian.

This vast benefit is unfortunately accompanied by a loss which it is to be hoped will be but temporary, the retirement of the noble Secretary at War, who, no doubt, would have followed up this boon by others equally desirable for the service as for the individual. It is, however, consolatory to reflect that his Lordship, experiencing that bonne renommée vaut mieux que ceinture d'or, carries with him the grateful remembrance of every British soldier, who, desiring no more than his services entitle him to, is accustomed to add sincere attachment and devotion to the respect and obedience paid by him to his superiors.

Rejoicing then over the extinction of one formidable evil, may we hope that you will turn your attention to others equally injurious, and, among the rest, to one frequently alluded to by you, Sir—the 4-company depot system—which, in its operation on the Army, is fully as mischievous. What benefit there could be in their establishment to have found advocates has puzzled many. The relief or support of regiments abroad, the utility in garrisons at home, the benefit to duty officers or men, is so trifling, that, compared with the injury it inflicts on the service companies and the Army at large, it is matter of astonishment they have so long existed. In your observations, Sir, on this point, in July * last, you but echoed the sentiments of the majority of your readers (no small portion of the military body, by the bye): they are, indeed, "wretched abortions;" and to those who have witnessed the efficiency of a body like the Provisional Battalion—the close business-like character of its official duties—the high state of discipline so ably enforced and preserved by its instructors in drill, &c., and, above all (at least "in this our day" of economy), the merely nominal expense which is incurred, they need only to stand side by side for six months, to ensure the speedy dissolution of those "depots of all officers and no soldiers."

Mais, revenons à nos moutons: the comfort and efficiency of the soldier, and the extinction (or smoothing) of his difficulties on entering the service, being the original subject of my correspondence, we will again recur to it. By husbanding the energies of the soldier while inuring his body to exercise and fatigue, strengthening his mind by recreation and occasional study in his barrack reading-room, will, I presume, tend to make him not only a more useful and durable, but a more cheerful portion of the great machine.

The new chaco, but for its horizontal peak, is a decided improvement, and as at the head of the list as well as the body must be applauded, although, if slightly inclined, would give it more shade for the eyes, and look better. Our next step is the stiff unyielding stock, a great hindrance to comfort and freedom of motion; those only who have felt its annoyance while snatching a nap at night between "Sentry go," or witnessed the irritation produced in the recruit at his initiatory drill, will be able to judge correctly. Our good friend the Baron will, I have no doubt, undertake to form an upright position, erect carriage, and squareness of body, without its adventitious aid. A new pattern, however, is being issued to the Royal Artillery, which, if an improvement, will no doubt be generally adopted.

Our old acquaintance the knapsack obtrudes next its portly person. How desirable to decrease its size and alter its mode of slinging! There have been several propositions for the latter purpose; but none appear to have such advantages as the mode suggested by Lieutenant Black, of the 80th regiment, enabling the soldier to place it on his shoulders without troubling his comrade, or, if in the Grenadier or Light Company, disturbing his wings: the breast-strap, too, is dispensed with, thus avoiding the compression on the chest so exceedingly injurious, and producing to recruits so sickening a sensation as frequently to oblige their leaving the ranks;—indeed, it completely neutralises the benefit derived from the dumb-bell or extension motions. The hook to the right strap has been very generally adopted in the new issues; but this is not sufficient. Let any person attend a drill when ordered in heavy marching order, and after a few manœuvres, when, by the kindness of the Commanding Officer, the men stand at ease (stand easy), let them notice the shifting and hitching up that takes place to get the pack in its proper position, and relieve the loins and shoulders. Why is this? Cannot a knapsack be made of that size, and slung in such a manner as to prevent all this, and enable the soldier to carry it with ease and cheerfulness for 24 hours, instead of three or four? There are more curses and imprecations uttered under these circumstances in an hour or so, than in all the duties of the year together. In addition to the size, the weight would consequently be diminished, which would reduce the kitt, and thus, with the increase of bounty start the recruit free from debt entirely, which at present is not the case by 6*s.* or 7*s.*

* N. & M. Gazette, No. 341.

Difficulties and danger neither discourage or appal the British soldier; but it is the infliction of petty annoyances that he cannot rid himself of—an incubus like this clinging to his shoulders, that will neither assist him in his difficulty nor remain quiet in its place—a sort of "day-mare" or "Old Man in Sindbad," that galls the shoulders and loins of his master, and at every turn bruises the face or boxes the ears of his master's friends.

CHEVRON.

NAVAL REGISTRY.

SIR,—In my last letter I endeavoured to point out a plan for manning the Navy, without additional expense: keeping this in view, I need not say how cribed my ideas are, and to square the subject, I must go over a part of it also, that I may be enabled to show the principal features of my plan for both services in one letter.

First, that no person can ply on salt water as water or ferry man, between 19 or 26 years of age, unless by purchase of high licence, obtainable either by—1st, servitude at sea the period between those years in Foreign Merchant Trade; or, secondly, five years in the Navy—a sea-going ship; or, thirdly, by purchase of high licence double the amount in pounds per annum for years required, viz. 14*l*.

Twenty-one years, SIR, is a very, very long time to look forward to for a pension, more especially under Military or Naval law; and from what I know of sailors, their minds are very much prejudiced against the whip, alias the pendant, previous to entry; not without reason, when we consider the bad example and tyrannical conduct of many officers even at the present day—for I presume, Sir, you are aware we have more than one ship in a state of mutiny, &c., and if we reflect how long such a specimen lives in our memory and honour, I think we can easily make the necessary allowance.

My object in this is to form different periods for pension; and even the faint representation above I think sufficient to prove the necessity, more especially if so arranged as not to cause any "increase of expense to Government." I propose three different periods of reward for merchant service, 7, 14, and 21 years. Four principal periods of pensions for naval servitude, 5, 11, 16, and 21, but a proportionate decrease of license and increase of pension for every complete year between those periods after the first five. A yearly reward will coax thousands to enter, delay the day of discharge, and make them solicitous for naval servitude under good officers, and endeavour to rough it out with bad ones. The following table will more fully explain:—

NAVAL SERVITUDE.

The first five years entitles to first reduced licence. 7*s.* payable quarterly to allow proportions being saved. More than one quarter in arrear withheld till payment.	Years	License.	Years	Pension	Years	Pension
		£. s.		£. s.		£. s.
	6	6 2	12	1 0	18	9 10
	7	5 0	13	2 0	19	12 10
	8	3 14	14	3 0	20	15 10
	9	2 7	15	4 10	21	21 0
	10	1 0	16	5 10	22	23 6
	11	free.	17	7 10	23	25 0
					24	27 0
					25	29 0
					26	32 0

MERCANTILE.

The first seven years entitling to first reduced licence, 10*l*., with similar restrictions, and moreover only at a Mercantile Port.

The second seven years, or fourteen completed, the second reduced licence, 30*s*.

The third seven years, free licence and a pension.

Not being a financier, beyond what my affairs require, and being unacquainted with the number of watermen in England, beside scores of other documents necessary to consult, I cannot enter so fully into my real views; but I fancy, hearing you say, "The license is too high: we must have almost a prohibitory one, first, to drive to sea; secondly, to form a fund for the extended system of pension; thirdly, to make the reduced and free licenses the boons for servitude, by which, for every year served, a man will be amply repaid.

I have made but one small calculation, viz., the amount of license. I propose fares being increased—say three-halfpence in the sixpence, little enough; this, supposing a man to earn but three shillings a day (two-thirds of watermen earn more), thus increased will amount to 13*l*. 13*s*. 9*d*. —the provision will come out of the public pocket, without any visible difference to the poorest creature.

So gradual a scale of encouragement must have its good effects, and as the old servant cannot be so active in procuring a livelihood as the young, so will they have a provision for the difference; for example, I take the extreme periods: a naval servitude of 21 years will give 21*l*., this, with the license saved, amounts to 35*l*., earnings 12*s*. a week, amounts to 67*l*. a year. The man who does not go to sea, allow him to earn double or more (hundreds more than 2*l*. and 3*l*. per week), but say 30*s*.; they are then able to afford the first license ably, as 78*l*. per annum is the amount of their earnings, and deducting 14*l*. for license, will leave an equal provision (to the servant of his country), free from labouring on a bed of sickness under old wounds, privations occasionally in consequence, and a debilitated constitution.

I am glad to see Capt. Marryat's reflection of the character of seamen has caught the eye of one whose name and experience, I hope, will counteract the effect of such a scandalous ungrateful assertion; with equal justice might he attack Capt. Walker, but he dare not. It will also, I trust, strengthen the truth of my opinions in my first letter that "good officers always make and find good men." The extract says, "The British tar is the noblest specimen of warm-hearted and noble souls; men who scorn danger, and would fight to the last inch with their country's flag nailed mast-high, before they would compromise the honour, or disgrace the colours of that nation

The battle and the breeze."

A few observations more and I conclude this, reserving a great and just ground of complaint, "discharge without Court-Martial," for another letter.

The first ten and fourteen years will be rewarded by the decrease and withdrawal of license-monies, consequently free of expence either to Government or to the public. The merchant-sailor and the Naval one not completing 21 years pensioned by the fund created by licenses, consequently no expense to Government. Pensions for servitude of 21 years and over, as at present, with the difference that re-entry may be allowed with the retention of what is fairly, honourably, and dearly bought in the service of their country.

I cannot account for such an absurd regulation as the one I allude to.

INDIGESTION and DIARRHŒA.—The ill effects of eating imprudently of fruit, shell-fish, and other food of an irritable nature to the bowels, are immediately removed by a wine-glass dose or two of a pleasant and palatable remedy, BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB, the only equally agreeable and efficacious form in which that invaluable medicine, Rhubarb, can be administered. From its specific tendency to assist, rather than force the efforts of nature, it is rapidly superseding the baneful use of deleterious and violent purgatives, which too often aggravate the diseases they are expected to cure. Sold in Bottles at 4*s*. 6*d*. and 8*s*. 9*d*., by J. KING, Proprietor, 72, Queen-street, Cheapside; Barclay, Farringdon-street; and all Chemists.

MORISON'S PILLS.—CAUTION.—Whereas spurious imitations of my Medicines are now in circulation, I, JAMES MORISON, the Hygeist, hereby give notice, that none can be genuine without the words, "Morison's Universal Medicines" are engraved on the Government Stamp affixed to each box, in white letters on a red ground. Sold only by the general agents to the British College of Health, and their sub-agents. No Chemist or Druggist is authorised by me to dispose of the same. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand. JAMES MORISON, the Hygeist.

A CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application.—The universally acknowledged efficacy of this extraordinary, safe, and never-failing remedy for the speedy and certain cure of Corns and Bunions, however obstinate and long standing, induces the Proprietor of this highly-important chemical discovery, to caution the Public against base and spurious imitations, injurious in their effects, and most dangerous to those who, either through ignorance or the fraudulent pretences of others, are induced to apply them.

The Proprietor has received Testimonials from the most respectable Families in the Kingdom; the genuine has the signature of J. A. SHARWOOD on the outside wrapper. Sold at 55, Bishopsgate Without; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and most Medicine Venders.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR. By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the KALYDOR. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its SPECIFIC QUALITIES, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all harshness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4*s*. 6*d*. and 8*s*. 6*d*. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop 63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s*. 6*d*., 7*s*., and 15*s*. each.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., . . Madras.
Messrs. Forbes and Co., ... Bombay.

The superior and peculiar advantages this Company offers to the Public are, that the Mutual Assurers receive the whole profits derived from their branch, a general rate of premium to cover the risks of all climates and warfare,—the option to the Assured for the whole period of life, of allowing one-half of the premium to remain unpaid for seven years, and the arrears thereof to continue at interest as a debt against the policy till it becomes a claim; and also the granting of Pensions to Civilians, Officers of the Army and Navy and Hon. East India Company's Service, and their Widows.

Prospectuses and Rates of Premiums for Assurances in Europe and India may be had on application at the Temporary Office, 34, Cockspur street, where parties desirous of becoming Agents are requested to apply; if by letter, post paid.

Advantages of this Association.

An ample subscribed capital.

Four-fifths of the profits divided every five years.

Advances made to be assured, on giving security for [illegible] premiums and interest.

An important and peculiar feature in this Association is, that the assurers may reside in any part of the globe either by paying an extra premium, (or at their option,) by an arrangement for a stipulated deduction from the sum assured in case of death abroad, but for Europe, Australia, the Cape of Good Hope, or the British Possessions in North America, no extra premium or deduction is incurred.

Premiums may be paid quarterly, half yearly, or annually.

ANNUITY BRANCH.

In addition to the following advantageous Scale of Rates, four-fifths of the profits are divided among the annuitants every three years by way of bonus.

A STOVE on PRINCIPLES ENTIRELY NEW, and UNEQUALLED for COMFORT and ECONOMY.

BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

The Chunk Patent Stove, invented by Mr. R. Prosser, Civil Engineer, is distinguished from all others by its entire freedom from dust or smoke, its great economy of fuel, and its perfect safety from fire. It has been a source of great comfort in the Nursery and Bed-room of the invalid, affording an uniform temperature through the day and night, with only one supply, while the most delicate test cannot detect anything arising from its use which is injurious to health; it merely warms the air without decomposing it; and, as there is no door, none of the gases, generated by combustion, can pass into the apartment. Wherever warmth is required, this stove is applicable. It is as desirable for the Drawing-room as the Laundry; for warming Greenhouses it possesses extraordinary claims, the very great expense of building flues, and afterwards the immense consumption of fuel being avoided. For Workshops and Ships' Cabins it is invaluable; it requires attention once in twenty-four hours, during which time the cost will not exceed twopence.—Price plain, 3l.; fluted, 3l. 10s. Manufactured by the sole proprietors, Rippon and Burton, Wells street, Oxford street. Of whom may be had, detailed catalogues of the prices of fenders, fire-irons, warranted table cutlery, superior nickel silver, &c., 20 per cent. under any other old established house, and can be forwarded for a single postage.

Established 1820.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING,

at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45s. each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13s. 9d.; Trafalgar, ditto, 17s. 6d.; ditto mahogany sofas, 90s.; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21s.; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60s.; tent ditto, 20s.; furniture for ditto, 20s.; japanned chairs, 2s. each; cane seat ditto, 3s. 6d.; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6s. each; japanned drawers, 34s. each; mahogany ditto, 44s.; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25s. each; ditto couches, 6l. 10s.; ditto loo-tables, from 4l. 10s.; mahogany ditto, 70s.; fancy chairs, 7s. 6d. each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

COOL SOFT HANDS. — BURTON'S SAND WASH BALLS, recommended highly by the profession, for removing that redness and natural inclination to heat of the skin at this season of the year to ladies gardening and gentlemen cricketing, rowing, &c., or where any exertion is taken, so prejudicial to the hands of the superior classes, the Sand Balls at once remove any hardness or bad consequences to the skin produced thereby, and leave it pleasingly soft, cool, and pliable.—Sold at 1s. each, or 10s. per dozen, by all Perfumers, &c., and by the Inventor, H. Burton (late Berry and Burton), at his Original Old Brown Windsor Soap and Wash Ball Manufactory, 12, Greek-st. Soho-square, London.

Sole Proprietor of the late S. Berry's Palm Soap.

MOVEMENTS OF HER MAJESTY'S SHIPS AND VESSELS IN COMMISSION.

Actæon, 26, Capt. Robt. Russel, and Calliope, 26, Capt. Thos. Herbert, were in the River Plate, the latter expected at Rio in a few days, from whence she was to proceed round Cape Horn; the Imogene, 26, Capt. H. W. Bruce, was also expected at Rio, with a large freight, and, may be expected to return to England some time in October. The United States frigate, Independence, Com. Nicholson, refitting; and a Sardinian frigate, commanded by Prince Eugenio, under general repair, were at Rio when the Wizard sailed. On the 6th of July, the Wizard, in working out of Porto Cabo Frio, struck on a sunken rock, and materially damaged her rudder and false keel; she has come into harbour to refit, and have her damages made good. There were a number of slavers at Rio waiting the result of some trials, previous to their taking on board slaves! 22d—This evening, at sunset, Rr.-Adm. Sup. Warren struck his flag on board the San Josef, and is gone on short leave of absence; Capt. Tayler, of the San Josef, will carry on the ordinary duty in the meantime. 23d—Arrived, Blenheim, 72, Capt. Sir H. F. Senhouse, from Spithead; in beating down Channel she sprung her main-topmast, and she experienced very boisterous weather; she is expected to sail for the Mediterranean on the 29th, having received thirty men from the San Josef since her arrival, which nearly completes her complement. Arrived the Meteor steamer, Lieut.-Com. Richard D. Pritchard, from Falmouth, with a detachment of the 1st Royals, 2d Batt., from Pendennis Castle, having been relieved by a detachment from the 25th reg. The Meteor started on her return to Falmouth the same day. 24th—Arrived the Falmouth lighter, with stores from Woolwich; Alfred chartered-ship, with passengers for New South Wales; and Menai yacht, Lord Francis Egerton. 25th—Arrived Swale, tender to Astræa, with unserviceable packet-stores from Falmouth. The Foudroyant, 78, has been brought alongside the jetty, and will be taken into dock the next spring tides to have her copper examined. In the Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Apollo, Wizard, Carron st.-v. At the Island—Partridge. In the Sound—Blenheim, Rolla.

Milford Haven, 25th Sept.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Persian of 16 guns is to be launched from the dock-yard up this haven on Monday the 7th Oct. She is built on the plans of Sir William Symonds. The Tortoise lighter arrived here on Sunday last from Holyhead, and proceeded on to Plymouth last Tuesday. The Marine detachment here consists of two Captains (Capt. Downton and Capt. Palliser), two Lieutenants (Lieut. Hollingworth and Lieutenant ———), and one Quartermaster (Lieut. Maltby). There has nothing transpired regarding the late official visit of the Lords of the Admiralty. The Dutch ship, Admiral Van Kinsbergen, is nearly ready for sea.

Deptford, 25th Sept.—Arrived the Portia to lead for Malta, and the Augusta, Jessie, for convicts. The Numa transport is loading for Pembroke, and the Athol, troop-ship, has arrived to unload stores from Portsmouth. The Sovereign transport is loading for Rio Janeiro. Remain, the Woodbridge, convict-ship, and James Pattison, emigrant-ship, for Australia. The extra sailmakers that were hired for three months have been nine months employed, and will be discharged from Deptford yard next Saturday.

Sheerness, Sept. 25.—The Erebus, Capt. Ross, and Terror Capt. Crozier, passed here from Chatham on their voyage of discovery, between one and two o'clock at noon this day.

Lisbon, 9th Sept.—H.M.S. Hastings, 74, Capt. Lawrence, left yesterday for Cadiz and the Mediterranean. Hercules, 74, Capt. Barnard, is about to sail for England, to be paid off, leaving the Donegal and Benbow (which arrived on 8th) in the Tagus.

Malta, 9th Sept.—The Rhadamanthus steamer from Constantinople arrived on the 5th. All was perfectly tranquil in the Turkish capital on the 31st ult. The young Sultan had granted an audience to Adm. Sir R. Stopford, and given him the most cordial reception. The united British and French squadrons, consisting of 17 sail of the line, ten British and seven French, besides several smaller vessels, were still lying in Biaika Bay, at the mouth of the Dardanelles, where they were expected to remain some time longer. Hastings, Benbow, Revenge, Blenheim, and Hercules, were shortly to arrive in the Mediterranean, and join the fleet. Admiral Stopford left Constantinople on the afternoon of 31st ult. in the Rhadamanthus, and reached Biaika Bay on the following morning. The Confiance steamer remained in Constantinople to repair her engine. There were then in the harbour the British frigate Carysfort and a French and Russian brig-of-war. The Talavera, which proceeded from Malta on 15th ult., on her way home, returned on 5th inst., from Gibraltar, where she received by the Blazer an order to join the Levant squadron. Talavera is taking in her provisions, and will leave for her destination to-morrow the 10th. Hazard was sent on 4th with despatches for Sir R. Stopford, brought from England by the Gorgon on 3rd; the latter left Malta on 6th for Biaika Bay, with other despatches, received on the 4th, by Blazer. It is reported that those despatches contain a positive injunction to the Admiral to proceed to Alexandria, and compel Mehemet Ali to restore the Turkish fleet.

A number of British Naval Officers, who were absent from Constantinople when the sudden order to join the fleet was given, having missed the two steamers on the 27th ult., had been obliged to hire row-barges to proceed to the Dardanelles.

Com. Le Hardy, of the Coast-Guard District, Castletown, Ireland, has recently laid the foundation-stone of a new church in that district.

Achilles, 54, Capt. Sir Thos. Pasley, Bart., C.B., arrived at Portsmouth on the 27th inst. from the Mediterranean, and will be paid off.

Alligator, 16, Lt.-Com. W. S. Thomas (1828), arrived at Madras from Trincomalee 16th, and sailed for Trincomalee 19th July.

Basilisk, 14, Com. J. C. Gill (1819), arrived at Lima 27th April, from Huacheco, and sailed 29th for Cobija.

Blazer, 8, Lt.-Com. J. M. Waugh (1814), arrived at Malta from Gibraltar, Sept. 3.

Childers, 16, Com. C. Elliot (1838), arrived at St. Helena from the Coast of Africa, July 2, and sailed for Ascension, Aug. 8.

Conway, 28, Capt. R. D. Bethune (1830), arrived at Madras from Calcutta, and sailed for Trincomalee and Colombo, 17th July.

Crusader, 10, Com. H. W. Gifford (1838), arrived at Ceylon from Bombay, June 11.

Cruizer, 91, Capt. Jenkin Jones (1828), arrived at Madeira, Aug. 28, from Plymouth, and sailed for Jamaica, Aug. 29.

Dee, 4, 81 men, Com. Sherer (1829), arrived at Port Royal, Jamaica, from Nassau, N.P., Aug. 10.

Hazard, 16, Com. J. Wilkinson (1828), arrived at Malta from Smyrna, Sept. 4.

Hornet, 6, 11 Com. Miller, arrived at Port Royal, Jamaica, from Charles, Aug. 14, and sailed on her return, Aug. 13.

Hydra, st. ves., Com. A. W. Milward (1836), sailed from Malta for the Levant, Aug. 21. The Hydra is ordered to the West Indies, in lieu of the Jordan, ordered home.

Magpie, 4, st. ves., Lt. J. W. Nott (1837), sailed from Halifax, N.S., for Prince Edward's Island, Sept. 1.

Medusa, 6, st. ves., Lt.-Com. Goldsmith, H.C. (1809), arrived at Marseilles from Malta, Sept. 15.

Pincher, 16, Com. G. Pennefather (1827), five days from Jamaica, anchored at Roatan Key, Honduras, on the 5th July, with a detachment of the Royal Artillery on board; arrived in 30 days at Port Royal, Jamaica, from Honduras, Aug. 7, and sailed for Barbadoes, Aug. 13.

Racehorse, 18, Com. Hon. F. A. J. Harris (1833), arrived at Barbadoes from Halifax, July 25, and sailed for Para, Aug. 3.

Sappho, 16, Com. T. Fraser (1826), arrived at Port au Prince from Jamaica, Aug. 15.

Sheerness, 16, Com. the Hon. R. Gore (1829), arrived at Port Royal, Jamaica, from Halifax, Aug. 7. She sailed from Halifax on 9th July; left lying there H.M.S. Inconstant, Pique, Edinburgh, Medea, and Medina packet. Boarded, in lat. 37.39. N. long. 54.51. W. the Sandwich, from St Lucia, out 18 days, bound to London. Serpent sailed on a cruise, Aug. 14.

Vestal, 26, Capt. T. W. Carter (1831), arrived at Barbadoes from Halifax, July 29, and sailed for Antigua, Aug. 5.

Volage, 28, Capt. H. Smith, a (1820), arrived at Madras from Bengal, 13th, and sailed for Trincomalee and Colombo, 17th July (See also Portsmouth and Plymouth Correspondents' Letters.)

Ship Letters from Bahia, St. Vincent's, Nevis, and China.

Portsmouth, Sept. 27.—(From our own Correspondent).—Another week of dearth! There is not anything doing in the Port. The Lily is ordered to sea, and must go to the coast of Africa in charge of the First Lieut., the Commander being unable to resume the command in consequence of his accident. Col. Pasley has been actively at work all the week, and by his great and terrible explosion on Monday, caused so much commotion near the wreck, that the divers have been able to secure a number of beams, timbers, and other matters, and also two guns; one is an 18 or 24-pounder brass, and in excellent preservation, with the date 1748 on it; the other is more remarkable, being a 32-pounder (iron), firm on its carriage, and in the same state as when on the deck. Quantities of copper and iron have also been got up and brought to the Dock-yard, and if the weather would but be favourable for a few days during the ensuing neap-tides, there is little doubt but a great deal would be done. Capt. Lock has not yet assumed the command of the Victory; it is expected he will join next week. No Captain is appointed to either Blonde or Magicienne. There is nothing fitting but Rattlesnake and Stromboli; the latter is to go to Scotland for her machinery. Sapphire will be taken out of dock next week, and then get ready for commission. Ships in Port—Lily at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Rattlesnake, in harbour.

Plymouth, Sept. 25.—(From our own Correspondent).—20th—Sailed, Swale, tender to Astræa, for Falmouth, with a detachment from 25th regt., to relieve the detachment of the 1st Royals, 2d batt., on duty at Pendennis Castle; the Swale has been detained until this day, (she was to have sailed on the 12th), by strong gales from the S.W. and W. Sailed the Exmouth, chartered ship for the East Indies. 21st—Arrived Rolla, 10, Lieut.-Com. C. Hall, from the north coast of Spain, with despatches from Lord John Hill; she brought no additional intelligence to that already received from France, by telegraph. Also, arrived Wizard, 10, Lieut.-Com. Thomas F. Birch, from South America; she left Rio Janeiro 6th July, and has brought home a freight in bars and gold, not to much extent, on merchants' account. Lieut. Andrews, late second of the Grecian, (came home in the Wizard), invalided, from very severe illness contracted on board the slave prize, Zeal; she also brought 4 invalids, and 4 passengers. The following is a correct account of the disposal of her Majesty's vessels on that station:—Stag, 46, Commodore T. B. Sullivan; Grecian, 16, Com. W. Smyth, which was to sail for the Falkland Islands on 31st July; Arrow, 10, (refitting), Lieut.-Com. J. B. Sullivan; Spey packet, 6, Lieut.-Com. R. B. James; Fawn, schooner, Lieut.-Com. J. Tyson, sailed on a cruise, 29th July; she was formerly the Caroline, prize to the Electra, purchased and fitted out as a tender to the Stag. Magnet packet, 6, Lieut.-Com. Smyth Griffith, sailed on 21st July; Orestes, 18, Com. P. S. Hambley, on 29th; and Spider, 6, Lieut.-Com. J. O'Reilly (a), on 30th, for the River Plate with the mail; Actæon, 26, Capt. Robt. Russel, and Calliope, 26, Capt. Thos. Herbert, were in the River Plate, the latter expected at Rio in a few days, from whence she was to proceed round Cape Horn; the Imogene, 26, Capt. H. W. Bruce, was also expected at Rio, with a large freight, and, may be expected to return to England some time in October. The United States frigate, Independence, Com. Nicholson, refitting; and a Sardinian frigate, commanded by Prince Eugenio, under general repair, were at Rio when the Wizard sailed. On the 6th of July, the Wizard, in working out of Porto Cabo Frio, struck on a sunken rock, and materially damaged her rudder and false keel; she has come into harbour to refit, and have her damages made good. There were a number of slavers at Rio waiting the result of some trials, previous to their taking on board slaves! 22d—This evening, at sunset, Rr.-Adm. Sup. Warren struck his flag on board the San Josef, and is gone on short leave of absence; Capt. Tayler, of the San Josef, will carry on the ordinary duty in the meantime. 23d—Arrived, Blenheim, 72, Capt. Sir H. F. Senhouse, from Spithead; in beating down Channel she sprung her main-topmast, and she experienced very boisterous weather; she is expected to sail for the Mediterranean on the 29th, having received thirty men from the San Josef since her arrival, which nearly completes her complement. Arrived the Meteor steamer, Lieut.-Com. Richard D. Pritchard, from Falmouth, with a detachment of the 1st Royals, 2d Batt., from Pendennis Castle, having been relieved by a detachment from the 25th reg. The Meteor started on her return to Falmouth the same day. 24th—Arrived the Falmouth lighter, with stores from Woolwich; Alfred chartered-ship, with passengers for New South Wales; and Menai yacht, Lord Francis Egerton. 25th—Arrived Swale, tender to Astræa, with unserviceable packet-stores from Falmouth. The Foudroyant, 78, has been brought alongside the jetty, and will be taken into dock the next spring tides to have her copper examined. In the Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Apollo, Wizard, Carron st.-v. At the Island—Partridge. In the Sound—Blenheim, Rolla.

Milford Haven, 25th Sept.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Persian of 16 guns is to be launched from the dock-yard up this haven on Monday the 7th Oct. She is built on the plans of Sir William Symonds. The Tortoise lighter arrived here on Sunday last from Holyhead, and proceeded on to Plymouth last Tuesday. The Marine detachment here consists of two Captains (Capt. Downton and Capt. Palliser), two Lieutenants (Lieut. Hollingworth and Lieutenant ———), and one Quartermaster (Lieut. Maltby). There has nothing transpired regarding the late official visit of the Lords of the Admiralty. The Dutch ship, Admiral Van Kinsbergen, is nearly ready for sea.

Deptford, 25th Sept.—Arrived the Portia to lead for Malta, and the Augusta, Jessie, for convicts. The Numa transport is loading for Pembroke, and the Athol, troop-ship, has arrived to unload stores from Portsmouth. The Sovereign transport is loading for Rio Janeiro. Remain, the Woodbridge, convict-ship, and James Pattison, emigrant-ship, for Australia. The extra sailmakers that were hired for three months have been nine months employed, and will be discharged from Deptford yard next Saturday.

Sheerness, Sept. 25.—The Erebus, Capt. Ross, and Terror Capt. Crozier, passed here from Chatham on their voyage of discovery, between one and two o'clock at noon this day.

Lisbon, 9th Sept.—H.M.S. Hastings, 74, Capt. Lawrence, left yesterday for Cadiz and the Mediterranean. Hercules, 74, Capt. Barnard, is about to sail for England, to be paid off, leaving the Donegal and Benbow (which arrived on 8th) in the Tagus.

Malta, 9th Sept.—The Rhadamanthus steamer from Constantinople arrived on the 5th. All was perfectly tranquil in the Turkish capital on the 31st ult. The young Sultan had granted an audience to Adm. Sir R. Stopford, and given him the most cordial reception. The united British and French squadrons, consisting of 17 sail of the line, ten British and seven French, besides several smaller vessels, were still lying in Biaika Bay, at the mouth of the Dardanelles, where they were expected to remain some time longer. Hastings, Benbow, Revenge, Blenheim, and Hercules, were shortly to arrive in the Mediterranean, and join the fleet. Admiral Stopford left Constantinople on the afternoon of 31st ult. in the Rhadamanthus, and reached Biaika Bay on the following morning. The Confiance steamer remained in Constantinople to repair her engine. There were then in the harbour the British frigate Carysfort and a French and Russian brig-of-war. The Talavera, which proceeded from Malta on 15th ult., on her way home, returned on 5th inst., from Gibraltar, where she received by the Blazer an order to join the Levant squadron. Talavera is taking in her provisions, and will leave for her destination to-morrow the 10th. Hazard was sent on 4th with despatches for Sir R. Stopford, brought from England by the Gorgon on 3rd; the latter left Malta on 6th for Biaika Bay, with other despatches, received on the 4th, by Blazer. It is reported that those despatches contain a positive injunction to the Admiral to proceed to Alexandria, and compel Mehemet Ali to restore the Turkish fleet.

A number of British Naval Officers, who were absent from Constantinople when the sudden order to join the fleet was given, having missed the two steamers on the 27th ult., had been obliged to hire row-barges to proceed to the Dardanelles.

Com. Le Hardy, of the Coast-Guard District, Castletown, Ireland, has recently laid the foundation-stone of a new church in that district.

Rear-Admiral Sir Jahleel Brenton, K.C.B., has been appointed Acting-Governor, pro tem., of Greenwich Hospital, until the appointment of a successor to the late gallant Sir Thomas Hardy.

Chaplains who may act as Naval Instructors are to be paid, in addition to their pay as Chaplains, the bounty of 30*l.* a-year, and 5*l.* a-year for each young gentleman instructed.

The Overs light-ship, which had been 51 years on the station, has been recently removed, and replaced by a new one of nearly double the size, being 170 tons register; the moorings also have been exchanged for new ones. This ship is fitted with lanthorns on a new principle, having sixteen Argand burners, with superior reflectors, and producing a more powerful light than hitherto exhibited. The ample crew is divided into two sets, each being alternately a month on board and three weeks ashore. It is remarkable that the present Master (Mr. W. Harvey, a most worthy man) has been fifty years on the station.

The Prometheus steamer was launched at Sheerness on Saturday last, and went off the slip in fine style. Unfortunately the weather was most unfavourable, and prevented the attendant display of beauty usual on such occasions. Miss Martha Otway, the daughter of the Admiral, was appointed godmother on the occasion. This vessel was built exactly in ten weeks. The Alecto, so recently launched at Chatham, which was towed down by a small tug steamer for Woolwich to be fitted with her machinery, was built in eight weeks.

A silver medal and 5*l.* have been presented by the Shipwreck Institution of London to John Weblin, of the Coast-Guard, Ballymacaw, for his heroic conduct at the wreck of the Prince Regent, at Tramore. Com. Bolton presented the above to Weblin, by whom his conduct was represented.

Recruits for the Revenge, 78, at Cove, have arrived there from Castletownsend, per the Chance revenue cutter. Lieut. Lavie, and Assist.-Surg. Baker, of the same ship, have been to Talbert, Kilrush, and Kilkee, in search of hands to man that vessel.

MALTA, Sept. 4.—In port—The Ceylon, Hazard, and steamers Gorgon, Hermes, and Blazer.

As soon as the affairs of the East assume a more settled appearance, three or more of the British line-of-battle ships now in the Mediterranean will proceed to England to be paid off, which first three will, it is said, be the Rodney, Bellerophon, and Minden. The Asia, on her weighing for Basks Bay, got upon a mud-bank, owing to the strong current running, but with the assistance of the Rhadamanthus, under steam, and the Castor, which anchored close to her to heave her off, she was afloat again after two hours, without suffering any material damage.

WRECK OF THE ROYAL GEORGE.—At 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon a cylinder, containing 2,250lb. of powder, was carefully lowered to the bottom, where it was placed alongside the most compact portion of the wreck which has yet been discovered by the divers. This operation was effected by means of hauling lines rove through blocks attached to the bottom of the ship by the divers. When everything was ready, the vessel, in which the voltaic battery was placed, was drawn off to the distance of 800 feet, which is the length of the connecting wires, and instantaneously on the circuit being completed the explosion took place, and the effects were very remarkable. At first the surface of the sea, which had before been perfectly smooth and calm, was violently agitated by a sort of tremulous motion, which threw it into small irregular waves, a few inches only in height. This lasted for three or four seconds, when a huge dome of water made its appearance, of a conical or rather bee-hive shape. At first it appeared to rise slowly, but rapidly increased in height and size till it reached the altitude of 28 or 30 feet, in a tolerably compact mass. It then fell down and produced a series of rings, which spread in all directions. The first, or outer one of these, having the aspect of a wave several feet in height, curled and broke, as if it had been driven towards the shore. Neither the shock nor the sound was so great as had been expected by those who had witnessed the former explosions by Col. Pasley, where the quantity of powder was only 45lb.; but the effect produced on the water at the surface, considering that the depth was 90 feet, was truly astonishing. What the effect has been upon the wreck will not be fully ascertained by the divers till the present tides are over, and the long periods of slack water at the neaps enable the divers to remain for upwards of half an hour under water. In the meantime, it is highly satisfactory to know, that Col. Pasley has completely established his command over the application of the voltaic battery to sub-marine purposes, and that he can now with certainty explode his charges at any depth of water. This will give him the power of placing his cylinders against the most refractory parts of the wreck, and, by blowing those to pieces, and dislocating the knees, timbers, and beams, enable him to draw the whole up, bit by bit, to the surface. Any person who has seen the operation of breaking up a ship on land knows that this is the only way of going to work with a mass so firmly bound together as a line-of-battle ship, that even the action of 57 years of decay under water goes but a small way to disintegrate the parts. The manly perseverance of Col. Pasley, therefore, we are well convinced, will, in the end, effectually clear the noble anchorage of Spithead of this extremely troublesome obstruction.—Times.

Immense quantities of the wreck of this vessel have been picked up since the explosion of the cylinder, the force of which is expected to have almost shattered the wreck to pieces. On Tuesday the mainmast was picked up by the pilot of the look-out vessel belonging to the Netherlands Consul moored at Spithead, who conveyed it to the dock-yard at Portsmouth. It has a most extraordinary appearance, and has excited very great curiosity. It is entirely covered with barnacles, all alive, some measuring eight inches in length.

Among other things fished up from the wreck of the Royal George, and landed at the Dock-yard on Friday, were two tillers and the capstan. One of the former has evidently been the spare tiller, and being housed and free from the action of the salt-water, is in as good preservation as the first day put on board. The other is a good deal rotted away, and the ironwork about it in shreds. The lower part of the capstan also appears in most excellent condition, having been cased in mud for the last half century;—these, and two guns, a brass and an iron one, are objects of great curiosity.

RL. MARINES.—The scarcity of officers of this corps at home is such, that on Monday last every officer at Chatham head-quarters (except the Field Officers) were on duty. Two Captains were doing the duty of Lieutenants, there not being sufficient Lieutenants off garrison duty to complete a Regimental Court-Martial. Even the Lieutenant on guard was, during the time he was on guard, put in the order-book to do the duty of Orderly Officer for the next day; but of course a great portion of this duty was unavoidably neglected, in consequence of the officer not being relieved from guard in time to attend to the other duty. Mr. Arthur G. Wright, and Mr. William James Burney have been appointed Second Lieutenants at Chatham Division. Col. Fergusson has returned from leave of absence. On Thursday a detachment of 1 Corporal and 9 Privates embarked in the Rhin to relieve a similar detachment.

Military Intelligence.

Cape Mounted Riflemen—Charles R. Cranse, Gent., to be Ens., without purchase, v. Somerset.

Hospital Staff—Surgeon William Fergusson, from Rl. Hospital Colonial Corps, to be Surgeon to the Forces.

CAVALRY.

4th Drag. Guards—Adj. Ibbetson is on short leave.

3d Lt. Drags. (Depot)—Cornet Bowles, recently appointed, proceeds overland to join the reg. in Bengal.

11th Lt. Drags.—The statement in the Kentish Times which we quoted in our last, that this corps would relieve the 16th Lancers next month, we believe to be incorrect. The probability is, that the 11th will remain at Canterbury till the spring.

13th Lt. Drags.—In the N. & M. C. of the 14th, we gave a long account of the treatment of this reg. The following is from the Madras U. S. G.:—

"The mismanagement of all arrangements for H.M.'s troops at Bellary, from first to last, since the arrival of the two squadrons of the 13th Dragoons, exceeds anything that we almost ever heard of; for although the cholera was hovering around, as it had not already appeared in H.M.'s 39th reg., the Dragoons with their horses were crammed into the fort with them, contrary, it is said, to the advice of H.M.'s Dep. Inspec. Gen. of Hospitals, and the consequence was that the disease spread amongst the men like a whirlwind, and although they were afterwards all ordered out into camp, the malignant pestilence has clung to them for weeks, committing fatal ravages; and the season is now much too hot for the men to remain longer under canvas when nothing relief is arriving. Sir H. Fane, it is expected, will order an inquiry into the business. When a ship-of-war is lost, the cause of such loss is always investigated by a Court of Inquiry; when so many men are lost, will there be none?

15th Hussars.—The Herefordshire, bound for Bombay, having the first division on board, was met on 18th July, in latitude 2 deg. 4 min.—all well.

16th Lancers.—By a letter from Simla, dated July 14th, we learn that "Two officers of the 16th Lancers, Lieuts. Wilmer and Inverarity, went out of the camp at Candahar about five miles on a shooting or fishing excursion, and on returning they took a separate road, when a strong party of natives waylaid each of them. Lieut. Wilmer, being an expert swordsman and a brave and determined officer, defended himself till a party of one of Shah Soojah's corps came to his relief; he was, however, severely wounded. The other unfortunate man (Lieut. Inverarity) was found with his head laid open, and both his hands cut off, and he could only beg for a little water, when he expired. You may conceive the feelings of the soldiers on beholding the state in which these gentlemen were borne into camp."

About 80 men without horses; the cattle generally in wretched condition.—Calcutta Englishman, June 26.

17th Lancers.—The inhabitants of Castlebar have presented an address of congratulation to Lord Lucas, late Lieut.-Col. of this corps, on his arrival at the family seat in their neighbourhood, where he intends to reside for a great part of the year.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—The detachment at Pendennis having been relieved, has returned to Devonport.

2nd Foot—There has been a good deal of sickness in this reg. Col. Baumgardt had been ailing. Capt. Keith caught the illness which carried him off by being out on piquet on a damp night. Maj. Carruthers had also been suffering, but was better; and Lieut. Wingate was laid up with fever.

G. O.—BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA. Head-Quarters, Mahableshwar, 29th May, 1839.

His Excell. the Com.-in-Chief of the Army in India, having referred the minutes of a Court-Martial held upon Lieut. Reynolds, of H.M.'s 2nd or Queen's Reg. of Ft., together with his observations and orders thereon, to the Com.-in-Chief in India, His Excellency has been pleased to direct the latter, with his remarks, to be published to Her Majesty's troops in the East Indies. Head-Quarters, Camp Shadulnoor, March 14, 1839.

G. O.—At a General Court-Martial, held at "Camp Lukkee," and continued by adjournments to the 6th March, 1839, Lieut. Henry Reynolds, of H.M.'s 2nd or Queen's Regiment, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—Lieut. Henry Reynolds, 2nd or Queen's Reg., placed in arrest by me, for highly irregular and unofficer-like conduct, in twice refusing to perform his duty as a Member of a Regimental Court-Martial on the 15th January last, when called upon by me to do so, as the President of the said Court.

G. D. J. RAITT, Capt. 2nd or Queen's Rl. Reg.

Upon which charge the Court came to the following decision:—

Revised Finding.—The Court having attentively considered the remarks contained in the letter from His Excellency's Secretary, it does respectfully adhere to its former finding, and it does therefore fully and honourably acquit the prisoner, Lieut. Reynolds, H.M.'s 2nd or Queen's Rl. Reg., of all and every part of the charge exhibited against him.

Disapproved. JOHN KEANE, Lieut.-Gen.

Lieut. Reynolds is to be released from arrest, and to return to his duty. The Com. in-Chief abstains from remark upon this trial, considering it better to forward the proceedings to His Excell. the Com.-in-Chief in India, now at Bombay, for his Excellency's consideration.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
R. MACDONALD, Lieut.-Colonel,
Deputy Adjt.-General, H.M.'s Forces, Bombay.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India.

1st. The charge on which Lieut. Reynolds was arraigned, is so far from definite, that it is not possible to infer from it what was the fact charged; of which he has been "fully and honourably acquitted."

2nd. The charge should have stated distinctly, that he had twice refused to vote on the question of punishment, after a prisoner had been convicted by a majority of the members of a Court-Martial of which he was a member.

3rd. It would have been better had more care been bestowed on the charge, by the officer whose duty it was to prepare it for adjudication.

4th. It is impossible to understand the grounds of the Court's acquittal of Lieut. Reynolds; it being doubtful whether they concurred in his reasoning, and denied that, in acting on his erroneous opinions, he was not, by so doing, guilty of "irregular and unofficer-like conduct;" or on what other reasoning his innocence is affirmed.

If the first was the ground for their opinion, it is necessary that their mistake should be pointed out to them.

5th. On a reference made to the Judge Advocate-General of His Majesty's Army, on this point, in 1834, he ruled as follows:—

"Upon a finding of guilty by a Court-Martial, I am of opinion, that although all the Members of the Court may not have concurred in it, it must be deemed the finding of the whole, and the members who voted for acquittal may be called upon to vote upon the punishment to be awarded on the prisoner, as if they had concurred in the finding of guilty."

6th. This settled the point as to the interpretation of the law by Her Majesty's Officers, and it was little becoming the Court to be led away by the declamation of Lieut. Reynolds, and to "honourably acquit him" of an error which he had actually committed. It is strange why the term "honourably" should be at all introduced, since the charge in no way affected his honour.

7th. The Commander-in-Chief is of opinion, that the Court greatly erred in voting the charges against the Lieutenant "Vexatious, and not for the good of the Service," and also in their inattention to the observations of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Bombay, in whose reasoning, as laid before the members of the Court (in the Military Secretary's letter of March 6th, 1839), His Excell. the Com.-in-Chief in India generally concurs; as he does also in his disapproval of the sentence passed by the Court.

By Order of the Commander-in-Chief,
R. TORRENS, Major-General, Adjt.-Gen. Queen's Troops.

6th—A wing of five cos. marched from Colaba into the fort at an early hour on Monday morning last, where it will remain during the monsoon. The wing is commanded by Maj. Everest, and is quartered in the Town Barracks.—Bombay Times, 5th June.

7th Depot—expect to embark for Bristol early next month.

12th—Major and Mrs. O'Neill have arrived in England from the Mauritius, per the Northumberland.

13th—400 men only fit for duty, 70 sick.—Calcutta Englishman, June 25.

17th—Assist.-Surg. A. S. Thomson, M.D., arrived at Bombay from Europe 4th June.

18th—G. O. of the 13th commend Maj. Pratt to proceed to England by the first favourable opportunity to join the depot, he being supernumerary at his rank with the service cos.—Colombo Observer, May 22.

20th—Maj. Hutchinson is on leave. Capt. Barlow is acting as Major of Brigade to Maj.-Gen. Sir Charles Napier at Nottingham.

Sir W. Houstoun was at the taking of Minorca; served in the expeditions to Egypt and to Walcheren, and has received a medal for Fuentes d'Onor.—Col. Thomas has received a medal and two clasps for Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse.—Major Maclean served in the Peninsula from 1812 to July, 1814, including the action of the 14th Nov., 1812, on the retreat from Salamanca, battles of Vittoria, Nivelle (wounded), Nive, and Toulouse. Present in the action before New Orleans, 8th Jan., 1815.—Capt. Barker served the campaign of 1814 in the South of France. Severely wounded on the head at New Orleans, 8th January, 1815.—Dr. Griffith served in the Peninsula from Jan. 1810 to the end of the war, including the battles of Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, siege and assault of Ciudad Rodrigo, Jan. 1812, siege and assault of Badajoz, April, 1812, battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse. Wounded at the affair of Vic Bigorre, 19th Jan., 1814. Served in India, Arabia, and the Burmese empire, from May, 1818, including sieges of Aseerghur, Rasool Kyma, and Zaia; siege and assault of Dwarka; affair of Jemlabad; assault of a fortress on the banks of the Pegu river; assault of Syrian Pagoda, siege of Donabew, and battle near Prome.—New Army List.

21st—H.M.'s 21st reg. of Fusiliers, just arrived from Van Diemen's Land, did not land at Calcutta from the Fairlie, but were immediately transferred to boats and conveyed to Chinsurah, where they are to remain for the present. This regiment appears to have been subjected to the abominable system of stowing and packing in a greater degree of perfection than any of those troops on whose behalf we have heretofore lifted up our feeble voice. Not less than five hundred and fifty souls (officers, men, women, and children,) were crowded into the Fairlie at Van Diemen's Land, in addition to the ship's company, &c., and thus left to endure all the miseries of confinement below, or exposure on deck in all weathers. We have not heard in what condition the reg. was landed, but we shudder to think what might have been the consequence had any sickness broken out on board, or the weather proved as unpropitious as it was to the Northumberland. The Government is, we understand, extremely careful of the lives of convicts; not even permitting a single one to embark on a vessel that is not provided with a Surgeon. But of the comfort of its European troops it would appear to be by no means so solicitous. If there is room for them to stand upright, or lie straight down, on the lower or main deck, little else is thought of. The cost per head of the transport of the soldier is balanced against the expense of maintaining him, and as the former is payable at once, while the other is only in futuro, it is determined to be sparing of the immediate charge, and let the soldier pig as he can. This is exceedingly disgusting, and ought to be reprecated in strong echoes to my Lord Howick, or whoever may now be Secretary at War. It offends the spirit of the soldier, and must be extremely prejudicial to his health and efficiency.—Calcutta Englishman, May 15.

Lord Forbes served in Flanders, and was present at the following battles and sieges, viz. Famars, Valenciennes, Dunkirk, Lincelles, Mouveaux, Tourney, Vaux, Ostend, Nimeguen, Fort St. Andre, &c. Lord Forbes afterwards accompanied the expedition to the Helder, and was present in every action but one which took place in that campaign.—Col. Walker's services: siege of Agra and battle of Deswarree, 1803; siege of Bhurtpore, 1805, and campaigns of Lord Lake, siege of Hattrass, siege of Kalounga under Major-Gen. Gillespie, who was killed.—Col. Ward served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1811, until the end of the war, including battles of Fondal, Redinha, Condeira, Campo Mayor, Los Santos, Usagne, siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, siege of Burgos, siege of forts at, and battle of Salamanca, blockade of Pampeluna, and battle of Toulouse. Present at Waterloo 18th June, 1815. Siege of Bhurtpore, 1825 and 6.—Capt. Mackay served the campaign of 1807 in Egypt. Made prisoner of war in an engagement with the enemy in Calabria, 19th June, 1809, and detained as such until 14th May, 1814. Present at New Orleans, 8th Jan., 1815.—Capt. Lowe's services: campaigns in Germany in 1805 and 6, attack on Copenhagen and capture of the Danish fleet in 1807; campaign and battle of Corunna, Expedition to Walcheren; campaign of 1814 in Holland.—Lieut. Wrixon served in Spain from April, 1811, to May, 1813, including the siege of Tarragona and battle of Castalla. Present at the siege and capture of Genoa.—Lieut. King served the campaigns of 1818 and 19 in Candy, in India. Served in the Burmese war in 1824 and 5, and received a severe contusion when leading the attack of the White Pagoda, an outwork of the dockyard of Donabew.—New Army List.

21st Depot—Capt. Ord strange and a large detachment embark on 1st Oct. for India.

23d—Assist.-Surg. A. Bowie, M.D., arrived at Halifax on 19th August.

25th—Surg. Alexander Sinclair, M.D., does not accompany the service cos. to the Cape, having accepted the appointment of Surgeon to the Forces in Ireland. A detachment has relieved the detach. of the 24 Batt. Royals at Pendennis Castle.

27th Depot—Lt. H. Butler is appointed Acting Paymaster.

28th Depot—Capt. Minto and a detachment embark in a few days for New South Wales.

29th—Lieut. Stepney is appointed A.D.C. to Maj.-Gen. L'Estrange, commanding at Cork, v. Maj. Brett, resigned.

30th—Lieut. J. C. E. D'Esterre will leave the reg. shortly on account of ill-health. He has been eight years in the service on full pay.

31st—A correspondent assures us that Lieut. Scott embarks on board the Walmer Castle this day, in command of troops to Bengal. Assist.-Surg. Ayre has not sailed in the Mount Stuart Elphinstone, but sails with Lieut. Scott in the Walmer Castle.

32d Depot—leave Fermoy shortly, and the 27th Depot is to move for that station, or Limerick garrison.

35th—Capt. Fraser has arrived per the Northumberland.

35th Depot—Ens. Ewart has obtained leave from Sept. 25 to Oct. 14.

36th—The draft, consisting of Capts. Ashmore and Hiern, Ens. Abbott, and 102 men, arrived at Halifax on 19th August.

37th—Capt. Whalley, Ens. Atkinson, Clibborn, Bowers, and 123 men, arrived at Halifax on 19th ult. in the Valleyfield transport from Cork.

37th Depot—Capt. Skelly has joined at Waterford from Nova Scotia.

38th—2 cos. from Dundalk to Newry, Sept. 17. 1 Serj. and 60 r. and f., to complete the 2 cos. there, from Newry to Dundalk, Sept. 17. Lieut.-Col. Piper has arrived from leave, and resumed the command.

39th—Lt. Herbert was to leave Madras for England in Aug.

40th—Brigadier T. Valiant, K.H., arrived at Bombay from Kurrachee, 10th June. A letter received from Kurrachee mentions the death of Ens. Irwin at that place, on 24th ult., from a stroke of the sun.—Bombay Times, June 12.

43d—Capt. Wright (an officer of 26 years' service on full-pay) was President of a Court of Inquiry at Niagara, for investigating certain charges against Col. Kingsmill and Paym. Benson, of the 3d Incorporated Militia, for peculation and other mal-practices.

43d Depot—Lieut. Coote has joined at Naas from Canada.

44th Depot—A detachment embarks on the 1st for Bengal.

47th Depot—Major Gordon is on leave.

49th Depot—Ens. O'Toole embarks for Bengal on 1st Oct.

50th—Maj. Ryan, K.H., proceeded in May from Hobart Town to Port Philip, to hold a Court-Martial; from thence to join the regiment, under orders for India.

50th Depot—Brev.-Maj. Serjeantson has obtained leave until required for embarkation.

52d—Lieut.-Col. Blois becomes senior officer of the troops in Barbadoes, on the departure of Lieut.-Col. Grant, R.A.

52d Depot—Staff Assist.-Surg. Sall has arrived at Armagh, and taken medical charge of this depot, v. Surg. Brown, M.D., who has obtained leave on account of ill health.

54th—In Fort St. George, Madras, the officers and men of the 54th have rather hard duty, but perhaps not more than is good for them. The most crying grievance is the want of proper ventilation in the guard-houses, and of pendalls to shelter the men from the sun. Why are they not ventilated as the Artillery quarters?—It is expected that two cos. 54th will be stationed at Poonamallee, but we hear of no orders having been yet given to prepare for their reception, although the left wing of the reg. is expected at Madras in the course of a few days.—Madras U. S. G.

54th Depot—Ens. Mosten is on leave.

55th Depot—Capt. O'Leary has left town for grouse shooting near Dunfermline, N.B.

57th—The left wing 57th has been at Trichinopoly some time, and it appears that the men suffered much from heat and fatigue during the first part of their march from Cannanore, as did also the right Wing, which reached Calicut on the 4th inst. We think it right here to observe, that a few of the stages between Cannanore and Calicut, by some strange oversight, are so long, that no body of Europeans should be allowed to march them according to the present route; for instance, 16 or 17 miles over deep sand, with a river or two to be crossed, especially at this season of the year, is far too fatiguing for European Infantry. The average rate at which the men march, including obstacles and halts, is, we are informed, about 2¼ miles per hour, and thus, from the length of time that the day's march occupies, the men must reach their ground perfectly exhausted. The Comm. in Chief or Gov. in Council should give immediate attention to this, and order the stages in this line to be shortened; for the Quartermaster-General's explanations about Commanding Officers having a discretionary power of halting are nothing to the purpose, as they can hardly be expected to know which are the most proper halting-places, and, besides, any change in the route of a European corps invariably causes inconvenience in regard to the supplies, which might easily be avoided by timely arrangements of a better nature.—Madras U. S. G.

57th Depot—A detachment embarks for Bengal this day.

60th, 1st Batt.—Major Cockburn has proceeded overland to join the battalion at Zante. Lieut. Aldridge and Assist.-Surg. Ferguson are to return home to join the depot companies.

60th, 1st Batt. (Depot) at Birr, expect the route for Limerick Garrison.

61st—We are given to understand that yesterday's Kandy mail brought instructions from Major-Gen. Sir R. Arbuthnot, for H.M.'s Jupiter, to proceed without loss of time to Bombay, and to report her arrival there to his Excel. Sir F. Maitland, the Naval-Com.-in-Chief; or in his absence to the Right Hon. the Governor of Bombay. It would seem by this arrangement that the fate of H.M. 61st reg. is at last settled—by their remaining in the island for a somewhat longer term than was originally intended. The aspect of affairs in the Persian Gulf, we are inclined to suppose, is the cause of the detention of this gallant corps.—Ceylon Herald, May 17.

62d—Ens. Tyler and Gobbins have arrived at Madras, to join the 62d at Moulmein with a draft. The 62d were expected to relieve the 54th at Fort George. The regt. is in a most efficient state.

63d—Lieut. Augustus Frederic Codd has sailed in the ship Lady Flora, for the purpose of joining his corps on the borders of the Birman empire.

H.M. 63d arrived here a complete skeleton of a corps, and the 63d, when on the Madras side, suffered very considerably both in officers and men. Since they have been here, however, neither regiment has, we believe, suffered much beyond what would be considered an average loss even in England, and at this time, though a stranger might imagine that the sudden change from great heat to excessive moisture, would prove detrimental to the European constitution, yet the state of the hospitals does not denote such to be case.—Maulmain Chronicle, May 15.

64th—Lt. W. W. Lyttleton embarked in H.M. steamer Tartarus at Port Royal, Jamaica, for Cape Hayti, 2nd August.

65th—Assist.-Surg. Nicoll, who recently returned from Canada, in medical charge of invalids, has obtained leave to the 31st of next month.

67th Depot—Have been ordered to raise 200 recruits, but have not as yet enlisted more than 30.

68th Depot—Major Lord W. Paulet joins at Cork.

69th—Ens. Lord Glamis has sailed from Falmouth, for the purpose of joining the regiment in New Brunswick.

73d—Capt. Sterling has sailed by the Liverpool steamer to join in Canada.

74th—Lieut. Warde has been appointed to the Recruiting Service at Gloucester, in succession to Lieut. Mellis, of the 14th Foot, who will rejoin his corps.

75th—Lieut. F. Ellis retires from the service.

76th—Few corps have been so unfortunate in a brief service of five years in the West Indies as this reg. The left wing buried at Dominica, between March, 1834, and Oct., 1835, one third, or 74 men; within the last two months five officers have fallen victims to the pestilence of Demerara, Lieut.-Col. Dansey, Capt. Bruce, Lieut. and Adjt. Hopkins, Ensigns Phipps and Dickenson. 22 men died in the first 14 days, and 14 men in the last 9. The Military and civil medical practitioners at Demerara have one and all had the fever, and by the last accounts Staff-Surgeon Hackett, P.M.O., and Staff-Assist.-Surgeon Hardy were both very ill. Lieut.-Col. Tyler, K.H., who during all the recent sickness commanded the forces in British Guiana, having repeatedly suffered from his unremitting exertions to alleviate in some measure the melancholy condition of the troops, was at last persuaded, after a dangerous attack of fever, to return to Barbadoes, accompanied by Surgeon Firrell, 76th Reg., who has been, and still is, in a very delicate state of health. The awful mortality among the 76th Reg. has now been checked by the judicious and prompt plan adopted by Col. Tyler, in at once causing that reg. to vacate their barracks in George's Town, distributing it throughout the colony, to Mahica, Capuway, Essiquibo, and Berbice. Change of scene, air, and occupation, at once took place, and the minds of the soldiers were relieved from the painful prospect of their deceased comrades' graves. Capt. Hughes and 200 men of the 1st W. I. Reg. are now carrying on the duty at Demerara.

76th Depot—The Acting-Paymastership is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Cockraft to a company.

77th Depot—The detachment at Stockton-on-Tees marched on the 26th for Scarborough Castle, which it reaches this day, and will most likely remain there during the winter.

81st—The reg. will leave Gibraltar for Barbadoes next month.—Capt. Jeffery, Lieut. Nethercote, and Ens. Thompson, with 2 Serjeants and 120 r. and f., are under orders to embark for Gibraltar. Lieut. Wellesley has obtained leave to proceed to England on private affairs; Capt. Sphine also for the recovery of his health.

82d—Major Slater, 82d, previous to his departure from Gibraltar, to assume the command of the Depot, was entertained by his brother officers at a most sumptuous farewell dinner, when the health of this experienced veteran officer was drunk with enthusiastic applause. Maj. M'Kay, of the Depot 82d, on being ordered to join the service companies, it is thought, will retire from the Service. If so, Capt. Maxwell, Ass. Mil. Sec. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, at Malta, will get the Majority, and Lieut. Bates, A.D.C. to Sir S. F. Whittingham, the company. Paymaster Holdsworth has obtained 12 months' leave to proceed to England, and it is doubtful if he will rejoin again; he has been in the regt. 40 years, upon full pay, and was present with the corps in the expedition against Bellisle, June, 1800; the siege and capture of Flushing, commencing 3d August, 1809. Surgeon Pope also proceeds to England on leave.

82d Depot—Has received an order for one Capt., two Subalterns, two Serjeants, and 100 r. and f., to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Jamaica.

83d Depot—The Acting-Paymastership is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. D'Alton to a company.

87th—Paymaster Drury has arrived in England per the Northumberland.

89th—On Wednesday last, Lieut.-Col. Basden, 89th reg., and the portion of the officers stationed in this island, entertained the Governor and his family, and the principal inhabitants of this place, with a ball and supper at the ridge. Three mess-rooms were fitted up with professional taste, and supper supplied evidently regardless of expense. In addition to the Military and inhabitants, the opportune arrival of the Seringapatam, Vestal and Griffon, added greatly to the spirit of the party, which was kept till a late hour. Such entertainments are in the hospitable spirit of the service, and cannot fail to promote that good understanding with the inhabitants which is so desirable.—Antigua Register, 28th July.

91st Depot—Ens. W. M'Donald has resigned his commission.

93d—A beautiful piece of plate has been presented to Lieut.-Colonel M'Gregor by the officers of this regiment, in token of their admiration of his conduct while in command of that regiment. It is an elegant three-light candelabra, the light supported on the stalk of a thistle growing out of a pedestal, and standing beside it a full-length picture of a soldier of the 93d regiment, with claymore, drum, and colours around. The private soldiers have added, as their mite of respect, a beautiful pair of wine-coolers en suite.

93d Depot—Major Burgh has joined from leave of absence.

The depot has moved to Fort George in Inverness-shire. Lieut. Douglas, recently appointed, is on leave till 1st November.

94th—Capt. Macdonald retires from the service.

The 94th at Cannanore are quite surprised to find that no tables are allowed to their men in barracks, and indeed no wonder, for we believe that the Madras Presidency is the only part of the world where soldiers have not tables in established barracks.—Madras U.S.G.

98th—The Court-Martial which we last week mentioned as sitting in our barracks upon the Paymaster 98th reg., closed yesterday the hearing of the evidence for the prosecution, after sitting nineteen days. We have not heard anything to alter the opinion of the case which we last week expressed. Indeed, the evidence already adduced against him is so far favourable that he has determined, we hear, by the advice of his counsel, not to call any evidence for the defence. Such being the case, it would appear that these charges have been got up on very slight grounds. The Court will in all probability be occupied for a few days more in hearing counsel and deliberating upon the evidence; after which we shall be able to report upon their decision, which we do not wish to anticipate by any remark of our own.—Tyne Mercury, 24th Sept. [We have elsewhere noticed this Court-Martial.—Ed. N. and M. G.]

99th—Two cos. from Athlone are ordered to Drogheda, to replace two cos. 87th, which proceed to join the depot at the Pigeon House.

1st West India Reg.—Lieut.-Col. Capadose is ordered to St. Lucia, to assume the command of the reg., an officer whose singleness of mind, kindness of heart, sincerity of disposition, and suavity of manner, have justly endeared him to all those who have ever served under him. Major W. M. Mills, who is expected to rejoin by the 1st or 2d August packet, will be hailed with many hearty greetings by all his old brother officers. Lieuts. Doran, O'Donoghue, and Ensign Hamilton have arrived at Barbadoes from St. Lucia.

2d W. India Reg.—Capt. Wm. A. Hill died at Nassau on 6th Aug., leaving a wife and child to mourn their bereavement.

Rl. Staff Corps—Maj. G. D. Hall, formerly of this corps, is appointed Military Secretary to Mr. Thomson, Gov.-Gen. of British North America.

Rl. Artillery—Lieut.-Col. Grant proceeds to take the command of the forces in British Guiana. Mr. Draper, Inspector-General of Hospitals, accompanies him. Maj. Whitty's comp., consisting of 2 Captains, 1 Sub., 3 Serjeants, 1 drummer, and 70 r. and f., arrived at Dublin on 21st inst. in the Duchess of Kent steam-vessel from Liverpool, and Major Hardinge's comp., consisting of about 2 officers and 60 men, embarked at Dublin on the evening of the 23d for Liverpool, en route to Woolwich for Ceylon. This (Major Hardinge's) comp., 3d battalion, arrived on Wednesday at Woolwich by railroad. Captain Stokes and Lieut. C. R. Wynne came with it. Lieut.-Col. Petley having obtained sick leave, Lieut.-Col. Russell has received orders to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope, to relieve Lieut.-Col. Brandreth in the command at that station; and Lieut.-Col. Rudyerd will be for the command at Jamaica.—The funeral of the late Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Maclean, K.C.H., took place on Thursday at Charleton Church, but was attended by several officers of Woolwich Garrison, and persons connected with the public departments, as well as inhabitants of the town. Lieuts. Dennsey and Tutte proceed to England, from Gibraltar, on leave.

Rl. Engineers—The funeral of the late Lieut. R. Dashwood took place on Friday, at Charleton, privately, but was attended by many Officers of Woolwich Garrison.

Yeomanry.—On Saturday last Col. Tyute entertained the officers of the West Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry at Halswell House; nearly thirty sat down to a sumptuous dinner consisting of all the luxuries of the season, venison, game, &c. &c. The festivity of the day was kept up to a late hour. A happier or more convivial party has seldom met. The entertainment on this occasion was in that hospitable and splendid style for which Halswell has for centuries been renowned. The magnificent piece of plate presented to the Colonel by the officers, and also that presented by the privates of the regiment, adorned the side-board. We hear that it is in contemplation amongst the regiment to invite Col. Tyute to a dinner during the winter.

Highland Corps.—"I am glad" (writes a correspondent) "to observe by the recent promotions and appointments in the Highland regiments, that the Commander-in-Chief adheres strictly to the nationality of the corps, and appoints none but Scotchmen into these excellent regiments. This, allow me to say, is the only true method of keeping up the chivalrous spirit of such distinguished regiments."

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY,—Corrected to this Day.

Major Angelo, as Superintendent of the Sword Exercise, inspects the officers and non-commissioned officers of the different corps and depots stationed in Chatham garrison at the sword exercise, at 2 o'clock on Monday next.

A royal cabinet order has been published at Berlin, by which the introduction of percussion guns for the whole of the Infantry is ordered. This measure had been the subject of consideration and inquiry for many years. The introduction of percussion guns will render it necessary to make some changes in the usual exercise. One battalion of the 1st Reg. of Guards has been provided with such guns ever since 1834, by way of experiment. It is an important measure, which is highly agreeable to the Prussian Army.

Lieut. Lucas has taken the command of the Recruiting Department at Boyle, vice Lieut. Cruise.

Great surprise prevails in the Army in India, at the extraordinary will of a Field Officer, lately deceased there.

The departure of the 19th and 38th, for foreign service, immediately after the depots were pulled off from head-quarters, was suddenly countermanded, because of one simple circumstance—Mr. O'Connell unfurling the banner of Repeal, in such unqualified terms, on his return to Ireland, last month.—Limerick Chronicle.

It is expected that the Mediterranean drafts will be very late this year.

We stated on the 14th inst., that the appointment of Lieut.-General Sir Archibald Campbell, as Commander of the Forces at Bombay, would not take place. We believe the gallant General declined the appointment at the desire of his medical advisers. Sir Archibald has a pension of 1000*l.* per annum from the East India Company. The appointment has been since given to Lieut.-Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon, whom we announced so late back as the 17th Aug. as one of the officers named for the vacant Commander-in-Chiefships. Major-General Sir Hugh Gough will be for some time in command at Madras, as the new Commander-in-Chief at that Presidency, Lieut.-Gen. Sir S. F. Whittingham, now at Barbadoes, will return to this country before he proceeds to India.

We have to announce the arrival, from Kurrachee, yesterday morning, of Brigadier Valiant, K.H. He landed under a salute from the battery of 11 guns, and took command of the garrison during the day.—Bombay Times, June 12.

The number of soldiers employed in enforcing civil actions between Jan. 1 and July 26, 1839, in Ireland, was 986, besides two troops of Dragoons.

General Lord Lynedoch is on his way to Italy. His Lordship is now nearly 90 years of age, and bears his years nobly.

The Cavalry guard at Dublin Castle is now reduced to a Subaltern's party, such is the weak state of the first garrison in Ireland.

Staff-Assist. Surgeon John Stewart has had his leave extended to 22d Nov. next, on his private affairs.

Col. Fleming, C.B., Inspecting Field Officer at Glasgow, has obtained a month's leave from 25th inst.

Major John Whitehill Parsons, who is with the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, at Zante, is appointed a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

On Friday morning the whole of the Horse and Foot Artillery were mustered in front of the Artillery barracks at Woolwich, to witness the brutal punishment of the lash on a gunner named Richard Cresswell, for having stolen 16s. from a comrade. The sentence passed on him was, that he should receive 150 lashes, and be discharged and disarmed out of the regiment. During the process of flogging, the drums were beaten to stifle his cries. His back and loins were most dreadfully lacerated by the cat-o'-nine-tails, and, when he was released, the blood was streaming down his person and dyed the ground. Several men were sick at heart and fainted away during the torture, which every one present thought unnecessary, as the man is to be dismissed from the regiment as soon as his back is healed, which it is expected will be some time. He had once before been sentenced to receive 300 lashes, but the sentence was commuted to three months' imprisonment. He has been fourteen years in the service. It is said that he was yesterday in a delirious state, and also in great danger.—Observer, Government Paper.

[Excepting that the man received a flogging, which he richly merited, the above statement is, in every respect, grossly untrue. He was sentenced, when in the West Indies, to corporal punishment for disgraceful conduct—thieving, &c., but which he escaped in consequence of fever being at the time very prevalent. Had he been tried on the present occasion by the civil power he would most undoubtedly have been transported for life. He is now to be discharged from the corps with ignominy, and the final result of his career may be easily guessed.—Ed. N. & M.G.]

The Duke of Wellington was invited to Windsor to give éclat to a review got up for the purpose of amusing King Leopold and his Catholic Queen. However, the waters were out and covered the ground, and therefore there could be no review. When Her Majesty was informed of the disappointment, she archly said, "Oh, never mind the waters; we must have a review; ask the Duke to send for the marines, and make a splash with them."—Argus.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 7.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Official Letters of American and British Sea-actions.—Mr. Cooper, aware of the exaggerated and unfounded statements and assertions of his countrymen, when reporting their success or loss to their Government, has left out both the American and British reports; I must, therefore, refer to "James's Naval Occurrences" for these documents, to exercise a little critic-craft upon their composition.

The said Capt. David Porter captured in his ship, the Essex 36-gun frigate, the British collier-built sloop-of-war Alert, Capt. T. L. P. Laugharne, of twenty 18-pounder carronades, and 86 men and boys. The crew was in a deplorable state of disaffection. Mr. Cooper says—"The manner in which the latter was taken must be attributed to a sudden panic among her people, some of whom were executed for deserting their quarters, after their exchange. The officers appear to have behaved well."

"Capt. David Porter's Letter to the American Secretary of State.—'Essex, Aug. 17th, 1812.—Sir,—I have the honour to inform you, that on the 13th His Britannic Majesty's sloop-of-war, Alert, Capt. T. L. P. Laugharne, ran down on our weather-quarter, gave three cheers, and commenced an action (if so trifling a skirmish deserves the name), and after eight minutes firing struck her colours, with seven feet water in the hold, much cut to pieces, and three men wounded. I need not inform you that the officers and crew of the Essex behaved as I trust all Americans will in such cases, and it is only to be regretted that so much zeal and activity could not have been displayed on an occasion that would have done them more honour. The Essex has not received the slightest injury. The Alert was out for the purpose of taking the Hornet. I have the honour to be, &c., D. Porter.

"'Hon. Paul Hamilton, Secretary of the Navy.'"

Why did not David particularise the Alert's description, size, armament, and crew, for the information of his Government, which is the duty of every officer? Why regret the so much zeal and activity displayed at so trifling a skirmish, between a ship-of-war of 867 and an armed collier of 393 tons? Why make, as James accuses him, the false assertion that "the Alert was out for the purpose of taking the Hornet?" Because arrogance and vain-glory—unworthy assertion and misstatements, are the crooked paths to lead to the Columbian senate, which blindly distributes medals and rewards to the would-be-heroes!!

The British 36-gun frigate Orpheus, and Shelburne schooner, captured the regularly-built U. States' sloop-of-war, Frolic. Mark the difference in Capt. Pigot's letter.

"H.M.S. Orpheus, New Providence, April 25th, 1814. Sir,—I have the pleasure to acquaint you that on the 20th inst., after a chase of 60 miles, the point of Matanzas in Cuba bearing S.S.E. five leagues, we captured the U.S. ship Frolic, commanded by Master-Commandant Joseph Bainbridge. She had mounted twenty 32-pound carronades, and two long 18's, with 171 men; but, a few minutes before striking her colours, threw all her lee-guns overboard, and continued throwing also her shot, small arms, &c., until taken possession of. She is a remarkably fine ship of 509 tons, and the first time of her going to sea. She has been out from Boston two months, and frequently chased by our cruisers. Their only capture was the Little Fox, a brig laden with fish, which they destroyed. I have the honour to be, &c., "H. Pigot, Captain.

"The Hon. Alexander Cochrane, Commander-in-Chief."

Here is all the information required;—the description, size, force, and crew of the Frolic: her only performance during her brief existence—the brilliant one of destroying a fish-brig! the reprobate act of her crew in throwing overboard the shot, arms, &c., (even the pendant she struck) to the dishonour of her officers; and Capt. Pigot's silence as to defence gives us to understand that she did not fire a shot. This letter does not, however, contain the full and proper information required by both nations. I allude to the oversight, which is to be regretted, of not naming the Shelburne schooner (in company during the chase) as contributing to the capture of the Frolic, by her sailing and manœuvres, to drive her down within range of the Orpheus's guns. The insertion of the Shelburne's name in this public letter, would have been but justice due to the commanders of the Shelburne and Frolic, for many essential reasons. Were any of the crew of the Frolic executed, Mr. Cooper (like some of the British Alert's), for not doing their utmost to effect their ship's escape by endeavouring to cripple the schooner and frigate, and for not firing a shot in self-defence, for the honour of her flag? No! her officers and crew were honourably acquitted by a Court of Inquiry, and the American "Naval Monument" declared that "by this event we have lost a fine vessel and a gallant crew, but we have lost no honour." Why did not the Monument add, "but gained eternal glory?" Mr. Cooper is so convinced that the Frolic, on this occasion, did disgrace her nation and flag, that he could not give her name and capture a heading in his history, nor mention them in its contents for reference. He has smuggled her story into page 328 of the 2d vol. "The Frolic, 18, Capt. Bainbridge, had a short career, having been chased and captured on the 20th April, 1814, by the Orpheus, 36, Capt. Pigot, soon after she got out. There was no action, the Frolic having thrown most of her guns overboard in the chase." (And all the American honour when she committed to the deep her national pendant.) "As rules, challenges should not be given," observes Mr. Cooper. Agreed; but if under peculiar circumstances challenges are given and accepted, the champions should avoid the most distant hint at their national politics or causes of war in their communications.

The American is bile-ish, husky, and waspish, if you prick his pride with a pen that slashes at the "wisdom, and honour, and policy of our Congress." Whew!! "Torpedo, scalp, and eat a rattlesnake round the soul of the varmint." The challenge of Capt. Stackpoole of the Statira to Capt. Jones of the U.S. frigate Macedonian, through the hands of Commodore Decatur, is as manly as it is honourable, but a few words of it galled the heart's blood of the American officers. "The honour of my King, defence of my country, engaged in a just and unprovoked war, added to the glory of the British flag, is all I have in view." Commodore Decatur's reply to that paragraph does him infinite credit. It is the only good thing the American Naval Officers can boast of in their public correspondence or reports during the contest. "Whether the war we are engaged in be just and unprovoked on the part of Great Britain, as Capt. Stackpoole has been pleased to suggest, is considered by us as a question exclusively with the civilians, and I am perfectly ready to admit both my incompetence and unwillingness to confront Capt. Stackpoole in its discussion." Smart shot that as ever hissed out of Jonathan's rifle.

The most ludicrous anecdote in official reports, related to the derision of a British officer, in the American Naval History, appears in page 128, vol. i.—"Some curious errors appear in Sir Peter Parker's report of this affair (the attack of a British squadron on the Fort at Sullivan's island, Charleston) arising out of the distance at which he was placed, and the confusion of a hot conflict. Among other things, he says that a man was hanged on a tree in the rear of the fort, by a party that was entering it. Nothing of the sort occurred. Colonel Moultrie explains the affair of the man in the tree by saying that a shot took a soldier's coat and carried it into the branches of a tree, where it remained suspended during the rest of the day. So far from any confusion or disorder having existed in the fort when General Lee visited the works during the height of the action, the officers laid aside their pipes in order to receive him with proper respect." I suppose the officers also played "Fox and Goose" with their pipes in this hot conflict to shew their coolness and sang-froid!

Insignificant though it be for an officer, describing a victory and defeat, to descend to petty particulars—(what had Sir Peter's defeat to do with the Americans hanging a coward or traitor soldier, if such had proved the fact?)—Mr. Cooper, in this instance, has given a reason for the error, viz., the distance from the object and the confusion of battle; yet the historian should not permit his national prejudice to enjoy the laugh and joke on his side the water only, when we on this side in the perusal of the Yankee's out-and-out twisters which display their propensities to give a touch of the marvellous with a brush of the nonsensical. Let me remind Mr. Cooper that there was one Commodore Truxtun, of the United States 36-gun frigate Constellation, who fought a drawn battle with the French frigate La Vengeance, loaded with sugar, and had casks between main-deck guns, and that the said Commodore did relate, for the information of Congress, his wonders on the deep; gave an elemental specimen of his lofty composition, and happily described the long-winded instruments with which his brethren sound their fame and glory!

"Are wont to set the table in a roar,"

"Feb. 2, at one P.M., the wind being somewhat fresher than at the noon preceding, and appearance of its continuance, our prospect of bringing to action began again to brighten, as I perceived we were coming up to the chase fast, and every inch of canvas being set that could be of service, except the bag-reefs, which I kept in, the topsails, in case the chase, finding an escape from our thunder impracticable, should haul on a wind, and give us a fair battle, but this did not prove the Commander's intention. I however got within hail of him at eight P.M., hoisted our ensign, and had the candles in the battle-lanterns all lighted, and the large trumpet in the lee-gangway ready to speak him, and to depanâ the surrender of his ship to the United States of America, but he at that instant commenced a fire from his stern and quarter-guns, directed at our rigging and spars,"—which it is supposed extinguished the lights in the battle-lanterns, capsized the trumpet on the lee-gangway, or else Commodore Truxton would have blown a beautiful particular glorifying blast of his thunder against a sugar-laden French frigate, "to the high reputation of the American flag."

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.—MILITARY EXERCISES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Permit me to observe, that, since the expediency of improving the "morale" of the British Army has so ably been urged, by yourself and by many of your correspondents, its deficiency ought to have "struck," even long before this, the British Officer; for so he signs himself in your Number 348, folio 590, but it strikes me that few, if any, of his brother officers will applaud his saying "Make your soldiers dandies,—this explains what I mean;" or his advice, "Expend all your endeavours on that." His denying to the Prussian soldiers "bull-dog determination" will convince many that (if ever he has been in any field of battle) he never can have served with Prussians. The latter, instead of being angry, are more likely to suspect his being some waggish coiffeur, who, aware that the loss of Sampson's locks was fatal to his strength and courage, persuades himself that the soldier's morale must depend upon the tasteful titivation of his locks, and on Macassar oil, &c.! And so is Arthur, that thorough-going soldier, also waggishly criticising I. E. A.'s letter * about bayonet-fencing at the Stadium; overlooking that I. E. A. admits the defeat of the small as well as broad swordsman by Baron de Berenger's (my countryman's) expert and muscular sons; he next advises sabreurs "to seize the bayonet, and the farce is finished." Yes! about as easily as some fill their pockets with sparrows, merely by first putting salt on their tails; and with as much certainty as sportsmen carry home, like so many heads on a string, lots of wild ducks, if they will but swallow, in succession, the bit of bacon he has fastened to the end of the string. Arthur's former and warm recommendation of the adoption of bayonet-fencing, and the more especially as the troops of all the leading powers are very expert at it, convinces me that he seeks to entrap some novice, who may overlook that the moral is in the "if," and in the German saying, "Der ist kein narr der dem andern eine thorheit anrathet, sondern nur der ist es, der sie thut!" † I have the honour to remain,

A Prussian Moustache.

For the edification of our correspondents, we annex Lord Munster's opinion on dandyism in the Army.

"It would be astonishing," says his Lordship, in his work "Hussars' Life on Service"), "if our young (Military) men did not offer instances of affectation and puppyism; but active service is more likely to diminish these than any other process; and after having seen a young officer of the Guards (on whom, when

* N. & M. G., No. 346, folio 389.

† Trans.—He that advises another to commit a folly is not a fool, but he that follows that advice is the fool!

in London, the breath of heaven never fell till three o'clock, and after that hour he was only seen in white kid gloves) carrying home a bundle of red herrings from a sutler's, without an envelope, I no longer despair of any reformation. Not that a man is the worse for speaking of the troops on an opposite hill as the enemy's 'people,' or for pronouncing columbiums for columns, if he does his duty. Indeed, it has been proved in our Army that where service does not eradicate it, puppyism is not incompatible with good conduct or bravery. I think I see a gallant friend of mine, when a fire that ran along the high dry grass, threatened to envelop tents, arms, and ammunition, in one common destruction, escaping with a grace peculiarly his own on tip-toes, with his clothes in his hand, and hallooing to his servant to take care of his 'small articles.'

"When assembled at Talavera, before daylight, on the 24th of July, to attack the French position beyond the Alberche, and we were all sitting, though cloaked, on horseback, chilled, uncomfortable, dripping with dew, and full of the coming fight, an officer was heard to drawl to himself, with his tabatiere 'twixt thumb and finger, ''D— my scoundrel, he has not moistened my snuff.' But this same officer was no puppyish fop; for on the 28th, seeing a Colonel of a Spanish regiment of infantry, posted on the right of Gen. Campbell's division, offering so cowardly an example as to cause his regiment to give way, he rode up, and with a back-hand blow of his sword, judiciously applied to the recreant's face, brought the regiment not only again to its senses, but into line."

ROYAL MARINES AND ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Sir,—The retirements lately granted to Colonels Wingrove and G. Lewis, of the Rl. Marines, and promotion in consequence of Colonels and Second Commandants Adair and Conolly, show a continuation of this system, and must naturally cause the unattached Major-Generals of the Ordnance Service to inquire why are not some retirements granted to them. Several of them are older officers than the two retiring Colonels Commandant, and the greater part of them than those promoted, and many of the Colonels of Artillery than Col. Conolly.

Since the Brevet of January, 1837, when so many Colonels of the Ordnance corps were placed upon the shelf as unattached Major-Generals, the Artillery have had three vacancies of Colonels Commandant, the Engineers not one, and not a single retirement has been given to a Major-General of either corps; whereas, during that time, the Marines have been given nine retirements as Colonels Commandant, besides four officers promoted to that station.

The cost of retirement of one Colonel Commandant of Marines to the public now is 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* per diem (several have 2*l.* 5*s.*), he having a successor who receives the pay and allowances that were vested in him; whereas 1*l.*18*s.*6*d.* divided into three, and added to their present pay, would give a similar retirement to three unattached Major-Generals of the Artillery or Engineers without further cost, as they would not have any successors.

Possibly the above retirements may be thought not too much for the Marines; but who will say that it is not too much in comparison with the Ordnance corps, and that if the country can afford these retirements to the Marines, the Ordnance officers, their seniors, are not entitled to some consideration?

What Military reason can there be for those junior officers having such a preference given them? It cannot be said that those retirements are caused by the inability of the officers to perform the duties of Colonels Commandant, which must be very light indeed where there is a Colonel Commandant, a Colonel Second Commandant, and three Lieut.-Colonels, to carry on the duty at each of the Marine Establishments at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham, and Woolwich. In short, the only mode of accounting for such partiality seems to be, that at the present moment the Marines are the fashion; rather an unmilitary one, and little satisfactory to the Ordnance corps. CANDIDUS.

PLAN FOR GARRISONING THE WEST INDIA COLONIES.

Sir,—Through the medium of the Naval and Military Gazette, may I beg to submit for the consideration of Her Majesty's Minister for the Colonies, the General Commanding-in-Chief, and the Secretary at War, a plan for garrisoning Jamaica and the Windward and Leeward Islands, which, if carried into effect, would be found of mutual advantage to the army and these valuable colonies? The writer has served many years in the country, and considers that a due regard to cantonments and adapting regiments to the service, might be the means of saving many valuable lives: changes of quarters I have observed as injurious to regiments, as the climate has been found on first arrival in the country.

The plan I would propose is, to withdraw the regiments of the line from the colonies, and garrison by Maltese regiments and the black regiments. If it should be considered injudicious to leave the colonies without troops composed of British-born subjects, I then propose that an European regiment of reserve of two battalions should be formed in Jamaica, exclusively for colonial service, by volunteering of officers, non-commissioned officers, drummers, rank and file, from the THREE regiments of the line now in that command, who should be ordered home on the formation of the Colonial or Jamaica Regiment—European reserve at a healthy post.

I, in like manner, recommend that two white colonial regiments reserve be formed for service in the Windward and Leeward Islands, from the regiments now serving in that command, who should be ordered home on giving their volunteers. I also propose that the present Maltese Regiment be augmented to two battalions, and ordered for service in the colonies; and that three regiments or two battalions each of Maltese be forthwith raised, officered, and non-commission officered, &c., from the regiments serving in Malta, where they might be drilled and equipped in a comparatively short period, and embarked for the colonies, a service for which, from being natives of Africa, of temperate habits, and impenetrable to heat, they are well calculated. Any number of recruits could be had in Malta for any service whatever.

The two West India black regiments can be augmented by second battalions from the captured Africans by our cruisers; and if augmented to twelve regiments, as was the case during the late war, it would be of advantage to the colonies generally, as these blacks, when discharged, would become useful labourers in any island they might locate in. A number of recruits might be had in Upper Canada, where the American blacks abound, and would be found very desirous of serving as soldiers in the West Indies. By this means, if adopted, a permanent and efficient military force might be kept up in the West India command, without the distressing sacrifice of human life, and the present expense to the public. The discharged Maltese might be usefully employed as police, and advance the interest of estates by furnishing workmen and labourers in the colonies.

If these hints could in any way tend to remove any of the injurious consequences of the present system, it will, I am sure, be a boon (on the part of Government) to our army, and a source of felicitation and joy to the relations and and friends of the officers and men liable to colonial service.

In the Windward and Leeward stations, Barbadoes and St. Christopher's should be the stations of the two European battalions of reserve. A RETIRED OFFICER.

THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL SIR PATRICK LINDESAY, COLONEL WAUGH, AND THE COORG CAMPAIGN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—On perusing an extract from the N. and M. Gazette of 30th March last, relative to the services of the late Major General Sir Patrick Lindesay, I was forcibly struck with the too palpable attempt of its author to throw unmerited blame on a General Officer of the Madras Army, in a vain attempt to exalt another at his expense, and that of truth. To scan the writer's object in speciously placing his opinion of another's defeat in invidious comparison with his most illiberal construction of the check experienced by the officer whose "skill and judgment" he would disparage, is no difficult matter, developed as it is by the disingenuous omission of all facts or circumstances to enable the reader to form a just opinion, thus endeavouring to lead others blindly into the adoption of his misrepresentations. Far be it from me to advance aught with a view of detracting from the just merits of the distinguished individual whose eulogy forms the chief feature of the extract alluded to; but in setting you and others right on the subject of his Coorg campaign, I do so in the firm conviction that his nobleness of mind would have spurned with soldier-like indignation the idea of building his own fame on the ruins of a brother soldier's. Your correspondent does not however betray the possession of so fastidious a sentiment; nay, more—he would seem to indulge a feeling of prejudice, which it is notorious, even at this distance of time, pervades the minds of many of Her Majesty's officers, towards the Commander of the northern column (Waugh). What this proceeds from is equally well known, and may be gathered from what is to follow. Actuated apparently by such feelings, does he insidiously make it appear that the rash and injudicious proceedings which led only to the failure at Buck, but for a time crippled the means of following up the object of the campaign, were attributable to want of skill in Waugh, who, he says, was "beaten;" whereas, but for his energy, his decision, and his presence of mind, what was a mere accident might have become a disaster, and a total defeat have been the consequence. Monson's was a rout or defeat, while Lake's repeated failures in the assault of Bhurtpore was no more than a mere failure of a portion of his force on an isolated object, and did not, more than in Waugh's case, defeat the ultimate object of the campaign; neither could the gallant Cotton's failure on the white pagoda, when advancing with the water column on Donabue, in Burmah, be construed into a defeat. In that case, Sir Archibald Campbell, on hearing of Cotton's check, changed his own line of march, and moved upon Donabue, where he took up a position for its reduction. A summary of events connected with the object and operations of Waugh's column, to which I shall add an extract of the Governor-General's orders on the occasion, will sufficiently refute every unjust imputation, and give unprejudiced minds an opportunity of forming just conclusions.

The chief object of the several columns was to penetrate the enemy's country on the same day, with peremptory instructions to Waugh to join Brigadier Lindesay by a certain day, or if the latter should precede him, to push on for the Rajah's capital. The northern column marched on the 1st April, and encountered various difficulties during its march, as well on the first as on the second day, the road leading through a difficult tract of country, interspersed with hill and jungle, and the enemy harassing its progress by an almost constant fire from the jungles, principally directed against the rear-guard and baggage. On the second day, a smart and successful attack was made on a fortified position through which the route lay, and the place was carried with little loss, save a few wounded. On the third, the column commenced its march at day-break, and in consequence of the road passing the strong, natural, and artificially fortified position of Buck, the advanced guard, commanded by a Field Officer, was strengthened beyond the number of the previous day. About 9 A.M., the range of woody hills forming the boundary of Coorg Proper, and over which the road to Somwarpett and Muddekary, or Meroura, lay, appeared in sight, completely closing the view of the column to the front; no symptom, however, of a fortification on any part of them was visible, and they presented nothing to the view but a mass of dense and apparently impervious jungle. On approaching the foot of these hills, the road passes under the walls of a strong village fortified in the manner of the country, with an earthen rampart and dry ditch; this was occupied by the enemy, who speedily abandoned the place, retreating to a high hill in their rear, where some of them remained in sight, watching the movements of the column as it made a detour to the left. I shall here pause in the narrative whilst I attempt a brief, though I fear imperfect, sketch of the position of Buck Stockade. At the foot of the hill, just where the ascent to the gateway commences, runs a deep ravine or nullah, which, in its existing state was utterly impassable for guns: from this the road, which was partly paved with very large stones, runs, after a steep ascent at first, in a slanting direction up the side of the hill, and on nearly reaching the summit, makes a short turn to the left, passing under the Brokadoo or gateway of the Buck Stockade. The gateway consisted of two solid and strong towers of masonry with two stories of chambers in each; the gate was enormously thick and strong, composed of solid timber and iron. On the right of the gateway was a high wall of stone and mud, with a deep dry ditch in front; on the left a high timber stockade; each of these defences extended about thirty paces, ending in the usual low mud wall, which formed the rest of the work, carried to some very considerable distance. In front of the gate was built a bamboo stockade on each side of the road, as far as the sharp turn before alluded to, where a bamboo gate was fixed; besides which all the visible part of the fortification was defended by bamboo stockades, spikes, &c.; near the end of the stone wall, on the right of the gateway, was mounted on a swivel a gun carrying a ball of about two pounds and a half weight, and in nearly a line with this gun a large tree had been felled, so as to fall across the road, and completely block it up. The foregoing sketch may serve to convince one of the impracticability of making an impression at this point without the aid of guns. Let us now follow the advance which, on passing the village before-mentioned, separated according to orders into two divisions, with the most positive instructions to avoid a front attack, which Waugh enjoined the leader of the advance on no account to risk, and this he no doubt did from an intuitive conviction of its impracticability, inducing him to withhold the slightest discretionary power to the Field Officer of the day on this point, whose endeavours he directed to be confined to take the enemy's position on both flanks, giving intimation, if successful, by sound of bugle; but otherwise, if they found the flanks impenetrable, to retire on the column, when its Commander would take other measures. The orders to join Lindesay, or what is the same thing, to gain the road he was taking, on that day were so peremptory, that Waugh felt bound to make the attempt by an endeavour to get round the flanks of the enemy, which, it cannot be too often insisted on, must have succeeded had his directions been either wholly or partially observed; or if a flank attack had been made and not succeeded, it would have fully justified him in proceeding by regular approaches with his guns, as against any other fortified position, but which of course would have occasioned great delay and prevented his strengthening, by joining Lindesay's column in its intended attack upon the capital at the time appointed. In what manner these orders were regarded let the sequel shew. (To be continued.)

THE NAVAL UNIFORM.

Sir,—I perceive by your Gazette that it is in contemplation to change the Naval uniform, which is the most unbecoming vulgar dress that could be put on, and so unfit for a sailor, being buttoned up like a hog in armour, and like a Frenchman. Both French, Spanish, and Portuguese, are turned up with red, a reason to change ours. Why not have embroidered collar and cuffs, and do away with the lace, so like a livery servant, and give the Captains and Lieutenants laced hats? All Midshipmen wore gold-laced hats in the days of Howe, St. Vincent, Nelson, and Collingwood. The alteration would add to the respectability of the service. TRUTH.

"You are an excellent packer," said Theodore Hook to a waiter at the Athenæum. "How so, Sir?" returned the other. "Why," responded the wit, "you have contrived to pack a bottle of wine into a pint decanter."

"R. N." is right. Had the vacancy fallen during the time that Sir George Cockburn was senior sea lord at the Board of Admiralty, that gallant officer would doubtless have had the refusal of the appointment. We are not aware of any such rule as " R. N." alludes to, but the practice has always been to offer any desirable appointment or command falling in to the Senior Naval Officer at the Board, provided he is eligible, because the duties of his post are most arduous and severe, his patronage next to nothing—merely the appointment of Lieutenants to ships—not to commands, and his salary totally inadequate to the services he is required to perform. There are cases, no doubt, where the appointment to Greenwich Hospital has been declined, when, during a war, the officer selected has preferred to hoist his flag on active service.

We call attention to the memoir which we this day give of Sir Thomas Hardy: it contains an important Naval anecdote that has not before appeared in our annals.

The Distribution of the Navy will be given next week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1839.

It is at length decided that the establishments of Service and Depot Companies, which have hitherto been regulated according to the Stations of Corps, are to be placed upon a new and uniform system.

The Service Companies are to consist of six hundred effectives, and to be kept up by the percentage excess of Recruiting at Home.

The Depot Companies are to have two hundred effectives, viz. fifty per company, with the additions of recruits to keep up casualties happening abroad.

Unquestionably this is an improved arrangement, but we would much rather have announced the abolition of the Depot System.

Since our last, the appointment vacated by Lord Howick has been filled up. Mr. T. B. Macaulay is the new Secretary-at-War, with a seat in the Cabinet.

In the N. and M. G. of 23d February, 2d and 9th March, we made known, and fully reviewed, this gentleman's "New Penal Code for India." Of Mr. Macaulay's great talents there can be no question with men uninfluenced by party prejudices. Of his fitness for conducting the Finance Department of the Army we shall not now pretend to offer an opinion, but be content to wait and watch the course of coming events. Mr. Macaulay has only to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor in office, to entitle himself to be considered an able administrator, as well as a liberal friend to the Army. To acquire this reputation, he must (as Lord Howick did) act upon his own judgment; for if he suffers himself to be led by official men, the old "chandler-shop system" will soon be revived, and the War-office again become contemptible in the opinion of the whole Army.

Mr. Macaulay's appointment has of course produced the usual party assaults:—some of the most amusing we annex:—

Times.—The Downing-street papers inform us, that the War-office vacancy is filled up—or blocked up, more strictly speaking—by Mr. Thomas Babington Macaulay, and the accession of this gentleman to the Ministry is boasted of as a triumph to the cause of "reform." We shall see.

This hon. and learned (is he not a lawyer?) gentleman has lately been inflicted upon India, and has made that vast empire the subject of certain abstract crotchets in the way of codification. We do hope and trust that he will not set about crotchetising the Mutiny Bill, or new codifying the British Army. The learned and philosophical empyric is known as an experienced renewer. We do beseech him to abstain from practising that art upon our troops. He is a stubborn and ostentatious balloter; let him hesitate before he introduces into our service the election of officers by ballot. Mr. Babington Macaulay—Mr. Babington Macaulay—mighty in language—a deliverer of all but interminable speeches—busy yourself with aspirations—confine yourself to words—leave substances unmolested. Beware of things. Touch not the world of action. You are a machine for giving utterance to noises, not for inculcating useful thoughts, or for directing purposes, in practice wise and beneficial. You are stuck into this vacuum to stop a leak in the ship, because no workmanlike or well-adapted plug could be found for it. We do fear that, in your abandonment of bookmaking and merely literary exertion, you will become a mere source of vexatious fretfulness to yourself, of exultation to men of coarse and uncultivated, but plain and vigorous minds, and of positive mischief to our great national establishments.

Morning Herald.—Mr. Macaulay has written some score or so of clever articles in the Edinburgh Review. As a member of the House of Commons—as a debater—he has never displayed aught but a very slender measure of efficiency.

Mr. Macaulay is a very heavy sort of personage. He possesses, as a speaker, no facility, no aptness at reply. He commits a long and smartish essay to memory, and he fires it off (if wind and tide prove favourable), in the House of Commons. Of true oratorical power, however, he possesses not a vestige. For the wear and tear of business he is altogether unfitted. Let him be brought fairly into collision with the rough edge of public affairs, and his failure will be complete.

Mr. Macaulay has been, through life, a creature of the coteries. Had he depended on his unaided merits, he would now have been earning a painful livelihood by the exercise of tongue or pen. But he betook himself early in life to the more profitable arts which are taught in the literary and political cliques of London. He made himself agreeable to the Whig patrons of periodical criticism. He trod in those pleasant paths that lead to Holland House, and to the mansion of Lord Lansdowne. He threw himself for support upon the spirit of religious dissent. Hence Mr. Macaulay's effusions in the Edinburgh Review were by influential "liberals" applauded to the echo, that did applaud again. Hence Mr. Macaulay was originally introduced into Parliament. Hence Mr. Macaulay—having utterly failed as a Parliamentary debater—was elevated to an Indian appointment, with 10,000*l.* a-year. Hence Mr. Macaulay has been again sent to the House of Commons. Hence Mr. Macaulay has been appointed to the Secretaryship at War, with a seat in the Cabinet.

Mr. Macaulay will prove a failure—so far as success in the House of Commons is concerned—in office, as he is out of office.

There is an intention, we strongly suspect, of extending the period of command of Inspecting-Commanders and Commanders of Revenue Cruisers from three to five years; the age of the former will likewise most probably not be restricted, as at present on their admission, to forty-five years. This arrangement, it is hoped, will give very general satisfaction to the ins, but the outs will, we fear, have need of all their philosophy, if they are obliged to wait for two years longer before they can procure reappointments.

We hear of nothing as yet affecting the Lieutenants; but, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring officers of this rank, it is in contemplation to appoint Mates of the Navy to the situations of Chief Officers at an adequate rate of salary.

The best course we can adopt to satisfy the numerous inquiries poured in upon us, respecting the Military Commission, is to recapitulate the original information which at different times has appeared in this paper. We have already said the information may be relied upon, and therefore we shall only notice a contradiction put forth by a contemporary, by assuring our readers who are absent from the metropolis, that there are at least one hundred officers belonging to the United Service and Army and Navy Clubs who know just as well as ourselves that the statements are almost to the letter correct. The resolutions were long since settled, we believe on the 18th July, and the members of the Commission have dispersed: there is no secrecy in the matter; and the only pending questions are the form of Report, and the mode and extent of publication.

The Mates of the Royal Navy (as stated in our last) will receive commissions, an increase of pay while serving, and half-pay after certain service.

The Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, while serving, will have an increase of pay, which may encourage them to remain afloat.

Adjutants of regiments (Lieutenants in the Army) will receive the benefit of the one shilling increase of pay from length of service, and thus be induced to retain the post of Adjutant.

A certain number of Officers of the Royal Artillery will be allowed to retire.

The pay of Captains of the Royal Marines will be assimilated to that of Army Captains.

The Medical Departments of the Army and Navy will be improved.

An allowance granted to Naval Officers for loss of baggage, &c.—N. and M. G., 10th Aug.

Colonels on the full-pay of regiments as Lieut.-Colonels are to be permitted to retire on 300*l.* per annum, but when advanced to Major-Generals to receive 400*l.* per ann.—N. and M. G., 17th Aug.

Army Officers of thirty years' full-pay service will be allowed to retire on the full-pay of their regimental rank.—N. and M. G., 31st August.

We now beg to direct attention to the impossibility of relieving regiments abroad at the end of ten years' foreign service, without curtailing the already too short space of time allotted to the home service of infantry regiments, because we cannot spare troops from home to replace them.

The foreign service of the undermentioned regiments has expired, allowing twenty years to regiments on the continent of India, and ten years to those corps stationed in other colonies:—

The 7th Fusiliers to send home the	11th Foot.
1st Battalion Royals	do.	15th Foot, and
20th Foot	do.	72nd Foot.

Thus we have one regiment of cavalry (abroad twenty years), and seven regiments of infantry (of which one has been abroad twenty and two others twelve years), which it is impossible to relieve, in consequence of the want of troops to replace them from home, unless by sending regiments abroad before the termination of their three years' home service.

The answer that may be given is, that the outbreak of civil war in Canada prevented the relief of some, if not all, these corps at the proper time, and that they would have been relieved were it not that this sudden emergency required the maintenance of an increased military force in America. But what are the real facts of the case? Before the regiments were sent to Canada, in 1838, the same complaint existed, and now, after sixteen months, we dare not withdraw a single regiment thence unrelieved.

Still the regiments abroad must remain unrelieved until the Chartists in England and the Ribandmen in Ireland will condescend to be so quiet as to permit Government sending out regiments to relieve them. We want an increase of the Army, and an increase in the number of regiments of the Line, that our colonies may be properly garrisoned, and that our regiments may not be detained abroad whenever additional troops may happen to be required in any part of the United Kingdom.

Ceylon is at this moment deficient by one regiment of its usual garrison, although the 61st have been prevented from returning home; the 18th and 94th have proceeded to India, and we dare not supply the place of the absent regiment from the Cape, St. Helena, or the Mauritius. The 13th Dragoons and 16th Foot have commenced the twenty-first year of their service in India, and are very likely to remain unrelieved for the next three or four years to come, especially as affairs in the East wear such a threatening aspect. The regiments serving in Canada and the Mediterranean, whose foreign service ought to expire this year, do not expect to return home for at least three, and probably four, years more; and, although they have not reason to complain at being left an extra year or so in those stations, yet it is shameful that regiments in India, Ceylon, or the Cape, should be similarly treated, more especially as a sufficient augmentation of the Army would not have met with any opposition in the last Session of Parliament.

We recommend to the special notice of the new Secretary-at-War the case of Paymaster Dunlevie, 98th Foot. This gentleman has been tried by Court-Martial, on a set of charges which might almost be termed frivolous and vexatious. At all events, the like charges, or a great portion of them, might be preferred against almost every Paymaster in the service. We put it to the War-Office, whether, on discovering any trifling irregularities in Paymaster Dunlevie's accounts, it would not have been sufficient to have directed the attention of the Commanding Officer of his regiment to the matter.

Paymaster Dunlevie is not deficient one farthing in his accounts; officers have been called from different regiments to attend his Court-Martial, the sitting has occupied already more than nineteen days, and what with travelling and other expenses, the public will have to pay an enormous sum for this most unnecessary investigation.

We append a communication which has reached us from Captain Simmons, an officer whose scientific acquirements we have often had the pleasure of reviewing in this Paper.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Having passed some weeks this summer in a retired part of France, I did not, till the other day, see the flattering notice you did me the favour to take in May last of the pamphlets I have been induced to publish on the subject of Naval Artillery, or I should at an earlier date have offered some explanation with respect to the bored-up guns, which point, you say, you "trust to see explained."

The greatest portion of metal has (it may be presumed) "been taken out of the lightest gun," because the lightest gun had previously, being an 18-pounder, the smallest bore; its length, though less than the 24-pounder, not compensating for the greater quantity of metal required to be reamed out to bring it to 6·3 inches, the measure established as the 32-pounder calibre for the bored-up 18-pounder, and 24-pounder of 32 cwt., only.

I fully assent to the truth of your remark,—"That unless the coin was abstracted or flew out, the breach could not be lowered;" but conviction as to this truth does not prevent my believing that the muzzle is sometimes jerked up in the recoil, notwithstanding the coin or elevating screw may remain fixed. I believe that I have too often witnessed this occurrence to doubt its possibility. The breach of a gun is sometimes thrown up during the recoil, the gun falling on the muzzle. This arises from the reaction on the coins, or stool-bed, the muzzle making, as it were, an effort to rise in the trunnion beds.

I have no direct means of establishing the truth of my remark; it was first made when venturing to impeach the alleged superiority of Sir William Congreve's 24-pounder; I may then fairly employ any of this gentleman's arguments which favour, or profess to favour, the fact to which I adverted.

Sir William Congreve, in "an elementary treatise on the mounting of heavy ordnance," page 7, says—"To explain the principles on which the second object," (the production of a smooth and uniform recoil) "is attainable, it will be necessary to point out the causes of the jumping motion in the recoil of the gun as now mounted." Sir William then gives the elevation of a gun, which diagram I trust may be dispensed with, his reasoning being rendered equally intelligible by observing that the letter C is placed on the end of the trunnion; the letter E on the fore axle; the letter F on the hind axle; the line of the deck or platform being marked A B. Sir William proceeds: "When this gun is fired, it is evident that the carriage is set in motion by the trunnions C, while it recoils in the trucks E and F, along the surface or deck A B. In the recoil, therefore, of a gun so mounted, an effect is produced by the resistance at E and F, tending to raise the truck E from A B, in proportion to the length of the lever C E; and it is evident, with a given resistance at E and F, that C E might be increased that the gun must necessarily fall backwards when fired."

If this reasoning of Sir William Congreve be sound, the feasibility of my assumption—that the muzzle of a gun may be jerked up in the recoil—is proved; but whether sound or not, be it again observed, it is only resorted to in the absence of positive proof, in defence of an assumption brought to bear against the vaunted superiority of Sir William Congreve's own gun.

With reference to your remark, "that all platforms—ships' decks as well as garrison—are arched or inclined so as to produce a contrary effect, and, in fact, raise the breach, consequently depressing instead of elevating the muzzle during recoil," I beg leave to observe, that the platform from which Sir W. Congreve's gun was fixed was, as platforms generally are, a plane inclining in one direction only—from the rear to the front, or towards the object fired at—the fall being one inch each yard. By no possibility, therefore, as it appears to me, could the platform have the effect of either depressing or elevating the muzzle during the recoil; the platform being a plane, the rear trucks during the recoil must have had the same relative height over the fore trucks as before the gun was fired. I certainly have seen traversing platforms on which the hind trucks were made, towards the last part of the recoil, to run upon an inclined plane having a greater inclination, or greater in ascent, than that on which the fore trucks recoiled; but I never saw this attempted on a common platform, nor do I see how the decks of a ship can be arched or inclined so as to produce this effect.

Thomas Fred. Simmons.

In the explanation, respecting the first point adverted to, we at once concur; but we must confess we do not admit the gallant officer's reasoning as regards the last. A ship's deck is slightly arched, for the purpose of allowing water to run to the scuppers, and not to break the recoil, or give a greater facility for running out or returning the gun to the port—because in most cases the ship's inclination or motion destroys such effect,—but a garrison platform is a fixed plane, inclining towards the embrazure, for no other purpose that we can imagine but for these facilities. Now, if the axis of the gun is laid parallel with this plane, we admit that the extent of the recoil will not alter the elevation of the piece; but if the reverse is the case, and these lines are not parallel, we imagine it does. Be this as it may, it is certain that in practice a light gun performs feats which set all these niceties at defiance; for it was not uncommon on board ships, during the war, for the gun-locks to be destroyed by striking against the beam over the breech. This lively motion was no doubt caused by rapid firing, and double shotting, over large charges of powder. We can only repeat our hope, that Captain Simmons will persevere in his labours to elucidate and render intelligible a science hitherto involved in complicated technicalities. No one is more capable.

Bread, "the staff of life," and other household articles equally indispensable to preserve the stamina, have been gradually rising in price for these three years past, and under present circumstances will probably be still dearer. Whilst the wages of artificers and others in the employment of private individuals are increased during seasons of scarcity, this is not the case with those serving Government; and the dock-yard shipwrights feel the present drain upon their scanty earnings severely, so much so as to have addressed the following respectful appeal to the Lords of the Admiralty. We cannot admit that it would be politic to vary the scale of wages with every shift of price in the corn-market, but we trust their Lordships may be induced to improve the condition of this valuable class of men, and allow them to earn more wages by performing job or other work.

As regards the system of classification to which the petitioners allude, and which, as it is worked, they consider a grievance, we shall not repeat our opinion at present, but we think it would be an advantage to the Government shipwrights, to allow their sons to be admitted more extensively as apprentices, and assist in earning some addition to the weekly pay, in the school where their services may be hereafter required.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

The Petition of the Shipwrights of Deconport Dock-yard,

Most Humbly Sheweth,—That in order to meet the exigencies of a protracted war, it was found expedient to increase the workmen employed in the important business of ship building far beyond the requisite number for a time of peace—consequently, when that period arrived, your petitioners became subjected to many and severe privations. To these they patiently submitted, from a consideration that the surplus quantity would constantly become less, as also cheered by persuasion that the time would arrive when their industry would again receive the reward which alone makes labour sweet.

That a vast proportion of your Lordships' petitioners have long laboured under grievances resulting from a system of classification, and are now dismayed by an apprehension of its continuance; for, by the present arrangement, it is impossible that they by any length of servitude, or by any exertions of their own, can ever attain to the first class, and, consequently, never beyond their present inferior rank. It will, therefore, be perceived by your Lordships, that the system has a tendency to enervate and discourage, rather than to stimulate to exertion, or to draw forth those energies so desirable in every body of men engaged in Her Majesty's service.

Petitioners further humbly solicit your Lordships' kind attention to the fact, that the addition of one day's work per week (and for which petitioners desire ever to feel grateful) has, in consequence of the increased price of every necessary of life, failed to answer the end proposed by your Lordships, and so earnestly sought by your Lordships' petitioners.

They, therefore, humbly entreat your Lordships to take their case into consideration, and to grant an increase of pay, so as to enable them to meet the advanced prices of provisions, and to remove the disparity which now exists in the day-pay of petitioners, who, of necessity, are compelled to perform in a given time an equal quantity of work while employed side by side; and your Lordships' petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

We regret to find the following paragraph in the columns of a respectable contemporary, the Edinburgh Observer, of the 20th instant:—

"Sir Howard Douglas is very unpopular in the Ionian Islands. His sway is described as despotic and unconstitutional. No newspaper is allowed to be published in those islands, which either reports the proceedings of the legislature, or comments on the government of Sir Howard. Even English newspapers, before being distributed, are subjected to inspection by an officer appointed for the purpose."

The appearance of a paragraph like the above in prints notorious for ill-nature and abuse of all that is good and honourable, might have passed without notice, but the Edinburgh Observer is a paper of a different character, and therefore we lament that it has been imposed upon by some secret enemy of a gallant and very talented officer.

With a long and very extensive acquaintance among the General and Field Officers of the Army we conscientiously declare, that we should have a difficulty in pointing out any one less likely than Lieut.-General Sir Howard Douglas to commit an unjust act, either in his public or private capacity. Moreover, we are in the continual receipt of letters from the seat of his government, and we never find him mentioned but in terms of the highest respect and esteem. The duties of the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands are of a most difficult and responsible character, and we are convinced that no officer could discharge them more satisfactorily to the inhabitants than Sir Howard. To please all we know to be impracticable; but when the Lieutenant-General relinquishes his command, his retirement will be regretted by every one who is friendly to the British Government in the Mediterranean Isles.

We intended last week to have made some comments upon the two letters of X. Y. Z., which appeared in our Gazette of the 14th and 21st instant, but want of space prevented us.

Our correspondent, like many others who have written upon this subject, bases his plan upon a General Registry, that is, a Personal Registry; all the movements of seamen to be noted upon their tickets, as well as their age, description, &c.

Now, we have given more than one plan in our pages for effecting this, but it cannot be denied, that every proposal would be attended with enormous expense, and as registered men have no more inducement to serve than they have at present, whilst it is proposed to bring them under penalties when they refuse the call to do so, the question arises, whether it would not be more politic to assign the sum required to work the machinery of a personal registry,—say one hundred thousand pounds per annum at least,—in the form of inducements to serve voluntarily? The expense of one will be continual, whereas the other need only be encountered when the emergency arises.

Our correspondent appears to think, that the "Customs" could fill up the seaman's registry ticket every voyage, and of course exact and render such other particulars as would be required to maintain a register of this description. Certainly, the existing establishment could not do so, in addition to their present work, and it must be increased to the same extent as would be required for separate officers. If X. Y. Z. turns to the Red Book, he will find that there are 108 principal ports in the United Kingdom, and each of these has sub-ports, or creeks, where vessels report, varying in number from one or two to a dozen or more; and at all and every, as the lawyers say, of these must a registry officer be stationed; for it cannot be expected of a seaman to trudge over ten or twelve miles of country to get the entry made. Experience proves that the duty, if confided to the Customs, would be neglected; for the apprentices, who, under the statute 4th George IV., cap. 25, (passed in 1824, and left to the care of that department to execute,) should have been maintained at about 12,000, were found, when the present law came into operation, not to reach half that amount.

Upon the details of our correspondent's suggestion it is needless to comment. The difficulty appears to be the establishment of the General Personal Registry, which all admit to be the groundwork of any plan that can be adopted; and we fear that the Legislature would not be induced to vote the funds for this purpose, unless they were well assured that, after registering the men, means could be devised to induce rather than compel them to serve when called on, without the necessity for maintaining stringent laws, which would have the effect of driving vast numbers into foreign service, and deter others from entering on the profession.

We may just mention, however, that the general adoption of steam navigation in harbours and rivers materially interferes with the profitable working of X. Y. Z.'s plan; and that to increase the fares of watermen, who cannot get half or a quarter work even at the present low rate, is a very questionable mode of improving their emoluments, unless indeed the public could be compelled to go afloat occasionally for their especial benefit. There is one assumption in our correspondent's letter, which we assure him is altogether gratuitous, namely, that we are aware that the tyrannical conduct of Naval Officers is such, that more than one ship is in a state of mutiny, &c. Now, we declare we have never heard of such a thing; but, on the contrary, the complaint is on the other side, of the great relaxation of discipline, which always is, and must be, the case, more or less, in long seasons of peace, when ships are manned by volunteers.

Since the above was in type we have received the following from a correspondent:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The tenacity with which people will put forth sentiments on subjects, of the merits of which they display most profound ignorance, is surprising. X. Y. Z. would legislate most profoundly when he proposes to "man the Navy without additional expense;" and in exemplification of this "no expense," talks of saddling passengers by ferry-boats with three halfpence each, in addition to every sixpence they now pay; an expense, by the by, chiefly incurred by the lower classes, viz., market-people and the like. But his whole aim is that of oppressing the poor. Where is the sailor, after servitude required by his scheme, to find 14*l.*, 7*l.*, 10*l.*, &c., for the purchase of license to ply his own boat, after incurring the expense of purchasing her, the cost being from 15*l.* to 20*l.*, when complete in masts, sails, and oars? Verily, he gives Jack credit for more saving knowledge and practice than I have ever met an instance of, and I have been in prize-taking ships too. He next proceeds to libel the Royal Navy, by assuring us that "he knows sailors to be prejudiced against the pendant, and that too not without reason, when he considers the bad example and tyrannical conduct of many officers, even at the present day; for he presumes (and it is presumption indeed) that you, Mr. Editor, are aware that we have more than one ship in a state of mutiny." Now, Sir, I have been a good deal at sea since the peace, and, moreover, I live in a seaport town of some magnitude, and have daily intercourse with a vast number of brother tars, yet have I never heard so much as a whisper of such wide-spread mutiny, nor have I witnessed or heard complaints of "bad example or tyrannical conduct" of officers employed. That a lax discipline is prevalent, he might have justly asserted; but this is far removed from tyranny. But his system of pensioning seamen without expense to the Government is in perfect keeping with the vaunted "liberality" of the present day, not caring to saddle the poorest of the community with the requisite tax for that purpose. He is, however, mistaken as every arrangement of this nature must be a Government measure, and the "public" contribute to that end, not individuals who are least interested. When he attacks Captain Marryat's remarks upon the ingratitude of seamen, he clearly shows that he knows nothing of their character. I know not who Captain Walker may be, to whom he refers, but all the Captain Walkers in the British Navy can never induce gratitude in the British sailor their scorning danger, and fighting to the last inch in honour of their flag, is all true enough, and Captain Marryat never said aught to the contrary. I strongly opine that X. Y. Z. belongs to that fashionable tribe of liberals, who are ready enough to launch out in eulogies which no one can deny as the merit of the British seaman, but is quite averse to the legitimate mode of making a proper provision for him at the hands of Government. He wants Courts-Martial too, to award the "dismissal of seamen from the service;" does he not know that the Articles of War contain no such sentence, and that the award of such a tribunal must be "Death, or such other punishment as the customs of the service award," which would probably be "flogging round the fleet," and is not the act of dismissal by the Admiralty (a competent court in itself) a much more lenient measure? But enough of this. TRUE BLUE.

United Service Benevolent Institution.—The meeting on Saturday was, we are sorry to say, very thinly attended. Admiral Sir George Cockburn took the chair, and made a brief address; after which the Report, recommending the establishment of such a fund, was agreed to. We suspect Sir George Cockburn never before presided at a public meeting, convened by advertisement, and consisting of half a dozen officers. This thin attendance, however, should convince the projectors that the United Service will not support the proposed institution, unless it is based upon principles of regulations and subscriptions, very different from those hitherto put forth under the sanction of "Directors." We, therefore, conjure the very few, but respectable officers of the Army and Navy, who, with the best intentions, are persevering without the countenance of the services, to retrace their steps. A large sum of money has been received through a "Subscription Ball," and parties have subscribed under the belief that the institution will be established. These funds ought not to be touched under present circumstances. Cancel the rules hitherto put forth—if possible, appoint a committee of experienced officers—and remove the impression that is abroad that the concern is mixed up with an East India Agency, by convening a meeting of officers at the Thatched House, or some other public building. We ardently desire to see a Benefit Fund (not benevolent) established, but it must be on sound principles.

BESIDES the Vernon East Indiaman, described in our last, there is another vessel on the India passage fitted with a steam-engine and machinery, to be used for the purpose of propelling when becalmed or against light adverse winds. The benefit of such an apparatus on board vessels undertaking long voyages, during which they are sometimes becalmed for days and weeks together under a vertical sun, when, probably, twenty or thirty miles on each side of them a current of air is passing, must be obvious to every one. The other vessel alluded to is the Maria, of 460 tons, belonging to Messrs. Gardiner, Urquhart, and Co., and her engines and propellers are entirely different from the Vernon's, the engines being of 10-horse power each, high pressure, and Melville's propellers are substituted for the paddle-wheel. We a short time since noticed the publication of Mr. Wise's "Analysis of One Hundred Voyages to and from India," &c., wherein the Maria is minutely described, and many valuable hints afforded to navigators, particularly as to the husbanding and management of the auxiliary power, which will doubtless, in due season, form part of every vessel-of-war's equipment, as well as merchant vessels destined for long voyages. Some accident appears to have happened to the Maria's machinery on passage out, owing to which its value cannot be estimated, but as this will probably be repaired in India, we may shortly expect to hear the result of the interesting experiment.

IT is said to be the intention of the Admiralty to try the experiment of fitting a line-of-battle ship with a steam-engine, of moderate power, to aid in propelling her during calms, and not to interfere in any way with the working of the sails. Of course ships of war, intended for cruising, cannot sacrifice the proportions which insure stability, &c., like the Vernon, described last week. But the propelling power will give them steerage way, and so prevent their being attacked on their weakest points.

The Court.

Her Majesty has taken her usual equestrian exercises during the week. The Duchess of Kent has been suffering from slight indisposition, but we are happy to state Her Royal Highness is now convalescent. The reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg, with Prince Albert and his younger brother, are expected to arrive at Windsor Castle on Monday next. Her Majesty will hold a Privy Council on Monday.

Despatches were sent off on Saturday evening from the Colonial-office for Sir Alexander Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar. Despatches were received on Monday from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Alexander Woodford, K.C.B., from Lt.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, K.C.B., and from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Howard Douglas, Bart., the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. Despatches were forwarded on Tuesday from the Foreign Department, for Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, and for the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British Minister at St. Petersburgh. Despatches were received at the Colonial Department from the Governors of the West Indies. Despatches were sent off on Wednesday evening from the Colonial-office, for Major-Gen. Sir G. Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, and also for Governor Doherty, at Sierra Leone; from the Foreign Department for the British Ambassadors at Constantinople and at St. Petersburg; from the India Board, for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay. Despatches were received at the Colonial Department from the Governor of the Mauritius; and on Thursday from Sir John Franklin, Governor of Van Diemen's Land. Despatches were forwarded yesterday from the Foreign Department for the British Ministers at Sardinia and Hanover.

There has been a rumour that when the recent changes were being made in the Ministry, the Earl of Minto, First Lord of the Admiralty, was offered the important appointment of Governor-General of India; but his Lordship thought proper to decline. It was circulated at the Admiralty that, should his Lordship accept that office, the Earl of Clarendon would most probably be his successor.

In addition to the appointment of Mr. T. B. Macaulay as Secretary at War, Lord Seymour and Mr. Clay have been appointed Secretaries to the Board of Control. Lord Clarendon remains to be introduced to an important post in the Government, with a seat in the Cabinet.

After several postponements, Mr. More O'Ferrall, the Secretary to the Admiralty, is to be married this morning to the Hon. Miss Southwell, daughter of Lord Southwell.

The Duke of Wellington is entertaining a distinguished circle at Walmer Castle.

The Earl of Minto left town on Saturday for his seat, Minto Castle, Roxburghshire.

The Duke of Richmond, the Marquis of Douro, the Marquis of Tweeddale, the Earl of March, and a large party, left Gordon Castle on Monday for his Grace's shooting-quarters at Glen Fiddich. Among the distinguished visitors who have been at Gordon Castle since the arrival of the noble family are, the Duchess Dowager of Richmond, the Duchess of Gordon, Lord A. Fitzclarence, Lord W. Lennox, Lord Templemore, Lord Seymour, Lord Hill, Gen Sir E. Bowater, Col. Rowan, Capt. the Hon. H. Pitt, &c.

Major-Gen. Sir John Woodford left Mivart's Hotel, on Saturday last, to visit his estate in Cumberland. Sir John arrived a short time since from a visit to Sir Alexander and Lady Woodford at Gibraltar.

The salary of Sir Charles Shaw, as Police Commissioner for Manchester, is 700*l.* per annum; that of Mr. Burgess, Commissioner for Birmingham, 700*l.*; and the salary of Lieut.-Col. Angelo, as Police Commissioner for Bolton, 500*l.* per annum.

Capt. Forbes, of Lancing, R.N., has recently been added to the Magistracy for Sussex.

Fergus O'Connor was apprehended at Manchester on Saturday last, on charges of sedition, &c., and held to bail, himself in 800*l.*, and two sureties in 150*l.* each.

Colonel Clitherow.—An elegant piece of silver plate, of the value of 450 guineas, was presented on Tuesday last to Colonel Clitherow, of the Westminster Middlesex Militia, at his residence, Boston House, New Brentford, by a deputation of the magistrates, clergy, and other inhabitants of the Brentford magisterial district and neighbourhood. This testimony of esteem and respect was the result of a public meeting held lately at Isleworth, which was numerously attended, and at which an address to the venerable magistrate, on his partial retirement from public life, was carried by acclamation, to be accompanied by the gift in question, which was liberally subscribed for by the gentlemen present, as well as others residing in the neighbourhood.

The Hon. Miss Theodosia Rice, daughter of Lord and Lady Monteagle, will be shortly led to the hymeneal altar. The day fixed is said to be the 2d of next month, and, according to the "Morning Papers," Miss Rice is to have two husbands—namely, Mr. W. Taylor of the Colonial Office, and Mr. Howard.

Mr. Justice Vaughan died on Wednesday night, at Enstbury Lodge, near Watford; he was in the 71st year of his age. This excellent Judge sat in the Criminal Court at the Old Bailey last week, and tried the prisoners with his usual clearness and dignity. He had some symptoms of a malady of the heart, and had been subject to severe rheumatism, which is often transferred to that vital organ. He died almost without a groan.

Nelson Monument.—The opinion of a celebrated engineer has been taken by Mr. Railton upon the stability of his design, and as soon as the Committee receive the report from that gentleman, it is expected that the operations of the artisans employed to construct the column will commence. Workmen for some time past have been engaged in the enclosure of Trafalgar-square in excavating the ground, for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the soil previous to preparations being made for laying the foundation.

The late Stephen Dickson, Esq., who died exceedingly aged, willed the chief part of his great landed property to his brothers, Major-Gen. William Dickson, C.B., Lieut.-Col. John Dickson, and the Rev. R. Dickson.

The property left by the late Sir John Ramsden is prodigious. His grandson, the young Baronet, eleven or twelve years of age, succeeds to 120,000*l.* per annum, 500,000*l.* is divided among his three sons, 40,000*l.* to each of his daughters, and to his widow the residence at Byrom, with 8,000*l.* per annum.

We are happy to learn that a portion of our unfortunate countrymen, who it was supposed had been murdered by the Carlists in the action at Andoain, in September, 1837, have reached their native country.

The Penny Postage.—The Treasury announced their intention of giving 200*l.* to any one who will hit upon a scheme for carrying it into effect to their satisfaction. What would be more simple than that, with the exception of the reduction in the amount of postage, every thing should remain as it now is? That people should write on what paper they please—the postage of a single sheet be one penny—of a double letter twopence—a treble letter threepence—and a scale of weights established with the average weight of a sheet of postpaper—and that letters shall, in every instance, be paid for either in advance or on delivery at the option of the sender.

The celebrated French Deputy, M. Odillon Barrot, is in London, and intends to visit the manufacturing districts.

SPAIN.—Don Carlos demands—first, his restoration to all the rights of an infant of Spain, from which the Cortes have degraded him. These rights comprise his title to the Crown in case of the failure of the heirs of Ferdinand VII. Second, the restoration of his sequestered properties, which are immense. Third, a pension conformable to his rank, paid by Spain; and liberty to reside at Saltzburg, where his wife possesses considerable property. On these conditions he will renounce his pretensions to the throne of Spain, recognise the testament of Ferdinand, and the acts of the Cortes abolishing the Salic law.

"Six Generals," observes the Nouvelliste, "have in succession been Commanders-in-Chief of the Carlist army in Navarre and the Basque provinces, viz.—Zumalacarregui, who died of his wounds; Moreno, who has just been assassinated; Eguia, Villareal, and the Infante Don Sebastian, who are now refugees in France; and Maroto, who has gone over to the constitutional cause. The Queen's army has had seven, viz.—Smarsfeld, who was murdered at Pampeluna; Valdes, now commanding in Catalonia; Quesada, massacred at Madrid; Rodil, who is all but proscribed; Mina, who died at Barcelona; Cordova, proscribed, and gone into Portugal; and the successful Espartero, Duke of Victoria. It is a singular coincidence that the Marquis de Miraflores, who was the Spanish Ambassador in England when Don Carlos made his escape, should hold the same post in France now that he has come to seek refuge here."

The Capitole asserts, that the Duke de Cazes, after a long interview with Louis Philippe, has been ordered to proceed, first to the head-quarters of Espartero, and then to Madrid, for the purpose of negotiating a matrimonial alliance between the Queen of Spain and a son of the King of the French.

The Princess of Beira, wife of Don Carlos, has written a letter to the Queen of the French, on the expulsion of Don Carlos from Spain, in which she protests against the mode of hospitality shown by the French Government towards her husband, and which is a virtual imprisonment.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburg, 10th Sept.—The reviews at Borodino continue daily. The Grand Duke Michael, and Prince Eugene of Wurtemberg, are at the head of their corps in the camp, the former having the command of the reserve 30,000 strong. The total number of troops consist of 128 battalions, 167 squadrons, 24 batteries of Foot, and 9 of Horse Artillery, with 264 guns. The number of General Officers 38, Staff Officers 277, Superior Officers 2,619, Sub-officers 11,173, musicians 5,241, and privates 90,950; total, 117,598. All the soldiers surviving who had been at the battle of the Borodino had been presented to the Emperor. The village of Borodino, which had hitherto been private property, has just been purchased by the Emperor, and presented by him to the Hereditary Grand Duke, who is to retain it as a sacred national property. This review has a more serious character than the first preparations appeared to indicate. Great part of the troops which were marching to Kursk, Orel, and Borodino, have received orders to halt, and some regiments have been sent in a different direction.

IMPERIAL ORDER OF THE DAY TO THE ARMIES.

"Children—You see before you the monument which bears testimony to the glorious deeds of your comrades. Here, on this spot the arrogant enemy fancied, 27 years ago, that he could overcome the Russian army, which defended its religion, its Czar, and its country. God punished this fellow: the bones of these insolent intruders were scattered from Moscow to the Niemen, and even entered Paris. The time is now come to commemorate the glory of that great deed. May the memory of the immortal Alexander be endeared to all ages! By his firmness Russia was saved. Eternal honour to our comrades, who died the death of heroes; and may their great deeds serve as an example to us to the latest posterity! You will be always the hope and defence of your Emperor, and of our common mother, Russia.

"In the Camp, near the village of NICHOLAS.
Borodino, Aug. 26 (Sept. 7), 1839."

"To the Minister of War—In memory of the solemn inauguration of the monument erected in memory of the glorious battle of Borodino, and in testimony of our especial gratitude for the glorious deeds of the Russian army in that battle, we order—1. That all General, Staff, and other Officers, and military of lower rank, who took part in the battle of Borodino, and who are still in the service, shall receive, in addition to the pay which they now enjoy, an annual gratuity equal to the pay which shall be received at that time according to their rank. 2. This gratuity will be allowed only while they remain in the service, and it is not to be taken into account in assigning the pensions to which they may be entitled. 3. The necessary sum shall be annually provided by the Treasury. "NICHOLAS.

"Camp, Borodino, Aug. 26 (Sept. 7), 1839."

AUSTRIA.—The Congress at Vienna will open on the 15th of October. The question for discussion will be the affairs of the East, the recognition of Isabella the Second by the Northern Courts, and the situation of the Republic of Cracow.

LOWER CANADA.—Sir John Colborne has issued his proclamation, bearing date the 24th of August, and declaring Martial Law no longer in force in the district of Montreal. Martial Law was proclaimed in Nov., 1838, and has continued in force since that date.

WEST INDIES.—The last accounts from Jamaica are very unfavourable: the labourers will not work, the proprietors are divided among themselves, and combine only in one thing—hostility to all the measures proposed by the Home Government. The 2nd West India regiment was obliged to be called out to quell a disturbance among the negroes! Among the Leeward Islands the weather continues sultry, without rain and unseasonable; the harbours are rapidly losing their shipping, and the crops are almost finished. On the 3d August, the Lord Bishop of Barbadoes arrived at Bishop's Court from Demerara.

GIBRALTAR.—On the night of the 7th inst. a fire broke out in the main street, Gibraltar, at a very late hour. The Military were as usual called out, and the extraordinary noise and bustle, the sight of all the regiments at that hour, blue lights burning at the signal stations, officers galloping through the streets, &c., caused the peaceful inhabitants to believe that Gibraltar had been taken by storm. The panic that this alarm spread through the garrison was unparalleled; rusty swords, and guns without locks were immediately put into requisition, women screamed louder than their frightened children, doors and windows were barricaded, and various parties of soldiers who attempted to ascertain the cause of the riot were put to a speedy retreat by having sundry articles of furniture thrown on their heads. It was a long time before the alarmed inhabitants could be assured that a fire was the only foe to their rest; and on its being extinguished by the extraordinary exertions of the Military under the superintendence of the Governor, who pumped at the engines during the greater part of the night, it appeared that, instead of the Russians or other enemies having taken possession of the Rock, a tailor's wife, after an extraordinary allowance of gin and water, had set her bed on fire.—Evening Paper.

BUENOS AYRES.—The blockade continues to be enforced more rigorously than ever. All intercourse between Monte Video and Buenos Ayres is strictly prohibited.

RIGMAROLLERY; OR, AN INVITATION TO A GRAND FIELD-DAY OF THE COAST-GUARD, ALIAS "MILITIA MARINE," FOR GENERAL EXERCISE.

"I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat." FALSTAFF.

Oh! come to the drill, Sir; oh! come there with me,
And a rare awkward squad of blue Jackets you'll see,
Who handle the musket like handspike or crow,
And "wheel about, turn about, and do jis-so."
They shoulder (none bolder), load, fire, charge, and wheel,
Like Falstaff's brave army, and pigs in a reel.
The Senior Lieutenant commences the drill,
Puts Jack "through his facings" with NAUTICAL skill;
And when they are awkward sings out to the men,
"As I'm in no hurry, you'll do that again.
Top your piece up, you lubber, on my starboard beam;
Ship your 'bagonet,' you on the larboard extreme,
Without cartridge, my lads, you will all prime and load,
And come to the ready when ramrods are stowed."
Then the firing commences in alternate shots,
From Starboard to Port, and three rounds will be lots;
"Don't stoop at PRESENT as if reefing a sail,
Or weather ear-ring hauling out in a gale."

(Now the manual having performed and platoon)
"Each Jack slow his musket and handle his spoon,—
His cutlass I mean, and perform the broadswords
Don't be in a hurry, but wait for the word:
Mind the draw and the carry,—part swords and salute;
If I stay here a week for the drill, you'll go three't.
Attend to th' assault, to the guards, and the points,
And don't in the 'cuts' cut a junk off your joints.
When making the parries take care of your toes,
And mind that your lunges don't bleed from your blows.
Into line, First Division, your cutlasses slow,
Now, begone, my brave army, don't kick up a row."

Field-day being over, stowed cutlass and gun,
Jack thinks that a pint would add much to the fun;
And to the C. B. *, asking leave of C. O. *,
If he grants the request, to the public they go.
There hold a consult, and, as most sailors will,
To the d—l pitch Blue Jacket scdgering at drill. Y. Z.

* Explanation—C. B. means Chief Boatman; C. O. means the Chief Officer of the station.

Literary Notices.

Observations on the Practice and the Forms of District, Regimental, and Detachment Courts-Martial, with reference to the Mutiny Act of 1839, and existing Regulations; also, Remarks on the Composition and Practice of Courts of Enquiry, &c. By a Field Officer. THIS is the third edition of a valuable little work we have before noticed, and of which Colonel D'Aguilar, an officer universally respected, and who has been some time the Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland, is the author. In this new and enlarged edition, the Colonel has embodied all the alterations that have taken place up to the 13th August in the Mutiny Act and Articles of War, as well as in the different regulations of the Army. But the main features of the edition are some very useful observations on the practice and constitution of Courts of Enquiry. From these we shall offer extracts; and we will only add that the little book ought to be in the hands of every officer of Her Majesty's Army.

"There is no regulation fixing the number or rank of Officers to compose a Court of Enquiry.

"This must obviously depend upon the nature and character of the circumstances which form the subject matter for investigation.

"In ordinary cases of Regimental Enquiry, one Captain and two Subalterns constitute the Court. On other occasions, a Field Officer (or second in command) and two Captains are employed upon this duty, at the discretion of the Immediate Commanding Officer.

"In cases of a more serious nature calling for the interference of superior authority, the Officer Commanding should furnish the Major-General, or senior officer of the district, (through the prescribed channel of communication,) with an outline of the circumstances, accompanied by any observations which may appear necessary for his information. He will thus be enabled to decide at once upon the course to pursue—either by convening of his own authority a Court of Enquiry, consisting of three, or even five Field Officers, or by referring the whole case to head quarters, as in his judgment shall seem most proper.

"Whenever a Court of Enquiry is ordered to assemble, either by the Commanding Officer of a corps, or the Major-General, or senior officer of a district, it is always desirable that specific instructions should be conveyed to the President for the guidance of the Court; and above all, it should be distinctly stated whether they are to give an opinion on the case, or merely to confine themselves to a record of the facts elicited from the different witnesses produced and examined.

"The Court being assembled pursuant to order, the examination of the witnesses is proceeded with, and the matter before the Court investigated, according to the instructions communicated to the President.

It will be observed, that members of Courts of Enquiry are not sworn; neither are the witnesses.* In other respects, the proceedings assimilate as nearly as possible to Courts-Martial, both as regards the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, as well as the mode of recording their testimony on the Minutes, which should be prepared with the greatest care and accuracy.

"The proceedings, when closed, are signed by the President, and also by the members, after which they are forwarded by the President to the superior officer who convened the Court, observing always the regular channel of communication.

"If the superior authority should be satisfied that the Court have carried their investigation to the fullest extent in their power, and have furnished all the information necessary to a clear understanding of the subject, it only remains to approve the proceedings and to dissolve the Court, directing the members to return to their duty.

"On the other hand, if the Court should appear to have omitted any point requiring notice, or that they should not have carried their investigation generally to the extent desired, they should be ordered to re-assemble, with a view to the deficiency being supplied; and that deficiency should be explained by the convening authority in terms as clear as the original instructions under which the Court was first assembled.

"It may be material in this place to observe, that a Court of Enquiry may be re assembled as often as may be found necessary —and further, that new evidence may be received and recorded on every such occasion.

"The accused party should always be present during the examination of the witnesses for and against him, and be permitted to put any questions he may think proper, provided they are such as would be admitted by a Court-Martial.

"It will be understood that, although the above right is conceded to the accused, it is quite optional on his part to abstain from putting any questions to witnesses, either on examination in chief or on cross-examination; and further, the accused may respectfully decline making any statement to the Court touching his alleged misconduct, should he apprehend that such a course would operate against him in the event of the institution of any ulterior judicial proceeding.

"If a Court Martial should follow, care should be taken that no officer is appointed a member of it who had been employed upon the Court of Enquiry."

Morton of Morton's Hope. H. Colburn.

THIS is a production which will make some of our very best novelists look about them, if they would not see the palm of public favour wrested from their hands by a denizen of the new world. So far as we can judge, "Moreton of Moreton's Hope" is the production of a new and heretofore untried hand in this class of composition; and if so, we have no hesitation in saying that it gives promise of extraordinary and brilliant results in the style and order of work to which it belongs—namely, the philosophical novel.

In fact we know of no one among our native writers who could have produced a work so nearly approaching to those of Sir Edward Bulwer, as the anonymous American writer before us; and there are passages, nay, whole chapters, in "Morton of Morton's Hope" that would do no discredit to the highest efforts of our great philosophical novelist. It is true what the American falls in is precisely that in which our own distinguished countryman so eminently succeeds—namely, the concoction and the conduct of the plot. In these there is little art, and what there is is thrown away on intractable materials. But in the execution of his individual scenes and conceptions of character, the American often makes near approaches to a writer whom he has evidently taken as his model.

The scenes of this work are singularly various, and unusually novel and original,—divided as they are pretty equally between America, just before the outbreak of the Revolution,—the Continent of Europe at a later period,—particularly Germany and her singular system of college education,—and lastly, the backwoods of the new world,—in which latter we have some stirring and exciting scenes, that are quite equal to those of Cooper in their way.

Upon the whole this is decidedly the most striking novel of the season, and one which has still more of promise in it than of performance.

The Persians in England. [Printed for private circulation]

His Royal Highness Nejaf Korle Meerza has written a journal, which, translated from Persian into English by Assaad Y. Kayat, is now printed for private circulation, and contains much that is both curious and amusing, whether taken, observes a facetious friend, as proofs of their inventive qualities, their pure simplicity, or a desire to "astonish the natives." We give a couple of extracts.

Duelling among the English.—"The men are very particular in their disputes, which are carried on with great ability. If there should be the widest possible misunderstanding, still they keep up the rules of politeness. If it should rise so high as to produce vindictive feeling, still they carry on their disputes in a genteel style, and bad language (God forbid!) is not used. To be called a liar is the utmost insult: this will lead to a duel; the duel is allowed here. Sometimes this happens in such circumstances as the following:—If a man should be at an assembly, and should have something said to him improper or disgraceful, he who feels it to be such would at once leave the room. Then he will relate it to some friend, saying, that he heard so and so, at such a place, in such a party, which he did not like at all. Then his friend will reply, 'So and so, perhaps, did not intend to insult you; he might have said it by accident, write a note, and I will carry it to him and learn more fully.' Then the plaintiff will write to him a respectful letter as follows:—'At such and such a day, at such an assemblage, I heard you say such words, which made my heart feel angry; please to explain to me what you meant.' Then the friend will carry the note, and request an answer. If the object of the accused is not to insult him, he will write him an answer as follows:—'Upon my honour I never intended to create any displeasure in you, and should I have said anything which you consider improper, I now beg your pardon.' Such an answer will settle the question. But if otherwise, he will neither excuse himself nor beg pardon, but will answer as follows:—'I have received your letter, which I will thus answer,—Meet me on such a day, at such a place, and thereby you will be informed, and learn all the particulars.' This will give him to understand that the object is a duel. Then he informs his friends of it, and commences preparations to meet his opponent; and likewise the other will inform his friends, that he has already appointed the time to fight with such a man. Then the friends of both endeavour to settle the question between them; but, generally, this cannot be effected without fighting the duel. However, when all mediations fail, then the two individuals, accompanied by their respective friends as witnesses, meet at the appointed place, exactly at the fixed hour, which will be published in the newspapers. When the two come to this place with their pistols, then the friends use their utmost influence of mediation, if at last all should be in vain, then they separate from each other a distance of 20 feet, and the signal will be given, when both fire. Then it becomes a matter of chance; sometimes both of them are hit and perish, and perhaps no one is hit, or one dies, and the other is saved. Thus the question is finished; this act is permitted by their law, which does not condemn it, and it has been a well-known practice among the fools of this nation from the ancient times. It is quite similar to the old foolish custom of the heathens, who threw both the plaintiff and defendant into the fire, believing that the flame would only burn the criminal and not the innocent. Thus, also, these people believe that the bullet will not hit the innocent, and this old foolish custom is continued among the imprudent class of the Franks."

Woolwich.—"At a review, 'the dexterous artilleryman loaded and fired their cannons quicker than lightning and swifter than the wind. They fired many thousand balls a minute, and the ears of the heavens become deaf from the sound of the firing, and not a single ball missed its mark. * * So many cannons they fired, that our ears became quite deaf. Afterwards they began throwing bomb shells. This most wonderful exhibition I cannot describe, and our pen is astonished, and cannot write an explanation of these miracles. Then we suggested that it was enough. The balls and powder which were fired to-day might have cost 7000 tomans. Afterwards they invited us to the stores of ammunition, and implements of war. We were conducted to a large plain where there were many very large edifices, any one of which must have cost millions of money they are so large that each is a quarter of a parasang in circumference. Every one of these edifices contains about 5000 men employed in the manufacture of cannon, which look fine and bright like glass. They complete daily twenty-five of them.'!!"

Little Pedlington. By J. Poole, Esq. H. Colburn.

THIS capital jeu-d'esprit, which must be so well known to most of our readers, through the medium of the New Monthly Magazine, where it first appeared, is now before us in the substantive form of two goodly volumes. Nor is the honour ill-bestowed; for in its way we have had nothing so good since the days of Gulliver, nor anything which so well deserves to take a permanent form in the satirical literature of our country. It has only to attain the parallel honour with Swift's immortal work, of having its authenticity doubted by a dignitary of the Church, and even the author himself must be satisfied with the amount and extent of its celebrity. It may be doubted by some whether a series of papers of this nature are fitted to appear in a collected form, and are calculated to produce their due effect in that shape. But the experiment now in question must put such doubts at rest. There can be no question that those who have read "Little Pedlington," in its character as a series of magazine papers, will find, on trial, that it will come out with more breadth of humour and spirit of general effect on a consecutive perusal than it did in its original shape; and as a circulating library book it may expect unusual favour and popularity.

Portrait of the Duke of Wellington. Moon.—Another portrait of the great Captain of the age, engraved by Gibbon from a painting by Simpson, and representing His Grace in military costume. The likeness is excellent, and the engraving, rich and mellow, does ample justice to the ease and grace of Mr. Simpson's picture. This clever portrait has the advantage of being the last taken of the Duke, and therefore with many will have additional claim, though it tells too truly the march of years—the care-worn countenance of the idol of every true Briton.

West of England New Monthly Magazine. The 9th number came out on the 15th. It has, we understand, a Military editor, and deals with foreign adventure, as well as with matters of science, criticism, and humour. The work deserves to be known in London; it is already very popular in country quarters.

Pension List.—Of the whole body of scientific and literary men in England, Scotland, and Ireland, the names of only 26 are to be found on the pension list. In science there are no more than six, viz.—Sir David Brewster, 297*l.*; Dr. Dalton, 300*l.*; Ivory, 300*l.*; Faraday, 300*l.*; Sir James South, 300*l.*; and Mrs. Somerville, 300*l.* In literature, ten, viz.—the poet Campbell, 184*l.*; Dr. Jamieson, 160*l.*; Millengen, 100*l.*; Southey, 455*l.*; James Montgomery, 150*l.*; Sharon Turner, 200*l.*; Thomas Moore, 300*l.*; Banim, 150*l.*; Sir William Ousley, 100*l.*; Miss Mitford, 100*l.*; and the widow and descendants of Paley (eight persons), 200*l.*, or 25*l.* each. The total sum bestowed upon the literature and science in Great Britain and Ireland is therefore about 4000*l.*, in a pension list of 192,555*l.*, or less than one-thirtieth of the whole.

THE LATE SIR THOMAS MASTERMAN HARDY, BART., G.C.B., VICE-ADMIRAL OF THE BLUE, &c. &c. &c.

It cannot be expected that, in the limited columns of a newspaper, we should do more than sketch a general outline of the services of this distinguished officer and estimable man. But we trust that public curiosity may be gratified by an ample and authentic memoir, drawn from materials furnished by his family. This is to be desired for the reputation of the lamented deceased, because we have reason to know that the credit of some of his most brilliant and useful actions has been attributed to others; and from the great repugnance of Sir Thomas Hardy to anything like egotism, or that it might be supposed he desired to vaunt his own deeds, it was hardly possible, without offending him, to allude to these acts during his lifetime in the terms they deserve.

We may mention particularly the valuable service he performed on the eve of the battle of Copenhagen, when he passed the night in his gig with muffled oars, sounding with his own hands the channel of approach close up to the enemy's line. There can be no doubt but that much, if not the whole success of the sanguinary conflict which followed, is to be attributed to his great exertions on that occasion, and the confidence that Lord Nelson reposed in him. We are not aware that what passed with relation to this service has ever been published, for the merit of buoying the Channel was given to another officer. The following are the facts:—

When the expedition to the Baltic and an attack on the Danish fleet was contemplated, in 1802, our Minister at the Court of Denmark—the present Lord Bexley, we believe—was required to furnish a correct chart of the navigation, commonly called the "grounds," and also a plan of the anchorage and disposition of the Danish line of defence. Pilots, the best to be procured, were supplied to the fleet, being Mates and Masters of Baltic traders, whose knowledge extended to little more, however, than the leading marks of the navigable channels for entering and quitting the several ports. Not willing to rely entirely upon these authorities, Captain Hardy sounded the anchorage up to within pistol-shot of the enemy's ships, and before daylight on the 2d of April, had completed a rough sketch, which he put into the Admiral's hands. When the Captains of the ships selected for the attack were assembled, in order to receive their instructions, the two plans were compared, and some of them remarked on the discrepancy between Captain Hardy's report of deep water up to the enemy's line, whereas that furnished by the Minister represented the Danish ships as moored upon the edge of a shoal. "Damn the Minister and his chart, too!" exclaimed Nelson; "I will trust to Hardy, who has never deceived me;" and it was well he did so, for his own, and other ships that adhered to it, were enabled to approach sufficiently close to batter the Danish line and batteries effectually; whereas those that inclined to the other grounded, and were of little use. We are possessed of many other anecdotes, not published, illustrative of Sir Thomas Hardy's brilliant career; but we refrain from alluding to them further, in the hope that a complete memoir may be forthcoming accredited by his family.

Sir Thomas Hardy was the second son of Joseph Hardy, Esq., of Portisham, in the county of Dorset, by Anne, his wife, daughter of Thomas Masterman, Esq., of Kingston, in the same county. He was born on the 5th April, 1769, and showing a predilection for a sea life, he entered the Royal Navy when very young.

We have no record of his early career, until we find him associated with Sir George Cockburn, first as messmate in the Hebe frigate, under the gallant Hood, and subsequently as his First Lieutenant in Minerve, when that meritorious officer performed such brilliant exploits against the Spaniards.

When Lord Nelson hoisted his Commodore's pendant on board Minerve, Lieutenant Hardy's zeal and ability attracted his attention, and his congenial spirit "marked him for promotion." An occasion soon offered, for Lieutenant Hardy having, with the boats of that frigate and Lively, cut out the French national brig Mutine, 16 guns, from under the batteries of Santa Cruz, Nelson immediately nominated him to command her, and his promotion was approved in very flattering terms by Earl St. Vincent, the Commander-in-Chief on the station, and confirmed by the Admiralty.

Whilst in command of Mutine, Captain Hardy, in constant attendance upon Nelson's fleet, conducted himself greatly to the hero's satisfaction, particularly by the activity and certainty with which he executed his orders, and the sound judgment he displayed when despatched to seek information respecting the destination of the French fleet. At length it was discovered, on the 1st of Aug. 1798, anchored in line of battle in Aboukir Bay. The glorious victory that followed gave Nelson the opportunity to promote Captain Hardy, and remove him into his own ship the Vanguard, Captain Berry having been sent to England with the despatches. From that time, with but short intervals, he remained attached and devoted to his illustrious Commander, serving as his Captain whenever he shifted his flag. During the short peace he commanded the Isis, 50, in which ship he had the honour to convey H.R.H. the Duke of Kent to Gibraltar; and subsequently he had the Amphion frigate: but when Nelson, on the renewal of hostilities in May, 1803, hoisted his flag again, Captain Hardy joined, and never left him until his lamented death at Trafalgar in the hour of victory, on the 21st Oct., 1805.

On his return to England after the action of Teneriffe, Nelson was presented to George III., and was accompanied, on the occasion, by his friend Hardy; His Majesty entered into a long conversation with the hero respecting the battle, and expressed his regret at his losing his right hand,—"Your Majesty," replied Nelson, presenting his companion to the King, "here is my right hand." The parting scene between Nelson and his Captain must be familiar to every one, from Southey's affecting description. Having conveyed the body of his lamented chief to England, and carried the banner of emblems at the public funeral of the hero, Captain Hardy being now created a Baronet, was appointed to the Triumph on the Halifax station. His ship was shortly afterwards attached to Admiral Berkeley's squadron at Lisbon, when the Portuguese Government treated him with marked distinction, and created him a Chief of Division of the Royal Armada.

When hostilities were apprehended with America, Sir T. Hardy was appointed to the Hamillies, 74, and having joined that ship in August, 1812, proceeded, towards the close of the year, to Halifax. During 1813, he commanded a squadron blockading New London, and so watchful did he prove, that the Americans resorted to the desperate and unusual adoption of torpedoes, in order to destroy his ships. His forethought and sagacity thwarted more than one attempt; and his general conduct on this and on every other service on which he was employed, secured him not only the esteem of those acting under him, but even of the foe; for, strange as it may sound, he was very popular with the Americans, who generally deprecated the conduct of those individuals concerned in the torpedo affair. Having taken possession of the islands in Passamaquoddy Bay, in conjunction with a small Military force under Lieut.-Colonel Pilkington, and bombarded the town of Stonington, he returned to England at the close of the war.

On the 2d of Jan., 1815, Sir Thomas Hardy was nominated K.C.B. of the Bath, and the next year appointed to command a Royal yacht. On the 30th Nov. 1818, he commissioned the Superbe, 78, and sailed, the following year for the South American station, of which he took command as Commodore. During the three years that he held that arduous and delicate post, when conflicting interests called for an unusual display of judgment, he performed his part so well, as to excite universal admiration. Whilst he firmly maintained the dignity of his country's flag, he was slow to take offence at imaginary insults, and so pure and just were his decisions, that many disputes were left to his arbitration, which, under other circumstances, must have been decided by the sword.

On the change of administration in 1830, Sir Thomas Hardy was nominated a Lord of the Admiralty, and performed the duties to the general satisfaction. In April, 1835, on the death of Sir R. G. Keats, he was appointed Governor of Greenwich Hospital, it being usual for the officer holding the post of First Sea Lord of the Board to have the refusal of this office. His urbane temper, benevolent disposition, discrimination of character, and knowledge of official business, whilst fitting him in an eminent and essential degree for the post, secured him the esteem and affection of the many dependents upon his kindness, and he was in fact adored by the old pensioners, and indeed by every person belonging to the establishment.

For some considerable time Sir Thomas Hardy's hale and vigorous frame was observed to be breaking; but his last illness was not a long one, although the nature of his complaint alarmed his friends. When his danger became apparent, and he was informed of it, and that his recovery was hopeless, he bore the unexpected intimation with fortitude and becoming resignation. Having received the sacrament, settled his worldly affairs, and taken an affectionate leave of his wife and daughters, he rendered up his breath, without a struggle, about two o'clock on Friday the 20th of September, aged 71 years.

Such was Sir Thomas Hardy—an officer who had no superior in professional ability, and few equals. He was the thorough seaman, and the seaman's friend. His spirit has passed away from amongst us, but his fame and his name will live, so long as the records of the British Navy shall endure.

Sir Thomas Hardy married, in April 1807, Ann Louisa Berkeley, daughter of Admiral Sir G. C. Berkeley, G.C.B., by whom he had three daughters. He was made Captain, 2d Oct., 1798; Rear-Admiral, 27th May, 1825; and Vice-Admiral, 10th Jan., 1837.

The following fact, which proves the strong attachment of Hardy to the memory of his distinguished Commander, Lord Nelson, came to the knowledge of Mr. Behnes, the sculptor, on taking a cast from the face of the deceased for the purpose of preparing a bust. Mr. Behnes discovered on Saturday a miniature of Lord Nelson suspended from the neck of Sir Thomas, which he had worn ever since the time he received it from his Lordship as a present. The miniature is to be placed in the coffin of Sir Thomas, and buried with him, pursuant to his directions to his family during his lifetime.

The funeral, which was private, took place this day at Greenwich Hospital. We annex the order of procession:

Six Boatswains, two and two,
Crew of the Governor's Barge.
Two Regulating Boatswains. Colours. One Regulating Boatswain Drum and Fife.
Warders.
Wardens, two and two.
Fifty Pensioners of the Hospital, two and two.
Six of the Governor's Guard, with Halberts.
Medical Officers, junior first.
Military Officers, junior first.
The Lieutenant-Governor.
Chaplains.

Lieutenant Fitton. Lieutenant Tucker.
Lieutenant Rivers. THE COFFIN. Lieutenant Bedford.
Captain Huskisson. Captain Larkan.

Mourners.
Commissioners.
Civil Officers of the Hospital.
Civil Officers of the Schools.
The late Governor's Household.
Fifty Pensioners, who served with the late Governor in the Victory and other Ships.
Two Inspecting Boatswains.

We will add that that it was the Admiral's strong injunction that the funeral should be as private as possible.

Improvement in Steam-Engines.—At Toulon, preparations are at this moment being made for trying an important modification of the crank of steam-engines for vessels, suggested by a Naval officer. This modification consists in rendering the cranks fixed or moveable at pleasure, by means of a curb (frein), similar to those employed for trying the power of the engines. If the experiment, which is to be tried on the Styx, succeed, the paddle-wheels will become, at will, independent of the engines, without the necessity for employing a complication of machinery, which has hitherto been more ingenious than useful.

TAKE THE HILL BEFORE DARK.

(From the forthcoming United Service Journal, a capital Number.)

The evening of the 15th Feb. 1814, amidst the beautifully varied scenery of the Lower Pyrenees, was one of extreme loveliness; for though the early spring had not entirely obliterated all traces of winter, and the tops of some mountains were still clad in snow, yet the glowing sunset, with its ever-changing gold and purple, imparted to the magnificent display of mountain and forest, interspersed with fertile valleys, a richness and a colouring not to be described. But the peaceful serenity of nature was, that evening, strangely contrasted with the tumultuous violence of war—with the thunder of the cannon and of the volley—and with the mixture of hostile hosts, in the mortal strife of the charge.

The Duke of Wellington had, two or three days before, commenced his advance from the neighbourhood of Bayonne, after the temporary pause which an unusually severe winter had interposed in his splendid career of victory. In this advance, the right of the army, under Lord Hill, had most gallantly and most skilfully driven the enemy from position to position, allowing him no time to recover himself; and, from the earliest dawn of the day mentioned, the troops had been moving by a mountain-road, the Light Infantry clearing the way. In their course, they had successively dislodged their active enemy from the numerous abattis he had thrown across the road, and from the strong ground which he every where found, and of which he knew so well how to take advantage. At one juncture, the Duke in person had reconnoitred so closely that the French cavalry threatened a dash, when the grenadiers of the 39th Regt. had the honour of covering his Grace. Late in the afternoon, Major-General (now Lieut.-General Sir) W. H. Pringle's Brigade of the 2nd Division, consisting then of the 28th and 39th Regiments, with a couple of guns, had taken post upon a height to the left of the road. Immediately in their front was a deep precipitous ravine, which divided the height from a lofty hill close to the small town of Garris, on which a column of the enemy, 6,000 strong, was in position. Both positions, together with the ravine between them, were rough forest ground; with portions, and particularly in the ravine, very thickly timbered. While the Light Infantry of the Brigade, without pausing, had descended into the ravine, briskly driving in the enemy's light troops, the guns had, instantly, opened a vigorous and well-directed fire across the ravine, and over the heads of the combatants below.

At the time that the glories of sunset had commenced, the arms of the brigade had been piled, to give the men a momentary rest. The officers and men were standing in small groups, anxiously watching the effect of the rapid discharges of the guns upon the enemy's columns, or listening to the continued rattling fire of the skirmishers, sharply engaged beneath, and who, though quite close, were concealed from view by the thick wood. Every now and then attention was attracted by wounded comrades, as they emerged from the dark hollow to regain the position. Among these was Capt. Gale, commanding the Light of the 28th Regt., who was borne up mortally wounded.

The lateness of the hour precluded the idea that anything further could be effected that night. Wearied with their long and arduous day's work, the bystanders were looking forward to the repose of the bivouac, and were considering themselves rather as spectators than as actors in the deeply interesting scene, when an aide-de-camp, at full speed, quickly delivered an order from the Duke, pointing to the enemy's position—"Take the hill before dark."

The brigade fell in as by magic—the men needed no order. A proud smile played upon every countenance. Every one felt the high compliment that was paid to the brigade, in thus being allowed to take the hill by the bayonet. And the honour was enhanced by the promptness of the order, the perfect confidence it placed in the troops, and the total absence of all doubt of the success of the attack. And such was the high confidence which the troops, on their part, reposed in their illustrious chief, that his very giving the order was proof to them that they could execute it. They well knew that they would not be sacrificed in an unequal conflict, and that, if they needed it, they would be properly supported.

It falling accidentally to the good fortune of the 39th regiment to be principally and closely engaged that evening, its movements will now be exclusively followed. Its old and gallant friends of the 28th, how efficient soever were their services on the occasion, were directed upon a point of attack which did not happen to bring them in close contact with the enemy.

Excepting the influence which the character of Commanding Officers must necessarily have upon corps, there was little or no difference in the goodness of the regiments composing that army of brothers. All, governed by the same rules, and animated by the same high sentiments and feelings, were equally anxious to do their duty. And although "Garris" does not yet beam, with other numerous recollections of glory, upon the colours of the 39th regiment, the honours of each may, in general, be estimated by its opportunities of earning them.

As soon as the 39th regiment had fallen in, its Commanding Officer, Colonel, now Lieut.-Gen., the Hon. Sir Robert W. O'Callaghan, repeated the order to the regiment in the same concise but emphatic terms—"Take the hill before dark." The effect was electrical. The men responded by the loud, deep, animating, truly British cheer. The words were then given, "Fix bayonets!"—"shoulder arms!"—"double quick!" and the next instant the regiment, in close column, plunged into the ravine.

For a few seconds, in the deep chasm, it must have been obscured from view: but though unseen, its course would be clearly noted by its continued enthusiastic cheering. It speedily cleared the bottom of the wild glen, and then steadily ascended the enemy's position without firing a shot, under the heavy rolling volleys which he incessantly poured down from above. The sound of the balls brushing the trees on all sides had a singular effect. But during the ascent, which was exceedingly steep, the enemy's fire was a little too high to do much mischief, except to the mounted officers, all of whom were either hit themselves, or had their horses shot under them.

Soon after commencing the ascent, Major-General Pringle, who had placed himself at the head of the regiment, was, to the regret of every one, very badly wounded, and obliged to be carried to the rear. As the regiment neared the summit, loaded with their heavy kits, the men suffered much from exhaustion, but willing hearts kept steadily up the steep. Here Colonel the Hon. R. W. O'Callaghan and the Brigade-Major (Fancourt) both lost their horses; and shortly after the Adjutant, now Major Henry Smyth, had his horse likewise shot under him.

At length, however, the summit was attained, and instantly carried. Misled by the nature of the ground, and perhaps by the shades of evening, the enemy no doubt took the attacking force to be far more numerous than it was, and very soon gave way, retreating, however, only to a short distance. The regiment lost no time in improving its advantage, by wheeling to its right to sweep the ridge of the position; and it was in the act of driving the enemy along the ridge, when, perceiving that at this point he was opposed only by a single battalion, he brought up his main force, to charge the advancing regiment in his turn. Hitherto the regiment had reserved its fire, but at this point, immediately before the enemy closed, it opened upon him with great effect. Among those who were seen to fall was a French drummer, a very fine fellow, who was coming boldly on in front beating the charge. But the enemy, nothing daunted, still pressed on with great determination, until the bayonets in many instances were crossed. Personal encounters now ensued. Colonel the Hon. R. W. O'Callaghan, whose horse had been shot under him, and who was now fighting on foot at the head of the regiment, received one French bayonet at the breast, and another at the side, at the same time. The late Lieut. George Coleman nobly led the Grenadiers. Lieut. Evans, the brave Commander of the 60th Rifles, attached to the light companies of the brigade, personally grappled with a French Captain, and they both fell to the ground together. Evans was a small man, and no match for his antagonist: but he kept up the unequal contest, till a grenadier of the 39th, stepping forward to his assistance, the Frenchman was made prisoner. Among others, there were two privates of the regiment, of rather low stature, not well-looking, and so slovenly that everybody used to be down upon them. These two men distinguished themselves greatly. One of them was so badly wounded as never afterwards to be able to rejoin the regiment.

Wearied with his fruitless exertions, in a few minutes the enemy was compelled to retire in some confusion; but quickly rallying, and encouraged by his very superior force, he twice more returned to the charge, and was as often repelled. For about twenty minutes the regiment sustained the utmost efforts of the enemy, to dislodge it from the height which it had stormed. The intervals between the bayonet attacks were filled up with active unremitting firing on both sides. Poor Colonel Fearon, commanding one of the Canadian regiments, who, though without his men, had come up the height, was killed, while gallantly exerting himself to aid the common cause. In the confusion unavoidably attendant upon such a scene, two of the enemy's dragoons (possibly orderlies), remained quietly close to the regiment for a considerable time. The dress being then so much alike, they were mistaken for English, till, seizing their opportunity, they galloped off and rejoined their countrymen. English and French were sometimes mixed together. One Frenchman in particular was remarked, who, closely pursued by an officer, threw away his arms and kit, and with great celerity threaded his way through friends and foes till he effected his escape. At last the enemy beginning to waver, the regiment resumed its forward movement along the ridge; and another charge drove him in disorder completely off the hill, leaving many killed, as well as prisoners, behind him. The streaks of evening had for some time, one by one, been disappearing, the more distant mountains were no longer distinguishable, and the shades of night were now settling darkly upon the height; but the order was literally and fully executed. Brief space had been given; time pressed; there had not been a moment to lose, and not a moment was lost. The hill was taken before dark.

The enemy, not having anticipated so uncourteous an intrusion at so late an hour, had made extensive preparations for the comfort of his bivouac, in collecting large quantities of wood for his fires. Of this the regiment gladly availed itself, and that night its bivouac was far more brilliantly lighted than it usually was. Seated around the cheerful blaze, and while, with keen appetite, partaking of the simple supper, which the haversack happened to supply, many a congratulation was exchanged between friends, and many an incident of the evening recounted. And there were few who did not, with grateful hearts silently look up to Him who had given them the victory, and who had protected them in the execution of their duty. But, overcome with fatigue, it was not long before conversation began to flag; the various sounds of the bivouac gradually died away, and at length, trusting to the active look-out of the piquets, all, excepting those who had charge of prisoners, with their feet towards the fire, resigned themselves to comfortable repose.

East India Intelligence.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East India Stock was held at the East India House on Monday last, when Mr. Poynder brought forward his motion of which he had given notice, viz., "That the petition of the Clergy of Bristol and its vicinity addressed to the Court of Proprietors, and praying that the Directors' despatch of 20th Feb., 1833, ordering that all revenue hitherto derived by the Company from the idolatrous worship of the natives of India, should cease, may be carried into effect, be taken into consideration," which, after some conversation, was eventually carried. Mr. Poynder then rose to bring forward the motion of which he had given notice. "That there be laid before the Court such information as may be necessary for the purpose of showing how far the Directors' despatch of 20th Feb., 1833, which has now been received in India upwards of six years, has been duly acted upon by the Supreme Government and the subordinate authorities." Upon this motion a division was called for, when there appeared a majority against it of 15.

Sir C. Forbes said, that on looking over the Company's accounts, he found a sum of 50,000*l.* for secret service money for one year. This was so enormous an outlay for such a purpose for one year, that he hoped to hear some explanation on the subject from the chair. The Chairman said he could not give him any, as the members of the secret service committee were not on oath. The sum was paid by direction of that committee pursuant to an Act of Parliament. Sir C. Forbes then gave notice of a motion for the next Court on the subject of the secret service money. After a few observations from Mr. Weeding, the subject dropped, and the Court adjourned.

An overland mail was received on Saturday, via Marseilles, with mails from India. The dates are from Bombay to 1st Aug. The most important intelligence received by this mail is the death of Runjeet Sing, an event which was foreseen, and the presence of a considerable British force, ready to cross the Sutledge upon any sudden emergency, to prevent any serious difficulty from arising. Runjeet's son, Khurruck Sing, has quietly succeeded to his father's sovereignty.

Among the remarkable incidents connected with the death of Runjeet Singh, none is more worthy of being recorded and noted than the fact of four princesses, his wives, and seven slave girls, having been permitted to burn themselves on his funeral pyre. The sacrifice of his slaves is indeed an atrocious cruelty, enacted apparently for no other purpose than that of adding dignity to the funeral pageant; and we hope that the British Government, in its communications with Kurruk Singh, or Dhian Singh, who seems to have been the real director of the obsequies, will not fail to convey a strong intimation of its sense upon this most barbarous proceeding. Which of us, when reading in Southey's wild poem, the "Curse of Kehama," the description of Arvalan's funeral, the burning of his two queens, and of the whole train of female slaves, could have imagined that he would live to behold the incredible fiction realized to the death, at the obsequies of a prince in close alliance with Great Britain? Yet so true is it, that the poetic description of Arvalan's imaginary funeral becomes, with a very trifling adaptation, the most exact historical record of the real obsequies the late monarch of Lahore.—Bombay Times.

Private letters from Canton state that the trade is entirely stopped, and all the merchants are about to leave Canton. The sixteen hostages detained have been released, but are never to enter Canton again. No trade can be carried on until the intentions of the British Government are known here.

Letters from Candahar have been received up to the 5th June. The force was still encamped there waiting to get six weeks' provisions, collected before starting for Cabul. Dost Mahomed was fortifying Ghuznee, which is about five marches from Cabul; but as he sent off his women to Bokhara, it was doubtful whether he would make a stand at Ghuznee. Major Todd has proceeded on a mission of friendship to Kamran, accompanied by three Artillery Officers, Captains Sanders and Abbott, and Lieut. Shakespeare, with a detachment of Sappers, Golundauze, and some Artillery, in order to repair the walls of Herat, which have been left in a dilapidated state since the siege.

The following orders have been issued for the march of almost the whole army towards Cabul:—

On the 13th June the Commander-in-Chief and Staff, accompanied by the Bengal column, the Cavalry division Bengal Horse Artillery, and one troop of the Bombay Horse Artillery.

On the 16th His Majesty Shah Soojah, and the political department, accompanied by the Shah's force, and one troop of the Bombay Horse.

On the 17th the Bombay Infantry Brigade, 4th Brigade Bengal Infantry, and Poonah Auxiliary Horse, together with the Heavy Ordnance and Field Hospital, under the command of General Willshire.

Some extracts which have been published from a Calcutta paper called the Englishman would induce any one to believe that the Army of the Indus was nearly broken up by disease, want of provisions, and other casualties; and would be unable to proceed to Cabul. A misapprehension of facts so gross and malicious deserves a direct contradiction; and we have authority to state that, although it is true that the troops had to endure great hardships on the advance to Candahar, they have, since their arrival in that city, been well provided in every respect, and were in excellent condition and spirits at the date of the last letters from Sir John Keane, of June 16. It may be added, that the accounts given of the state of the Army by the Calcutta Englishman, and other papers, form a favourite topic of scorn and derision in the camp at Candahar.—Morning Chronicle.

Quetta, June 20.—We have just received most melancholy accounts of the convoy now on its way from Shillapore to this place, under a wing of the 42d Native Inf., and a detachment of the 23d Bombay Native Inf. Official letters have come in reporting the death of Ens. Beaufort, of the 42d, the Quartermaster-Serjt. of the same corps, and a number of the men. The mortality is attributed to extreme heat, want of water, and overfatigue. The natives of the country consider it almost certain death to venture across this desert during the hot season. Every letter from Candahar teems with accounts of the depredations of the Ghelzees. The whole of the camels of the officers of the Camel Battery of Major Hugh Gordon, Sage, and Mr. Hammond, have been carried off in spite of every precaution in sending out strong escorts.

A Military correspondent of the Delhi Gazette urges forcibly upon the attention of the Government, the right of the officers of the expedition to compensation for the enormous losses which they have sustained, and solicits the co-operation of the press in promoting that claim. The obvious plan which he points out is to give all extra batta from the time of their leaving Ferozepore.

Queen's and Company's Officers.—Much misconception exists upon the injustice alleged to have been perpetrated in the case of Major-Gen. Nott. On reference to an old Army List, it appears that—

General Willshire is a Lieut.-Col. of 1815.
" Thackwell " of 1817.
" Nott " of 1824.

and we are informed that the present rank of those officers is regulated according to the dates of their respective commissions of Lieut.-Colonel; or, in other words, that an officer is not liable to supersession after he has obtained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. But it appears that Gen. Nott grounds his case upon the following order:—

Bombay Castle, 30th March, 1838.

No. 185 of 1838.—The Rt. Hon. the Gov. in Council is pleased to republish the following General Order by the Rt. Hon. the Gov. General, dated the 6th inst.

The following paragraph of a Military letter, from the Hon. the Court of Directors, to the address of the Gov. Gen. of India in Council, No. 6 of 1837, dated the 19th of December last, are published, in G. O., for the information of the Army:—Para 7th:—"We have no objection to the promotion to the local rank of Major-General of the Colonels of Her Majesty's Army serving in India, who will serve, as such, to Colonels of our Army, promoted to the rank of Major General by the Brevet of 10th Jan., 1837. 8th:—Under the special circumstances in which Local Major-Generals are placed, we consent to their being considered as eligible to continue to reside in India, and to hold those Brigade commands which they would have held had their promotion not taken place, provided always, that no interference be permitted with the recommendations of the General Staff allotted to the Major Generals or Brigadier-Generals, and Brigadiers of the Queen's and the Company's forces respectively."

W. CASEMENT, Major Gen., Secy. to the Govt of India, Mily. Depart., with the Rt. Hon. the Governor.

Now, it is clear the despatch of the Court of Directors, above referred to, alludes, obviously, to fixed commands that occur in the several divisions and brigades of the Indian Army stationed in quarters, and not to the commands in a force assembled for field service, where the local Major-Generals, at least, meet their more fortunate brethren on equal terms. But, talking of local Major-Generals, what rank does Major-Gen. Nott hold to the westward of the Cape? This may be useful for Major-Gen. Nott to hold in remembrance.—Bombay Times, June 12.

We annex a sketch of the interview between Major-Gen. Nott and Sir John Keane, given in a letter of 22d May from Delhi:—

Sir J. K. remarked, he could not allow Maj. Gen. Nott to retain the first division of the Army; he had received the Governor General's orders to the contrary. Maj.-Gen. Nott observed, he was sorry for that; nevertheless his rank entitled him to a command, and that he should view a refusal, not only as a personal injustice to himself, but to the Hon. Company's service generally.—His Excel. simply remarked "I cannot help it." The Maj.-Gen. remarked, the greater portion of the force was composed of Bengal troops—that in the advance there would be no less than four Queen's Maj.-Generals, and not one Company's Maj.-General, unless he, Maj.-Gen. Nott, was permitted to go. The Commander-in-Chief replied, he had orders to leave a whole brigade in Shawl, and that the 3d brigade was nominated to that duty. Maj. Gen. Nott felt this was no reply, and reiterated his wish to proceed. His Excel. angered, remarking Gen. Nott's conduct, for an officer of his standing, was most extraordinary—asked Gen. Nott, if he thought he (Sir J. K.) could upset the order we have received—you will be left in a more responsible situation than those going on—your brigade is coming up—how do you know the hour you may be ordered to take Kilaut? The Maj.-General said, it the Com.-in Chief was resolved on leaving him behind, he (Maj.-Gen Nott) begged to tender his resignation of the command of the 3d Brigade. Sir J. K observed the Maj.-General had better consult his friends. Maj.-Gen Nott replied he would rely on his own judgment; he saw—indeed had long seen through the whole affair—(this must have been said in reference to Gen. Duncan being "dropped" at Ferozepoor and to the predictions throughout camp at Shikarpoor, foretelling that which Sir J. K. has this morning brought to pass—viz. that not a Company's officer would be left in a responsible situation in the Army of the Indus.) But to my tale. After a pause, Sir J. K. observed, that he could not take the Maj. General's resignation, but in one shape,—viz.—to forward it to Government; in the mean time he supposed the Maj.-General would obey his (Sir J. K.'s) orders. To this the General remarked, I must obey your orders, whatever they may be; but my resignation being forwarded to Government would be of use, as my object of proceeding with the Army would be defeated. His Excel. again observed, that such conduct was most extraordinary in an officer of the General's standing—adding, Sir Willoughby Cotton does not feel himself aggrieved, why should you? The Maj.-General replied, the feelings of Sir W. were no guide for him, besides that the cases bore no similarity to each other. Gen Nott then asked if His Excel. was aware he (Maj.-Gen. Nott) held a Queen's commission as Maj. General. Sir J. K. replied in the affirmative. Gen. Nott then observed, "His Excel. he supposed was equally aware, that by G. O. by the Governor General 9th March, 1838, publishing the extract of the letter from the Court of Directors, 19th Dec., 1837, he was entitled to a command in preference to Local Maj.-Generals Wilshire and Thackwell—yet still the former was in command of a division"—To this the Com.-in Chief replied, he had received the positive orders of the Governor General in his own handwriting to place Local Maj.-Gen. Willshire in the command of a division, and it Gen. Nott thought himself aggrieved he should appeal to the Court of Directors!—His Excel added, I see nothing can convince you, Gen Nott. The Maj. General remarked, that nothing His Excel had said, had persuaded him he was not senior to Local Maj.-Gen Willshire, and consequently entitled to a command before him. On this the Chief died, saying Gen. Nott insulted his authority; the Maj.-General quietly remarked, he hoped not—whatever he had urged had been respectfully expressed. Much more conversation passed, in which Maj.-Gen. Nott urged his seniority, which was ever met by Sir John saying he had the Governor-General's authority in his own handwriting for what he did. Finding it useless to talk to a man deaf to all sense of justice, the Maj.-General rose to retire; observing, he hoped he had left no ill-impression on H. E.'s mind adding, "I see it all—I am to be sacrificed, because I happen to be senior to the Queen's Major Generals." Sir J. K. replied—"Ill impression, Sir? I never will forget your manner as long as I live." Gen. Nott quietly remarked, "If that is the case, Sir J., I have only to wish you a very good evening," and retired. [We shall give the reply to this letter next week.—ED. N. & M. G.]

A return has been printed by order of the House of Commons of the territorial revenues and disbursements of the East India Company for the years 1835, 1836, and 1837, with an estimate of both for 1838. The results, which are all the public can care about, are of a very favourable kind. In the year 1835, which was that succeeding the abrogation of their charter as a trading company, and in which the greater part of their commercial assets were realised, there existed a surplus of income over expenditure of 8,600,000*l.*, after deducting a sum of 2,000,000*l.*, set apart for the formation of a guarantee fund for the proprietors of East India stock. In 1836 the surplus was 2,000,000*l.*; in 1837, 2,170,000*l.*; and in 1838 the estimate of surplus is 1,300,000*l.* The public debt of the East India Company, at the several presidencies, on the 1st of April, 1837, is stated at 30,400,000*l.*, and the interest on it at 1,440,000*l.* The rate of interest paid for the various loans varies from 4 to 10 per cent, but the average is about 4¾ per cent.

MARKET PRICES.

New-port, it seems, is fast declining—
Half what it fetched will now suffice;
That's well, but few can help repining
At the enormous charge for Rice.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN THE EAST.

BY COUNT BJORNSTJERNA, Swedish Ambassador.

As the Indus, which covers the north-west boundary of Hindustan, has a course of nearly 200 geographical miles from the Himalaya mountains to its mouth, there are only three ways by which an army, organised in the European manner, can advance from Central Asia to the above-named boundary river.

These ways are —

1st. That which leads from the provinces Fars* and Kerman, along the eastern coast of the Persian Gulf, through Beluchistan to Sind, at the mouth of the Indus;

2d. The great road which goes through Musched, Jeerbuk, Herat, Kandahar, Ghizna, Cabul, and Peschawer, to Attock, near the Indus; and,

3d. That way which, following the Oxus, goes to Koondooz, and thence over to Hindoo Koosch to Cabul, &c.

Between the last-mentioned of these roads and the central (over Herat and Kandahar), goes a chain of mountains, Hindoo-Koosch, always covered with ice, over which there are no roads, and where it is impossible for an army to proceed.

Between the above-named central road and that which follows the Persian Gulf, lies the Kermanian sand desert, which extends more than 100 geographical miles from east to west, and more than 150 from north to south, where no other water is to be found than a few wells, scarcely sufficient for one caravan; where no food can be obtained, and where sand ridges, of more than thirty feet in depth, form invincible barriers to an army organised in the European way. Nearer the Indus, the Soliman mountains also form an obstacle on this road, the rocky passes of which, surrounded by precipices and crossed by rivers, are at certain seasons quite impassable, and the rest are so easily defended, that a handful of soldiers there can prevent the progress of a whole army.†

As to the first of these roads (that along the Persian Gulf), there is only one example on record of an army having followed it,—that of Alexander the Great. After his unfortunate march to India, and having gone along the Indus to its mouth, he turned off at Patala, the present Tattah, and marched through Cedrosia (now Mukran, a part of Beluchistan), to his conquests at the Euphrates. His historians mention the devastation caused in his army by famine and thirst.‡

Alexander was, however, master in the Persian Gulf, and was accompanied on the left flank by his fleet under the command of Nearchus, conveying water and other necessaries of life. This assistance could not be obtained by an army now marching the same way to India (the English being, by means of their squadron stationed at Bombay, sole masters of the Persian Gulf), and without such help, an advance there would be quite impossible. We see thus that India is perfectly safe on this side.

Let us now examine the northernmost of the three ways which lead from the central countries of Asia to India, namely, that which, following the Oxus§, goes to Koondooz, and thence over to Hindoo-Koosch, to Cabul, and further to the Indus. It is by this way that General Evans, in his work entitled "Designs of Russia," considers a Russian Army might most easily press forward to India; a more particular examination of it will show the real state of the case.

The Army intended for an expedition against India on the side of the Caspian Sea, should be collected in the Government of Orenburgh, which already presents considerable difficulties, on account of scarcity of food in this badly cultivated and mountainous province. Three roads lead thence to Central Asia.

One goes from Orenburg, between the sea Aral and the Caspian Sea, to Orgutjie (Khiva), and further to Bokhara; it is a journey of sixty days for a caravan, and would consequently take at least the same number of days for the march of an Army. The second goes from Troitskoi in Asiatic Russia, through Our-ht-I-Kipchak, or the desert of Kipchak, east of the sea of Aral, to Bokhara; a caravan takes forty-eight days to travel this. The third road begins at Kuszuljar, or, as it is called, Petropolsk, near the river Issim, and leads to Bokhara, in a south-west direction, going through Tashkind; this road requires a journey of ninety days for a caravan.

All these roads lead through those salt and sand deserts which separate Russia from Khiva and Bokhara. The great distance, together with the general want of water, sufficiently shew the impossibility of proceeding there with any considerable army.

Two scientific men†, accompanying the mission of the Counseller of State, Neyri, to Bokhara, have, in their accounts of the journey, shewn the state of things; and mentioned that several hundred camels were necessary for carrying through the desert the water and food for the ambassade, consisting of 100 persons. By means of a fleet in the Caspian Sea, an army might be able to go round these deserts, but for this it would be necessary that it sailed to the mouth of the river Attruck, by which means the line of operation would be altered from that proposed along the Oxus, and in such a case go over Asterabad, Musched, Herrat, and so on. Besides, Russia has only eight or ten small corvettes in the Caspian Sea, and the whole of its trading-fleet there consists of, at most, thirty or forty open vessels; there could, therefore be no possibility of transporting even the most trifling body of troops‡.

According to the latest examinations of the river Oxus (by Alexander Barnes, 1838), it is navigable throughout the greater part of its course, and is free from sandbanks, cataracts, rocks, and whirlpools. It is did not, at its mouth in the Aral Sea, become a morass, it would be navigable for the course of 120 geographical miles (taking away this marshy part, it is navigable for a distance of 190 geographical miles, fifteen miles on the degree of latitude). At the narrowest part it is 800 yards; its depth, during the driest season, is nine feet, at other times even thirty. A considerable number of vessels are to be had, each of which holds 200 men; and as the shores are thickly inhabited and rich in timber, there are the means to build more. An army, following the Oxus, can thus with tolerable ease press forward on it as far as to the neighbourhood of Balkh, where an extensive mountainous tract presents itself, which forms a branch of Hindoo-Koosch (the Indian Caucasus), and the breadth of which, from Balkh to Cabul, is more than sixty geographical miles. The height of the passes above the surface of the sea is from 8 to 12,000 feet, and these not free from ice and snow for more than July, August, and September, and even then are exposed to lavines, which often bury whole caravans. This mountainous tract consequently presents, if not impracticable, at least very considerable, hindrances to the progress of an army.

It is about forty-five geographical miles from Cabul to the Indus; the first thirty go through a thinly-inhabited and rocky country to the town of Peschawer. The pass, Khyber, through which this road goes, is five miles long, presents every possible natural hindrance, and is the haunt of the bold Khyber's robber bands. Peschawer is a very flourishing and populous town, situated in a fertile country, whose well-cultivated fields are watered by dams on the Cabul. Hence two ways go to the Indus. The first to Attock (fifteen geographical miles from Peschawer); the other towards the south, over salt-hills, which form the usual difficulties in mountainous tracts. This road afterwards follows the right shore of the Indus, crosses it at Kohereo, and thence to Multan here it divides itself into two branches, one of which follows the river to Sinde, while the other goes through the Bikanerian sand-deserts to Ajmeere, and so on to British India.

The road from Peschawer to Attock is passable even for artillery, but goes through a narrow pass, formed by the river Cabul on the one side, and a high range of mountains on the other, where a small body of forces can prevent the approach of a whole army. Such passes are also met with on the road leading over the salt-hills to the river Indus.

We have now shown the natural hindrances to the advance of an army along the Oxus§, and over Hindoo-Koosch to India; besides these, however, there are the political hindrances, which are of more consequence than the former, for such a military expedition presupposes that all the states on the way should first be taken by force (voluntarily they will never unite with Russia, which is considered, as well by the inhabitants of Khiva as Bokhara, as a hereditary enemy), which makes an operation along the Oxus anything but easy. It would require at least one campaign to force Khiva, one for Bokhara and the Turkomanian tribes, and one for Khoondooz. It would, consequently, not be before the fourth campaign, that a Russian army would be able to go over Hindoo Koosch to Cabul, &c.; consequently India seems as safe on this side from attack as on the southern road, along the Persian Gulf. It now remains to examine the particulars of the third, namely, the central road leading to India over Persia and Afghanistan.—(To be continued.)

* Shiraz is the principal town in the province of Fars.

† Colonel Pottinger's and General Sir John Macdonald's opinions, given to the East India Company, testify this.

‡ It was in the desert Mukram that Alexander quenched the thirst of his army by throwing away the water which a soldier offered him in his helmet.

* The Asiatic tribes now call the river Amoo.

† Meyendorf and Eversmann.

‡ A transport fleet might possibly be built at Kasan and Astrachan, where there is much timber; but this is a great and expensive business, which requires several years preparation and labour, and consequently need not be taken into consideration before it is absolutely built. Seamen to man this fleet would also be needed.

§ Nadir Shah, on his return from India, transported his army on the river Oxus, which was so much the more easy, as he went down the river; it would be quite another thing for an army which, coming from the south, should go up the same, the river being very rapid, and consequently requiring that every vessel should be towed either by men or horse.

A young Ensign residing in lodgings, the sitting-room of which was very small, was visited by one of his fashionable Military friends, who on taking leave said, alluding to the smallness of the apartment—"Well, Charles, and how much longer do you mean to continue in this nutshell?" To which he replied—"Until I become a Kernel."

Advantages of this Association.

An ample subscribed capital.

Four-fifths of the profits divided every five years.

Advances made to be assured, on giving security for future premiums and interest.

An important and peculiar feature in this Association is, that the assurers may reside in any part of the globe either by paying an extra premium, (or at their option,) by an arrangement for a stipulated deduction from the sum assured in case of death abroad, but for Europe, Australia, the Cape of Good Hope, or the British Possessions in North America, no extra premium or deduction is incurred.

Premiums may be paid quarterly, half yearly, or annually.

ANNUITY BRANCH.

In addition to the following advantageous Scale of Rates, four-fifths of the profits are divided among the annuitants every three years by way of bonus.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

THIS Elegant, Fragrant, and Pellucid Oil—is in Universal High Repute for its unequalled Restorative, Preservative, and Beautifying Properties. It prevents Hair from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of life; changes grey Hair to its original colour, frees it from scurf, and renders it beautifully Soft, Curly, and Glossy. In dressing Hair, it keeps it firm in the curl, uninjured by damp weather, crowded rooms, the dance, or in the exercise of riding. To Children it is invaluable, as it lays a foundation for a beautiful Head of Hair.

Caution.—Ask for "Rowland's Macassar Oil," and observe that each bottle is (with a Treatise on the Hair, 31st edition,) inclosed in a Wrapper, on which are their Names and Address, in Red, thus— A. Rowland & Son, 20, Hatton Garden, Counter-signed, Alex. Rowland.

The lowest price is 3*s.* 6*d.*—the next price is 7*s.*—family bottles, containing four small, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and double that size, 21*s.* per bottle.

Impostors call their trash the Genuine, and omit the "&" in the signature, offering it for sale under the lure of being cheap.

HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA,

And His MAJESTY THE KING OF PRUSSIA,

Having AUTHORISED and GUARANTEED several DISTRIBUTIONS of MONEY PREMIUMS, which (though they are NO LOTTERIES, offer many possibilities of obtaining

LARGE FORTUNES,

HEINE BROTHERS, at HAMBURGH, are NOW SELLING SHARES for the said DISTRIBUTIONS. Persons desirous to purchase may receive, PREVIOUS to giving any order, the PROSPECTUS and PARTICULARS, upon addressing, WITHOUT DELAY, a line to

HEINE BROTHERS, at HAMBURGH.

P.S.—THE NEXT AUSTRIAN DISTRIBUTION contains Portions from TWENTY POUNDS and upwards to THREE THOUSAND, SIX THOUSAND, and TWELVE THOUSAND POUNDS. The DISTRIBUTING DAY being the 2nd day of March, there is plenty of time for becoming a Shareholder therein. But the NEXT PRUSSIAN DISTRIBUTION contains Portions from NINE POUNDS TEN SHILLINGS and upwards to TEN THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED POUNDS. TAKING PLACE IN NEXT MONTH there is NO TIME TO BE LOST for those desirous to avail themselves of THAT DISTRIBUTION. Shares clearing off rapidly. A considerable RISE IN PRICE will occur at the end of this month.

HODGSONS' EAST INDIA PALE ALE.—E. ABBOTT and CO., Wapping, are exclusively supplied by Messrs. Hodgsons and Abbott, of Bow Brewery, with this long-celebrated Beer, for home consumption: orders for which, in 18-gallon casks or bottles, immediately attended to. Export orders executed.—City Office, 98, Gracechurch-street.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial; they, therefore, sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to; and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract.—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 13*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 90*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 90*s.*; tent ditto, 95*s.*; furniture for ditto, 26*s.*; japanned chairs, 3*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing tables, 6*s.* each; japanned drawers, 44*s.* each; mahogany ditto, 44*s.*; feather beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust or smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. Window curtains and bed furnitures made from the newest designs, old furniture cleaned and remade, portable and solid furniture; ships' cabins, yachts, and steam-boats, elegantly fitted.

71, Leadenhall-street. ED. LAVER, Secretary.

INDIGESTION and DIARRHŒA.—The ill effects of eating imprudently of fruit, shell-fish, and other food of an irritable nature to the bowels, are immediately removed by a wine-glass dose or two of a pleasant and palatable remedy, BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB, the only equally agreeable, and efficacious form in which that invaluable medicine, Rhubarb, can be administered. From its specific tendency to assist, rather than force the efforts of nature, it is rapidly superseding the baneful use of deleterious and violent purgatives, which too often aggravate the diseases they are expected to cure. Sold in Bottles at 2*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.*, by J. King, Proprietor, 79, Queen-street, Cheapside; Barclay, Farringdon-street; and all Chemists.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichson, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London any where but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s.* each.

Printed by William Thomas, No. 18, Gloucester Terrace, Old Brompton, in the County of Middlesex, Printer, at the Office of Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, Lombard-street, Fleet-street, in the Precinct of Whitefriars, in the City of London, and Published by him at the Office, 19, Catherine-street, Strand, in the same County, where all Advertisements and Communications for the Editor are to be addressed.—Saturday, September 28, 1839.

EAST INDIA ARMY AGENCY.—CALCUTTA and LONDON.—J. H. STOCQUELER and Co. beg to announce to their Friends that, in consequence of the rapid extension of their business, and the increase of their Subscription List to upwards of 1,200 names, they have deemed it right to consult the convenience and accommodation of their supporters by REMOVING their West end Office from No. 8, Cr le's court, to a spacious Suite of Rooms in PALL-MALL EAST (entrance No. 26, bully-k-street). The Reading-room and principal Office at No. 85, King William-street, City, will remain as before.

This Agency, though it has been less than two years in operation, is now supported by upwards of Twelve Hundred Subscribers.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 188, NEW BOND-STREET, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, large, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 188, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties: and they beg to apprise their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

UMBRELLAS.—GOLDEN PERCH, 52, STRAND.—School Umbrellas, fast colours, 2s. each; Large size, 2s.; Largest size, 2s. 6d.; Fine Scotch Gingham and New Whalebone, 4s. 6d.; Largest size, 5s. 6d.; the very Best Quality, 6s. 6d.; Largest size ditto, 7s. 6d.; Silk Umbrellas, 8s.; Large size, 10s.; Largest size, 12s.; Best Quality, 16s.; Middle size, 20s.; Largest and Best, 25s. PORTSMOUTH, Oct. 11.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Rattlesnake and Stromboli have sailed; the first for Woolwich, the last to Glasgow, in charge of the Master and a party of officers and men from the Victory; Capt. Lock assumed the command of that ship on Sunday. Not any vessel of war has arrived or sailed during the week. The Pantaloon is in the harbour ready for sea, and kept so in case her services should be suddenly required. A Russian corvette, bound to the Pacific either on the annual or bi-yearly trip to that part of the globe with stores and ammunition for the Russian settlement, put into Spithead Outer Anchorage; her Commander fired a salute on coming to the anchorage, and afterwards waited on the Commander-in-Chief. The repeated report of Admiral the Hon. C. E. Elambury's appointment as Governor of Greenwich Hospital was confirmed on Wednesday, as it arrived that morning; several officers have been named to succeed him as Port-Admiral here; but the prevailing opinion is in favour of Admiral Sir George Parker. It is not expected there will be any change in the officers of the Britannia. The Blonde, Magicienne, and Sapphire troop-ships, are ready for commission, but no one is yet appointed to either. A strong party are at work in preparing the Queen for service. Madagascar, Dublin, and Warspite, are in dock, and a few men are employed on them. There is no ship in commission in the port, except Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, and Messenger.

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.)—4th—Arrived the Swale, tender to the Astræa, from Falmouth, with old stores, and sailed on her return to that port the 9th, with stores for the packet service. Sailed the Dwarf tender, Mr. Martin Master, for the North Coast of Spain, with stores for the squadron under Lord John Hay. Also sailed the Drake lighter for Pembroke, with Mr. Mills, Master of the San Josef, and a party of men to rig and navigate the Persian, 16, to this port, launched on the 7th inst. from that dock-yard. 5th—Sailed the Duke of Roxburgh emigrant-ship for New Zealand. 6th—Arrived L'Aigle Sardinier, Sardinian corvette, from Cronstadt. Also arrived the Goodwill lighter, from Sheerness and Portsmouth, with stores for the dock-yard. 7th—Arrived the Magistrate chartered ship, with troops on board for Bombay; she experienced a heavy gale of wind to the westward of this port, in which she received some damages, and was obliged to bear up to have them repaired. Sailed Partridge, 10, Lt.-Com. William Morris (a), for South America; she has taken out some boys for the ships on that station. 8th—Arrived the Merlin post-office packet from Dublin, with the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; she sailed for Liverpool the following day. The Nimrod, 20, was hauled out of dock, having been new coppered; she is getting her defects completed alongside the jetty, and it is said will shortly be commissioned. 9th—The Foudroyant, 80, was hauled into dock to have her copper cleaned and repaired. Sailed the Apollo troop-ship, Mr. A. Kailey, Master, with timber for Pembroke Dock-yard; she will proceed from thence to Cork and embark troops. 10th—The Bombay, 84, was hauled out of dock, having been new coppered, and had her interior fastenings completed. In Harbour—Indefatigable, San Josef, Wizard, & Carron, st.-v. In the Sound—Rolla.

MILFORD HAVEN, Oct. 9.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Arrived the Diligence Naval transport and Drake lighter, with stores for the Arsenal up at Pembroke Dock. On Monday last, at 5.15 p.m., the Persian, a brig of 16 guns, was launched from that establishment. She went off in very good style, amidst deafening shouts from a pretty large concourse of spectators. The following is an account of her principal dimensions:—length between the perpendiculars, 105 ft.; do. of keel for tonnage, 82 ft. 2½ in.; breadth extreme, 33 ft. 6 in.; do. for tonnage, 33 ft. 2 in.; do. moulded, 32 ft. 8 in.; depth in the hold, 14 ft. 10 in.; burthen in tons, 481 11-94ths. She was taken into dock the following morning, to be coppered, rigged, &c. She is a sister ship to the Grecian, lately launched from the same yard. The following is a list of the officers of the Marine detachment at Pembroke—the former account I sent you was not correct:—Capts. Downman and Barnes, Lieuts. Hollingworth and Payne, and Quartermaster Lieut. Maltby. Capt. Downman is on leave. Capt. Superintendent Jackson went on leave on Friday last. Commander Higgs is Acting Superintendent in his absence. The Dutch ship Admiral Van Kingsbergen proceeded on her voyage on Sunday last, after having undergone a thorough refit. It may be recollected she was towed in here by the Skylark revenue cruiser, with loss of masts, in June last.

DEPTFORD, 9th Oct., 1839.—Sailed Rainbow for Cape of Good Hope, Sovereign transport Rio Janeiro, Portia for Malta. Arrived Gilbert Henderson to fit for female convicts, Barrette Junior to fit for a regular transport. Remain James Pattison, emigrant ship, Augusta Jessie, convict ship, Numa, transport, and Scourfield loading for Ascension. Contractors are fitting the rope-making machine and double dock gates.

MALTA, Sept. 25.—The British squadron under Sir Robert Stopford, and that of France under Admiral Lalande, (who has been joined by Rear-Admiral Lasusse in the Montebello from Toulon), were still at anchor in Biaika Bay when the last French steamer from the Levant passed there on the 8th inst., waiting the arrival of the Gorgon with despatches, which vessel left this on the 6th inst. In port—The Ceylon (a), and Hastings (s), Volcano and Acheron.

Com. Parry, from the Coast-Guard, Yorkshire, is to relieve Com. Patten, Inspecting Commander Coast-Guard, Isle of Sheppy; Com. Patten being ordered to Exmouth on that duty.

The Russell, 74, is the next ship to be commissioned at Sheerness; also Wanderer brig, 18 guns. The Vernon, 50 guns, is being brought forward for commissioning.

The Imogene, 28, Capt. Bruce (1821), is daily looked for from the Brazils, with a large freight of dollars on merchants' account. Com. Thomas Ogle, promoted to Captain, from the President frigate, is expected home in the Imogene. She has nearly 2,000,000 dollars on board.

THE ROYAL GEORGE. The divers have made fast chains to whatever projecting substance they could find, when a strain has been hove on it by the derrick erected in one of the lighters, and in this way a large vessel has been fully loaded. One brass and three iron guns, the latter with their carriages, have been recovered, and a beam, 37 feet long, together with sundry knees, riders, and sleepers; among other matters were a length of junk, and two large copper fish-kettles, usually put away in the Boatswain's store-room, several silver shoe buckles, a shoemaker's last, and part of a German flute. In the case of one of the iron guns only the muzzle ring of it could be felt above the mud, but Hiram London, one of the divers, managed to pass a chain securely round it, and by dint of a heavy purchase, which brought the lighter three or four streaks down in the water, it was hove, with its carriage, out of the mud. The diver, Hall, succeeded in bringing up a 12-pounder brass gun, and London, the other diver, slung and brought up a brass 24-pounder. The value of the guns and copper already recovered exceeds 1,000*l*.

When the Scalehy Castle, Capt. Patrick Gardner, was approaching Table Bay, in October, 1801, Capt. Gardner, looking through his glass at the ships at anchor there, long before their hulls were distinctly seen, pronounced the Diomede to be one of them, from the beautiful manner her rigging was set up. This turned out to be the case, and Capt. Gardiner, as we approached nearer, desired his officers to look at her, observing there was not another ship in the Navy in such high order. That Captain Elphinstone Fleeming was a perfect pattern in the Navy for discipline, beloved at the same time by men and officers.—Correspondent Morning Chronicle.

We well remember when there was but one opinion in the Navy as to Admiral Keats being one of the best, if not the very best officer in the Navy, at a time when he had not yet been so fortunate as to be in any general engagement. If the peace continue much longer, there will not be one efficient officer in the Navy who has been in any general engagement; but will it be the less known in that glorious branch of our service, who is in a condition to lead our tars to battle against an enemy, should the occasion arise?—Morning Chronicle.

The appointment of a Lieutenant to the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, vacant by the death of Mr. Renwick, has not yet taken place.

The Turkish and Egyptian Fleets are said to be in a deplorable state. The crews of the Egyptian fleet had not had any pay during a long period. The money brought by the Turkish fleet was nearly exhausted. The penury of the treasury was such that the purchases for the arsenal and dock-yards were suspended, a circumstance severely felt by the manufacturers of Cairo.

The report that the Hermes is ordered home is not correct. She has arrived at Gibraltar with mails, having left Corfu on the 14th Sept., and Malta on the 19th. The Megæra had taken the India mails to Marseilles on the 12th Sept. The Gorgon went to join the fleet on the 6th Sept., and the Rhadamanthus for the same destination on the 17th with mails and despatches. By the latest intelligence the fleet were in Biaika Bay. The Hermes passed the Hastings on the 29th Sept. in lat, 36 deg. 53 min. N., long. 12 deg. 1 min. E., with a fair wind steering to the S.E., supposed for Malta. Talbot left Corfu on 12th Sept., on a tour of the Ionian Islands with the Lord High Commissioner.

The Firefly steamer has been commissioned at Woolwich by Lieut. W. Winniett, 1821; Second Master, H. Baker; Clerk, F. Cole; Engineers, Messrs. Stow, Richardson, and Urquart. The Firefly will take Lieut.-General Maister to Barbadoes.

The Avon steamer is paid off at Woolwich.

Com. Webb, of the Sheerness Ordinary, is expected to commission the Wanderer at that port.

A deputation, headed by the Mayor of Drogheda, has recently presented to Mr. R. K. Thompson, Chief Officer of the Coast-Guard, Clogher, Ireland, the freedom of the Corporation of Drogheda in a gold box, for his gallant exertions in saving the crew of the Minerva schooner.

Messrs. J. W. Purver and F. C. Herbert, Mates of Hercules and Howe, passed for Lieutenants at the Royal Naval College on Tuesday, and Mr. J. H. Bond as a Naval Instructor.

The late Vice-Adm. Sir Thomas Hardy was eminent for that judgment and self-possession, without which deeds of honour and arms are seldom achieved: perpetually awake to the various duties of his command, anxious for the improvement of the service to which he had devoted himself, equal to every difficulty which it could present, yet not above its most trivial details, detecting with intuitive facility whatever might require correction, and applying the due remedy, passing readily from the sharpest reproof to the very gentleness of human nature in her best forms, always mindful of those who had shared with him in the toils and perils of warfare, or were otherwise deserving of encouragement. Sir Thomas Hardy will descend to posterity as one of the truest models in that profession to which the state is so much indebted for its security, its wealth, and its renown.

The departure of Her Majesty's ship Larne from Macao for Singapore, after the full extent of the proceedings of the Chinese government against our commerce was known, and in spite of the strong remonstrances of the superintendent, has naturally excited no small degree of surprise. There was some apology for the silence of the Foreign-Office on this matter until official despatches were received from Capt. Elliott. It is now, however, nearly a fortnight since Lord Palmerston was put in possession of all the details from Capt. Elliott to the end of May, and yet not one word has been communicated to the merchants, to guide them in their future operations, or what instructions have been sent from home. We have abundant opportunity of ascertaining the feeling produced by this cavalier treatment amongst the mercantile body, and we can assure his Lordship that it is anything but calculated to promote or extend the sphere of the influence of him and his coadjutors. It has been repeatedly stated, that the Admiral on the Indian station had positive instructions not to interfere in the disputes in China without special orders from home, and this announcement has never been contradicted. This is considered a most anomalous situation to leave such an important branch of our commerce in, and the more especially when under the superintendence of an officer of such high character as Capt. Elliott, who must in consequence be deprived of all moral influence to expedite a settlement of the disputes. There was no ship-of-war left in the Chinese seas after the departure of the Larne.—Shipping Gazette.

SERVICES OF CAPTAINS R.N.

(From the New Navy List.)

[In the N. and M. G. of 17th August, we gave brief notices of the Captains, ending with the gallant Sir Neshit Willoughby, and we now present a few more.]

George Sayer was made a Commander while Senior Lieutenant of the Ethalion, for the capture of the Bellone, after an action of nearly two hours, in the year 1798.

James A. Worth, commanding the Telegraph, hired armed brig, captured, after an action of three hours and a half, L'Hirondelle, of superior force: was Captain of the Venerable, 74, at the capture of two French frigates in 1814.

Francis Douglas served as Lieutenant of the St. Croix schooner at the sieges of Bastia and Calvi; was second of the Bedford at the capture of the Ca Ira, and in Lord Hotham's skirmish in 1798. Was wounded when Lieutenant of the Venerable, at Camperdown.

James Lillicrap was Lieutenant of the Venerable in the action off Algaziras in 1801. Commanded the Venerius bomb on the Boulogne station, and the Despatch at Copenhagen.

Walter Grosett was a Midshipman in Rodney's action; was Mate of the Bogue at the reduction of the French West India Islands in 1794. Was Lieutenant of the Centaur at the reduction of Minorca in 1798.

F. J. Nott was Lieutenant of the Leviathan in Howe's action, and wounded in the Sans Pareil in Lord Bridport's.

Gustavus Stupart was made a Commander for, and severely wounded in, cutting out a polacca from near Cape de Creux in 1799, while Lieutenant of Success.

John Coode, when commanding the Porcupine, was actively employed on the Coast of France, particularly in the passage of the Adour, and in the Gironde. He commanded the Albion at Algiers, and was wounded.

J. Coghlan was made a Lieutenant by an order in Council, for having cut out of Port Louis, from under three batteries, the Cerbere, French man-of-war brig, in which he was wounded in 1806. The following year, in command of the Viper cutter, he captured Le Hero, of 14 guns, and in the Renard in the year 1804, fought a gallant action with the General Ernouf, French privateer of superior force, which ended in the destruction of the privateer by fire. In 1813 he commanded a detachment of Seamen and Marines in a successful attack on the batteries in the Bay of Cassis. In 1814, assisted at the destruction and capture of a convoy in the Bay of Genoa.

T. F. C. Mainwaring, when Lieutenant of the Naiad frigate, witnessed the battle of Trafalgar, and commanded the Tartarus fire-ship at Copenhagen.

Sir Thomas Fellowes, as Lieutenant in command of the Swinger and Unique brigs, in the West Indies, distinguished himself on various occasions, for which he was made Commander, and was posted for a series of gallant actions, performed during the siege of Cadiz in 1810 and 1811. He commanded the Dartmouth at Navarin.

Thomas Huskisson was Midshipman of the Defence at Trafalgar, and witnessed the capture of Linois' squadron in the Fondroyant. As Flag Lieutenant to Lord Gambier, assisted at the operations against Copenhagen in 1807; and as Commander of the Pelorus, was at the reduction of Guadaloupe in 1810.

E. H. Alcourt, when Midshipman of the Blanche, in command of a boat of that ship, captured an enemy's schooner with troops, after considerable resistance, in 1803.

Sir B. C. Doyle was senior Lieutenant of the St. Fiorenzo, at the capture of the Psyche in the East Indies, in 1805.

John Pasco was severely wounded when Lieutenant of Nelson's flag ship at Trafalgar.

John Duff Markland, when Midshipman of La Nymphe, assisted at the capture of two French frigates. In 1809, while commanding the Bustard in the Adriatic, assisted at the capture of a convoy near Trieste, and was actively employed in the defence of Sicily. In command of the Milford, he bore a part at the siege of Trieste.

Edward Harvey witnessed the battle of Camperdown when Midshipman of the Beaulieu frigate, and served as Lieutenant of the Southampton at the capture of the Danish and Swedish Islands in 1799.

R. M. Fowler, returning from the East Indies when a Lieutenant, as a passenger rendered great service to the fleet under Sir N. Dance, in his gallant action with Linois' squadron in 1804.

W. F. Owen was Midshipman of the Culloden in Howe's action. Witnessed, when in the Ruby, the capture of a Dutch squadron at the Cape of Good Hope in 1796; and when commanding the Barracouta, assisted at the capture of Batavia in 1811.

M. H. Dixon was badly wounded when First Lieutenant of the Horatio, while engaging the Junon, in 1800, for his gallantry on which occasion he was promoted.

Donald Campbell was Lieutenant of the Russell at Camperdown. Was actively employed in the West Indies while commanding the Lily.

George Henderson, when Lieutenant of the Centaur, witnessed the capture of four French frigates by a squadron under the command of Sir S. Hood in 1806. Served as Commander on the fire-ship service at Flushing.

W. T. Tucker commanded the boats of the Sceptre at the destruction of Belair French brig of 16 guns at Rodriguez in 1799. Was Lieutenant of Northumberland at St. Domingo, and served at the reduction of Martinique in 1809, and Guadaloupe in 1810, and was severely wounded in the Cherub, in action with the American frigate United States.

John Spyker served as Midshipman at Toulon. Was Lieutenant of the Mary in Cornwallis's retreat, and in the same ship in her gallant action with L'Hercule. Commanded the Rhin bomb in the Scheldt in 1809.

Henry Bourchier, when Lieutenant of the Unicorn, captured in one of her boats, after an obstinate resistance, a French privateer of 4 guns and 46 men. Was posted from the Hawk sloop for a gallant action with a French flotilla near Cape Barfleur, nearly the whole of which were captured or destroyed.

R. W. C. Festing was Captain of the Illustrious at the capture of Java, and served on shore with the Army at the surrender of Batavia.

Peter J. Douglas, when Lieutenant of the Franchise, commanded one of her boats at cutting out the Spanish man-of-war brig El Reposo, from Campeachy, in 1806.

George Price, while Lieutenant of the Porcupine, was constantly engaged with the enemy's flotillas and convoys in the Adriatic, in 1807-8: was promoted for a very gallant affair at Port d'Anzo in the latter year, when he was severely wounded; and by his Captain's report, was more than thirty times in action in one year.

William Shepheard served at the occupation of Toulon in 1793, and against the Island of Corsica. Was Lieutenant of the Windsor Castle in Lord Hotham's action in 1795. While commanding the Pigmy cutter, was actively employed against the enemy's privateers in the Mediterranean. In command of the Bastick gun-brig, was frequently engaged with the Boulogne flotilla in 1805. Served as agent of transports, and volunteered to command a flotilla of gun-boats in the Tagus in 1808.

John Tabocok was Midshipman of the Crescent at the capture of the Resolue in 1782. Served in the Orion in Lord Bridport's action, and in the same ship at St. Vincent. Commanded that ship's launch at Nelson's attack on the Calis flotilla in 1797, and in the battle of the Nile. Was Lieutenant of the Cæsar at Algeziras.

21st—Lieut. MacGregor has returned home on sick leave.

22d—The funeral of Brev.-Major Keappock, whose sudden death was reported in our last, took place on the 2d. He was interred in St. Paul's Church-yard, Dublin, with military honours. Order of procession:—Firing party; band and drums; Clergyman and medical officers; the body; chief mourner; the horse; soldiers with side arms, four deep; officers, two deep. The whole flanked by the 6th Dragoons, 19th and 85th Regs. He was followed to the grave by the greater number of the officers quartered in the garrison, a number of civilians, and a large crowd waited at the church to witness the procession. The deceased having been a Roman Catholic, the funeral service was read by the Rev. Mr. Parsley, Roman Catholic Chaplain to the garrison—three volleys were fired over the grave at the conclusion of the service. The deceased had risen from the ranks.

28th Depot—See 95th.

29th—"We are sorry to state, that the 29th Reg., which have for a short time been stationed at Weedon, and in our barracks, are ordered to leave us on Thursday next. Their destination is Woolwich. The gentlemanly conduct of the officers, and the civil quiet behaviour of the men, together with the amusement afforded by their excellent band, have made the regiment very popular in this town."—Northampton Herald. The corps have moved to Woolwich: part arrived on Thursday.

30th Depot—from Belfast to Dundalk, Oct. 10 to 14.

34th—Ens. Still is on leave to 15th Dec.

35th Depot—Maj. Tennant, 4 Subalterns, and 40 men, are ordered to embark for the Mauritius. Lieut.-Col. Butler has arrived therefrom, and Maj. Ensign Coulon is on leave to 14th Nov.

37th Depot—Capt. Skelly, Ens. Lambard, and 20 r. and f., marched from Waterford to attend the fair of Ballylarogun, between Kilmacthomas and Dungarvan, in consequence of apprehended faction fighting.

38th—An officer, 2 Serjts., and 30 r. and f., from Newry to Carrickfergus, Sept. 30 to Oct. 3. 2 cos. and head-qrs. from Newry to Belfast, Oct. 6 to 10. 2 cos. from do. to do., Oct. 9 to 11. The 2 cos. from Dundalk to Newry, Oct. 14.

42d—On the 4th inst., Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Macbean, K.C.H., inspected the Royal Highlanders, under command of Lieut.-Col. Johnstone, in the Square of the New Barracks, when the appearance of officers and men under arms, and the state of the regimental appointments, afforded much satisfaction to the General; who, with Sir W. Macbean, Col. Mansel, Assist. Adj.-General, Ens. Macbean, 85th, A.D.C., and the heads of departments, dined at the officer's mess in the evening. The presence of Lieut.-Col. Middleton, late Commanding Officer, added not a little to this festive re-union.

43d—Letters have been received from Lord Fitzroy Lennox, who had landed safely at Quebec with the detachment.

50th—Septimus Campbell, Esq., late a Lieutenant in this corps, who settled at Sydney, died there suddenly of apoplexy last April, at the Macquarie public-house, a few months after retiring from the service.

50th Depot—The order for the embarkation of Major Serjeantson in the Augusta Jessie has been cancelled.

51st—Major Mainwaring is Commandant at Launceston, Australia.

Sir Benjamin D'Urban has received a cross and five clasps for Fuentes, Albuhera, Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, and Toulouse.—Colonel Elliott served at the battle of Fuentes d'Onor; sieges of Badajoz, and Ciudad Rodrigo; affair near Moresco; battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid and Retiro; siege and retreat from Burgos; battles of the Pyrenees, Nivelle, and Orthes. Present at Waterloo, and capture of Cambray.—Major Mainwaring served in the Peninsula, from March, 1811, to January, 1814, including the battle of Fuentes d'Onor; 2d siege of Badajoz; Val Moresco; Sala-manœa; retreat from Burgos; capture of Retiro, Madrid; battles of Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Nivelle. Present at Waterloo, June 18.—Capt. Ainsworth served at the siege of Flushing, and subsequently in the Peninsula, including the battle of Fuentes d'Onor, and 2d siege of Badajoz. Present at Waterloo.—Capt. Austin served in the Peninsula, from Oct. 1811, to April, 1812, including the siege and storming of Ciudad Rodrigo. Served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the taking of the fortified village of Merxem. Present on the 18th June at Waterloo.—Paymaster Gibbs served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1811, until the end of the war, and was severely wounded in the advance on Llerena, 26th March, 1812. Present at Waterloo.—Quartermaster Kenny served at the taking of Castine in North America in 1814.—New Army List.

52d—Capt. the Hon. H. Cavendish Grey has been appointed to the staff of Sir Colin Campbell at Halifax.

59th—Lieut. G. Nares Heard, 59th Regt., has succeeded Lieut. Galway, 77th, as Superintendent of the Recruiting Service at Cork: the latter officer rejoins his regt.

60th, 1st Batt., Depot—expect an order to proceed immediately from Birr to Limerick. On Sunday se'nnight an officer at Birr Barracks was robbed of a gold watch, chain, seals, rings, &c., value 50*l*. A female named Bridget Walsh, arrested by the Birr police, was fully committed for trial. The things were found on her person.

60th, 2d Batt. Depot—Capt. Stewart is ordered to join the service cos.

61st Depot—There are 21 officers, including the Lieut.-Colonel, doing duty with the depot, according to this month's Army List; if the service cos. should be retained at Ceylon, a large draft will be required for embarkation. Capt. Jones has rejoined from leave.

62d—The Rev. E. Pomeroy Brooke, who has just been appointed to the Rectory of Drumgoland, Dromore, was formerly a Captain in this regt.

68th Depot—Both the Majors are present.

72d Depot—Major-Gen. Lord Greenock, K.C.B., commanding in North Britain, having intimated his intention of inspecting the Highlanders, on the 28th ult. they were prepared for the reception of his Lordship; but on account of the rain which came on at the time, they were paraded in their barrack-rooms. His Lordship made a very minute inspection of the men, with whose appearance he expressed himself highly satisfied.

73d—Major Vander Meulen is on leave to 29th Nov., and Lieut. D'Arcy to 14th Dec.

76th—It is with sincere pleasure we are enabled to state that a letter has been received from Demerara, from our young townsman, Lieut. Thomas Tydd, for whom so much anxiety had been evinced by his family and friends, in consequence of the ravages which yellow fever had committed in the 76th, the regiment to which he belongs. Lieut. Tydd was but a short time recovered from the very awful disease, when he wrote.—Limerick Chronicle.

78th—Early on Friday morning, a soldier and a woman who were walking along the banks of the Canal, fell into it opposite Lochrin Distillery. Their cries brought the police watchman and night patrol to the spot, who succeeded with some difficulty in getting them out. The woman lost an umbrella and a purse with 3*s.* 6*d.*, and the soldier his bonnet and shoes.

On Saturday morning the inhabitants were startled by witnessing the performance of the novel ceremony of drumming a soldier out of this regiment. The name of the delinquent is John Exemouth, a native of the north country, who joined the regiment some years ago; and who, from his conduct, had frequently become the subject of remonstrance and of punishment. His last offence, we believe, consisted in picking the pocket of a recruit in the guard-house, and stealing from him 7*s.* 6*d.* For this crime he was tried by a Court-Martial a few weeks ago, and sentenced to receive 150 lashes, and then to be dismissed the service. The former part of the sentence was carried into immediate execution; and his stripes being healed, the remainder was executed. The culprit was brought out before the assembled regiment in front of the new barracks, where his sentence was read over, after which the facings of his uniform were publicly cut off, and he was then marched down to the Castle Gate, followed by the regiment, the band playing the Rogue's March. On being dismissed from his punishment, he took refuge in a public-house on the Castle Hill.—Edinburgh Observer.

83d Depot—Lieut. Balmondiere is appointed Acting-Paymaster in place of Lieut. D'Alton, promoted.

85th—We last week noticed the Court-Martial on Brevet-Major O'Connor. The following paragraph appears in a Canadian paper:—

The Court-Martial held at this place (London, U. C.) on Brev.-Major O'Connor terminated its proceedings last week—the result of which will not be made known for some time. But while the military verdict remains unknown—not so the verdict of public opinion—for never did we see in any case that searching test of guilt or innocence so unequivocally and generally expressed as it is on the proceedings instituted against this gallant and generous officer. A charge to injure the fair fame and blast the prospects of a man who has served his King and country in every clime for twenty nine years—who has fought and bled in their defence on many a battle field—whose conduct has been so unexceptionable as to never have a charge brought against him during that long service, a great part of which has been among the most difficult and trying scenes—should not be lightly brought. But when that charge appears to have grown out of the generous forbearance of a brave man towards a hasty and inconsiderate young officer, we think, and we believe the public at this place who have witnessed the proceedings think, that the honour and dignity of the service would have been better consulted had this ungenerous proceeding never have been suffered to transpire.

93d—Lieut. R. M. Banner, is appointed Acting-Adjutant.

94th Depot—were inspected by the Commandant at Chatham, Colonel Warre, on the 5th inst.

96th—The Nautilus convict-ship arrived on the evening of the 4th inst., at the Royal Harbour, Kingstown, having on board a guard consisting of Lieut. de Meuron and 16 men of the 96th, and Ens. Lake and 13 men of the 28th.

98th—In reply to inquiries respecting the result of the Court-Martial on Paymaster Doulevie, we can state positively that not a syllable is yet known.

99th—Capt. Gage George Canny, commanding the detachment at Shannon Bridge, died at that place on the 6th inst., after an illness of 36 hours.

Rifle Brigade, 1st Batt.—Corporal P. Chesmer, who was apprehended on board the Hannibal at Liverpool in July last, when on the point of sailing for the U.S. of America, has been reduced by General Court-Martial, sentenced to imprisonment for 12 calendar months, and to be branded with the letter "D."

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Three companies marched from Deptford, and two companies from Woolwich, on Wednesday, and five companies on Thursday, to Windsor.

Lt.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield is most anxious to convey to Col. Brown the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 2d. Batt. Rifle Brigade, his unqualified approval of the high state of discipline and excellent system that distinguished the corps by which its high character has been maintained, and its Military spirit upheld. It is most gratifying to the Lieut.-General to hold up to imitation the happy unanimity which has prevailed during a residence of above 12 months in this garrison, and which has tended to a material diminution of crime, and a perfect goodwill amongst each other. His Lordship, with great regret, takes leave of Col. Brown and the Battalion, assuring them of his high respect and sincere wishes for their future welfare and prosperity.

"We cannot omit," observes a Woolwich paper, "the present opportunity of paying a deserved compliment to the officers and men of this gallant corps, for the exemplary conduct which they have, on all occasions, evinced during their sojourn in this place. The harmony and good feeling which has always subsisted between themselves and the other troops in the garrison, offers an example well worthy of emulation by their brethren in arms." 2nd Lieut. Macdonald is on leave.

1st West India Reg.—Ens. Hughes is ordered for embarkation. Assist.-Surg. Montgomery will embark in a few days at Falmouth for Barbadoes.

2nd West India Reg.—Ens. Maclean is ordered to embark.

Ceylon Rifles—Second Lieuts. Hopson and Lucas are ordered for embarkation.

Rl. Artillery—Majors Gordon and Hardinge's companies, 3d Batt. for Ceylon, expect to embark on board the Rattlesnake troop-ship on Tuesday next.

G. O., Woolwich, Oct. 7, 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of the following transfers, viz.:—Sec. Lieut. Wragge from Major Willis to Major Shepherd's company, 8th Batt.; Sec. Lieut. Willis from Major W. C. Jackson's company, 3d Batt., to Major Willis's company, 8th Batt.

(Signed) T. E. Jones, Lt.-Col. A.A.-Gen.

With reference to the General Order of 28th July, 1839, granting an allowance to soldiers of Artillery serving in Canada, for the provision of certain articles of winter clothing. The Master-General and Board, by letter dated 4th Oct., 1839 (M 374), have been pleased to direct that the above Order be extended to the Artillery serving in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. (Signed) T. E. Jones, Lt.-Col. A.A.-Gen.

G. O., Woolwich, 7th Oct., 1839.—The Master General and Board having had under consideration the increase of bounty sanctioned by the Gen.-Com.-in-Chief, For the Cavalry of the Line they have been pleased, by letter dated 27th Sept., 1839 (S. 60), to grant an increase to the same amount, viz., one pound for the Ordnance Military Corps; making in all 4*l.* 13*s.* The distribution thereof to be as follows:—

To the recruit on being attested, in cash	0	2	6
On intermediate approval, in cash and necessaries	0	18	9
On final approval, in cash and necessaries	2	17	0
Amount of bounty	3	9	6
To the Inspecting Officer on intermediate approval, to cover the expense of postage, &c.	0	5	0
For attesting	0	1	0
To Surgical examination	0	2	6
To the party on intermediate approval	0	7	0
On final approval	0	5	0
To conducting the recruit to the place of final approval	0	2	6
Total levy money, British currency	4	13	6

The present arrangement to take effect from Oct. 1, 1839.

The Master-General and Board further direct that all recruits for the Royal Artillery shall be enlisted for unlimited service, as is the practice at present.

(Signed) T. E. Jones, A.A.-Gen.

Rl. Engineers.—

[From the Kingston Chronicle.]—"That distinguished officer, Col. Bonnycastle, is soon to be relieved from the command of the Rl. Engineers at this post, and is about to proceed to England. His services during the outbreak in 1837, when he took the command of the military force of this district, were of the most important and onerous nature. The management of a levy of undisciplined Yeomanry was conducted by him with much tact and knowledge of human nature. We understand the magistrates of this district are recommending him to the consideration of Her Most Gracious Majesty. This is an example well worthy of imitation; and the inhabitants of this district generally, and those of the town of Kingston especially, ought also to present him with some mark of their approbation."

E. I. Company's Depot—The detachment noticed to have embarked in the Repulse on 30th ult. for Bengal, was, by an error of the press, stated to be from the Provisional Battalion. A detachment of the E. I. Company's troops (75 infantry) will embark in the Duke of Buccleuch for Bengal about the 15th inst., and about the 20th another draft of 200 Artil. and Inf. in the Hindostan for Madras. This will, it is expected, close the Hon. Company's embarkations for the present season, amounting to 2,300 men since Feb. last, a greater number by 1,500 than have embarked for India in any one season since 1827.

Yeomanry.—The Queen's Own Reg. of Worcestershire Yeomanry were reviewed yesterday week. About ten o'clock Lt.-Col. Chatterton 4th Dragoon Guards arrived on the ground, when the regiment immediately commenced their exercise. Besides the Reviewing Officer there were present General Lord Combermere, Lords Powis, Beauchamp, Eastnor, and Delawarr, Col. Tynte, of the West Somersetshire Yeomanry, and many other officers. After the review Col. Chatterton addressed the regiment in a most complimentary speech, praising their appearance, their discipline, and the precision with which they executed their various manœuvres. The gallant General, Lord Combermere, also addressed the regiment in terms which they must all feel to be highly honourable and flattering to them. Col. Shaw Lefevre and the officers of the North Hants gave a grand ball and supper on Monday evening, at St. John's House, Winchester. The regiment was reviewed on the same day on Compton Down, by Lt.-Col. Vandeleur, 10th Hussars.

Major-Gen. Sir William Macbean proceeded on a tour of inspection on the 7th inst. to Nenagh, on the 8th to Templemore, where he remained the two following days, and yesterday, the 11th inst., arrived at Kilkenny.

The Waterloo Model.—It will be seen by an advertisement in this paper that the soldiers in London are to have an opportunity of studying this national work. This act of liberality is in keeping with others we could name of the ingenious and talented modeller. Yesterday the men of Colonel Bentinck's company of the Coldstream Guards visited the model in a body, accompanied by Captain the Hon. F. W. C. Villiers. The Service will appreciate the fine Military feeling which has induced Mr. Siborn to throw his work open to the free inspection and study of soldiers.

The accounts of the Canadian Volunteers and Militia which include an expenditure exceeding a million and a half, are to be examined by the War Office, and not by the Colonial Department.

Capt. J. J. H. Burgoyne, late of 93d Regt., is appointed Barrack-Master at Dominica, vice Lieut. J. Clayton Cowell, late 55th Regt., removed to the Barrack-Mastership of St. John's.

Lieut. T. W. Howe, late 34th, is appointed Barrack-Master at Trois Rivieres in Canada.

Mr. Macdonald has been removed from the Barrack-Mastership of St. John's to the newly established station at Isa Prairie.

At the Police Office Limerick, Sept. 30th, Capt. Macquarie, Lieut. Murray, Sir Frederick Dunbar, Messrs. Skerrot, Johnstone, and Blood, were charged with various offences, alleged to have been committed by them on the nights of the 28th and 29th ult. Lieut.-Col. Mansel, Brigade Major, attended, and demanded the names of all the officers against whom charges had been preferred by the civic authorities. The consideration of the matter was postponed until Friday, 4th Oct., the two sitting Magistrates declining to investigate the very serious case without the assistance of their brother magistrates.

Mr. Charles Fenn, Steward of the Senior United Service Club, who told a strange story of an assault and robbery of which he professed to have been the victim, has been dismissed by the Committee of the Club. The Committee are entitled to great credit for the very judicious manner in which they investigated this most disagreeable affair.

The duties are very severe on the troops at Chatham, and unless the 96th can be spared from watching the Chartists in the north of England, it is impossible to tell how the Garrison and Dock-yard duties are to be furnished there on the embarkation of the depots of 18th and 94th Regts.

We understand the Surveyor-General of the Ordnance has satisfied himself by personal inquiry and observation, of the necessity of supplying the troops in barracks here with good water, and also introducing gas to the barrack rooms. It is a lamentable fact, the water in common use is so impregnated with lime, that at every change of regiments the newly arrived corps is sure to lose some rank and file.—Limerick Chronicle.

Major-Gen. Sir Leonard Greenwell, K.C.B. and K.C.H., late Commandant at Chatham, has obtained the Queen's permission to proceed to Malta.

Officers and men for garrison duty Chatham are ordered to wear cl th trowsers.

The guard for the Augusta Jessie convict-ship embarked on the 10th inst.

The ship Magistrate, with detachments on board for regiments in India, is now in Plymouth Sound, having been compelled to put back in consequence of the pumps of the vessel becoming choked with sand, which escaped through the ceiling over the hold, in which exceedingly heavy steam machinery, for the use of the E.I. Company at Bombay, had been stowed. During a gale of wind, which she encountered in the chops of the Channel on the 4th inst., the sand burst out from among the machinery, and totally choked up the pumps. In this dangerous state, with enormous pieces of metal, more than one tons' weight each, loose in the vessel, the Captain very properly deemed it his duty to return to port and ascertain the damages. The dreadfully-crowded state of the ship, with 210 of Her Majesty's troops on board, and the lumbered state of her decks, in consequence of the cargo having been lifted up to get at the hold and to clear the well, all have combined to make this voyage exceedingly disgusting. Out of 210 men, we believe there are only three or four who have been enlisted more than four months, and there are no non-commissioned officers except those selected from the raw recruits.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SIR CHARLES O'DONNELL.—The following address to this highly esteemed officer was forwarded by the Mayor and Magistrates of Nottingham, on his relinquishing the Brigade-Majorship of the Northern District to accompany, as Military Secretary, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Jackson to Canada :—

To Lieut.-Colonel Sir Charles R. O'Donnell.

SIR,—The civil authorities of Nottingham cannot permit your departure from the town without expressing to you their grateful sense of your public services, their regret at the separation, and their sincere wishes for your welfare in the new sphere to which you are now called. During your station in Nottingham for the last two years and upwards, they have, on different occasions, derived the greatest benefit from your active, able, and ever-ready co-operation in measures requisite for the preservation of peace and order. Added to this experience of your official talents, is a feeling of sincere personal regard for your worth and character in private life. They beg, in these few farewell words, to convey to you the assurance of their high estimation, and of their cordial good wishes.—(Signed)—John Wells, Mayor, John Heard, Richard Morley, Mich. Gedling, jun., Thomas Marriott, Thomas Close, Charles Paget, William Hurst, Clerk to the Justices, Henry Enfield, Town Clerk.

THE LATE SIR ANDREW HALLIDAY.—This officer (whose demise on 7th Sept. last, we have already recorded) did not long survive the wasting climate of the West Indies, where he was Inspector of Hospitals. He retired to the air of his native country, but it was only to droop and die. His life from his youth up was one of action. He served on the Staff of the Army both in Portugal and Spain; was at the assault of Bergen-op Zoom, and at the battle of Waterloo; and accompanied William the Fourth when Duke of Clarence, in his journies abroad in quest of health. He was a good scholar, as well as a skilful physician, and his varied and almost general intelligence obtained him high esteem with princes abroad as well as at home. He had collected materials for writing an account of the chief campaigns of Wellington, which he had witnessed.

G. O.—WAR STATIONS. Office of Ordnance, Oct. 2, 1839.

The Board of Ordnance having been pleased to order that one room's allowance of fuel and candle, during the winter months, shall be issued for each room authorized to be fitted up, or appropriated, and actually used as a library room, Barrack-Masters will issue the same accordingly, and include the issues in the usual weekly fuel returns. Barrack-Masters will also understand that the tables and forms allowed for barrack rooms, with coal-boxes, candlesticks, and fire utensils, are to be furnished and borne on proper inventories, for the library rooms in question.

By Order of the Board, C. POLHAMD, for the Secretary.

MILITARY OUTRAGE.—About three weeks since a party of Cavalry, who had been training at the Maidstone depot, were despatched to join their respective regiments. On reaching Wrotham on their road to London, they, however, got drunk, drew their swords, and by their disgraceful conduct caused great terror in that usually quiet village. The Rev. George Moore, a magistrate, was sent for, and expostulated with the troopers. Whilst he was speaking one of the fellows fired a pistol off behind him. As the rev. gentleman has only one life, although possessed of several livings, he turned in alarm to ascertain from which this report had proceeded, and at that instant a carbine was fired again behind him. The weapons were only loaded with blank cartridge, but the rev. gentleman considered it wise to quit such dangerous company unceremoniously, and as they used fearful threats against any person who should attempt to apprehend them, an express was sent off for military assistance from Maidstone, and the fellows proceeded on their route. A detachment was sent from Maidstone, and brought them back from Farningham. They have been since tried by a Court-Martial, and the sentences were read on Monday. One Corporal and two Privates were acquitted, but were ordered to walk to their regiments—leading their horses! Corporals Brown, M'Dermot, and Coutts were broken, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment; the latter punishment being also awarded to Privates Enoom and Killday.—Maidstone Gazette. [We suspect this to be a very exaggerated statement. —ED. N. & M. G.]

Eclipses of the Sun and Moon.—In the year 1840 there will be two eclipses of the sun and two of the moon—all invisible in this country. The eclipses of the sun are on the 4th of March and 27th of August. The first is annular, and visible to the whole of Asia; the second is total, and is visible to part of Africa and the Indian Ocean. Those of the moon occur on the 17th of February and the 13th of August. They are both partial—the magnitude of the first being 362 on the southern limb, and the second 607 on the northern limb, the diameter of the moon being reckoned equal to 1.

By COUNT BJORNSTJERNA, Swedish Ambassador.

It is also remarkable that the Anglo-Indian Army's line of operation against Persia, and the other west and north Asiatic powers, is considerably shorter, and much more advantageous, than those powers' line of operation against India. The reason for which is, the dominion of the British over the Persian Gulf, by which they can send troops from Bombay, not only to Bushier (Abuschir), in Persia, but also up the Tigris to Bagdad, one of the most important provinces of Turkey.

From Bushier and its neighbouring city Shiraz, a British force thus brought can easily support one of the present pretenders to the Persian crown, and by that means shake considerably the new Shaik's still trembling throne.

A similar army can, from Bagdad, either support the Sultan against Persia or Russia; or also, united with any of its enemies (as the Viceroy in Egypt, whose army is in Syria, not far from the Euphrates), extend its arms to the very heart of Asiatic Turkey, according to the side which England might take in the changing combinations of European politics, into the labyrinths of which I shall not attempt to penetrate.

In the first case, if allied with the Sultan, an Anglo-Turkish Army at Bagdad might extend its operations to the not very distant Erivan, Georgia, and even to Circassia, now in a state of open war; an undertaking of a less eccentric nature than it at first sight appears to be, when it is recollected that the Anglo-Indian Government sent an army in 1801, under the command of General Baird, the conqueror of Seringapatam, from Calcutta to Cossier on the Red Sea; which marched thence to Cairo, and, united with General Abercrombie's army, then arrived from England, obliged the French to capitulate, and re-established Egypt under the power of the Sultan. The distance between Calcutta and Cairo which was performed by this army, is three times as great as that between Bombay and Bagdad, consequently the idea is decidedly within the bounds of possibility. The history of the world mentions, however, only one single conqueror, who, by means of one great offensive movement, knew how to keep off the defensive from the boundaries of his own country; and even he found a Capua and a Fabius Cunctator.

An armed demonstration from Bombay to Shiraz would, on the contrary, be attended with little difficulty; it would not certainly, in a direct way, hinder the Shaik's present warlike operations against Herat, for the distance is too great (150 geographical miles), and the country between Shiraz and Herat little else than a continued sand desert; but, indirectly, it might cause a considerable diversion, and oblige the Shaik to think rather upon his own safety than on his present distant and dangerous expedition.

What has been here said respecting the possibility of a warlike expedition along the Persian Gulf to Bagdad and Shiraz, tends only to prove that the Anglo-Indian Army's line of operation against Persia and the western and northern Asiatic powers is considerably shorter, and much more advantageous than the line of operation of these states against British India.

The views stated above as to the possibility of a warlike expedition against British India may perhaps lead to the following conclusions, namely :—

1st. That no one of the separate states of Central Asia can, alone, effect anything against British India; that a union among them is not probable, as both political and religious causes prevent it; that it is, therefore, only in the north of the states that that power (Russia) is to be sought which could place itself at the head of an expedition against India.

2d. That the topographical nature of Central Asia, which, on the road to India, presents on the one side the Hindoo-Koosch, with its several branches, and, on the other, extensive and wild sand deserts, does not permit an army, organised in the European way, to advance by any other road than that which leads over Herat, Candahar, Ghuzni, Cabul, and Peschawer to Attock, on the Indus; that an army, so advancing by a single road, cannot form a basis for its operations against India, which is always a source of much danger.

3d. That an enemy approaching by this road must, in the first place, be perfectly sure of Persia; and, besides, on advancing further, be supported, as well by the Afghauns as by Runjet Sing in Lahore,—a union difficult to bring about, and without which every undertaking against British India must fail, and the retreat through the sand deserts lying behind, with the tremendous mountain-passes, would be attended with great danger.

4th. That the distance between the Araxes and the Indus cannot be passed by a European Army in less than two campaigns (even should the resistance on the road be inconsiderable or none); a space of time sufficient to form, in Europe, such political combinations as might possibly put a speedy end to the whole expedition.

5th. That want of the necessaries of life in the sand deserts lying in the route, the great natural hinderances in the mountainous tracts, the destructive effects on the health of the army, from the difference of temperature in the former and latter, the difficulty of taking sufficient heavy artillery, and the greatness of the distance, prevent the advance of a great army to India; and a small one cannot effect anything on its arrival against the superior British force there stationed, which, richly supplied with the necessaries of war, can, as well in discipline and tactics as in bravery, compete with any army in the world.

6th. That should, contrary to all expectation, so distant an expedition really take place, its failure would be more than probable, and the difficulties of the retreat be in proportion to the extent of the advance made.

Independent of the positive difficulties here briefly represented, which hinder a warlike expedition against India, the negative one ought not to be forgotten; viz. that the Anglo-Indian Army's line of operation against Persia, and the west and north Asiatic powers, is much shorter, and considerably more advantageous, than these powers' line of operation against India.

It is, consequently, not from the inroads of foreign armies that British India has anything to fear; at least, not so long as peace can be maintained in the interior of the empire: only in case this, at a more or less distant period, should be shaken by any considerable eruption, would it be possible for the attack of an enemy from without to cause any real injury? It might then succeed, but not till then.

The way to cause such an eruption within the bosom of the British empire in India would be the following :—Either to try to conquer by degrees, one after another, these states which lie on the route; spread and exaggerate in India the reports of such conquest, and thus awaken and keep up those subjects of fermentation already existing there; or, what would be easier, merely stimulate, by political influence, their hostile feelings against British India; irritate that desire of conquest against this country which has so long prevailed amongst them; organise their armies in the European way; and, when once the opportunity presents itself, lead their expedition against India; thus, without ostensibly violating their treaties with England, lose no opportunity of injuring that power whose interests do not accord with their own*.

How long these silent hostilities (guerre sourde) might be borne by England, would depend on the inward political state of that country, and on the ministry's possessing that moral strength and resoluteness necessary for the balancing of these properties in their adversary so highly endowed with them. It would also depend on the majority in parliament by which this ministry was supported, which, if not powerful, hinders the transition of what strength and resoluteness it may possibly possess, from the field of sound to that of reality.

For the peace of Europe, however, these perturbations in Central Asia are of the most dangerous nature, seeing that their storage this ground, before almost indifferent in European politics, to a scene of war for opposing interests, to a field, where the greatest military and naval powers in the world may meet in combat with each other; which, even should the material conflicts between them not take place, might possibly, merely from the political, kindle a general war throughout Europe.

Such a war would, with the combustibles there existing, be of so much the more serious nature, as it might easily, from the material interests, pass over to one of the principles of society, the most dangerous of all!

A general reflection may here, perhaps, be added, that the powerful empire established by England on the continent of Asia, and established principally by force of arms, cannot be maintained by any other means than justice and prudence supported by force of arms; that this force, through the reductions of late years, which have reduced the Anglo-Indian Army from 241,000 in the year 1827, to 166,000 in 1838, is no longer in proportion to the gigantic size of the empire, the heterogeneous quality of its constituent parts, and the federative nature of its political constitution. The golden rule has therefore been too much put aside: Si vis pacem, para bellum.

The views here briefly stated, as one of the most important subjects in the present politics of Europe, cannot have a better confirmation than by the quoting of what that distinguished statesman, author, and warrior, Sir John Malcolm, has said in his report to the Court of Directors, 4th July, 1832, which finished with the following words :—

"It is in our power to destroy the commerce and arrest the progress of this empire [Russia], in Europe; and as this power is too obvious not to be fully understood, it is impossible to believe that the Court of St. Petersburg will pursue any speculation and uncertain plans of aggrandisement in the East, that are attended with such eminent hazards to Russia, except they are encouraged by an overcautious policy on our part."

* Russian policy, which is so well described by Karamsin, their court-historian, in the following words. He says; "Nothing changes its character and views of our foreign policy. We seek to be at peace everywhere, and to make acquisitions without war. Always keeping ourselves on the defensive. We place no faith in the friendship of those whose interests do not accord with our own, and we lose no opportunity of injuring them, without ostensibly violating treaties."

† By this is meant the power of the will.

ON THE DEATH OF A SOLDIER'S CHILD, BORN AT SEA, AND WHOSE GRAVE IS NEAR TO THAT OF THE LAMENTED "E. L. L."

'Tis meet that Genius rests near thee,
Young land from Eden's bowers,
'Tis meet near thee the dancing sea
Sings to the sultry hours.
A sun of withering light,
A cloudless sky is thine,
And dewy tears from starry night
Watch over childhood's shrine.

When first the day-beam smiled on thee,
It flashed its golden light
From tropic skies, and bathed the sea
In radiance all too bright.
The foaming waves danced gaily by,
And blessed thy lone bark's prow;
Sweet angels hail'd thee with a sigh,
Too pure earth's chains to know.

Born in a frail bark on the sea,
The elements were thine,—
Thine the rude tempest, thine the breeze,
Which meeteth earth in pine:—
O'er the broad ocean found it sleep,
Dancing along the sky,
Flinging the white spray from its wings,
It gives to earth a sigh.

The very waves whose snowy crest
Rises to meet the sun,
One moment smile on earth's dark breast,
Then vanish one by one.
Like the white wave which meets the shore,
On its bleak strand, to die,
Earth made thee pine, Heaven whispered "Come!"
"Roar to thy native sky."

Stern soldiers bore thee to thy grave,
Dark warriors wailed for thee;
They laid thee near the bursting wave
Of thine own native sea.

* * * * * * * * *

"Woe, woe, the rose has shed
Her leaves, and perish'd;
Woe, woe, the soul has fled
From her we cherish'd.

Weep, weep, the light has faded,
Which o'er us shone so bright;
Weep, weep, our path is shaded,—
Come on, dark night!

Wail, wail, a mother's sorrow
Bids even stern hearts sigh;
Wail, wail, for dark the morrow
Which meets affliction's eye.

Woe, woe, the soldier's pride
Melts into tears unbidden;
Wail, wail, for the grief love sanctified,
The blow death aim'd,

Weep, weep, for those who rest,
Joy for the soul that's gone,
Her biding-place is with the blest'd
Her home a cloudless sun."

Sleep on, within thy distant narrow bed,—
A proud high motto marks thy little tomb,
And bids the stranger's foot more lightly tread,
Where fade the relics of thy mortal bloom.

"My clan is royal" marks the tablet stone
Where rests the soldier's babe, where lingers still
The fond regrets brave hearts like his alone
Cherish unwither'd amid good and ill.

High Genius shares thy slumbers, guards thy sleep,
Meet neighbour for an innocence like thine;
The midnight stars look from their bowers and weep
Bright dewy tears upon that holy shrine.

The free winds fold their wings and wail above
Two simple graves upon that distant strand;
The waves rush on, and murmur out their love
Upon the wild shores of that desert land.

Dark Chieftains pause to gaze upon those graves,
And mourn the fate of those fair English flowers,
Of her whose first smile fell upon the waves,
And her whose song charmed e'en their sultry bowers.

Still in thy father's home, young Babe, thy death
Has left a memory nought can chase away,
Like the rich perfume of the rose's breath,
It lingers when the flower has met decay.

COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In your valuable paper of the 28th ult., you stated your suspicions in regard to an extension of the period of command of Inspecting Commanders and Commanders of revenue cruisers. Did you mean in reality that such an idea was in contemplation, or did you only just intend to put the idea (a most excellent one certainly) into the heads of the rulers of our most valuable, although insufficiently valued, service? Patronage is a delicate sort of commodity to interfere with, and here is the patronage of the Admiralty who appoint Inspecting-Commanders, and patronage of the Customs Commissioners who select the others. Do you know what patronage means? It is the power of doing to others as we would be done by, coupled with the strongest and frequently irresistible inclination to do just the contrary. Now this prerogative is highly prized in both the departments I have named; and although the first or Board of Admiralty, especially under a Whig Government, may, as times go, have no more need of patronage to keep their heads above water than a gosling may have of a cork jacket; still there is, I fear, a disposition inherent in all bodies politic not merely never to be generous without receiving a quid pro quo (which is no generosity at all), but to strive in fact never to be good for nothing.

As regards our very loving friends the Commissioners of Customs, if the principle of extension be applied to the present period of triennial command of officers of revenue cruisers, it will at once abridge, curtail, cut short (and every other word which may express the same meaning), the only legitimate mode the Board of Customs have of rewarding the respectable corps of Lieutenant Chief Officers for Whig-orous or merri-tory-ous services, such being the principle upon which this bye-law of these Medes and Persians was framed, and through which it breathes, acts, and has its being. It is clear the alteration you mention can only take place by a devotional sacrifice of patronage on the part of each of these two great Boards, but if the measure should be sanctioned, there can be no doubt of the immediate benefit which it will spread throughout the service by the continuance in it of officers perfectly acquainted with its duties, and deeply interested in the success which may attend their vigilance and zeal. I think no one will be found capable of urging a stronger ground of opinion against the measure than the one I have suggested, viz., the infringment of patronage; and entirely approved of and joyfully received as this boon will be by the officers now serving, their thanks will be justly awarded to as they will be fully merited by you; if, through the medium of your columns, you will strenuously advocate its adoption.

If this extension of command be allowed, there will then be but one object left unattained, and whilst the disposition to be liberal exists, it will cost very little to add a second boon. I allude to a defined period of service in the Coast Guard being permitted to go as sea-time. Where can there be a reasonable objection to this? It could never happen that the same officer would receive a second step of promotion without having completed the required sea-time for either rank he may have previously held; whilst, by adding to the patronage of the Admiralty, it may, in some degree, compensate for the first loss by enabling their Lordships, where the disposition exists, to promote an officer when qualified by a previous term of service in the Coast Guard (the extent to be hereafter determined upon) without obliging him to go to sea to incur a heavy expense of outfit, and what is still more undesirable, to run the risk of finding that his friends are out of office and incapable of redeeming their promises on his return.

THE ARMY OF THE INDUS.

[We have been favoured with a private letter from an officer now serving with this army, and which will be read with painful interest.—Ed. N. M. G.]

It were useless in a letter to enter on the subject of Affghanistan as a country, but I cannot dispatch this without removing the veil which travellers have cast over the real character of the people. If anti-educationists still exist in England, send them here one and all, that they may see their idolized theories carried out in detail, and view the fruit of that system which they have been so anxious to continue to their countrymen. The Affghans are strict observers of the religious form enjoined by the Koran; they are obedient to their priests, and hate with all fervour infidels and schismatics, among which last they include all those professing Mahometanism who, in the merest trifles, differ from their own assertions regarding their religion—it were almost mockery to call it "their belief." As a people, they are uneducated, and therefore ready to receive whatever their priests choose to enforce on them obedience, without the fear of being led astray, as educated men often are, by the vanity of displaying their reasoning powers. From infancy the sword is put into their hands, they are also taught to ride, and were, when under the great-grandfather of their present king, Shah Soojah, esteemed the bravest warriors of the East.

Whatever they might have been in 1761, when Ahmed Shah, at the battle of Panniput, destroyed the flower of the Mahrattah army, treble his own in number, and defended by 100 pieces of artillery; they do not convey a correct idea, but to those who have had an opportunity of seeing them in their own country, of what an Affghan really is.

The halo of glory which the founder of their monarchy threw around them as a people, has only served to mislead the judgment of superficial travellers, who, either from motives of personal interest, from incapability of judging aright, or want of nerve to combat the assertions of preceding travellers, have added their mite to blind their own government, and keep up the delusions under which the civilized world has so long laboured respecting the alleged descendants of Ben Israel. If avarice and cupidity afford any evidence as to their title to the descent claimed, it might have a chance of being substantiated, for an all-absorbing thirst for gold is the ruling passion of the Affghans. To this may be ascribed their treachery, cunning, hypocrisy, lying, deceit, kidnapping, and worse than all, their insatiable thirst for blood. These crimes are not confined to the ignorant, the base, and the needy; they fill the throne and the cottage, and belong to the noble and the peasant. They can be traced from the murder of Futtah Khan before the court, the mutilation of his body by the king's son and the nobles, down to the butcheries perpetrated by the peasantry on the heedless and unarmed traveller, whose throat is cut and whose body is sliced and lopped for his rags, which would not sell for a couple of shillings. An Affghan has no principle, no honour; and where custom has imposed an observance upon him, his cunning is immediately brought into play to relieve him from its obligations. Thus the stranger who claims the hospitality of the Affghan, eats of his salt and sleeps under his roof, is followed as he starts on his journey, and having passed the boundary of the land, tribe, or village of his host, as the case may be, of hospitality, the duties have been discharged, and the stranger, the guest of the previous night, immediately becomes his victim. It is almost useless to prove that the Affghans are contemptible; towards men possessing all that civilised and Christian man holds in abhorrence, whose daily avocations embrace acts deservedly occupying the first place, and sentenced to the severest punishments in the criminal codes of civilized states, can possess no ennobling quality. Even the poor animal gift of bravery he knows not, and hence it is that an Affghan force once repulsed never rallies. They make their attacks in the dead of night, rush full gallop, sword in hand, through their enemies' camp, and should they find them unprepared and scattered, they wheel round, slaughter every soul they meet, and then pillage the camp. The hungry lioness knows not a stronger thirst for blood. There is nothing of bravery, courage, or resolution in their attacks; it is the wiliness of the tiger, who steals upon his prey, and if opposed by a watchful enemy, [illegible] him the Affghan skulks back to his wilds. Hence it is the advanced column of the "army of the Indus" has with no enemy, while every unarmed man and wander camp follower has found a murderer. No words can convey an idea of the cruel and wanton butcheries practised by these ruffians on the camp-followers. They marched with the camp for days, waiting for opportunities to rob and murder; they bepanned the hungry by offers of cheap food in the village, and murdered them the moment they were beyond the protection of the pickets. A party will ride up to a stranger, salaaming to the pummel of their saddles; if he is armed and well mounted, they will remain with him or pass on; if not, the leader gives a sign, and he is instantly murdered. A fine young officer of the lancers was murdered, unarmed, by these miscreants; another by the use of his walking-stick escaped from the same party. Upwards of twenty of these wretches, calling themselves servants of the assistants to the Envoy of Kelat, persuaded between three and four hundred servants, camp-followers, &c., who were tired of marching and quarter rations, to place themselves under their protection, promising to guard them in safety through the country into Hindostan. About one hundred miles east of Kandahar, among the hills inhabited by Hussanns, they were met by a chief, who invited the [illegible] his fort, offering them food and safety. The ally [illegible] accepted the offer, and followed the chief and their guia. when they got to the gate of the fort the chief seemed alarmed at their numbers, and proposed that they should leave their arms outside. This was done, and the gate was closed immediately on the unhappy people. They were then taken one by one, and stripped naked, their throats cut, their bowels opened, and their entrails searched for gold and jewels; every now and then a young man, who promised by his strength to be useful as a slave, was circumcised, and set apart, it being acceptable to God to make an inveterate infidel into a good Mahomedan. When about half these unfortunate people had been thus fiendishly disposed of, the remainder inside became frantic, and burst over the walls in every direction, and were cut to pieces by the Affghans, with the exception of seven, who escaped by hiding themselves all day, and travelling all night. In this way they reached the camp on the seventh day, having lived upon grass, roots, and water. I feel that after these illustrations it would be a work of supererogation to say more of a people who are a disgrace to the human species. I have little doubt the justness of the character assigned to them will be recognized by the whole army.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 7.

Sir,—I will conclude this chapter upon naval correspondence, with the insertion of Captain Broke's letter to Captain Capel of his celebrated death-and-glory combat, and his manly challenge to the Captain of the Chesapeake.

"Shannon, Halifax, June 6th, 1813.

"Sir,—I have the honour to inform you, that being close in with Boston lighthouse in His Majesty's ship under my command on the 1st inst., I had the pleasure of seeing that the United States frigate Chesapeake (whom we had long been watching) was coming out of the harbour to engage the Shannon. I took a position between Cape Ann and Cape Cool, and then hove to for him to join us. The enemy came down in a very handsome manner, having three American ensigns flying. When closing with us he sent down his royal yards; I kept the Shannon's up, expecting the breeze would die away. At half-past 5 P.M. the enemy hauled up within hail of us on the starboard side, and the battle began, both ships steering full under the topsails. After exchanging between two and three broadsides, the enemy's ship fell on board of us, her mizen-channels locking in with our fore-rigging. I went forward to ascertain her position, and observing that the enemy were flinching from their guns, I gave orders to prepare for boarding. Our gallant band appointed to that service immediately rushed in, under their respective Officers, upon the enemy's decks, driving everything before them with irresistible fury. The enemy made a desperate but disorderly resistance. The firing continued at all the gangways and between the tops; but in two minutes' time the enemy were driven, sword in hand, from every post, the American flag was hauled down, and the proud old British union flosted triumphant over it. In another minute they ceased firing from below, and called for quarter. The whole of this service was achieved in fifteen minutes from the commencement of the action.

"I have to lament the loss of many of my gallant shipmates, but they fell exulting in their conquest.

"My brave First Lieutenant, Mr. Watt, was slain in the moment of victory, in the act of hoisting the British colours; his death is a severe loss to the service. Mr. Aldham, the Purser, who had spiritedly volunteered the charge of a party of small-arm men, was killed on his post at the gangway. My faithful old Clerk, Mr. Dunn, was shot by his side. Mr. Aldham has left a widow to lament his loss; I request the Commander-in-Chief will recommend her to the protection of my Lords Commissioners [illegible] the Admiralty. My [illegible]n Boatswain, Mr. Step[illegible] lost an arm; he [illegible] under Lord Rodney [illegible] April; I trust [illegible] and services will [illegible] im happy to say is [illegible] Midshipman of [illegible] merit, is the only [illegible]er wounded besides [illegible], and he not dangerously. Of my gallant seamen [illegible]d marines we had 23 slain and 66 wounded. I subjoin the names of the former. No expressions I can make use of can do justice to the merits of my valiant Officers and crew. The calm courage they displayed during the cannonade, and the tremendous precision of their fire, could be equalled only by the ardour with which they rushed to the assault. I recommend them all warmly to the protection of the Commander-in-Chief. Having received a sabre-wound at the first onset, whilst charging a part of the enemy who had rallied on their forecastle, I was only capable of giving command till assured our conquest was complete, and then directing Second Lieutenant Wallis to take charge of the Shannon and secure the prisoners. I left the Third Lieutenant, Mr. Falkiner (who had headed the main-deck boarders), in charge of the prize. I beg to recommend these Officers most strongly to the Commander-in-Chief's patronage, for the gallantry they displayed during the action, and the skill and judgment they evinced in the anxious duties [illegible]ich afterwards devolved upon them [illegible]

"To Mr. Etouch, the Acting-Master, I am much in[illegible] for the steadiness with which he conducted the ship [illegible]ion. The Lieutenants Johns and Law, of the [illegible]es, bravely boarded at the head of their respective [illegible]sions. It is impossible to particularise every brilliant [illegible]eed performed by my Officers and men; but I must mention, when the ship's yard-arms were locked together, that Mr. Cosnogham, who commanded in our maintop, finding himself screened from the enemy by the foot of the topsail, laid out at the main-yard-arm to fire upon them, and shot three men in that situation. Mr. Smith, who commanded in our foretop, stormed the enemy's foretop from the fore-yard-arm, and destroyed all the Americans remaining in it. I particularly beg leave to recommend Mr. Etouch, the Acting-Master, and Messrs. Smith, Leake, Clavering, Raymond, and Littlejohn, Midshipmen. This latter Officer is the son of Captain Littlejohn, who was slain in the Berwick. The loss of the enemy was about 70 killed and 100 wounded. Among the former were the four Lieutenants, a Lieutenant of Marines, the Master, and many other Officers. Captain Lawrence is since dead of his wounds."

"The enemy came into action with a complement of 440 men; the Shannon, having picked up some re-captured seamen, had 330. The Chesapeake is a fine frigate, and mounts 49 guns—18's on her main-deck, 32's on her quarter-deck and forecastle. Both ships came out of action in the most beautiful order, their rigging appearing as perfect as if they had been only exchanging a salute. I have the honour to be, &c., "P. B. V. BROKE.

"To Captain the Hon. T. Bladen Capel, &c., Halifax."

The composition of this letter, from the many epithets expressive of the warmth of a seaman's heart after victory—his sorrow for the dead and pity for his wounded shipmates, has, from envy or nice criticism, been considered affected and peculiar. "My brave First Lieutenant—my valiant officers and men—my faithful old Clerk—my veteran Boatswain—our gallant band—my gallant shipmates—my gallant seamen and marines." Sneer again, ye envious and ye censorious! Bravery and compassion, each in its proper place and time, filled the breast of BROKE.

"In me let the foe feel the paw of the lion;
And the battle once ended, the heart of a lamb.'

As to one ship making a prize of another, the word conquest is in both cases misapplied. A great victory over a fleet may be appropriately termed a conquest. Nelson said of the battle of the Nile—"This is more than a victory, it is a CONQUEST." The official detail of the action between the Shannon and the Chesapeake in ONE paragraph is admirable. The combat short—the account laconic.

Ye Captains, when "ye go forth to battle," achieve your victory in fifteen minutes—bring your ships out of action in good order, i' their rigging appearing as perfect as if they had been only exchanging a salute"—anchor your prizes, glorious trophies of war, in a British port, with "the proud old British union floating triumphant over them," and tell the same story as your brother-sailor BROKE; your country will then immortalise you as skilful officers—brave and good-hearted men!

Senior United Service Club, Sept. 30. TRISTRAM.

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.—MILITARY EXERCISES.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As anger and offensive expressions bespeak a consciousness of defeat, I am quite content with the "British Officer's" recourse to both; as to the dirt he has thrown at Prussian courage, facts and a clothes-brush are sure to restore the latter to its envied brilliancy. Having a grateful recollection of its support, for to it alone I owe the credit, if to me any is due, of having, at the age of 18, taken a strong battery, with, properly speaking, a mere handful of men, placed under my command by a casualty, I not only feel entitled, but bound, to defend a reputation confirmed on a large scale at the Katzbach, on the Culm, &c. &c. &c., nay, even at Ligney. Let their libeller ask the brave 18th Hussars whether, at Waterloo, they and the Prussians did not, more honourably than by putting at each other's skirts, run a race for glory by a very friendly rivalry in gallantry. Permit me now to "set right" this British Officer as to my title to a "Prussian appellative," and as to my knowing something alike of Prussian and English troops, by consenting to your obligingly giving him, yet ONLY in exchange for his, my name and address. With the gallant Arthur, and to whom I most freely tender apologies, I most respectfully beg leave to maintain my incognito, since, in very affably averting a SUPPOSED "charge of inconsistency," he shows us both to be right; his advice to seize the bayonet applying to those NOT used in bayonet fencing, and myself speaking of bayonet fencers as sure to punish, and severely, such temerity, even if fighting only with the "rickety zigzag things," and with tenfold increased certainty if armed, as Arthur recommends, with patent bayonets. I feel truly proud of that veteran's coinciding opinion as to applying dandyism as a panacea!—for, although a partial stimulus in some cases, compared with more solid and less zigzag efforts to reach the great object, it seems rather a slippery path; but so long as all move towards the same point, why should the choice of the road, good or middling, not be open to each, as long as we travel along good-temperedly? With respect for the British United Service, and with admiration of your impartial exertions to promote its welfare, I have, &c. A PRUSSIAN MOUSTACHE.

THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It is my misfortune to be without Parliamentary interest or an independent fortune, but I have the consolation of having a very worthy and intelligent young man a son, who has passed a very fair examination, and has otherwise received very high testimonials from all the Commanders with whom he has served since his entering the Naval service in the year 1826; to whom, with my large family and limited income, I have, with much inconvenience, felt myself obliged to make an allowance of 40*l.* per annum to place himself on an equality of expenditure with his messmates, since his first embarkation on the troubled ocean; which, together with the extravagantly high pay of 26*l.* per annum (being less than one-sixth of the pay which Captain Marryat informs us is allowed by our former republican economising sons of the United States, as pay to persons serving in the same grade in their Navy when on full pay, viz., 156*l.* per annum, and when on half-pay 12*l.*, exactly one-fifth of which amount is received by our Mates when on full pay) from our liberal country; with the further advantage of not having any allowance as half-pay to keep him from a state of starvation in the event of his ship being paid off, and he turned adrift with a fortune of a few shillings in his pocket, and very possibly suffering from an ill state of health, arising from the effects of the climate in which he has been previously serving.

Nor are these the sole benefits to which he may very reasonably aspire, if we are to believe what recent rumour informed us we might rely upon as a fact, namely, that of a Mate having, at the sole orders of his Commander, had his livery (for verily it is nothing else) taken from off his back, and he turned before the mast, there to do duty and associate with those with whom he could have had no community of feeling. Such are the benefits which we confer on our dauntless sons of the sea, who have for years bygone saved us from any hostile foot pressing our soil. It is not only a disgrace to our Government, but also to our Legislature, to allow such a stigma (without any inquiry) to be inflicted on our blue-jackets, or to withhold from them, when unemployed, sufficient to keep them from a state of want and starvation.

Some few weeks ago I had an acquaintance paying me a visit, who, in the course of conversation, informed me that in the year 1825, he went to Portsmouth to embark as a Cadet for the East Indies, being accompanied by a younger brother, who was going on board of one of our men-of-war at that port as a Volunteer of the First class; that in the year 1837 he returned to the same port, from India, a Captain of two years standing, and where he found his brother tar a full-grown Mate of five years, who had never during the whole period been absent from his duty six weeks.

AN OLD COLONIST.

NAVAL REGISTRY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—"The tenacity with which people put forth sentiments and arguments which they know to be erroneous, and in which they display bad feeling and utter ignorance, is surprising." True Blue says, "X. Y. Z. would legislate most profoundly, when he proposes to 'man the Navy without additional expense *.'" Verily he is sarcastic (a humour I admire, when confined by the bounds of truth and good feeling). Again, Sir, he says, "Where is the sailor (after servitude required by his scheme) to find 14*l.*, 7*l.* 10*s.*? &c. &c." Now, Sir, True Blue knows this to be untrue, as it is before servitude (an immense difference) 14*l.* is required, and 7*l.* 10*s.* after, which, if all employment on the waters, within reach of their native element the ocean, is confined to those who serve, and afford protection to their country (as I consider foreign merchant trade does, as also the man-of-war's man), there is a more than comfortable livelihood to be obtained, which will enable them to realise the latter sum, viz., 7*l.* 10*s.*; those years, if spent at sea, will save thousands from early imprudent marriages, the young man's most ruinous temptation.

"Verily," he exclaims, "he gives Jack credit for more saving knowledge and practice than I have ever met an instance of." Now, Sir, all my observations are founded on inquiry and experience. What True Blue's are I know not; and I will produce you hereafter names and instances of old sailors having saved sufficient to purchase not one boat, but twenty. Again, Sir, in the ship I was last paid off from, a Quartermaster owned several houses. These are not solitary instances, I assure you. The sailor in his youth revels in excess (not more than true blue officers), and many in old age. But who so dissolute as those young watermen it is my aim to drive to sea! By what means? By establishing and holding out a strong temptation. Mark my words, Mr. Editor—we can never press again. "X. Y. Z.," he says, "next proceeds to libel the Royal Navy." I DENY IT. The Navy, what it is with good officers, is, and ever has been, my pride and boast; and if he affirms that libel consists in asserting there are officers in the Navy whose conduct is a bad example and tyrannical, he does not know the meaning of the word, for it is not attacking the service at large. He next mentions my presumption, (presumption his is, indeed,) to ground his experience as the test of mine. I say, I did think that you, Sir, as the Editor of the first Naval paper, were aware of the state of discipline of particular ships equally as much so as of the general condition of the service. Now, Sir, I shall endeavour to prove that sailors are prejudiced against the pendant (on first entry), and not without reason, &c. I never boarded a ship but I tried to obtain a volunteer, or at least their feelings towards the service. One said, "I have had enough of the ——." Well, I thought he was right. "Oh! no, Sir," another says, "I was paid off from ——, at Sheerness. The service will never catch me again. The Admiral had to go on board with force, to restore obedience; for, besides the men, the wordes had command of the ship." Another says, "I was in the E——, an unnatural, d—d ship; I was in the treadmill, B——; I was in the D——. Oh! Sir, it was shocking there. God bless the old Admiral—he was the fellow; but Lord, Sir, the Commander and Master-at-Arms were nearly killed in attempting to go round the lower-deck at the usual rounds, for they down lower-deck ports and regularly beat him off." Besides scores of other instances, I will ask you what a man's feelings must be (in sober moments) and the state of the crew when the following occurs:—Captain (to a man on main-sheet)—"Haul, Sir, haul." Man—"I am hauling." Captain—"Haul, Sir." Man—"I'll see you d—d first." Captain—"What do you say, Sir?" Man—"I'll see you b——d first." He was put in irons, and the next morning called up for punishment. Captain asks if he has thought, and is sorry for what he said? "Yes." "What do you mean by it?" "Oh! I mean that, and a b——y sight more." The man, Sir, was unpunished, and retained in the ship. Immense desertion has been the consequence of the Captains' counting-popularity system, for it is not only this but tyrannical conduct which creates disgust. I could add much more, and only reserve cases of real mutiny for a private letter, thinking here is sufficient to show how far the fame of these ships may injure the character of the service. True Blue says I might have justly asserted that a lax system of discipline is prevalent. This and tyranny has but one end. True discipline, the life and soul of the service, has neither of these ingredients in its nature.

True Blue says, when I attack Captain Marryat's remarks on the ingratitude of seamen, I clearly show I know nothing of their character. Here's perversion! Again, Captain M.'s assertion was to the effect they were a mercenary set, and induced by these feelings alone to leave their country's service; I attempted to defend their character from that imputation alone, and do not recollect that Captain M. accuses them of ingratitude, but which I did him, for, in common with us all, he must acknowledge—

To them our dearest rights we owe;

I think I may here fairly retaliate, for Blue shows so much ignorance in not knowing who Captain Walker is, that, whilst attempting to silence me, (without offering any plan of his own), he ought to have curbed his crabbed humour, which he proves he labours under, by saying my whole aim is that of oppressing the poor. Verily, Blue, after this charitable expression, I cannot envy a soul like thine; perhaps he will learn from this who Captain Walker is, as I fear we have few True Blues like him. Well, then, Captain Walker, now in the Turkish service, is one of the most zealous, smart, intelligent officers in the Navy, esteemed as much for his private as his public worth; was First Lieutenant of the Barham, Commander of the Pasguard, was posted, and sent as Admiral in the Turkish Fleet by Government; I should say, as he retains his rank, quite sufficient to prove what he is, and as much entitled to Captain M.'s complimentary remarks as the British Sailor. I strongly opine (here's a word for a blue) that True Blue belongs to a fashionable tribe of men, with more zeal than discretion, ready to launch out in eulogies on the side of the question only, and whatever power he might have of doing good, would withhold it from the Whig; hence his kicking at my profound legislation is trying to devise a plan for "manning the Navy, without expense to Government." I beg to inform Blue I know what the Articles of War are equally with himself, and shall not submit to his opinion that "the Admiralty is a competent Court in itself." Competent indeed, when a man or Junior Officer, by the dash of a tyrant's pen, can be discharged from the service with disgrace, robbed of all pretensions to promotion and pension, without either having or seeing his judge or jury. If Blue is an officer, let me ask him how he would like it? Why should they be subjected to so summary a mode any more than a private in the Army?

My views on this subject, as also the direful effect Blue would make me believe my profound legislation would have on the market people and the like, are foreign to a letter of defence already sufficiently long: as such, may I beg its insertion. True Blue has given the challenge, here is my answer; my time is too fully and agreeably occupied to enter into a correspondence of angry controversy, therefore we had better cut it. A Sailor's Religion.—About a fortnight ago, W. Gibson, aged 78, died in the Dalmahoy union workhouse; he had fought under Nelson in most of his battles, and was "Captain of the foretop." On his death-bed he afforded a striking proof of that seamanlight spirit which tenanted the breast of the heroes of the Nile, Trafalgar, &c. Being in extreme pain, he observed to the master of the workhouse that it was "hard lines," after being present in so many engagements, to have to die in the lingering manner he was dying. Mr. Johnson observed that he thought it was much better to die a natural death than in battle, as it afforded a man time to repent. "Repent!" exclaimed the old tar, "when a man dies in battle, he goes so quick that he gets to heaven before the devil knows he is dead."—Scotsman Saturday Journ.

We thank "D. G.," but our view of the case is this: a ship's deck is arched not regularly inclined; therefore a gun in recoiling does not preserve the same parallel line. The deck is not an inclined plane like a garrison platform, but an arch.

The extraordinary increase in the circulation of the N. & M. G. during the last three weeks, induces us to remind those friends who bind the paper to keep their sets perfect. Our last Number is out of print, and we shall be happy to purchase back any copies, in order to supply Subscribers who have been disappointed.

We beg attention to a very sensible letter from a correspondent on the Coast-Guard Service. We believe that the officers throughout that force generally are very anxious upon the point discussed. We should be glad to see them placed upon the same footing as others, holding civil appointments, which are granted for five, and not, as with the Coast-Guard, for three years.

"M. H." is mistaken: the anecdote in our last respecting the Duke and Waterloo was taken from the Dover Chronicle, *and so acknowledged by us; but we will look into the matter.—"J. Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1839.

WHILE a vast deal of discussion has taken place on the state of the Navy, another matter, intimately connected therewith, has been almost entirely overlooked—we mean the state of the Navy List, a subject in our opinion worthy of far more consideration than has hitherto been bestowed upon it.

Controversy has elicited the fact, that of ships we possess many, a strong force in commission, and large reserves, independent of a powerful steam Navy, Royal and Mercantile, more than treble in extent to that of the whole world. Our seamen we reckon by tens and hundreds of thousands, of improved and improving quality, provided henceforth by the laws which oblige owners to maintain apprentices, so that every person entering on a sea life now, serves a term which ensures his ability. We may confidently exult in the possession of all the elements of Naval power in abundance, whenever circumstances require their display, except one—a very material one—we mean officers to command, and to perform the executive duties of our fleets, in fact, Admirals and Lieutenants.

We have been induced to these reflections, by lately scanning over the list, whilst speculating on the probable successor to the lamented Sir Thomas Hardy; and although quite aware that a large number of officers, out of so extensive a calendar, must be unfit for service, we confess we had not anticipated the case to be so bad as an attentive investigation has proved.

Of the Admirals, we do not imagine there are more than half-a dozen out of the forty, or thereabouts, who could insure their lives at five years' purchase, on the score of age alone, to say nothing of the wounds and infirmities inseparable from their profession. The Reverend Sidney Smith has somewhere observed of a statesman—Lord John Russell, we believe—that such was his confidence in his diversified abilities, that he would, without hesitation, take command of the Channel Fleet! It is possible he would be as capable of the office as the majority of our old Admirals, broken down by age and infirmities, and quite unfit for active service, rendered ten times more arduous, incessant, harassing, and responsible, as it must be in time of war, since steam-vessels form so important an element of Naval power.

We trust that the inevitable consequences which have resulted, and must in the order of things still further result, from the system which has produced this,—we mean progressive promotion by seniority—have received due consideration from the Commission, for the evil will increase under present circumstances unless some remedy is applied. We may, indeed, continue to boast a list of distinguished Admirals, who will ever command admiration and respect for the brilliant deeds they have performed, but we cannot expect that Octogenarians, however ardent the spirit, can retain the physical power necessary to support them in action and responsible commands; and when war comes it will be necessary to resort to some means of procuring the services of young officers, which, if suddenly adopted, will savour of injustice to those above them who are shelved.

On the list of Vice and Rear Admirals, we are glad to perceive the names of many gallant and talented officers, upon whose services, in full vigour, we may calculate for perhaps ten years to come; but this is entirely owing to their very early promotion—the system, in fact, so much complained of. The same reasoning applies to the Captains at the head of the list, amongst whom popular names occur; but it will require many successive promotions before we shall obtain a list of active Flag Officers. As regards Captains to command ships, the matter is not so material: their duties in fleets are light, and require no great energy of mind or body to perform, except in actual battle, provided they have active officers under them; and the same observation applies, in a limited degree, to Commanders. But what shall we say of the Lieutenants—the executive officers, upon whom all the active duties fall, who keep the watches, command the divisions, &c. &c. &c.? Of these, out of nearly three thousand on the list, sufficient can scarcely be induced to perform the service required in Peace. We say induced, because, with little or no chance of promotion, and pay wholly inadequate, few will serve afloat unless obliged; and a great majority of those on the list are of more than twenty years' standing, and now wholly unfit to perform active duties, even did not their seniority preclude a Captain from selecting some smart active young officer, who had been constantly employed, and therefore acquainted with the forms of discipline, for his First Lieutenant.

These evils have been brought about by the immense and indiscriminate promotion of 1815—by the lavish promotions which followed, and, once incurred, are now aggravated by the regulation which provides that only one promotion shall be made for three deaths. This latter plan will have the effect of reducing the list, after a time, certainly; but in the meanwhile the operation will be rendered unnecessary, even by death itself, which, in the course of nature, will remove the obstruction.

The state of parties, too, cannot but tend to the disadvantage of officers who have no political influence; for it is not to be supposed, that when antagonist principles are so fiercely exerted, and every effort made to turn a majority, or to secure a single vote, Ministers will be so regardless of their own interests as to let slip opportunities of rewarding friends, much less of encouraging party opposition by bestowing rewards upon their political opponents. We should be glad to see it otherwise, under a strong government at liberty to bestow its patronage, without reference to party; but until one party or the other prevails, it is folly to expect that such will be the case, and we are only thankful on the part of the Navy that a considerable portion of that patronage, which was formerly wholly exerted for political purposes, is now secured to merit.

In closing these observations, we cannot help remarking upon the bad taste with which some of our contemporaries allude to officers personally whilst abusing the authorities. No sooner is an officer named for an appointment, than these worthies set to work to rake up everything they can to his prejudice. If he has neglected to furnish an account of his services, and small mention of his deeds is put forth in the Naval Biography, he is set down as an officer of no note. As regards Admiral Fleeming—intended, we believe, as the new Governor of Greenwich Hospital, but not yet appointed—this is particularly the case. Now, even according to Marshall's Biography, Admiral Fleeming performed gallant and active service in frigates; and although it was not his good fortune to command a line-of-battle ship in action, it will be admitted that his ships, particularly Standard and Bulwark, were in a high state of discipline;—indeed, for beauty of arrangement, unrivalled, and nothing wanting but the opportunity for distinction. Admiral Fleeming is, however, a party man, has large property and influence in his native county, and this influence he exercises in favour of the Government. This will account for the appointment and also for the abuse which latter he will doubtless have sufficient philosophy to sustain. As far as our wishes are concerned we should always rejoice to see the most distinguished the best rewarded.

Since the above was in type, an article has appeared in the Times, reflecting on the intended appointment of Admiral Fleeming. This must of course be received with due qualification, considering that our powerful contemporary professes to be a strenuous political advocate. He has run into one error, however, when he supposes that every Officer who distinguished himself during the war, had some Order attached to his name. There were many exceptions, but how and why produced it is now needless to inquire. We may particularly allude to the case of the present Sir Thomas Baker, an officer who fought one of the best frigate actions of the war, and distinguished himself greatly on several occasions, yet he was passed over in the appropriation of honours when the Order of the Bath was extended, being placed as Companion; and, although the whole Navy was indignant at this, it was not until the Duke of Clarence became Lord High Admiral, that the injustice this gallant officer had laboured under for a dozen years was repaired, by one of the first acts of his Royal Highness, placing him in his proper position. In giving the list of names eligible for this appointment, our contemporary, or his correspondent Benbow, (who we perceive by his style of writing is no sailor,) has been guided apparently by the stars and decorations which denote distinctions, but he has omitted some who have at least equal pretensions with those enumerated.

We will put our readers in possession of the most important letters that have appeared respecting the appointment of Admiral Fleeming.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—The most atrocious appointment of Admiral Fleeming to the Governorship of Greenwich Hospital fills the thinking part of the Navy with perfect disgust; for no Admiral in the service ever saw no little fighting or did less for his country than the Hon. and gallant Admiral Charles Fleeming. But he is, indeed, a fortunate youth. He has had every good appointment in the service for having done nothing. He once saw a partial action, having commanded the Egyptian, 50-gun frigate*, in Sir Robert Calder's affair off Ferrol. Now, this is the whole of his fighting service. He never had the honour of being Gazetted for one exploit during the two long wars.

If the Admirals of England had one spark of proper feeling left they would go in a body and present a memorial to Her Majesty against this unjust appointment, made by Lord Minto from merely political motives. But these are the Reformers! the just, the equitable, the no-patronage Government, with whom merit in all cases was to be the sole recommendation to fill the public offices! But how the reform world, particularly the Ministry, are given to lying, slandering, and deceit!

To conclude, I send you a list of officers who ought in common justice to have had Greenwich Hospital in preference to this busy partisan, viz.:—

Admiral Sir H. Whitshed, G.C.B.	A medal for Lord St. Vincent's battle.
Admiral Sir G. Martin, G.C.B.	Ditto for ditto.
Admiral Sir Graham Moore, G.C.B.,	G.C.M.G.
Admiral Sir H. Trollope, G.C.B.	Medal for Camperdown.
Admiral Sir John Wells, G.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Sir W. Hotham, K.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Sir J. Rowley, K.C.B.,	G.C.M.G.
Admiral Sir D. Gould, G.C.B.	Medal for the Nile.
Admiral Sir W. S. Smith, G.C.B.,	the man who first defeated Bonaparte and his Invincibles at the memorable siege of Acre.
Admiral the Hon. Sir R. Stopford,	Medal for St. Domingo.
Admiral Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B.	Services in America, &c.
Admiral Sir W. Hargood, G.C.B.	Trafalgar.
Admiral Durham, G.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Bayntun, G.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Codrington, G.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Digby, K.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral Bullen, K.C.B.	Ditto.
Admiral the Hon. C. Fleeming (got Greenwich Hospital)	Nothing but empty politics.

Now, this is too bad.

We having nothing to say against Fleeming otherwise. He is a friendly man and very courteous; but when the Reformers set themselves up as the perfection of justice, it staggers one. Your most obedient servant, BENBOW.

It is a fact that Fleeming's sole claim, and upon which he founded his demand for the Governorship of Greenwich Hospital, was his having, he says, "spent some money and supported Ministers in returning members in Scotland and elsewhere."

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

SIR,—I observed in the Times of this day a letter signed "Benbow," reflecting on the appointment of the Honourable Admiral Fleeming to Greenwich Hospital, and stating, amongst other disqualifications, he was never in a general Naval engagement. It appears this was not considered an objection, for the truly-respected Admiral Colpoys, when placed at the head of Greenwich Hospital, was similarly situated, and had previously held various very good situations—commands in the Channel fleets, a Lordship of the Admiralty, commands at Plymouth, &c.

"Benbow" gives a list of a number of the full Admirals of the Navy, never considering that many he mentions are, from age and infirmity, totally unfit for the office. Admiral Sir George Martin is Vice-Admiral of the United Kingdom, and has had command. Sir R. Stopford is Rear Admiral of ditto, and has and is holding a command. They have both salaries (see "New Naval List," by an Old Commander) for those sinecures, and have stars, &c. As Greenwich Hospital is situated, it should never become a sinecure, and a reference to the Naval and Military Gazette, page 861, 31st of August last, will show that an active officer is required, and even Admiral Fleeming's enemies must allow that on that score the selection is justifiable. No officer in his various employments ever sacrificed more to the study to enforce the public contracts for victualling his crews, &c. One thing is certain, that strict justice will be enforced in every way in which the interests of Greenwich Hospital are concerned; and though the Admiral had never the good fortune to be in command in a general engagement, for which no blame can attach to him, there is not a person that knows him or ever sailed with him but is fully confident that zeal and activity will be fully exerted, and that his manifold duties will be most ably, most faithfully, and most honourably discharged. JUSTITIA.

October 10th.

Upon these letters the Morning Chronicle remarks,—

Admiral Fleeming is held in the greatest regard in the Navy as an excellent officer; and all who have served with him, or under him, are loud in his praises as an able, a vigilant, and a humane officer. Even "Benbow" allows that he is "a friendly man." With a Navy like ours, against which, for a long period before the close of the last war, no enemy durst show himself, the number of officers who have had commands in general engagements, and are in a condition to discharge efficiently the duties of a situation like that of Governor of Greenwich Hospital, must be few indeed. It is not true that, as "Justitia" remarks, the office has always been filled by officers who have been in such engagements, and he instances Sir John Colpoys. But the best title of Admiral Fleming is his peculiar qualification for the office. It is due to him to state that no man is more liked in the Navy, on account of the care which he has always taken of those under his charge, and his determination to see that the health of the seamen should not suffer from the irregular or inadequate fulfilment of contracts. It is generally allowed that no officer did more for the Navy than Earl St. Vincent, by his vigilance in guarding against abuses. If Admiral Fleeming have earned a reputation for the determination with which he enforces the faithful performance of contracts, in order to secure the health and comfort of the seamen, this is no slight recommendation for an office like that of Governor of Greenwich Hospital. The veterans who have fought their country's battles are entitled to all the care which that country can bestow on them in their old age: and the care of them ought not to be committed to men unfit, from age, infirmities, or other circumstances, for the effective discharge of the duties of the office.

No man was more alive to the importance of providing for the adequate support of the men under his charge than the Duke of Wellington. With his characteristic modesty, he attributed a great deal of his success to his skill and diligence in seeing that the Commissaries did their duty with regard to the supplies of food. "I think," he says, in one of his despatches, "that I know how to feed men." There is, as he well knew, a close connection between feeding and fighting. The veterans of Greenwich Hospital will know how to appreciate the merits of an officer who has distinguished himself by zeal for whatever regards the comfortable well-being of the sailor.

* At this period we had no 50-gun frigates, ships of that rate being two deckers. Egyptienne was rated 40, a very efficient ship in every respect, as regarded the high discipline maintained, and the comfort of the crew. In fact, Admiral Fleeming has always been considered a popular officer, on shore or afloat.—ED. N. and M. G.

IT is generally supposed that Admiral Sir Peter Halkett would have succeeded to the Portsmouth command, his tour of service in the West Indies having been interrupted by promotion to full Admiral; but we grieve to state that an account of his death reached town yesterday. The officers we have heard named as likely to succeed Admiral Fleeming, are—Sir Le[illegible] Edw[illegible] Codrington, and Sir George Parker—Sir Edward Codrington for choice.

THE most influential of human passions is perhaps ambition—the basis of which is self-love, not unfrequently combined with arrogance. In its pursuit men have been known to make every sacrifice; insomuch that when unattainable by an honourable, though humble, career, they have not scrupled to sacrifice reputation. The vanity of transmitting a name to posterity, had such influence on Erostratus, that even the crime of sacrilege could not restrain him, preferring to live in the annals of infamy, rather than be unknown to futurity. A dignified ambition, however, is highly commendable, as exciting its votaries to deeds of renown, and opening to them the page of history as the record of their good actions.

Looking then at the Military and Naval Commission, and seeing the many magnanimous individuals of whom it is composed, we rejoice at the opportunity thus afforded these great and good men to add another laurel to the wreath which they have severally entwined for themselves on the field of battle, by showing to their less fortunate brethren in arms, who participated with them in the perils and privations of war, that, since the nation has deputed them to award a fitting remuneration for the patriotic sacrifices made by the Army and Navy, they will acquit themselves in a manner which shall not fail to redound to their honour, and do justice to the liberality of the nation by whom the Commission has been sanctioned. Honourable men all—alike true to their country, and faithful to the services which they represent, they will doubtless duly weigh the biting necessities under which both Army and Navy have long groaned, and will mete out such a measure of justice as shall redound to their credit, and add lustre to their distinguished station.

A Military Commission for the adjustment of claims on the gratitude of a nation by the Army and Navy has no precedent, and must occupy a space in future history. If, then, honourable ambition has fired their souls, the acts of this Commission, coupled with the names of its members, will emblazon the historic page of British worthies; their deeds will be sanctified with the aspirations of the widows and orphans of Britain's boast—her Army and Navy. If, on the contrary, they shall have unworthily executed the sacred charge entrusted to them, the widow's curse will be their requiem, and the orphan's sigh shall waft the allegation to the throne of Heaven, whilst public contempt will point the finger of scorn ere yet they quit this mundane world. Their task is easy—let them take justice to their council; and since it cannot be denied that to the Army and Navy of Great Britain England owes her wealth, the spread of commerce, and the extension of empire, so the members of those professions should be placed in a position beyond that of beggary and absolute want, which alone have hitherto been their lot. That the nation is liberal to its public servants is evinced by the thousands per annum to retired Exchequer Chancellors, even by half-dozens, as the reward for past services; and surely they will not sacrifice the British bull-dogs that the cormorants alone may be crammed! Let the Commissioners recollect that war will shortly reverberate along the shores of the Mediterranean, and shake the hemisphere of India; let them likewise reflect that Military and Naval Officers can[illegible]y, which leaves nothing, when their mess and tailors' bills are paid, for wife and children. No Officer can go into action with zeal when he feels that the announcement of his death must be the mandate for his widow and orphans to go to the poor-house; especially now, as regards the Navy, that "pension" has been swamped under the ocean of time, by a ten years probation of commission rank, in addition to the now undefined period of servitude, for the unennobled candidates for Naval honours.

A CORRESPONDENT has put to us some questions in reference to the Warrant dated 7th July, 1830, regulating the pensions of the Land Forces. A similar regulation emanated from the Admiralty, and took effect from the same time.

The principle laid down of withholding the Pension from Widows, if left in what may be considered "affluent circumstances," is hardly fair in any point of view; but it is most objectionable—in fact, it becomes an arbitrary stretch of legislation—to give it a retrospective effect. An officer enters the service, knowing the regulations as to pay and pension: these ought not to be altered to his disadvantage when the public have had the benefit of the best portion of his life.

Probably cases for complaint have not occurred, and that no arbitrary power has been exercised under this regulation, as until this, the eighth year of our advocacy of the interests of the United Service, we have not had questions like those now submitted to us. We shall give our Correspondent's letter, and with it the best explanation in our power.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—There are subjects upon which it would be unpleasant for individual officers to make official application; and the present being of this description, you would oblige more than one of your subscribers if you will, through your valuable Gazette, afford information on the following subjects:—

Referring to the warrant of 7th July, 1830, for granting pensions to the widows of officers of the Army—1st, Are the widows of General Officers invariably called upon to render an account of their property or income?

Yes, a declaration is required as to amount, but not particulars.

2d—Are their own statements usually received as sufficient; or if not, what vouchers or certificates are required?

Their own declarations only.

3d—Is there any known scale, or amount of property or income, by which the Authorities are guided in granting or withholding pensions; or is it entirely discretionary; and with what public functionary?

No scale—altogether discretionary: and we know that four or five hundred pounds a-year has not disqualified the Widows of Field Officers. The authority is of course vested in the Secretary-at-War.

4th—What would probably be considered "wealthy circumstances" for the widow of a General Officer, with a family either of young or of grown-up children, or without children?

We should say that an income of one thousand pounds a-year would not disqualify.

5th—There may be claims upon the widow, of relations in distressed circumstances, and other claims that it might not be agreeable to bring to view. Are such facts as these inquired into, before deciding as to the pension?

Such facts, if stated generally in the declaration, would, we have no doubt, weigh with the Department; and we believe that no particulars would be required.

No doubt it might be acceptable to many if you could afford like information applicable to other ranks in the service. I am, &c. A. H.

THE conduct of the Cadets at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, has for some time been very bad, and the Master-General of the Ordnance has accordingly appointed officers to inquire into and report on every matter relating to the establishment.

Having read with unmeasurable disgust the infamous attack, made by a contemporary, upon Sir Hussey Vivian, we shall merely observe, that some time before the last vacation (not some two or three weeks since, as the Standard of Saturday asserts) Cadet Maude struck Cadet Childs, the son of a Captain of the Royal Marines, and unfortunately in the stomach, which injured him very much. For this Maude was discharged the Academy, but some time after the vacation he was restored to his appointment by the Master-General. For this act of kindness, which we know gave great satisfaction at the time to every member of the Academy, we are told by a contemporary that "the life of a son of a member of the Royal Marine corps is evidently of no sort of importance in the estimation of the Master-General." We know that there are several sons of Royal Marine Officers in the Royal Artillery, some lately passed through the Academy, others now in the Academy, and we ask them whether they were ever ill used, and what they think of this brutal attack on their Chief, a man universally respected for his brilliant services in the field, his talents, kind and generous disposition? The act of restoring Maude was probably mistaken lenity on the part of Sir Hussey, but does it justify this tirade of cowardly abuse?

We could say much respecting the management of the young men at the Academy: we know that in every school the milk-sops are knocked about more than any others, but the great defect there is, that the Subaltern Officers of the establishment have not sufficient powers granted them, and we therefore hope that the inquiry now pending will lead to some improvements, especially in this respect.

We believe that fourteen Gentlemen Cadets have been discharged, but not for young Childs' affair alone.

AT the request of a correspondent, whose notice has been attracted to a paragraph, copied into the Standard from a contemporary weekly journal, we have made inquiry respecting the regulations under which young gentlemen are received into the Navy at the present day, and find that the following are strictly adhered to. The candidate cannot be admitted until he has attained the age of thirteen, and he is subjected to an examination on board by a Naval Instructor and a Captain, neither of whom belongs to his own ship. He must be able to write an English sentence from dictation, and to work sums in the first four rules of arithmetic, and he must positively appear on board the ship before he can be rated, neither can he obtain leave of absence but for short periods. A weekly muster of the crew of all ships is made in presence of the Captain once a-week, and an occasional muster by the Commander-in-Chief, or senior Officer of the port in his absence; these musters are performed with strict care, and under such provisions it is impossible that any one can be borne on the books, who has "never joined the ship," or is long absent.

We understand that all the young gentlemen now entered are submitted to this ordeal, without exception, at Portsmouth or elsewhere; and, as we last week informed our correspondent, no Captain will receive a youngster, unless his friends engage to make him an allowance of forty pounds per annum. Formerly there was an inducement to send a boy to sea very young, or to get him rated on some ship's books, in order that he should pass through the first grades of promotion early; but for nearly thirty years the regulation, which fixes the age of passing at nineteen, has been in force, and therefore it is cheaper and better to maintain a boy at school, than to send him to sea before he attains thirteen years of age. As regards the distinguished Officers whose names have been so unbecomingly introduced into what our correspondent justly designates "the offensive paragraph," it is well known that they served their time as Midshipmen at sea, and no doubt, like many others, owe their advancement to influential connexions. Indeed, nearly all our best Officers, Nelson included, commanded ships before they had passed their teens.

THE contest between Colonel Mitchell and his opponents, on the utility of the bayonet, is still maintained with vigour, and however fatal or harmless that weapon has proved in war, it cannot be denied that it has been the occasion of many a "keen encounter of wits" in peace. The controversy has gradually brought forward many new and interesting facts, and seems in a fair way to elicit others. On a dispassionate consideration of those already advanced, weighing, moreover, the opinions of the various experienced Officers who have entered into the discussion, but swayed neither by what appears to us strong prejudice on the one side, nor by the satire mingled with argument on the other, we find the view we have always taken of the subject decidedly strengthened. Whence it would appear, first, that the bayonet, although not the most convenient weapon for single combat, or even for close fight between bodies of men, unless in very compact order, is the best yet discovered for combining the powers of steel and fire, and consequently with the musket (for, as Captain Kincaid well observes, they should never be viewed separately) superior to any other. 2nd. That, although actual combats have not been very frequent, particularly between numerous bodies, they have in fact been infinitely more common than Colonel Mitchell supposes, and would have been still more so had the enemies opposed to our troops been equal to them in firmness and physical strength, the very appearance of which is an advantage before a blow is struck.

Some of the particular actions adduced have been variously described by different writers, and, if we mistake not, Colonel Mitchell has himself somewhere cited Culloden as an instance of the superiority of the sword. It is, however, certain that the Highlanders were ultimately defeated, and General Wolfe's authority seems conclusive that, on that occasion, the claymore was found inferior to the bayonet. It should, however, be remembered, that the clans fought that day under great disadvantages. They were dispirited, fatigued, and almost famished, and the fire of the English had made fatal ravages in their ranks before a blow had been struck.

In some points of view we think Colonel Mitchell has been misunderstood by some of his opponents. He does not deny (if we read him aright) that many men have been killed by the bayonet, but he stoutly (however erroneously) insists that they were always flying, or unable to fly, and, instead of not taking into consideration the effects of the fear of the weapon (as Colonel Wilkie supposes) he objects to that very effect as preventing a collision which he justly thinks ought to give more complete victory to the strongest and most intrepid men. But the inclination to close with an enemy does not always carry with it the possibility. We agree with Colonel Mitchell in regretting the adoption of fire-arms, as rendering wars longer and eventually more bloody, leaving far less scope for that romantic display of personal valour, which is in many respects deserving of encouragement, and in which our nation is fittest to excel; throwing, too, more of death and misery than formerly, moreover, upon the peaceful inhabitants of the country which is the seat of strife. But we doubt if he be right in supposing that uncuirassed infantry, armed with muskets and swords, would close much more frequently than at present, unless they were to cast away their fire-arms on the charge, a practice which seems fraught with objections.

Together with this controversy has sprung up another, on the utility and relative superiority of different systems of bayonet-fencing. We do not see how there can be a doubt of the propriety of a soldier's understanding the best use of the weapons he carries, whatever they may be, but, inclining to believe a good cut-and-thrust sword the most effective of all weapons for close fight, we must remind the supporters of each, that a few isolated cases do not prove the superiority of either arm, which (accidental causes apart) can only be decided by trials between parties equally well fitted to wield their respective blades. The sword without the arm of Scanderbeg was useless to his foes. Thus, if the bayonet-fencers of the Stadium have triumphed over all the gladiators opposed to them, this by no means closes the question in favour of their favourite weapon, unless the best swordsmen in Britain (which we much doubt) have been matched with the most scientific bayonetteers, which they may very probably be.

The same remark will apply to the subject of Cavalry breaking or flinching from Infantry. Different trials will be attended with different success. British Cavalry have very frequently broken foreign Infantry in squares, whilst the contrary has seldom (we believe we might say never) occurred. Would our Life Guards (whom we take leave to imagine the best cavalry in the world for a charge or for single combat, however well or ill adapted for other duties to which horsemen may be destined) break our best Infantry in a majority of ten or more trials on level ground, and without surprise? or would the best continental Cavalry succeed in a similar ordeal with their steadiest Foot? The question should scarce be considered definitively settled till some such proof has taken place.

We close these remarks with Lieutenant-Colonel Wilkie's letter, which appears in this month's Number of the U. S. Journal, and we regret that we cannot also make room for Captain Kincaid's able letter on the bayonet question.

MR EDITOR,—I have no ambition to enter gratuitously into an argument on a disputed point—I considered the question of the value of the bayonet as a weapon would have dropped long since into oblivion. It has again, however, been revived, and I was much surprised to see in one of the weekly papers (U. S. Gazette) an opinion expressed that the arguments of Lieutenant-Colonel Mitchell were conclusive and final. It appeared that the ground taken by the Editor was this:—Col. Napier had stated, that, in the action at Vimiera, two men had fallen by the bayonet; many hundreds had been struck off the pay-lists by cannon and musketry, to which these two bayonet-men bore no possible comparison—ergo, the bayonet was a useless weapon. Now, I should beg leave to say, in the words of Partridge, that this is a non sequitur. It would appear that the result of a battle was by this means to be drawn from the number of killed and wounded, which is quite the reverse of the reality: the most brilliant and splendid victories have some of them been scarcely attended with any loss to the conquerors—I may quote the battle of Agincourt, and the celebrated one between Charles XII. of Sweden and the Russians.

It appears to me, Mr Editor, that in the course of this argument one very essential point has been lost sight of—the fear of the bayonet. Every one knows that, in modern warfare, when troops approach each other sufficiently close to charge, the victory will be with the party which preserves what the French call la meilleure contenance. I may ask, then, what causes one of the parties on this occasion to give way? Is it the fear of the application of the bayonet or not? Except for the noise, a man might scarcely believe he was in danger amidst the fire of cannon and musketry; he is surrounded with death, but the means by which it is inflicted are invisible to him: but it comes to a very different feeling and calculation in his mind when he sees a row of bristling and shining bayonets making its approach at a rapid pace;—if ever he had any vague ideas floating in his mind about going to the right about, that, I think, is the precise moment instinct would prompt him to give them free scope. In all charges, whether of Cavalry or Infantry, the two grand points are momentum and weight; and in the latter qualification our Infantry soldiers have decidedly the advantage over the French. Let any one look at the men on duty at the Tuileries, and compare them with our soldiers, and he will allow that, giving both parties credit for equal courage, our men would have the advantage when it came to combined personal efforts, as displayed in a charge. I have been much surprised to see it stated that our men have not confidence in the bayonet as a weapon. I have always entertained the reverse opinion. I will appeal to the experience of almost every officer who has been with our troops, exposed to a galling fire of musketry, if he has not heard a low whisper run amongst the men of "I wish they would let us give them the steel," or "Let us give them the Brummagem."

Another point seems not sufficiently dwelt on; the value of the bayonet as a defensive weapon. I may ask what would have been the result of Waterloo without the bayonet? The crossing of bayonets, as it is called, did not very often happen during the Peninsular war, arising, principally, from the reason I have stated above, the enemy did not like to try the experiment. At the conclusion of the campaigns there was, however, a pretty sharp specimen at the sortie from Bayonne.

It appears in this controversy that Col. Mitchell does not put much faith on opinions, which, he thinks, are often formed by prejudice, he calls for facts to prove the use of the bayonet, and holds the instance quoted by Col. Napier as one of small value. Now, although I cannot boast of one-half of the military experience of Col. Napier, chance has given me the occasion of seeing the bayonet employed pretty liberally. In the action of the 2nd Oct 1809, in Holland, four companies of the grenadier battalion in the reserve were detached among the sand-hills above Alckmaer, to keep up the communication between two brigades. The officer who commanded it, in his zeal to push forward, forget the main object of his mission, and in a very short time we found ourselves in front of a battalion of French infantry, and flanked by a considerable force of cavalry. The French troops were of the late-st conscription, badly disciplined, and many of them drunk, otherwise the whole detachment would have been taken; and, from the broken nature of the ground, we had become at once so far committed that it was not easy to make a good retreat. In this position of affairs, our men had recourse to the bayonet, and a considerable number of the French fell by that means; they also retaliated, and I have perfect recollection of a French drummer, quite a stripling, who seized the musket of a man who had fallen, and bayoneted three of our grenadiers before he received the same fate himself. The circumstance struck me forcibly, from the youth of the performer,—not being aware at the time that the drummer in the French army, whether man or boy, is expected to give an example of courage to his company. In this affair we had three officers and about 100 men taken prisoners, and there fell on both sides about 30 men, the greatest part of these by the bayonet.

On landing at Maldonado, in South America, our Light Infantry ran in so quickly on a gun, that the men serving at it had not time to get away, and six of them were bayoneted there: in two of these I saw there was some deficiency in the triangular shape of the bayonet, it would not penetrate between the ribs, and the weapon bent into the shape of a bow by the force; although, probably, the wounded men thought they had enough. At the sortie of Monte Video I saw many instances of bayonet wounds. If you recollect, also, in one of the papers which I sent you relative to the attack on Buenos Ayres, and which called up some remarks in the House of Commons, I mentioned that all the men who occupied a flat-roofed house were put to death by the bayonet, and that we were obliged to perform military execution by that weapon on sixty men, who retreated to a barrack-room, and refused to surrender. Our men could only use their bayonets, as they would have run great risk of shooting each other had they fired.

Independent of its offensive and defensive properties, the bayonet possesses some minor qualities that should not be overlooked. Ask any of the French soldiers that served in the Peninsula how they opened a door that was locked? They would tell you that they put the point of the bayonet into the key-hole, and then fired the musket with ball. Now, although the bayonet was not the principal agent in this affair, yet it served as guide and director to the master picklock. A bayonet will also serve to prize up the lid of a box; it will draw a cork, or force it into the bottle—it will toast cheese—it will tap a cask—when you are cooking cutlets across two ramrods à la Tartare, a couple of bayonets form excellent steak-tongs; stuck into the ground it makes a first-rate candlestick; is a beautiful ornament to a barrack hall room when collected into the shape of a star; and, finally, it forms a capital projectile, to shy at a fowl or duck in a farm yard. Honneur à la baïonnette! P. WILKIE.

It must always be a satisfaction to observe that suggestions thrown out in this paper have been acted on by the authorities, or that the course of conduct, as regards the United Service, is of a beneficial tendency.

In noticing, on the 28th ult., the appointment of Mr. Macaulay to the office of Secretary-at-War, we said—

"Of his fitness for conducting the Finance Department of the Army we shall not now pretend to offer an opinion, but be content to wait and watch the course of coming events. Mr. Macaulay has only to follow in the footsteps of his predecessor in office, to entitle himself to be considered an able administrator, as well as a liberal friend to the Army. To acquire this reputation, he must (as Lord Howick did) act upon his own judgment; for if he suffers himself to be led by official men, the old "chaps" [illegible] will become contemptible in the opinion of the whole Army."

Several of our contemporaries have augured very unfavourably of the appointment: by some Mr. Macaulay is described as a "very heavy sort of personage,"—"a creature of the coteries,"—"a machine for giving utterance to noises," &c., whilst our able contemporary the Times hints, that he will, "under the sinister suggestions of a certain Mr. Sulivan, brother-in-law of a certain Lord, who was for many years an incubus on that very office, follow up the old scheme of jobbing the Army into an engine of Cabinet corruption."

We have one advantage over our contemporaries: we are not party men; we are not influenced by Whigs or Tories, and therefore to us it is a matter of perfect indifference what set of men are in office, provided the interests of the United Service are not neglected.

With respect to Mr. Macaulay, we are glad to find our wishes realised. We know that he not only investigates the cases that are usually brought under the consideration of the Secretary-at-War, but that he is laboriously exerting himself to examine every matter in detail that belongs to his office. He has put the whole Department on the qui vive; and Mr. Sulivan, to whom the Times refers, possesses as little power to influence Mr. Macaulay's decision as any junior Clerk in the office. Of course the business is entirely new to Mr. Macaulay, and he may have to obtain many reports and explanations that were not needed by his predecessor, but he will eventually thoroughly know the business of his office, and not be dependent on his Clerks. This is following in the footsteps of Lord Howick, the most liberal Secretary-at-War the Army ever had.

And as regards Mr. Sulivan, the Deputy Secretary-at-War, we are bound in justice to admit, that he is an excellent man of business, and that his public services have not been overpaid.

Our contemporary the Standard is egregiously duped or hoaxed with paragraphs professing to be military intelligence extraordinary. We find in that paper a contradiction of the following statement, which we gave on the 28th September, of the new establishment of Service Companies and Depots, viz:—

The Service Companies are to consist of six hundred effectives, and to be kept up by the per-centage excess of Recruiting at Home.

The Depot Companies are to have two hundred effectives, viz. fifty per company, with the additions of recruits to keep up casualties happening abroad.

Now, we are told by our contemporary, that no such establishments have been decided on; that Lord Hill will not consent to so large a depot establishment as 200 rank and file, &c. To all which we adopt Colonel Napier's significant answer, "Pludge!"

Instead of 200, the per-centage to which we have referred, will bring the numbers at the depot nearly to 300; and Lord Hill, instead of objecting, would be very glad if they were 400. One great evil of depots has always been their weakness. This the new establishment will remedy, and they will henceforth be almost equal to second battalions. At all events the numbers of the establishments are, as we stated on the 28th ultimo, decided on, and the contradictions may therefore pass for what they are worth.

We take the following paragraph from an Irish paper.

The Militia.—The Standard states that the staffs of the Militia are about to be inspected, with a view to the discharge of such men as may be found inefficient—it being intended to re-organize this truly constitutional force in the early part of next year. If the new system be extended to Ireland, as we hope it may, "the strength" of the militia staffs will be most miraculously increased. For all useful—or even Military—purposes, the Irish Militias might just as well be entirely disembodied. The staffs—which are generally stationed in the immediate vicinity of the Colonel's residence—are the mere creatures of his will, and appear to be retained wholly and solely for the purpose of ministering to his personal consequence and vanity. As a Military force—or rather as the nucleus of county regiments—they are totally inefficient. The non-commissioned officers and privates, in place of doing Military duty, are employed as farmers or shopkeepers, whilst every man of them, from the Adjutant down to the drum-boy, is a notorious partisan.

Of all the plans ever devised for increasing the power and adding to the importance of the county autocrat, the present militia system is the most indefensible. In short, it is a public nuisance, and ought to be abated.—Weekly Freeman.

Our contemporaries who advocate the "Constitutional Force" are decided enemies to the hard-working officers and private soldiers of the Line. The expense of embodying the "Constitutional Force" would be nearly equal to raising fifteen new regiments of the Line; and whilst the Militia would enable the Government to send abroad more regiments to stations where they are now wanted, the relief of corps at present in the East and West Indies would be disregarded; whereas an augmentation of the number of Line regiments would provide both for home and foreign service. As yet, nothing has been decided upon, and we trust that the new Secretary-at-War will prefer the means of relieving corps, and lengthening the home service of regiments that have been twenty years and upwards in the East Indies, to the radical cackling against Military Establishments and praise of the "truly Constitutional Force."

We are even to this day paying for about 30,000 volunteers and militia in Canada at two shillings and sixpence per man; thus, for every ten Canadians we might have had twenty-four British soldiers added to our Military force. Where then has been the saving to the country, or the justice to the hardest-worked Army in the world?

But, reverting to the Standard, we find by the same Irish paper that our contemporary has been further most grossly imposed upon, and that although a Conservative organ, it is actually made the instrument for assaulting Lord Hill, who is accused of an infringement of the General Orders and Regulations of the Army.

"We always thought, at least we have been told often enough, that Lord Hill's administration of the Army was the only redeeming feature in the character of the Whig Government; and yet, if the Standard is entitled to any credence, his Lordship has sanctioned the appointment of Ensign Baring (the son of the new Chancellor of the Exchequer), who only entered the Army five months ago, and who is, in all probability, still unacquainted with his drill, to the personal staff of Mr. Poulett Thomson, the Governor-General of Canada, in contravention of the General Orders and Regulations of the Army, which strictly enjoin that "no officer shall be eligible for a staff situation (whether under a civil or Military authority) who has not performed regimental duty two years." This, if correctly stated, is, as the Standard describes it, a scandalous instance of favouritism. But the same scandalous system, though seldom applied to gentlemen professing the principles of the Barings and Thomsons, has been going on for several years, and might, for all the Standard cares, go on till doomsday, provided only the favourites were of the right sort, and connected with the Commander-in-Chief's own party."—Weekly Freeman.

This is all very piquant, and we further find from another of these paragraphs, "that it was not without considerable reluctance that Lord Hill yielded to the importunities of Mr. P. Thomson and his friends to appoint this new and inexperienced youth to a situation for which he cannot of necessity possess the requisite qualifications"!!!

To these abominable stupid falsehoods, which must excite either the contempt or laughter of every Subaltern in the Army, we reply, that Lord Hill has infringed no regulation, and that his Lordship, as a mere matter of course, sanctioned the appointment of Ensign Baring: that he did not make a single objection: that in fact he had none to offer.

The appointment of Aide-de-Camp to a civil Governor is purely of a civil, honorary character, and can be performed by any young well-bred gentleman; there are no Military duties attached to the situation, and civil Governors usually appoint their young relatives. If, instead of Mr. Poulett Thomson, a General Poulett Thomson had been made Governor of the Canadas, Lord Hill would have taken care that the Aide-de-Camp was qualified according to the regulations which are founded upon the principle that an Aide-de-Camp to a Military Officer should be competent to the discharge of Military duties.

The competency of officers to Civil situations is not provided for by the Commander-in-Chief, any more than it was by his Lordship's predecessors, the Duke of York, Sir David Dundas, and the Duke of Wellington. Inexperienced regimental officers can be best spared from regimental duties, and although we should prefer the "good things" to fall to the lot of officers who have claims from service; yet so long as political party, and personal favour influence men, we cannot expect this Utopian system.

It is with tenth-rate party-papers that these absurd stories originate, and the respectable portion of the press should be on their guard against assisting in the circulation of paragraphs as false as they are foolish. As respects Lord Hill, no Commander-in-Chief could have acted more fairly to all parties in the distribution of the patronage of of his office. And we might throw in the teeth of the small fry of slanderers many admissions to this effect by an able contemporary, the Times—the chief organ of Conservatism.

We earnestly request the attention of the Secretary-at-War to a matter, at this moment, of the greatest interest to soldiers.

The period has nearly arrived when the annual indulgence of furloughs will be given, but many soldiers have declined applying for them, in consequence of the expense they would subject themselves to in reaching their homes; for, although the numerous lines of railways and other conveyances offer themselves in every direction, yet, should the poor soldier avail himself of that mode of transit, in order to reach his home earlier, he must undergo many privations to satisfy the demand for the full fare, whereas "on duty" the half fare only is exacted.

A glance at the statement last issued from the War-Office, dated 1st July, 1839, relative to the conveyance of soldiers by railway, &c., satisfies us that the authorities were actuated by a desire to promote the soldier's interest without burthening the public with too great a charge, but unfortunately this indulgence does not extend to the soldier on furlough, who, with his advance of 6*d.* per diem, is ill able to meet the demand on his purse, in the shape of full fare, and must therefore "march" it, or else seek some humble conveyance.

It is much to be regretted that this desirable clause was [illegible] concluded by the late Secretary-at-War, for we feel confident that the companies with whom the contracts were made, would never have hesitated a moment in acceding to such a proposition, conferring, as it would, immense advantage to the soldier, and at the same time without subjecting themselves to any pecuniary loss.

We believe, however, it is still in the power of the Secretary-at-War to obtain this benefit for the soldier, and we shall, therefore, be glad to find Mr. Macaulay's administration commenced with an act of such general advantage to the British Army.

The meeting of officers to establish an Annuity Institution took place on Tuesday, when all the rules hitherto proposed, and against which it has been our imperative duty to protest, were most unanimously rejected. We may have incurred the wrath of the framers of those rules, but that is of minor consideration. Lieut.-Colonel Cator was appointed President of a Committee to submit a new plan, and the title was very properly changed to "Army and Navy Widows' and Orphans' Society." Wishing most ardently success to an institution of this description, we shall be glad if the new rules are such as to ensure the support of the Services. The Committee have experience to guide them, and, therefore, we have confidence in their endeavours. The calculations which have been made by Lieutenant Hart are upon a correct principle, and if the new rules prove equally sound, the society will flourish.

The Court.

The Court continue at Windsor, and Her Majesty rides out daily, when the weather permits. On Monday the Queen Dowager arrived at the Castle, where Her Majesty remained till Wednesday.

The Hereditary Prince (Ernest) and Prince Albert of Saxe Cobourg Gothe landed at the Tower on Thursday afternoon, from the Continent, and proceeded, with their suite, in two of the Royal carriages to Windsor Castle, on a visit to the Queen.

The Hon. Miss Cavendish, who left the Castle on Monday afternoon, in consequence of the unexpected death of her brother, Mr. Henry Cavendish, has been succeeded as Maid of Honour in Waiting upon the Queen by the Hon. Miss Pager.

The Queen Dowager has, for the present, deferred her visit to the Duke of Devonshire, at Chatsworth, in consequence of previous engagements. Her Majesty intends to visit Lord Denbigh in Warwickshire; the Earl and Countess of Hardwicke, at Wimpole, Cambridgeshire; Lord Howe, in Leicestershire; and afterwards the Duke of Rutland, at Belvoir Castle.

The Queen some time since directed that the debts of her late Royal father, the Duke of Kent, should be liquidated from Her Majesty's privy purse. This payment has been effected, and the creditors have presented an address, expressing their grateful sense of this proof of Her Majesty's spontaneous liberality.

Liberality of the Queen.—Margaret Maconochie, a blind girl, who lost her sight by accompanying her parent through the Peninsular war along with the 42d Royal Highlanders, has received from Her Majesty 20*l.*, for working a pair of carriage boots.

Prince George of Cambridge will return to this country at the close of this or early in the ensuing month.

On Sunday despatches from Sir George Gipps, Governor of New South Wales, were received at the Colonial-office. Despatches from the British Minister at the Hague, and also at Brussels, were received on Monday at the Foreign-office. Despatches were forwarded on Tuesday from the Foreign department for the Marquess of Clanricarde, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh.

The second son of the Hon. Colonel Cavendish, aged 19, (Clerk Marshal to Her Majesty), expired on Sunday night. The death of this amiable and accomplished youth has plunged the family into the depths of grief.

Lt.-Colonel the Earl of Cardigan returned to his residence near Canterbury on Tuesday last, from a visit to the Duke of Wellington at Walmer Castle.

The Revenue accounts exhibit a favourable balance both on the year and on the quarter. On the year ended 10th Oct., 1839, as compared with the year ended 10th Oct., 1838, the increase is 1,712,077*l.* On the quarter ended 10th Oct., 1839, as compared with the corresponding quarter last year, the increase is 238,222*l.* In the Customs there has been an increase both on the year and on the quarter. The increase on the year is 1,091,677*l.*, and on the quarter 208,785*l.* In the Excise the increase on the year has been 324,863*l.*, and on the quarter 19,200*l.* There has been a decrease in Stamps on the year of 227,681*l.*, and on the quarter of 51,752*l.*

The Duke of Wellington will proceed to Strathfield-saye the first week in November, having invited a large party to meet him to enjoy the sport of pheasant-shooting among the extensive covers on those spacious domains.

The Marquesses of Hastings and Waterford, the Earls of Rosslyn and Dysart, and Lord Archibald St. Maur, will commence the hunting season the first week in the ensuing month at Melton Mowbray. The Earl of Chesterfield has taken stabling at Scadwell, Northamptonshire. The noble Earl's brother-in-law, (the Hon. Captain Charles Forester) will have the management of his Lordship's pack, consisting of eighty couple of hounds, until his return from the Continent.

The failure of the Marquess of Huntly has excited considerable sensation in this quarter. His debts are said to average 600,000*l.*, whilst, from the schedule of funds, it appears there are not 1*s.* 6*d.* per pound likely to be realised to pay the debts. This town suffers only 10,000*l.*; Dundee, 20,000*l.*; Montrose, 30,000*l.*; and Aberdeen, 100,000*l.* The noble Marquess has gone ad interim to Paris.—Arbroath Herald.

Sir James Clark has published a statement of the case of the late Lady Flora Hastings, and gives a positive denial to the charges put forth affecting his character. The details are only suitable for a medical journal.

Baron Hackett died at New Orleans on 22nd Aug. of yellow fever. He was an Aide-de-Camp to the Prince of Orange, and served with distinction in the French Army, particularly at the battle of Waterloo and at the siege of Antwerp.

A large number of Englishmen who had taken service in Don Carlos's Army, have within the last few days passed through Renfnes, returning to England by St. Malo and Jersey.

The Spanish Government have resolved upon conferring the Grand Cross of San Fernando upon Lord John Hay, for the active part taken by his Lordship in the Maroto negotiations. Colonel Wylde, for similar services, is also to be honoured with a Spanish order.

Death of Colonel Webb, formerly Representative of the City of Gloucester.—The Colonel, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Webb, left this country a few months ago for the purpose of travelling through the United States; on reaching the Falls of Niagara he was taken exceedingly ill, and his physician advised his immediate removal to his native country; subsequently, on reaching New York, the symptoms appeared more alarming, which in a few hours terminated his existence. His physical powers were so weakened by excessive sea-sickness that he could not again rally.

Windsor.—A Desirable Present.—On Monday, while a little knot of the commissioned men of the 45th were standing engaged in conversation in the barrack-square, a genteel-looking female (we believe from Canterbury) walked up, and unceremoniously placed in the arms of Captain ———, one of those charming little creatures called infants; the Captain made every excuse to reject the offer, but the good lady was determined, and after receiving the congratulations of his brother officers upon the affinity it bore to its "Pa," the gallant Captain found it necessary to provide a nurse for the little offspring, and thus the affair was agreeably settled.—Aylesbury Journal.

Trial of Jalbert at Montreal for the Murder of Lieutenant Weir.—The jury consisted of nine Frenchmen and three Englishmen, and the evidence left no doubt of Jalbert having killed Lieut. Weir, but the defence was palliatory, "on the ground of a state of war existing." The jury could not agree. The nine Frenchmen and one Englishman (or rather Scotchman) were for acquitting him, and the remaining two were for a verdict against him. As they remained firm to the same opinions, on the third day they were discharged, and a new trial was to be ordered. On its being announced that the jury were discharged, there was a general rush upon them by the mob, and several of them were roughly handled. The ten who were for acquitting the prisoner were all Canadians, except Atwater, an American, and a Scotchman. The two jurors who were for finding the prisoner guilty were carried home on the shoulders of the loyalists. The Judge saved himself from the mob by retiring to the house of a friend, and Jalbert was escorted to gaol by a strong party of grenadiers.

From New South Wales.—The accounts received this week give very distressing descriptions of the effects of the drought, for a long time prevalent in the colony; provisions are enormously dear; water is exceedingly scarce, being sold at 3*d.* the measure of two gallons. The distress amongst the grazing farms is almost beyond parallel, vast numbers of cattle and sheep have already fallen sacrifices. A memorial has been presented by the inhabitants of Port Philip, praying for the establishment of a warehousing system, and represents in strong terms the prosperity (if not exaggerated) of the colony, and its increasing exportation of wool; the flocks being estimated at 500,000, and the cattle at 15,000 head, and the produce of the wool for the present season is expected to amount to 750,000*l.*

Covent-Garden.—At this theatre there is excellent promise of a successful season. The house has been well attended throughout the week, and the performances have gone off with great spirit. The School for Scandal, the most sparkling of Sheridan's dramas, was on Thursday, in every respect, most admirably represented.

Haymarket.—Power's little comedy Married Lovers, or, A Wife's Lessons, has been revived at this theatre, and the unqualified applause of the audience bestowed upon every part of it. A new piece by Buckstone, adapted from the French, and entitled Brother Tom, or, My Dear Relations, the leading features of which are broad humour and bustling incident, was brought out on Thursday: it is an unpretending trifle, but was well acted, and announced for repetition amidst general applause.

THE TOAST.

A toast!—a toast!—my friend exclaim'd,
As late we throng'd his festal board;
And I, as mine, exulting named—
"The loved! the honour'd! and adored!"
The mystic words, by every tongue,
Were yet, and yet again, encored;
And, echoing back, the chamber rung—
"The loved! the honour'd! and adored!"

The glass flew on its welcome round,
And Time danced hand-in-hand with Mirth;
And still as meet, due homage found—
Love!—Friendship!—Country!—Valour!—Worth!—
Again 'twas mine with joy to rise,
(Let honour to the bard be given,)
And drank, to hearing's glad surprise,—
"The pride of earth!—the hope of heaven!"

Once more 'twas mine to name the toast,
And wonder deep all eyes express'd,
When answering to our worthy host,
I gave—"The brightest and the best!"
Some deem'd 'twas Fortune, Honour some,
While others thought of Power and Fame;
But pleasure struck each hearer dumb
When I pronounced dear WOMAN'S name.

Mrs. Mackintosh, of Belmont House, Vauxhall, daughter of Vice Admiral Francis William Drake, is now the only remaining descendant, in the direct male line, of the celebrated Sir Francis Drake, of Queen Elizabeth's reign.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

To W. H. Maxwell, Esq.

SIR,—It is with much regret that I find, by your letter in the last Number of the N. and M. Gazette, that your ire has been excited, in consequence of some remarks which I ventured to make in a former Number, immediately after the perusal of the account of the battle of Waterloo in your recently published work entitled "Victories of the British Army." Old soldiers, you will admit, are prone to grumble; and it, in a moment of sullen disappointment, I failed to convey my opinions in "civil language," be assured, Sir, that I am the last man to have intentionally wounded the feelings of one for whom I entertain a very great respect, whose name stands so high in the Military literature of our country, and to whom I feel indebted for many hours passed in most delightful and entertaining reading. But while I beg you to exonerate me from any intentional incivility, I hesitate not a moment in acknowledging, on a second perusal of my letter, that it certainly was couched in a blunt and uncourteous fashion, for which I can offer no other excuse than the splenetic humour, under the impulse of which it was written.

As I have no desire whatever to enter into any controversy, I shall confine myself entirely to an explanation of the cause of the dissatisfaction I experienced on those two points to which my letter referred—namely, the misstatements of the particular regiments which attacked the flank of the Imperial Guard, and the insufficiency (as it appeared to me) of Military details in your account of the retreat of the 17th. Having read, I believe, all the published histories of the battle, I was immediately reminded by your remark on the 42d and 95th, of a precisely similar statement in Mudford's large quarto work, which was published in 1817. You observe—"With the 42nd and 95th, the British leader threw himself on Ney's flank, and rout and destruction followed." Mudford says (page 294), "In less than two minutes 900 had fallen, while the Duke, leading up the 42nd and 95th, took them in flank;" and I am almost certain I have also seen this same account (probably copied) in some other history of the battle. You need not, therefore, be surprised at my having been put into bad humour by your perpetuating the error, notwithstanding the controversies and explanations that have so recently taken place, and thus committing an injustice towards the 52nd and 71st Regiments by depriving them of their well-earned share of the laurels gained in that most important and fully decisive attack. For the substitution of the 42nd for the 52nd Regiment, you have pleaded the printer's error, and have pronounced me "an honest gentleman so superlatively stupid as not to be able to detect a Military misstatement from the misprint of a typographer." For the omission of the gallant 71st, however, you have not thought proper to offer any apology.

With respect to the retreat on the 17th, I must confess I was disappointed at finding the paragraph, in which you describe it, did not embrace more of Military detail; that it did not explain in what manner the troops were successively withdrawn, so as to mask the retreat from the field of Quatre Bras; by what roads they retired, for the "long and narrow bridge at the village of Genappe" was certainly, I have always understood, not "the only means by which the corps d'armée either could or did effect its passage;" and I should have been glad to see further particulars given concerning the Cavalry affair at Genappe, and (which I conceive to be due to the regiments concerned) the cause properly stated of the failure of "the 7th Hussars, assisted by some squadrons of the 11th and 23d Lt. Dragoons," in attempting to effect that which was subsequently executed in so "decisive" a manner by "the Life Guards." By-the-bye, I was not previously aware that the 11th Light Dragoons were at all concerned in that affair.

In conclusion, I beg to observe that although I am not, as you suppose, either "an elderly gentleman bending beneath the weight of the laurels he has gathered," or a very young one "who knows not how to set a squadron in the field," I am always anxious to learn any facts likely, in a professional point of view, to throw additional light upon the events of the memorable campaign of 1815, and still more so to see ample justice done to the merits of individual corps which distinguished themselves therein. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Clifton, Oct. 7, 1829. MILES.

The late Duke of York.—(From a Correspondent.)—An officer in the Army (holding a Lieutenant's commission) was invalided in consequence of an illness which befel him at Walcheren. When he recovered, not being able to get reinstated on full-pay, he obtained a Captain's commission of an Adjutancy in a Militia regiment, the pay of which, added to his half pay as Lieutenant, enabled him to support his wife and family. When volunteers for the line from Militia regiments were invited, this officer (to whom the soldiers of the regiment were much attached) volunteered into one of His Majesty's regiments, carrying with him nearly 100 men. He selected a particular regiment, but obtained only a Lieutenant's commission in the line, or rather say he was reinstated on full-pay. The effect of this was to deprive him of the advantages he had derived from the Militia appointments, and hence his family were inconvenienced. He presented many memorials for preferment, but which were not successful. However his wife (who was a plain and artless young woman, having been brought up and always lived in the country), nothing daunted, determined on another effort, and came to town with another memorial, and, without letting her friends know what she was about, or intended to do, (her husband being at this time abroad with his regiment,) persisted in calling again and again at the house of the Duke of York. Her importunities to see the Duke were so frequent, and her grief so poignant, that at last the porter promised that he would get her an interview with the Duke, and he appointed her to come to the house at a particular hour on a particular day. She accordingly went, and after waiting in a room into which she had been shown, the Duke and his attendant came into it, and asked her what she wanted with him. She, in the simplicity of her heart, asked him if he was the Duke of York, and upon his answering in the affirmative, she fell on her knees at his feet, but her sobs prevented her for some time speaking; but at last she said her object was promotion for her husband, and then put a new memorial into the Duke's hand, which he promised to read and attend to. She then left the Duke's, and told a friend what had passed. He thought she had been imposed on by the porter, and had not seen the Duke. However, in a few days, to the great joy and comfort of herself and children, she read in the Gazette of her husband's appointment as Captain of a regiment, thus relieving her and her husband and family from distress, and afterwards her husband gradually rose to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and he is now living in retirement.—Times.

Candahar.—The following extracts, from an official letter by Mr. W. H. Macnaghten, records some interesting particulars. "In my letter of 12th inst. I ventured an opinion to the effect that the lapse of a few days would suffice to show the high estimation in which his Majesty Shah Shooja-ool-Moolk is held by his countrymen, as well as the wisdom of the policy pursued by the British Government throughout the whole of the proceedings in which we are now engaged. We marched upon Candahar, a distance of about eighteen miles, and the spectacle which presented itself to us on the road was the most interesting one it ever fell to my lot to witness. His Majesty advanced, attended only by the officers of the mission and his own immediate retainers. At every hundred yards of our progress we were met by bands of well-mounted and well-armed men, all tendering their allegiance to his Majesty; whilst the inhabitants of the country assembled in crowds, and manifested their joy at the Shah's restoration in the most unqualified terms. There is no longer any apprehension of scarcity; tranquillity is restored, and even the confidential servants of the Sirdars declare their satisfaction at the change of government. Hajee Khan Kakur, who is decidedly the most powerful Chief in these parts, reported his arrival, with about 200 horsemen, to pay his respects to the Shah. This defection it is obvious would at once prove fatal to the hopes of the Sirdars; and on the same day Abdool Mujeed Khan, son of the Governor of Lash, and Gholam Akhoondzada Moollah, who was one of the most violent in stirring up the population to oppose us, also came in."—April 20.

An officer of rank states, that "the triumphal entry of the King into Candahar presented a scene of enthusiasm and loyalty which nothing could surpass. Up to the 19th April the Chiefs had by no means abandoned their hope of raising a religious war. Our approach to the Kojuk Pass, on the 16th, had, however, the effect of stirring up the Sirdars to oppose us; and during the 18th and 19th two of the Chiefs were within twelve miles of the British camp, with 8,000 really good and efficient Cavalry. Our camp-followers were cut off, the water diverted from its course, and our troops exposed to considerable inconvenience. On the morning of the 20th a Syed appeared at the piquets, representing himself as the agent of Hajee Khan Kakur, who, after some negotiation, entered the British camp with 120 followers. He is a man of ability and influence, and is all-powerful in his own tribe. This defection panic struck the Affghan Cavalry, who believed themselves circumvented on all sides by us, and fled with the greatest precipitation, making a march of fifty miles at one stretch. During the night they were almost entirely deserted by their followers. On the approach of the King, on the morning of the 24th, the King outstripped his own force, and was preceded by no one. The British Army was behind. Parties of horse appeared on our flanks; they galloped up, dismounted, drew up in line, prayed for the King who welcomed them, and then joined in the rear of the procession. One standard after another was there added, and ere we entered Candahar, Shah Shooja had been joined by about 1,500 men, well mounted, dressed, and caparisoned; and his only attendants on the part of the British were Mr. Macnaghten and the officers of the mission, with a small honorary escort. Nothing served more to speak to men's eyes that he was King than such a spectacle. Candahar is a valley, well cultivated; and it seems as if we had dropped into a paradise. The country we have been traversing is the most barren and desolate that eyes ever rested on. Supplies in Candahar are still very dear and scarce, partly owing to the number added to the population. The Bengal troops alone being about 9,000 fighting men, have 28,000 followers."

The movements and intentions of Dost Mahomed Khan seem involved in uncertainty. Some accounts state that he has quarrelled with his Sirdars, who had deserted him. His brothers, who had been entrusted with the defence of the Khyber Pass, had also abandoned the post, which was immediately occupied by Col. Wade, who, with Timour Shah and our Sikh allies, had crossed the pass. In consequence of the success of Shah Shooja at Candahar, it is said that the people of Cabul were up in arms against the Ameer, and had seized some of his guns between Cabul and Jellalabad. It was expected that he would follow the example of his brothers and fly to Persia. The terms of surrender originally offered him by our Government were one lac of rupees per annum, and an asylum in our territories. Another account states, Dost Mahomed had positively determined to oppose the passage of the Sikhs through the Khyber Pass; that he had seized the wives and children of his principal chiefs, whom he had detained as hostages for their fidelity. Later accounts state that after making a march or two towards the Pass, he suddenly retired with his troops (principally cavalry) with ten lacs of rupees to Ghizni, where it is expected he will avoid an encounter by retiring as we approach, and thus keep up a running warfare, which must prove most distressing and harassing to our troops. It is said that he had confined Gen. Campbell and the American officer in his service, as also one of the Sirdars who was favourable to our views, in the prison at Cabul.

It is stated that Government had just been put in possession of a private correspondence between some of the chiefs of Scinde and Dost Mahomed, which expresses the readiness of the Scindians to assist the ruler of Cabul in every way. It is added Lord Auckland finds great fault with Sir John Keane in not having obeyed his original instructions regarding the advance on Hyderabad, instead of having entered into a treaty which it became almost compulsory to accept after the negotiations which had been gone into.

Unless some effectual measures be taken to put down the Beloochees, whose plundering and murders continue as frequent as ever, it will be difficult to keep up communications with the Army.—Agra Ukhbar, July 16.

The advance of the Sikh troops has been stopped by the death of their Rajah; prior to that event their progress had been slow. Col. Wade reported that the pay of the troops was in arrears, and unless he had money to discharge them they would not return. They had had a slight affair with the Khyberians at the entrance of the pass.

A letter dated Peshawur, 18th May, states that our Sikh auxiliaries were behaving very ill. The Sikh Goorkha corps, with four guns, had marched out of Col. Wade's camp, declaring they would not assist to re-establish the power of the Affghans. Several Rajahs too were mutinous without any effort being made to reduce them to obedience, though No Nehal Singh, Gen. Ventura, and other leaders, were present.

Bokhara.—Col. Stoddart, who visited Bokhara, on a mission, was imprisoned, but has been released, and treated with more consideration than he experienced before the unhappy occurrence which caused his incarceration.—Englishman, June 29.

Trade on the Indus.—It is officially notified, that already five Indus boats of about 11 tons burthen, prepared to carry passengers or freight, will be despatched twice every month from Ferozepore.

A private letter, received from Mulligaum, states that the cholera has made its appearance in a violent form in that station and its neighbourhood, where 300 inhabitants have fallen victims, and the 13th Bengal N.I. had lost 15 men, whilst at Dhoolia upwards of 100 had died in jail.

Baroda Local Force.—Orders have been issued for raising a local corps to be designated the Guzerat Irregular Horse: the force to consist of about 700 men. Major H. G. Roberts, 13th N.I., Bombay, is to be Commandant; Lieut. A. H. Atcheson, do., to be 2d; Ensign J. M'Gregor, 21st N.I., to be Adjutant; Assist. Surg. H. T. Chatterton to be Medical Officer.

Bombay Relief.—With the sanction of Government, the following relief of corps at Bombay during the ensuing cold season, unless otherwise ordered, will take place, dated July 20th:—8th N.I., from Satara to Baroda; 11th, from Bhooj to Ahmedabad; 12th, from Rajcote to Bombay; 14th, from Ahmedabad to Rajcote; 16th, from Bombay to Satara; 20th, from Baroda to Bhooj.

Cornet Chapman has, notwithstanding the vigilance of the police, managed to get off from Bombay. He sailed for Liverpool on board the Albyn, having embarked as Monsieur Corcmote. It appears that he had command of very extensive funds, as many of his drafts to a considerable amount, drawn upon Johanjee Nasserwanjee, Esq., were, we are informed, duly honoured. The Captain of the Albyn received 1500 rupees for his passage, and kept the secret to the last. If Cornet Chapman be really a criminal flying from public justice, this step will hardly avail him long, since intelligence may be sent overland in time to secure his arrest on his arrival in England.—Bombay Times, July 20.

The accounts received in Ahmedabad from Kattywar were of a most distressing nature. Famine was desolating the province, the unfortunate inhabitants were flying by thousands from the country, and parents were selling their children for a few measures of grain.

Aden.—By accounts up to the 18th July from Aden, we are sorry to observe much sickness existed amongst the officers. Major Osborn and Capt. Willoughby have arrived on sick certificate, and Capt. Shepherd follows on the same account. Two officers were on board ships in the harbour for their health, and another in sick quarters. They had experienced severe gales of wind for several days, and in the European lines only a few tents were standing. The thermometer in June ranged from 87 to 97 in a stone house, and in July rose to 103, and in the tents to 108.—Bombay Times, July 31.

The East India Company, taking advantage of the increase of steam navigation in our Navy, and in that of other powers, have (as we stated when they were first laid down) caused three vessels to be built for the protection of our trade in the East, which are now fitting out in the East India Docks, and will proceed to their stations about the latter end of the month. They are about 800 tons each. The Queen, intended for Bengal, was built at the same yard whence the British Queen was launched: and the President, her rival, is building. The Cleopatra and Sesostris, for Bombay, at Northfleet. The two former have round and the latter a square stern, and will be armed with very heavy metal. It is to be hoped they will fully answer the purpose for which they are intended—the protection of our trade, and the extirpation of piracy, for which the Indian Seas have so long been noted; and where, although the East India Company have always had an extensive Naval force, yet, from the prevalence of certain winds at particular seasons, and the frequent occurrence of calms in these latitudes, the pirates in their row-boats have often baffled their pursuers in very swift-sailing vessels. The Queen, commanded by Capt. Warden, will be dispatched about the 20th inst.; she is schooner rigged, with three masts, and is a very beautiful vessel. She will take several passengers, for whose accommodation the arrangements are very admirable. The Cleopatra will be commanded by Capt. Saunders, and the Sesostris by Capt. Moresby.

Generals Nott and Willshire.—We give the reply as promised:—

To the Officers of the Indian Army.

I have read with some care and not a little interest, the communication between Gen. Nott and Sir John Keane, relative to the former officer's claim to a division, in preference to Gen. Willshire. I have also read the correspondence and editorial articles that have severally appeared, within the last month, on the same subject in the principal journals of India. I have reason to believe that much therein advanced has been written under erroneous impressions, arising from defective information. I will endeavour, as briefly and concisely as I can, to lay before you what I believe to be the real state of the case, and shall be happy if what is here written shall succeed in allaying the excitement now prevailing in the Company's Army, and show them that no affront or reflection on them could possibly have been intended by Sir J. Keane, and that Maj.-Gen. Nott has urged his claims from a soldierly desire to get into action, rather than from any principle of actual right. I speak this advisedly, because I have seen the instructions from Lord Hill, on the subject of supercessions; and you, my friends, will shortly see, from what I am about to state, that there are explicit commands from the Sovereign that no officer on full pay who has once attained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, whether regimentally or by the Rl. Brevet, shall ever afterwards be superseded (save in the single exception of H.M.'s Aide-de-Camp), by any junior Lieut.-Colonel, whether an Colonel, Maj. General, or Lieut.-General. These are the explicit commands of the Sovereign; and as such, the Commander-in-Chief in India is bound to see them obeyed, without reference to the wants or wishes of any other parties. You will distinctly understand from the foregoing, the principles on which promotion in India is to be exclusively regulated, and the grounds on which His Excellency, Sir H. Fane, appointed certain officers of H.M.'s service to be Maj.-Generals in India, in order that they might preserve with the new brevet, the same relative positions they had enjoyed up to that period—enjoyed first as Lieut.-Colonels and afterwards as Colonels. Many of you, especially those in the Bombay presidency, must well remember the case of Col. Thomas, C.B., of H.M.'s 20th, who refused to serve under Brig.-Gen. Gilbert, his junior officer, as Colonel Commanding the Belgaum Division. Col. Thomas referred the case to Lord W. Bentinck. It was given against him, and the Colonel forthwith applied for leave, proceeded to Europe, and laid his grievance before the Horse Guards. From this arose a correspondence between Mr. Grant (now Lord Glenelg) then President of the Board of Control, and Lord Hill. The merits of the individual case, as also sundry suggestions submitted by Mr. Grant and the Chairs to Lord Hill, by which it was proposed so to regulate matters in future, as to prevent misunderstandings and clashings of rank between the superior officers of the two Armies, were fully and freely discussed. I wish much that I could procure a copy of Lord Hill's reply for publication, for I feel certain that a perusal of that able document, which breathes throughout a true soldier's spirit, would effectually put a stop to a future cavil. In the absence of that document, I shall endeavour, as far as memory serves me, to state its substance. It is long since I read that letter, but I have never ceased to regret that a document of such interest, and one which would have prevented so much of bickering, jealousy, and ill-will between the two services, should have been withheld from the Indian Army.

Lord Hill commences by saying, that he has given the several cases and suggestions submitted, the most earnest attention, and that he feels deeply impressed with the necessity of removing from officers of either service, as far as possible, all just grounds of grievance. He admits unreservedly that the Army of the E. I. Company is the Indian Army, and that H.M.'s troops are but a subsidiary force, and that the latter are therefore not entitled to claim any proportion of the Staff appointments, &c., of the Indian Army, which appertain exclusively to officers of the Company's service, who devote their entire career exclusively to this country. Still Lord H. states, that without the most distant reflection on the Native Army, it cannot be denied that the larger proportion of Indian conquests are attributable to the valour and discipline of the European troops, more especially those of Her Majesty, and that, therefore, it comes of great importance that these troops should have no real grounds to consider themselves neglected or slightly treated; and that nothing would be so likely to promote ill will, jealousies, &c., as any attempt to lower or degrade the rank or authority of the superior officers of that service, by attempts to exclude them from commands, and that under no circumstances whatever can it be permitted that any officer in H.M. service shall, at any time, be required to serve under one of inferior rank; and that the best mode of preventing all clashing or misunderstanding will be, to continue the rule so long established in respect to promotion, and that the rank of Lieut.-Colonel having been once attained, all superior rank should be strictly regulated by that standard, whether to the rank of Colonel, Maj.-General, or Lieut.-General. Lord Hill, after disposing of several minor points, next adverts to one argument frequently employed, viz., that as the Officers of the Ordnance in England rise to the rank of Colonel regimentally, the officers of the Indian Army should enjoy a like advantage. His Lordship observes that the cases are not by any means the same. That the promotion to such rank in an isolated and scientific corps like that of the Ordnance in England, is very different from a case applied to the Line on a whole Army—and that no practical evil results from the supercession in the former case. That officers of the rank of Colonel of Artillery or Engineers are seldom employed on active service in command, for that armies in Europe are necessarily so large, that General Officers are always employed at the head of divisions and brigades of the line, as also in command of the Ordnance corps, that the Artillery in such cases is an exclusive command and cannot clash with other interests, as would infallibly be the case were the rank of Colonel regimentally conceded to the Indian Army, by which their seniors, as Lieut.-Colonels of H.M.'s service, would be superseded by their juniors of the E.I.C.'s service. Lord Hill then admits, that it is a good general rule to apportion the superior commands of divisions and brigades in fixed proportions between the officers of the two services, but that this is not a measure of such first-rate importance, but what it is better to suffer occasional deviations, rather than cause injury to that high sense of honour and discipline, which so mainly depend on maintaining proper things in their proper places, and that, consequently, no senior officer must ever be commanded by his junior. Lastly, Lord Hill notices a proposition that such officers of H.M.'s Army as in command of regiments, and whose rank would clash with those of the Company's service, who may be appointed by Government to commands, &c., such officers should be relieved from active service and permitted to return to Europe with an allowance from the Hon. Company, until regularly removed from the effective regimental list, by promotion to Major-General, by H.M. brevet. His Lordship accords this proposition as one that cannot be listened to a moment; that such a principle of bartering honour for pelf could never be tolerated for one hour, as it would inevitably tend to degrade the profession, and to destroy that high tone of feeling on which the efficiency of Military service so mainly depends. Lord Hill concludes by recapitulating briefly the several propositions of Mr. Grant and the Chairs, and his replies to each in detail; and repeats the explicit commands of the Sovereign, that no senior officer be required to serve under his junior, and that no officer, having attained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel in India, shall ever be superseded (save and except by H.M.'s A.D.C.) whether as Colonel, Maj.-General, or Lieut.-General.

It was upon these clear and explicit instructions, that the officers of the line in Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, who had been superseded by Col. Macleod of the Bengal Engineers, and by those of H.M.'s officers, who had been promoted to Colonels in order that they might not be superseded by Col. Macleod, were placed in their proper places, by receiving commissions antedated so as to place such and every one in the same position as Colonel, that he had previously held as Lieut.-Colonel.

It was upon these instructions also that Sir Henry Fane subsequently promoted the Colonels of H.M.'s service to be Maj.-Generals; and, despite all the sneers and all the obloquy heaped upon Sir Henry's head for that act, (and I confess I was one who strongly disapproved the measure, while I was ignorant of the true merits of the case,) I believe you will now admit that Sir H. Fane was legally and morally justified in that act, and that the officers so promoted to be "Fane" Major-Generals, as they are generally called, in order to put them in their proper places, are, to all intents and purposes, in India, as much General Officers, and entitled to superior commands as such, equally as if they had been gazetted by H.M.'s brevet.

It will, therefore, I trust, be now admitted that Maj.-Gen. Nott, of the Bengal Army, has not been slightly or unjustly treated by being left in command of a Bengal brigade, while Maj. Gen. Willshire, an older soldier by many years, an older Lieut.-Colonel by many years, and, par consequence, a senior General Officer, is placed in command of the Bombay division, with which he has served for many years, and with which he has marched from Bombay to Candahar. Believe me, Gentlemen, this is no dispute between Queen's and Company's, but a just and legitimate arrangement; and it is very much to be lamented that Sir J. Keane should not have had the candour to state the case fairly and openly to the force he commands, instead of shirking the question and trying to lay blame on the Governor-General, by quoting a private letter from Lord Auckland.

That the Bengal Army should feel mortified that one of their officers should not happen to be at the head of a Bengal division, is by no means unreasonable; but Sir J. Keane is not to blame for this. The original error, if any, was in sending a Maj.-General of H.M. service, an officer too certainly not of first rate ability, in command of the Bengal division from Ferozepore, when there was a Bengal officer on the spot, Gen. Duncan, every way suited for such command. The only reasonable plea for such nomination of Sir W. Cotton, in preference to Gen. Duncan, was that he was senior to Gen. Duncan, and that Sir H. Fane's rule is understood, most emphatically urged on the Governor-General that, on such an occasion as that to Candahar, seniority ought to have its full weight. Gen. Cotton, moreover, had some public claims on Government, for he commanded the Madras troops throughout the Burmese war, had received the thanks of the Government of India for those services, and had been honoured by his Sovereign with the Order of the Guelphs, and subsequently with the Commandery of the Bath. It is, therefore, rather to all fortune than to all respect that the Bengal Army is indebted for its vexatious position in having its only army in the field not commanded by one of its own officers.

I am, &c.

Literary Notices.

Oriental Outlines; or, a Rambler's Recollections of a Tour in Turkey, Greece, and Tuscany, in 1836. By William Knight.

GOT up in a very pretty style, with a map and a vignette title-page, this is altogether an exceedingly pretty little volume. It is dedicated "to the Members of the Royal Western Yacht Club, of Plymouth and Limerick," and may serve as a useful guide to them as well as to others. It is written with good feeling throughout—presents many agreeable classical recollections—and, without the slightest pretension, conveys much pleasant information in an easy off-hand manner. It should be added, too, that the opinion expressed of the Turks is exceedingly liberal. We like this much, for we believe the character given to be deserved:—

"Of the Turks, I have, as a nation, the highest opinion, both for valour and honesty, for hospitality and domestic affection. They have invariably treated me with kindness, in their castles, their tents, and their cottages; and, weak though be my arm, I feel pleasure in admitting that I should never shrink from wielding a sabre in defence of the standard of the Prophet, against any and every country but my own and its possessions, should fate ever favour me with an opportunity. Were I, this very instant, to be put to the proof, and called upon to name time and foe, I should in one reply, 'Against the Muscovites, and now!'"

We are anxious to promote the benevolent views of the writer:—

"One person wandering through the crowd I must not forget. He was employed in the anti oriental occupation of a shoe-black, I refer to him, that future travellers may not remain ignorant of the man's being the grandson of an individual who, for many years, was British Consul in the Dardanelles. The family are now in the deepest distress; and few, who are aware of the hospitality once extended to Englishmen, when the Tarraganos were employed under the protection of the British flag,—which, in troublous times, ere the Faithful were so friendly with the Frank, they successfully upheld in honour so far as civil officers could do, few who are aware of what this family then was, will pass through Tchanak Kaleh, and not endeavour to better their present condition. Many will feel bound to do so, as a return for kindness experienced by their kinsmen from those of the family whom the grave now shelters from the fate of the survivors. Lord Palmerston should be petitioned to grant them a thousand piastres—ten pounds—per annum. During his long services to the state, he must have seen hundreds of pensions less deservedly bestowed. The name of Tarragano is mentioned in many works. In 'A Journey in Asia Minor, in 1801, by Dr. Hunt and Professor Carlyle,' which may be found at p. 390 of 'Dodsley's Memoirs relating to European and Asiatic Turkey;' in the quarto edition of 1812, Dr. Hunt says, 'Here we lodged at the hospitable Tarragano, whose family has held the consulship of England for a long series of years.' This was in 1801; and in 1810 Lord Byron writes: 'Our consul, Tarragano, tried to dissuade us from the attempt of swimming across the Helle-pont.' I might easily quote more, yet I hope this brief statement may prove sufficient for the purpose for which it is intended."

The author need hardly to have made the following apology. However, to those whom it may more immediately concern, we request a serious consideration of the second paragraph given below:—

"Yet must I now pass on to other scenes, leaving much untold, and even that set down in these few pages clad in such common language, that I know not what apology to offer, for my glaring imperfections of style in this brief and uninteresting record of what has passed under my own observation in the East, other than a promise too hastily made to pen my 'recollections,' the fulfilment of which, notwithstanding my weak state of health, I feel myself bound to attempt, whatever may be the consequence.

"But before I quit Constantinople, let me not omit to refer to one subject which touches my own countrymen. Whatever may be a man's station or colour—I hope every Englishman is sufficiently alive to the feelings of humanity to endeavour, whenever he has an opportunity, to better the condition of a fellow-mortal. I therefore call with confidence upon every British traveller into whose hands this humble volume may fall, to visit—if he touch at Constantinople—the ENGLISH HOSPITAL. Far be it from me to say who is to blame; but I fearlessly assert that this establishment in the Turkish capital is a disgrace to the British nation! It was in 1836 and 1837—little better than a dog-kennel; and I thereon, during the winter of the latter year, I saw the shipwrecked crews of the Lyra, Tyne, and Midas—three English merchantmen lost in the Black Sea, shivering with cold, badly fed, scarcely covered with decent clothing, and almost without beds, when the snow was some feet deep in many parts of the capital. I visited this 'hospital' not alone, and can by witnesses substantiate, if necessary, more than I have set down. I, however, despair not of seeing an improvement in such matters, if travellers will regard the 'English Hospital at Constantinople' as one of the 'lions' of the city, and make a point of visiting the establishment. Other nations are not so careless of their seamen, the French and Austrians especially. Their hospitals require no 'reform!'"

Encyclopædia of Rural Sports. By D. P. Blane, Longman and Co.

WE have read with much gratification this first Part of a publication full of the most interesting information, not only to all who are partial to field sports, but to every lover of natural history. There is not a page without useful information, and the work promises to be the most comprehensive record of rural sports, and their connection with the animal creation, ever presented to the public. The Part before us contains the origin, progress, and present state of field sports, and, therefore, commences with the rude and curious methods employed in the capture of animals by the primitive races of mankind. The wood engravings are most numerous, and extremely spirited and characteristic.

The German Self-Teacher. By Henry Meidenger. Whittaker and Co.

THIS little book is calculated to fulfil its object—to be a self-instructor for Englishmen, and more particularly for English tourists. The classified vocabulary of words and phrases is well selected and arranged, and we recommend the book to every one proposing to make a German tour.

Heads of the People. R. Tyas.

A VOLUME of this clever and very entertaining work is now completed. We have, in the last issue, the "Hangman," "Farmer's Daughter," "Printer's Devil," "Exciseman," "Apothecary," and "Cabinet Ministers." These classes of society are cleverly sketched by popular writers. Mr. Jerrold's papers in particular are most excellent, and we could not speak in too high terms of the characteristic illustrations; in fact the publication is as good as it is extremely cheap.

Shaw Battles.—A general exercise is, in fact, a strict rehearsal of a battle, so far as adopting every precaution necessary for that event, in order to familiarise the men with their work, and to prevent confusion when it really occurs. We have known it to assimilate so closely to the real thing, as to have persons directed to fall and represent wounded men, whilst others carried them down to the cock-pit; we do not recollect whether the Surgeon furthered the matter by going through the forms of an operation, but we have seen the late Admiral Macnamara Russell, commonly called Paddy Russell, act the part of a wounded hero to admiration. When commanding the North-Sea fleet, about the year 1808, this eccentric old officer was fond of exhibiting in the person of himself and others, by way of example. He would fall down on the deck, in the middle of an exercise, calling out, "Oh, I am hit, boys! I fear my leg is off. Carry me to the doctor, my children!" On which his coxswain, and three marines, to whom the care of the Admiral under such circumstances was delegated, immediately conveyed him to the cock-pit. When arrived, and the Surgeon step forward to tender prompt assistance, he would exclaim, "Not out of my turn, Doctor dear; attend to these brave fellows first, but just let your mate clap a tourniquet* on my thigh, for I am fainting, Doctor, by reason of the hemorrhage. A drop of water, for the love of God!" Although it is not usual to carry matters to this extreme at general exercise, still every material point is rehearsed, and the ship is kept in such a state of preparation, as that ten or fifteen minutes shall suffice, even in the middle of the night, from the moment the alarm is given until every thing is ready, and the first broadside fired. The stores are all kept in the neighbourhood of the guns, and the principal preparations consist in taking down the bulkheads, and clearing the officers' cabins, arranging the mess tables in the cable tiers to receive the wounded men, slinging the yards, and securing the corners by which the sails are distended with chains, placing fire-screens, made of thick woollen substance, around the hatchway, through which the supply of powder passes to the several decks from the magazines, &c.; but no persons are especially appointed to all these duties, it is almost incredible in what a short time they are accomplished; and when any anticipation of meeting an enemy suddenly is entertained, and some precautionary measures adopted, such as substituting screens for bulkheads, a well-disciplined ship will be ready for action in five minutes from the time the drum beats to quarter.—London Saturday Journal.

* Tourniquets are screw bandages used for stopping the blood, and they are distributed about the quarters, and a number of men taught to apply them. A handkerchief and broomstick is sometimes substituted.

NOTICE.—The adjourned GENERAL MEETING of the Members of this Institution, and of Officers wishing to become Members, will take place at the Office of the Institution, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 16th inst., at One o'clock.

Admiral the Right Hon. Sir GEORGE COCKBURN, G.C.B., &c. in the Chair.

The attendance of every Officer interested in the welfare of the Widows and Orphans of the United Service is particularly and especially requested. HENRY KERR, Hon. Sec.

Office of the Institution,
Carlton Chambers, 8, Regent-street.

61, Cornhill, and 207, Tooley-street.

JOHN CARTER, CHRONOMETER-

MAKER TO THE ROYAL NAVY, in compliance with the wishes of his numerous friends, begs to inform them that he has opened a City Establishment for the sale of his Marine TIME PIECES, at No. 61, CORNHILL, where Merchants, Captains, and other scientific men, may always meet with Chronometers, Clocks, and Watches of the same sterling quality as those which have called forth from the Astronomer-Royal the following important certificate:—

"Royal Observatory, Greenwich, Oct. 22, 1838.

"I certify that since the commencement of the annual trials of Chronometers at the Royal Observatory, in competition for rewards offered by the Government for the best Chronometers, Mr. Carter, Chronometer-maker, of Tooley-street, has obtained a greater number of rewards than any other Chronometer-maker, and that he obtained the two last rewards given by the Government.

"I certify also, that since I have had charge of the Royal Observatory, several Chronometers constructed by Mr. Carter, either belonging to the Royal Navy, or on trial for purchase by the Government, have been rated at the Royal Observatory, and that they have generally been extremely good. (signed)

"G. B. AIRY."

Chronometers carefully adjusted, timed, and rated.—61, Cornhill.

FOR DUST or RAIN.—Gentlemen will find the MOHAIR CAMLOMERE the best repellent ever invented for summer showers or dust, when properly made up into Capes, Frocks, Great Coats, or Cloaks. It is very light, wears clean and long, and will turn more rain than any other waterproof that does not confine perspiration, hangs well, and will not crackle with the wet, and has no unpleasant smell. It is made in all colours, like cloth, and is only to be seen in the whole piece, or made up at the manufacturers, PAYNE and CO. (late Fox), 28, King-street, Covent-Garden, the Patentees of Gambroon, now so fashionable. A large assortment is manufactured extra stout, for riding-coats. They are warranted to wash well and not shrink, as well as their Mohair Cloth, the greatest repellent to dirt ever invented. They are all stamped "Fox's Patent," no others are genuine. Travelling Cloaks, Frocks, and Capes always ready of various kinds.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling fatal and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 13s. each.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.

By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the KALYDOR. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its SPECIFIC QUALITIES, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all harshness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in RED, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards—On Tuesday last, as Cornet Lovell, was shooting with a party of brother-officers at the Red House, Battersea, while leaning his gun on a bench, it slipped, and the charge passed through his left arm, which was obliged to be immediately amputated. Mr. Lovell is in his eighteenth year, and has only joined his regiment a month.

4th Drag. Guards—Cornet T. G. Symonds is on leave to 31st Dec.

2d Dragoons—Cornet M. W. V. Milbank, Scots Greys, and Lieut. H. M. Drummond, 42d Highlanders, returning from a shooting-party on the evening of the 9th inst., encountered an awkward accident. A carman, with a heavy load of timber, dashed in upon their vehicle, a light inside car, and one of the beams struck Mr. Milbank a violent blow on the head, which caused immediate effusion of blood, and with great difficulty both officers could extricate themselves from the dangerous position in which they were placed. The driver was brought up at the police office next morning, and fined 20s. for carrying the timber beyond the length of his car, and 5s. for keeping the wrong side of the road. Col. Lord Sandys, who has been on a visit with his old corps, after inspecting the troop under the command of Captain Macquarie, with his usual liberality, left 10l. to provide a good dinner for the troop. The route for Captain Macquarie's troop to join the squadron at Cahir, was received at Limerick on the 16th, and they left the garrison at two o'clock, halting in Cashel at night. The band of the 42d played their gallant countrymen out of town, to the national tune—"Here's a health to them that's awa."

Horse Guards—The General Commanding-in-Chief has granted permission to Capt. T. W. M'Mahon to accompany his father, Lt.-Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon, to Bombay.

11th Light Dragoons—The long-talked of review by the Duke of Wellington took place on Wednesday, in the military field behind the barracks in Canterbury. His Grace arrived on the ground about eleven; the field was crowded with spectators. No serious accident occurred, but three of the privates were thrown from their horses in a charge, and narrowly escaped injury. The Duke, after the review, rode on horseback through the streets, attended by the Earl of Cardigan and his lady, and several Aides-de-Camp. He looked remarkably well, and he wore the dress of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports.

We understand that an order has been received from the Horse Guards, by the Colonel of this regiment, by which all field exercise is suspended till the spring. On Wednesday the regiment went through their manœuvres for the last time this season. On Thursday morning a private of this regiment, who was flogged a few weeks since for theft, was drummed out of the regiment. The sight was a curious one. The regiment forming two lines to the gate, the culprit was marched through the lines, preceded by the band, playing the "Rogue's March," having two large placards suspended on his breast and back, on which was written the word "thief." On his arrival at the gate he was expelled, his jacket being turned with the inside outward. A number of persons witnessed the ceremony.—Canterbury Journal.

17th Lancers—1 troop, 2 off., 2 Serj., 1 F., and 30 r. and f., from Dublin to Athlone, Oct. 14 to 18. 1 troop, 2 off., 2 Serj., 1 F., and 30 r. and f., from Dublin to Dundalk, Oct. 14 to 16. The troop from Monaghan to Longford, Oct. 18 to 22. Lieut.-Col. Pratt, on leave, shortly retires from the Army. The 17th are detached at Dundalk, Athlone, and Longford. Head-quarters in Dublin is only to comprise one squadron under Major St. Quinton.

INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 1st Batt.—Lieut.-Col. G. Knox is on leave to June next.

2d—This reg. has suffered severely in its march towards Cabool; and report says, that a very large number of the men must be sent home as invalids.

3d Depot—Ens. Hope has joined at Chatham. Lord Hill has presented a commission to the son of Ens. Flood.

5th—See 60th, 1st Batt.

5th Depot—were inspected by Maj.-Gen. Sir W. P. Carroll, in Galway Barracks, on the 7th and 8th inst., in heavy marching order, and in the field, and who expressed himself highly pleased with everything connected with the Depot, particularly their light drill. Sir William dined with the officers, when a large party was invited to meet him.

6th—Lieut. Mansergh has arrived at Sydney. The history of this regiment is now ready for publication, by Mr. Cannon, and few of his histories contain more interesting matter. It has been very remarkably connected with the support of Protestant principles in Church and State; and its early history is exceedingly interesting, even to the general reader.

7th—Lieut. Maclaine has been victimised by a set of gamblers in Ireland, and to whom he has given his bond for 1700l.

13th Depot—Ensign Scott and Stapleton, with 84 men, are to embark in the Catherine for Bombay about Nov. 5.

16th Depot—The depot comp. is ordered to join at Chatham, and the 3 cos. to embark to join the others ordered to India. The Rattlesnake tr.-ship, now in the river, will proceed thence to the Cape of Good Hope, Mauritius, and East Indies. It is expected that she will take out this depot.

20th—The tedious Court-Martial on Assist.-Surg. Foulis is at an end, and we expect the result to be an admonition on one of the charges. This officer has been nearly four months in arrest.

22d—Major Pennefather succeeds, by purchase, to the Colonelcy, Lieut.-Colonel Falconar retiring, after a service of 43 years.

23d Depot—were inspected on the 9th and 10th inst., by Maj.-Gen. Sir W. P. Carroll.

25th—Maj.-Gen. Ellice made his half-yearly inspection of the service and depot cos. at Devonport, on 7th inst. After a minute examination into the interior economy of the corps, books, &c., the battalion passed in review order, officers saluting, and concluded by going through a variety of evolutions highly creditable to this distinguished regiment, which called forth the unqualified approbation of the Maj.-General, who expressed himself in the highest terms of praise to both officers and men. The service cos. embark for the Cape in the Apollo tr.-ship.

27th—Lieut. A. V. Watson has returned from the Cape of Hope, and is about to join the depot. He is a near relative of the respectable proprietor of the Limerick Chronicle.

27th Depot—H.M.S. Athol, from Gravesend, having on board this depot, consisting of 1 Field Officer, 2 Capts., 5 Subs., 1 Staff, 8 Serj., 4 Drummers, and 172 r. and f., arrived at Cove on the 7th inst., and the troops have been disembarked. The two horses belonging to the mounted officers of the depot, died at sea. The depot, after being inspected by Major-Gen. L'Estrange, moved to Wexford and New Ross 30th Depot—from Belfast to Newry, instead of [illegible], Oct. 10 to 12.

31st—Ens. T. H. Plasket has arrived at Sydney.

34th—By the last accounts the reg. is suffering severely from ague.

35th Depot—Lieut. Harding exchanges into the 45th. Lieut. English, who has returned from foreign service, succeeds Lieut. Chatterton as Acting Adjutant.

38th—The 3 cos. from Newry to Belfast, Oct. 14 to 16. The 2 cos. from Dundalk to do., instead of Newry, Oct. 16 to 19.

39th Depot—31 persons to embark in the Harrison, for Madras, on 26th inst.

42d—The Commanding Officer, at the request of the Mayor of Limerick, has directed that the red deer of the corps, which usually followed the band, be confined the barracks, as a country gentleman was knocked down by the animal in George's-street recently. The Dublin Monitor states that Sir F. W. Dunbar is on the eve of retiring from the service.

44th—Lieut. J. C. L. Carter has proceeded to the Continent on leave.

45th—Windsor, Monday Evening.—Such, we are informed, was the general feeling at the Castle, respecting the negligence (to use the mildest term) of the sentinel on duty, in suffering such an outrage (the breaking with stones in the night of some panes of glass in the Queen's private sitting-room) to have been perpetrated without his having the least knowledge of the fact of its committal that a company of the 2d Reg. of Life Guards, from the House Barracks at Spittal, were ordered to mount guard at the Castle until the arrival of the 2d Rifle Brigade on the following day. There was a report that the Queen had given cause of dissatisfaction to the regiment, in consequence of Her Majesty not having (as had been long expected), before the 45th quitted their quarters at Windsor, presented them with the new colours, which had been in the town during the last four months; and it has been attempted to be shown that, as the soldiers on duty heard no noise (although some considerable noise must have been occasioned, and easily heard it made during the stillness of the night), the sentinels themselves must have been in some measure privy to the outrage. We are happy, however, to state that this report has been hazarded without foundation.

47th Depot—1 comp. and head-qrs., leaving 1 comp. and 50 r. and f., from Bekurbet to Enniskillen, Oct. 14 to 15. 1 comp. and 50 r. and f. from Cavan to Omagh, Oct. 14 to 17. The remainder of the detachment, leaving 50 r. and f., from Cavan to Enniskillen, Oct. 14 to 15.

48th Depot—The inspection at Templemore, by Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Macbean, passed off remarkably well, every thing connected with the economy and discipline of that hand some corps being found regular and soldierlike. Sir William expressed his best approbation of the appearance of the men, their marching and steadiness under arms. The Major-General dined at the Officers' mess.

49th—Sir Gordon Drummond served in Holland in 1794 and 95 and was present in Nimeguen during the siege, and at the sortie. Embarked from Minorca in 1800, on the expedition to Egypt, and was present in the engagements of the 13th and 21st March. In the battle of Rhamania, and at the surrender of Grand Cairo and Alexandria. Sir Gordon commanded in the action near the Falls of Niagara, where he was severely wounded.—Col. Bartley served in the American war, including the action at Fort Erie. Fort George, 25th and 27th May; Stoney Creek, Fort George, 25th Aug., 13; and Chrystler's Farm, where he was severely wounded.—Col. Morris served in the American war, including the action at Stoney Creek.—Maj. Stephens accompanied the expedition to Walcheren, and was present at the siege of Flushing. Served in the Peninsula from March, 1810, to the end of the war, including the battle of Busaco, siege of Almeida, battle of Fuentes d'Onor, storming the Forts at and battle of Salamanca (severely wounded through the thigh), siege of Burgos, action of Cabecon, battle of Vittoria, blockade of Pampeluna, battles of the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse, besides many other minor actions and skirmishes.—Capt. Bean's services.—Campaign of 1799 in Holland, including the action at the landing, and battle of Egmont-op-Zee. Expedition to Copenhagen in 1801. Served during the war in North America in 1812, 13, and 14, and was wounded at Stoney Creek.—Capt. Pasley served at the siege of Hattras in 1817, and siege of Asseerghur in 1819.—Col. Wilkinson served at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope in 1806, and in the Peninsula from Aug. 1813, to Dec. 1813, including the battle of the Nive, where he was severely wounded, and to which battle he has received a medal.—Capt. Mac Andrew served in the Peninsula and France, in the 27th Reg., including the battles of the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, besides various affairs of outposts, &c.—Lieut. Gibbons served in the Peninsula from Sept. 1811, until the end of the war, including the battle of Salamanca; capture of the French rear guard, 23d July, 1812; capture of Madrid and Valladolid; siege of Burgos; battles of the Pyrenees, 28th, 29th, and 30th July; Maya Pass; battle of the Nive, 9th and 10th Dec.; blockade of Bayonne; battle of Orthes; affairs of Vic and Tarbes.—Dr. French served in the Peninsula from May, 1812, to the end of the war, including the battles of Salamanca and Vittoria; siege of San Sebastian, and battle of the Nive. Served in the American war at Bladensburgh, Washington, Baltimore, and New Orleans.

51st Depot—A detachment of 40 to embark in about a fortnight in the boy convict-ship Runnymede, for Van Diemen's Land. Captain Foreman and Ensign Harris to accompany them. Also 11 privates from the 51st and 10 privates from other corps serving in Australia, to embark at Deptford about the same date in the Mangle convict-ship, for New South Wales. Brevet-Major Serjeantson and Ensign Grimes, of the 50th reg., to accompany them.

52d Depot—The detachment from Omagh to Monaghan, Oct. 17 to 18.

53d Depot—Lieut. and Adj. W. Fellows and Capt. A. F. Bond are on leave.

54th—The reg. is to come home as soon as the order sent out by last mail reaches Madras.

56th—Surgeon Neill from the service cos., is ordered to join the depot, to be replaced by Assist.-Surg. Campbell.

57th Depot—70 persons to embark in the Harrison, for Madras, on 26th inst.

59th Depot—have been inspected by Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Maclean in Nenagh Barracks.

60th 1st Batt.—The three cos. at Santa Maura have left for Vido, Corfu, having been relieved by three cos. 5th, from the latter station. Hd.-qrs. of the 1st Batt. return to Corfu, in April, from Zante, being relieved by the 2d Batt.

61st Depot—Assist.-Surg. Annesley has left Chatham for Cork. This is the strongest officered depot in the service.

62d Depot—18 persons to embark in the Harrison, for Madras, on 26th inst.

63d Depot—24 persons to embark in the Harrison, for Madras, on 26th inst.

65th—Lt. St. Leger Barry is on leave.

68th Depot—Capt. Macbeath is ordered to Jamaica.

73rd—See 85th regiment.

73d Depot—Lieut. O'Connell on leave to 29th November.

74th—The service cos. under Col. Mein, at St. James's, Trinidad, were in good health on 14th ult.

76th Depot—Lieut.-Col. Clarke and a large draft leave Enniskillen in a few days for Demerara. Capt. Lloyd is Acting Paymaster.

78th—The regiment was reviewed on the 10th inst. on Bruntsfield Links, by Lord Greenock, in presence of the largest number of spectators brought together by a similar cause for a long period. The corps went through various movements in a manner to command admiration, and received from the Reviewing Officer the praise it so deservedly merited. When it is borne in mind that upwards of 300 of the regiment have joined since its return to Europe in Feb. 1838, and that many of them never before discharged a shot at a review, their file-firing and general steadiness proved that both officers and men have done their duty in the arduous labour of drilling. The appearance of the regiment, when drawn up in line, was truly grand,—a finer body of men never appeared on Bruntsfield Links.

81st—Paymaster A. Thompson has obtained six months leave. This officer has been 41 years in the service on full pay.

84th—A new set of colours were consecrated by the Rev. Mr Caulfield (in the absence, from illness, of the Chaplain), in presence of the 84th Reg., under arms in the Barrack square at Kilkenny, on 11th inst., and were presented to the regiment by Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Maclean, K.C.B.

The regiment advanced in line from its parade-ground, until it reached the centre of the barrack-square, where it was formed into a hollow square by the Colonel, the large drum of the regiment being placed as an altar in the centre, with the new colours laid upon it. Upon intimation from the General, when the square was complete, and the men under sloped-arms, the Rev. Clergyman commenced a solemn and beautiful address to the regiment at large, exhorting them to perform their duty to their Queen and country with that spirit of truth and sobriety which ever, upon home and foreign service, so proudly marks the distinction between the British soldier and the foreign troops, and to which alone the mighty deeds of arms, which have raised our country so high in the scale of nations, is mainly to be attributed, concluding with a beautiful appeal to that Almighty God, whose Minister he was, to shed a blessing upon the colours and the regiment; and praying that the consecrated banner about to be delivered to them upon that day, would prove a stimulant to their hearts to defend their colours from the degrading grasp of an enemy's hand, and to remind them that they fought not only under the banner of their country, but likewise under the banner of that Almighty Saviour who shed his precious blood upon the cross to redeem them and all mankind. The colours being consecrated, Maj.-Gen. Sir William Maclean advanced to the centre of the square, and calling upon the men to remember the address of the Rev. Clergyman, he recapitulated, in as brief a manner as time would permit, the history of the corps. He reminded them that the regiment was raised in '93—that from that period up to the present time, it had only been eight years at home—that this was not the first time he had had the pleasure of meeting them—he had met them in the field. He pointed out to them the glorious records of their prowess, emblazoned on their colours—deeds of glory purchased on the field of battle by the blood of their comrades—won from an enemy considered at that period the haughtiest foe in Europe, and transmitted to their sacred keeping as an heir-loom from their fallen brothers, who, whether under the scorching sun of India, or on the plains of the Peninsula, unfurled their standard in the teeth of the enemy, and never rested until it had advanced in victory either on the stockade of the discomfited Indian, or been planted on the hard-fought ground of the defeated Gaul. Discipline alone, my lads, said the General, has done this—discipline alone can write again with the finger of fame, some new-won honour upon these banners which I am about to consign to your care. Respect to your oath—that oath taken by every soldier to his Queen, is one of your principal duties; and remember it is not enough to fight—for that is the smallest portion of a British soldier's duty—you must still to mind the discipline and duty you owe your superior officers; without that an army becomes a disorganised force, and often, in time of war, a greater hindrance to its chiefs than benefit to its country. I shall detain you no longer. The Rev. Clergyman has besought a blessing upon your colours and your regiment; and when the words Nive, India, and Peninsula, meet your eyes, let those glorious proofs of your regiment's bravery be an incitement to obtain other additional trophies, should you be so fortunate as to serve again in the presence of an enemy. And remember your General's advice, that without discipline you can never obtain distinction in the field, or respect from your fellow-countrymen at home.—After this short and soldier-like address (at least as well as we can recollect), Sir William Maclean presented the new colours to Ens. Campbell and Mills, with a solemn injunction to preserve them faithfully and honourably, sans peur et sans reproche. The old colours which, up to this moment, occupied their proper place in the centre of the regiment, were marched off, under a guard of honour, commanded by Captain Clarke, and lodged in the Colonel's quarters, the band playing the "British Grenadiers" The regiment then broke into line, the new colours remaining with the Ensigns at the altar until the return of the guard, when they were marched from their position by the left of the line to their proper place of destination, the drums playing the "Grenadier's March," and the regiment presenting arms. The 84th were then formed into open column of six companies, right in front, and marched past in slow and quick time, and afterwards dismissed, the day becoming wet. After the ceremony was over, the Colonel and officers gave a splendid déjeuné to the ladies of the regiment and their friends, who honoured them with their presence on the occasion. The officers entertained the General, and all the officers forming the garrison, at dinner; and Mrs. Maclean, the Colonel's lady, gave a splendid ball and supper in the evening, where every delicacy of the season was spread in profusion on her hospitable board, and dancing was kept up until late the following morning. The privates of the regiment were entertained with a plentiful supply of plum-pudding and XXX, and the Serjeants gave a handsome dinner to the Scots Greys in their quarters in the barracks.

85th—The head-quarters and four companies marched into London, U. C., on 5th Sept. Log huts were built for the men, and the officers were located in lodgings in the town, in which is also quartered a squadron of Volunteer Cavalry, and a demi-battery of the Royal Artillery, as well as the 73rd reg. London is the central military post of the Western District, which is under the command of Colonel Love, of the 73rd regiment. This corps is suffering seriously from ague.

90th Depot.—A detachment of 150 men, from Dover, has marched into Canterbury, on route to Gravesend, for embarkation in the Rattlesnake for Ceylon. This detachment, unfortunately, will leave a number of married women and children behind, as, from a greater number than the proper complement going out with the reg., no more women are to embark but as vacancies occur. This presses heavily on not a few. Some Serjeants have grown-up children who will be thrown on the world rather early for their comfort. These are cases in which economy and the rules of the service might, without injury to the chances of the country, be relaxed in their favour, as it is doubtful whether it would not be advisable, where a reg. is at a station, and that one whose next step is India, to incur rather the trifling additional expense of embarking the families, to sending them home, and thus secure them from starvation.

92d Depot—Bt.-Major Forbes takes the command at Birr, on the promotion of Major, now Lieut.-Col., Rose.

94th—Maj. Milner is in command of the reg. at Cannanore. Col. Paty commands at Malabar Canaree. Capt. Hart is on leave at Madras, Lieut. Jones at Trichinopoly, and Lieut. Longworth has gone to the Neilgherrie hills for the benefit of his health. The corps lost but one man in India since leaving Ceylon, where they buried six rank and file. This reg., now in India, is to be augmented forthwith, and the cos. are ordered to embark immediately for Bombay, leaving one depot comp. at Chatham.

94th Depot—Brev.-Major Lindsay, Capt. Cotton, Lieut. Dore, Ens. Bruce, Assist.-Surg. Moore, 4 Serj., 2 Drs., and 102 r. and f., are ordered to embark in the Persia for Madras on the 19th, but it may be the 21st. Capt. M'Cleverty is on leave for six months, to commence from the embarkation of his depot. Lt. Lewis, Ens. Mahon, Ens. Esterick, 4 Serj., and 80 r. and f., embark in the Harrison, for Madras, on 26th inst.

95th—Ens. Richard Roney has got a month's leave.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Colonel Brown and Major Stevenson had the honour of dining with the Queen on Thursday. Colour-Sergeant Evans has been left in Woolwich to await the arrival of a young deer from the Highlands of Scotland, which has been presented to Colonel Brown by the Duke of Richmond, and which is intended to walk in front of the regiment.

1st West India Reg.—The detachment of this reg., who have been at Chatham some weeks, 2 Serj. and 7 r. and f., embarked at Gravesend on Tuesday for the Christiana freight-ship, lying in the W. I. Docks, to proceed to Sierra Leone.

2d West India Reg.—Hd.-qrs. have arrived at Spanishtown, Jamaica.

Prov. Batt.—Surg. Piper is on leave to Nov. 14.

Royal Artillery.—Major C. Blachley's troop, Rl. Horse Artillery, and the detachment of the Rocket Troop, which were some time since sent to the Northern District, in consequence of the Chartist Riots, are under orders to return to Woolwich. Majors Gordon and Hardinge's companies, 3d battalion, embarked on board H.M. troopship Rattlesnake at 8 A.M. on Thursday, the 17th, for Ceylon. The following are the names of the [illegible]

Admiral Fleeming visited Greenwich hospital on Tuesday.

Admiral Sir Thomas Williams is the Flag-Officer who has so humanely interested himself in behalf of that important and interesting portion of the Naval family, the daughters of his poor brother officers, by continuing [illegible]

Garrison Orders, Oct. 15, 1839.—Lord Bloomfield having obtained leave of absence, the command of the garrison devolves upon Col. Parker, C.B., Rl. Horse Art., commencing this day. Col. Paterson will assume the command of the Royal Artillery during the absence of Lt.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield.

G. O., Oct. 11, 1839.—Serj. William Elliott, of the 8th batt., is appointed Staff-Serjeant to the company of Gentlemen Cadets, vice Linsey, pensioned, dated 9th Oct., 1839.

J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col. A. A. Gen.

Engineers.—Col. Cunninghame is appointed to survey the proposed lines of railroad from Birmingham to Glasgow and Edinburgh.—Lieut. Botsler and Lieut. Durnford will shortly leave Limerick for the Kerry Ordnance Survey,—the former to be stationed at Killarney, the other at Tralee.

Yeomanry.—The Rl. 1st Devon Yeomanry Cavalry went on permanent duty on Wednesday se'nnight for eight days training and exercise, at Exmouth, and on Tuesday the regiment underwent a minute inspection, and were reviewed on Woodbury Common by Lieut.-Col. Stisted. Col. Lord Rolle was on the ground in uniform, and the appearance and manœuvres of the regiment called forth the approbation of the Inspecting Field Officer, and all who saw them.

Lord Hill has directed a Court of Inquiry to sit at Cork Barracks, to investigate the circumstances connected with the escape of four regular desperadoes from the Military prison : they were under sentence of a Court-Martial. It is supposed that one or more of them was concerned in the murder of Police-Serjeant Lawlor, which occurred immediately after their escape.

Colonel Considine, of the British Army, who, with the consent of Government, has been some time at the head of Military affairs in the Regency of Tunis, has thrown up his appointment with disgust, clearly foreseeing that the French, who are acting in an underhanded way, with a view of adding that part of the Barbary coast to their African acquisitions, will most assuredly succeed. Lieut. Smart, 53d, A.D.C. to the Colonel, has arrived already at Malta.

Major-Gen. L'Estrange, commanding the Southern District, Ireland, assisted by Col. Turner, A.A.G., and Colonel Bainbrigge, A.Q.M.G., has made his half-yearly inspection of the troops in Cork garrison, consisting of one troop of the Scots Greys, the 7th Rl. Fusiliers, 61st and 68th Depots. He has also inspected the various barrack departments, and expressed himself highly gratified with the general appearance of both garrison and troops.

Major-Generals Sir William G. Davy and Sir Alexander Leith are placed on the list of General Officers receiving rewards for distinguished services during the war.

Major Boucher is appointed Lieut.-Col. 2d Battalion Lower Canada Militia.

The cavalry barracks of Gort are without troops, though a most central and desirable position for a military force.

Changes in the Recruiting Parties in Ireland :—18th Nenagh to Limerick; 59th Ennis to Limerick; 74th Kilmallock to Newmarket-on-Fergus; and 88th Scariff to Woodford.

It is said that a Provisional Battalion is to be formed at Plymouth, and another at Portsmouth.

Ordnance Survey of Ireland.—Since the commencement of this great national undertaking it has not been so seriously interrupted by the severity of the weather as during the present season. The valleys and lands, through which rivers run, have been overflowed; and the constant heavy rains have elsewhere unavoidably delayed the daily work of the surveyors and those employed on the duties of the survey.

The Board of Ordnance have, by a recent order, allowed the extra stabling at Chatham to be let to officers not entitled to stables, at the rate of 1s. per week, instead of 1s. 6d.

The Shah of Persia appears to have solicited the King of the French to send him some of the most active officers in the French service, to supply the place of Colonel Wilbraham and other English officers and non-commissioned officers who left the Persian service some months ago. Several such officers passed through Malta on their way to Persia, under the company of Hussein Khan, Ambassador to France and England, but in which latter country, owing to existing differences, the Government refused to receive him, and on which account no honours were shown to him by the authorities at Malta.

We regret to learn the death of Captain Mackinnon, Barrack Master, Stoney Hill, occasioned, we understand, by an injury received from a fall. We further regret that the circumstance is likely to occupy the gentlemen of the long-robe—no report of the accident, or the death in consequence of that accident, having been sent to the Coroner.—Jamaica Times.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR LIONEL SMITH.—It appears from the Jamaica papers that addresses continued to pour in from the dissenting, as well as other bodies, to this officer

FROM TUESDAY'S GAZETTE.

Yorkshire Hussar Reg. of Yeomanry Cavalry—W. Beckett, Esq. to be Lieut.-Col., v. York, resigned. Hon. Henry Lascelles to be Maj., v. Beckett, promoted. Harry Stephen Thompson, Esq., to be Capt., v. Lascelles, promoted. John George Smyth, Esq., v. Thompson, promoted. Henry Willoughby, Esq. to be Lieut., v. Smyth, promoted.

[illegible] arrived at Galway on the 6th inst., and inspected the depôt on the 7th and 8th inst.; and then proceeded to Castlebar on the 9th, for the purpose of inspecting the 23d depôt on that day and the 10th, and returned to Athlone on the 11th inst.

The General Court-Martial assembled at Dublin on the 15th July, Lieut.-Col. Darrah, 97th regt., President, is dissolved.

Maj.-Gen. Sir Thomas Pearson, K.C.H., having received leave of absence to proceed to England, Colonel Riddell, Assist. Quartermaster-General, will assume the command of the troops in the Northern District during the Major-General's absence.

Maj.-Gen. Sir William Parker Carroll proceeded on the 13th inst. to Longford, from Athlone, on a tour of half-yearly inspection, where he arrived on the 14th inst. On the 16th he arrived at Sligo, on the 18th at Boyle. This day he will be at Mullingar, and will return to Athlone on the 21st inst.

Maj.-Gen. Sir William Maclean remained at Kilkenny until Tuesday last, when he proceeded to Clonmel on his tour of half-yearly inspection.

The ship Magistrate, which left Gravesend on the 26th of September, is at Plymouth still. The very crowded state of the ship, and the very severe gales she encountered on the 3d and 4th of this month, have rendered the detachment sickly. On the 12th small-pox broke out, and a man of the 17th, who was instantly landed, died on Saturday last. Another man of the 2d has also been landed with small-pox, and there seems to be much infection on board. The ship has been medically surveyed, and Maj.-Gen. Ellice has personally investigated the state of the troops, which he found to be highly creditable to the officers. The crowded state of the men, it is supposed, will cause part of the detachment to be landed. The Magistrate was not taken up by the Board of Admiralty, but by the East India Company.

On Monday evening the officers of the Army and Navy at Plymouth delighted a crowded audience with their performance at the theatre, which was most tastefully and commodiously fitted up.

A General Court-Martial, composed of the following officers as members, assembled in the Royal Artillery messroom on Wednesday, the 16th, for the trial of Gunner and Driver James Pharaoh, of Major Gordon's company, 8th battalion, and Gunner and Driver James Buckley, of Major Whitty's company, 6th battalion :—President, Col. Thomas Paterson, R.A. Members—Lt.-Cols. Whinyates, C.B., K.H., R.H.A.; Bastard, R.A.; Walcott, R.H.A. Majors—Sweeting, R.A.; Sandilands, R.H.A. Capts. Anderson, R.A.; Schalch, R.A.; Rowland, R.A.; Wright, R.A. Lieuts. Bingham, R.A.; Poulden, R.H.A.; Tyler, R.E. Lt.-Col C. Cruttenden, R.A., Acting Dep. Judge Advocate. The Court closed on Thursday, and the result will not be promulgated until the proceedings have been submitted to Her Majesty for her decision.

DUKE OF YORK'S SCHOOL.—The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, accompanied by the Lord Mayor elect, on Thursday week visited the Royal Military School at Chelsea. Colonel Williamson, the Commandant, Luguard, the Adjutant and Secretary, the Chaplain, the Surgeon, and other officers of the establishment, received the company. The boys were examined in both schools by the Chaplain, and they acquitted themselves most admirably. Some of the smaller boys were employed at needle-work, others at shoemaking, tailoring, and a great variety of trades. When a regiment is in want of recruits, a notice, it appears, is placed in the school-rooms, and any boys above fourteen years of age, who may wish to go into the Army, are allowed to join that regiment. For those who prefer trade or other occupations, situations are provided, and if their conduct merit reward, they are, at the end of a certain number of years, upon producing certificates of good behaviour from their employers, publicly rewarded in the chapel of the institution. There is no compulsion upon any to become members of the Military profession. They are principally orphan children, whose fathers have lost their lives in the service of their sovereign, or are on foreign duty, their mothers being dead. There are two bands of music, composed of boys from seven to fourteen years of age. After having been examined in their school, the boys, 350 in number, from five years old to fourteen, all dressed in Military uniform, with their flags flying, drums beating, and full band playing, proceeded to the parade, where they marched in Military order before the party, and saluted as they passed. Col. Williamson then presented to the Lord Mayor a copy of the rules and regulations of the establishment, handsomely bound in gold, together with the return of the children admitted and provided for from the commencement of the institution, and estimate of the expense of clothing each boy per annum, and also of the maintenance of each. Having performed all their evolutions, and the parade having concluded, the boys went through the course of their gymnastic exercises, till the beat of drum summoned them to dinner, after which they again mustered on parade.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY.—A rigorous examination into the conduct of all parties connected with the late extraordinary state of insubordination into which the pupils at this institution have fallen, is still in the course of active prosecution. The following outline may be relied on as being strictly correct. A quarrel, out of which it may be said the whole of the subsequent irregularities arose, took place between two youths named Neill and Dance, a short time since. A duel was got up between them at the instigation of some of the elder Cadets, who thought the opportunity too good to be lost, and a meeting took place, the pistols being previously loaded with powder and horse-dung. In accordance with a previous arrangement entered into between Neill and the seconds, the former, reserving his own fire, fell at the discharge of Dance's pistol, who, on coming up to ascertain the extent of the injury which he supposed he had inflicted, received the contents of Neill's weapon full in the face, thereby having the sight of one of his eyes nearly destroyed. Afraid, it would seem, of the consequences of their disgraceful conduct, the seconds fled to Boulogne, from which place one or two of them, among whom was young Muldmay, finding their funds run short, returned in a day or two, and rejoined the Academy. Since then the Academy has been one continued scene of confusion. The officers have been insulted, and their orders despised, whilst the fact of Mr. Childs having been a second time assaulted, after the example made of his first assailant, is sufficiently indicative of the entire absence of order and discipline amongst these reckless youths. Private dismissals are taking place daily.—Woolwich Paper.

THE DECCAN PRIZE MONEY.—There lately appeared a statement, that a Mrs. Wroughton, whose husband had served in the 34th Foot for 20 years in India, and was upon the eve of obtaining his Majority, after having sustained various serious wounds and been subjected to exceeding ill health, unfortunately sold out before the distribution of the Deccan prize-money had been awarded, in which campaign he had fought and bled. (The delay occasioned in the settlement of this prize allotment reflects disgrace on the managers of the business.) It appeared, also, that Mrs. W. had applied to the East India Company on the subject of her husband's and family's distresses, to which she obtained a very unsatisfactory and unfeeling answer—the chairman observing, that as her husband had sold out previously to the prize-money having been awarded, he could show no manner of claim on the fund. Now, Sir, is this justice? Certainly it is not. The richest company in the universe refuse to relieve a man in distress, from a fund made up from the assets of the territory which he helped to subdue! Why, Sir, but for the services of the body of men, of which he was an officer, they would never have risen at their present state of affluence. The Company are sensible that if they give in one instance they will be virtually compelled to do it in many others. But they fought for it: whilst the allotments were being adjusted it was theirs, though the immediate stipulated sums were not specified. Capt. Wroughton has since died in prison—another blot of shame is indelibly fixed upon the executioners in Leadenhall-street.—Correspondent, Morning Herald.—[The flank cos. of the 34th were in the Mahratta war; but the head-quarters, to which Capt. Wroughton belonged, were in the ceded districts, and consequently not entitled to the Deccan Prize-money.—Ed. N. and M. G.]

How happens it that Col. Patrick Campbell, an efficient, upright, and honourable public officer, who has for many years been Consul-General for Her Majesty in Egypt, brother to the late lamented Major-General Sir Neill Campbell, has been dismissed from a post of such importance? How happens it (which is still more strange) that he should have been superseded by Colonel Hodges?—Times.

PRIVILEGES OF DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.—A question of very great importance to discharged soldiers and their children was decided in the Small Debt Court, Aberdeen, on Thursday week. About two months ago the taxman of the petty customs insisted that the pensioners, who had stalls in Castle-street on Fridays, should pay custom, which they refused to do, as they said they were not liable, being discharged soldiers, and entitled to all the privileges of the burgh; upon which the taxman carried off certain of their goods, and continued doing so for several markets following. Two pensioners, and the daughter of a pensioner, then raised actions against the taxman for the value of the articles carried off, and the cases were very fully argued before the Sheriff's on 22nd Aug. last. The Sheriffs delayed pronouncing judgment on that day, and continued the case till Thursday last, when they said that, after giving the question the fullest consideration, they had come to the conclusion that, by the table of customs furnished to the taxman by the magistrates, no burgess was liable to pay any sum as custom to the taxman on market-days, and that, by act of parliament, pensioners and their children were entitled to the same privileges as the freemen. They therefore decided against the taxman, ordaining him to deliver up the goods, and finding him liable in expenses.—Scotsman.

G. O.—Horse Guards, Oct. 10, 1839.—The General Commanding-in-Chief is pleased to approve of General Officers, commanding districts in Great Britain, granting leave of absence to Officers, and furloughs to Non-Commissioned Officers and Soldiers, under the following limitations and restrictions, viz.:—1. The leaves of absence, granted under this order to Officers, may commence as soon as the half yearly inspection shall have been made. The furloughs, granted to Non-Commissioned Officers and Soldiers, may commence from the 1st of next month.—2. These indulgences are to terminate on 16th March next, when, in conformity to Her Majesty's regulations, all Officers and Men are to be present with their respective regiments.—3. One Field-Officer, one-half of the Captains, and one-half of the Subaltern Officers, are always to be present with their regiments.—4. No Officer (except in the performance of duty, or for the purpose of joining his regiment) is to quit the United Kingdom without having first received Her Majesty's special commission.—5. The Officers employed on the Recruiting Service, or upon the Staff of the Army, are not to be included in the number hereby fixed for the constant duty of the regt.—6. The applications for leave for regimental Paymasters and Medical Officers, are to continue to be made in the mode prescribed in pages 71 and 72 of the regulations and orders of the Army.—7. In cases of short leaves of absence being requested by Adjutants, Riding-Masters, Quartermasters, or Veterinary Surgeons of regiments, it will be necessary that a special report should be made as to the mode in which their duties are to be performed during their absence.—8. The proportion of Non-Commissioned Officers, Trumpeters, Drummers, and Private Men, to whom furloughs may be granted, is not to exceed ten per troop or company.—When regiments are not stationed in garrisons or military districts, the Officers commanding are at liberty to use their discretion in granting the indulgence of leave of absence, under the foregoing restrictions, to Officers and Men under their command.—This order does not apply to the Officers and Men doing duty with the depot companies of regts. on foreign service.—His Lordship expects that the General and other Officers who are empowered to grant leave of absence under the provisions of this order, will strictly confine that grant to the proportion of Officers herein specified. By Command of the Rt. Hon. Gen. Lord HILL, Commanding-in-Chief.

JOHN MACDONALD, Adjutant-General.

WHITEHALL, Oct. 12.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Admiral the Honourable Charles Elphinstone Fleeming to be Master of her Majesty's Hospital at Greenwich, in the room of Vice-Admiral Sir Thomas Masterman Hardy, Bart., deceased.

PORTSMOUTH, Oct. 18.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Sapphire troop ship was commissioned on Monday by Mr. Nembhard for Mr. William Miller, who is to join and command her, when he is relieved in the Vanguard by a Master. The ship is fitting in the harbour, excepting this circumstance, and the arrival of the Lucifer from Liverpool for stores, there has not been any movement among the Queen's ships during the week. The Pantaloon is still the only man-of-war in the port. No successor is yet officially named to Admiral the Hon. C. E. Fleeming, there is little doubt but Admiral Sir Edward Codrington will be the officer, and that he will have Capt. Berkeley to command the Flag Ship, and bring all his followers. The Russian corvette St. Nicholas, sailed from Spithead on Monday. One of the large cylinders was exploded against the wreck of the Royal George on Tuesday, and since it has taken place, the divers have contrived to get hold of the ships' coppers; about twenty feet of the foremast; and a large mass of the stern. The coppers in those days were cased first in iron, and then an outer one of brick: some of the bricks and mortar are good. The iron has nearly perished, but the copper is as good as ever, and the large brass cock is as bright, and in as perfect preservation as the day it came out of the foundry. No more guns have been obtained. A quantity of tallow was washed up the day of the explosion. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Lucifer, Messenger, steamers.

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 18.—(From our own Correspondent.).—11th. Arrived the Revenge, 76, Capt. Hon. W. Waldegrave, from Cork; she met with little success in obtaining men, while at that port. Since her arrival here, the Fearless, s.-t. v., has brought some men from Portsmouth for her, and she has picked up several able-bodied seamen at this place; a draft from the San Josef will join her in a day or two, which will nearly complete her establishment. The Wizard, 10, Lieut. Com. Thos. F. Birch, was hauled on the graving slip, and had her copper cleaned and repaired; she will be ready for sea in a few days. 15th. The Brilliant, yacht, sailed for Portsmouth this day. 16th. Sailed Goodwill, lighter, with stores for Sheerness and Chatham, 18th. Sailed, Fearless, s.-t. v., Mr. W. Comben, master, for Portsmouth. The artificers have begun laying the blocks for the keel of the Albion, 90, ordered to be built in this dock-yard. Mr. Willis, gunner of the Rolla, 10, was drowned last Sunday morning, by the boat upsetting in a squall. All the artificers engaged to fit the Stirling Castle, 74, for a convict ship, are ordered to be discharged next Saturday, having completed her. Mr. James Drummond, gunner and Mr. Wm. Evans, boatswain, have been superannuated, the former at 45*l.*, and the latter at 55*l.* per annum. In harbour, Impregnable, San Josef, Wizard, and Carron, s.-t. v. In the Sound, Revenge, Rolla, L'Aigle, Sardinar (Sardinian corvette), and Magistrate, freight ship.

MILFORD HAVEN, Oct. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Friday last, the Apollo, troop ship, with stores for the dock-yard, arrived here. The wind being strong at east, the Prospero came down here the next morning, and took her in tow. She is now discharging her cargo; after which she is to proceed to Cork to take in troops for foreign service. On Sunday the Stromboli, new steamer, in tow of the Meteor, commander Pritchard, on passage to Greenock for new engines, put in here with stores for the dock-yard. Both the vessels still remain off the dock-yard. The Persian, having been coppered, rigged, &c., was undocked at Pembroke this morning, and came down here in tow of the Jasper mail steam-packet, en route to Plymouth. As she had not been out of dock an hour before, she was taken in tow by the steamer; it is supposed she is wanted for particular service. She is a handsome little craft, and adds another feather to the cap of the sailor-surveyor. I forget whether or no I told you last week that Commander Higgs has charge of the arsenal, in the absence of Captain Superintendant Jackson. The weather continues wet and stormy.

DEPTFORD, Oct. 16.—Sailed the Augusta Jessie, to embark convicts from Ireland, and Numa transport, Lt. Howe, Agent for Portsmouth. Arrived and fitting the Mangles for convicts, and the Lord Lynedoch for a regular transport. Remain the James Pattison emigrant-ship, Runnymede convict-ship, Barretto Junior transport, and Scottfield for Ascension.

Captain Charles Napier is about to resign the command of the Powerful, 84, to the Archipelago: we regret to find that the state of his health renders it necessary for him to come to England for medical advice.—Hampshire Telegraph. [This report has been current for some time, but we have no means of confirming it. It is not likely that any thing will induce the gallant officer to leave his post under present circumstances.—ED. N. & M. G.

The sloop Harlequin, 16, Commander Lord F. S. Russell (1837), was cruising at Sierra Leone on 13th July, actively engaged in the suppression of the slave trade. She had made several captures, two of which had been sent to New York for adjudication. The crew was, comparatively speaking, healthy; Surgeon still absent on sick leave at Ascension.

COURT-MARTIAL.—On the 24th Sept., a Court-Martial, composed of Commodore Hyde Parker (President) and 12 Post-Captains, assembled on board the Rodney, to try 2nd Lieut. Frederick Hennah, R.N., of the Talavera, upon charges, preferred by Capt. Meads, of disrespect and neglect of duty, in not seeing the cables veered out sufficiently fast on the vessel's coming to an anchor in Bighi Bay, Malta, on 6th Aug. last. The Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, John Loudon, Esq., acted as Judge Advocate on the occasion, and Mr. Thorn, Purser of the Bellerophon, assisted the prisoner. The prosecution closed at a little hour in the afternoon, and the defence was to be entered into on the morning of the 25th. Private letters mention that the general opinion was, that Capt. Meads had not made out his case, and that the witnesses he produced in support of it were more favourable to the prisoner than otherwise. From the presence of so many ships, the Rodney's quarter-deck presented a grander assemblage of naval officers of rank, than has been seen at a Court-Martial for many years past.—Mediterraneo.

A steamer of 200-horse power, to be called Lizard, is ordered to be built with all speed at Woolwich.

We observe in this month's Army List that the date of Second Lieutenant Rider's commission in the Royal Marines, has been altered from April 1836 to September 1839; we cannot, on referring to the sentence of the Court-Martial find that his army rank was forfeited; he was merely sentenced "to be placed at the bottom of the list of Second Lieutenants, Royal Marines;" this surely does not deprive him of the benefit arising from former service.

Lieutenant Lord Henry Russell has come home passenger in the Royal Tar, from Lisbon. His Lordship is still suffering from the effects of the accident he met with when belonging to the Melville. His medical advisers have recommended his not being employed for at least two years.

The funeral of the late Lieut. Renwick, of Greenwich Hospital, took place there on the 8th inst., the Military officers in full uniform, and the other officers in mourning. Every respect was paid to the memory of this respected officer.

Lieut. D. O. B. Casey (1799), just appointed to Greenwich Hospital, is an officer of long and honourable servitude, and one of the few survivors of the Hermione; and served long and honourably, and in various ships, during the late and former war. When the officers of the Hermione were massacred by the mutinous crew, Mr. Casey, then a young Midshipman, saved his life by stowing himself away in a sail in the foretop. By his appointment to Greenwich Hospital, an out-pension and the Semaphore at Putney fall vacant.

THE NEW CUT INTO LIVERPOOL,—which was projected and commenced by Captain Denham, R.N. F.R.S., in November last, has been announced as available for night and day navigation. This is the second time within the last four years, that the adoption of Captain Denham's suggestions has rescued the port from choking, by the sands which outlie the docks eight and ten miles. We trust that the shipping interest of Liverpool will not be unmindful of the vital importance the services of this officer have been to the port, notwithstanding his having since ceased to be their marine surveyor. We sincerely congratulate him on the eminent success which has uniformly attended his surveys and suggestions; and trust that so useful a public servant is extending the benefit of his great knowledge, experience, and activity, to other ports where they may be required, and where they will lead to most valuable and important results.

WOOLWICH DOCKYARD.—The greatest activity prevails here. The new docks in course of formation, near the Basin, are rapidly progressing, and the improvements making in this yard will afford employment to a great number of workmen. Mr. R. Hughes has been appointed Foreman of Engineers of the new steam establishment, at a salary of 200*l.* per annum. There are two steam-vessels of 100 horse power, named the Lizard and the Locust building, they will be launched this year. The earnings of the workmen are unlimited, the utmost despatch being required, and a certain sum allowed to complete them.

On Monday se'ennight the officers of H. M. brig Rolla, lying in Plymouth Sound, entertained the Commander, Lieut. Charles Hall, his lady and family, with a large party of ladies and gentlemen of the town and neighbourhood, to a ball and supper on board the brig.

Admiral Fleeming's familiar sobriquet in the Navy was "St. Vincent's pet," he being a great favourite with the gallant Earl.

Admiral Fleeming visited Greenwich hospital on Tuesday.

Admiral Sir Thomas Williams is the Flag-Officer who has so humanely interested himself in behalf of that important and interesting portion of the Naval family, the daughters of his poor brother officers, by munificently contributing the princely sum of 500*l.* towards the establishment of an institution more required perhaps than any other school in the kingdom.

The Revenge, 78, Capt. the Hon. W. Waldegrave, which was despatched to Cork some time since for men, has been very unsuccessful. At one of her rendezvous at Limerick and Wexford only ten seamen were induced to join her. She is ordered to Plymouth, where some disposable seamen will be sent to her from Portsmouth.

The Crane packet has left Woolwich for Falmouth, towed by the Lightning, and the Firebrand has returned from Greenock.

The Rattlesnake is ordered to Woolwich to embark troops for Ceylon.

The Fearless has left Woolwich for Plymouth, Milford, Holyhead, Liverpool, &c.

COAST GUARD.—On the 12th inst. the Sylvia, R.C., captured the Nautilus of Gosport with 409 tubs and 4 men on board, in the North Channel. On 11th inst., the Coast Guard at Porthillie crept up 114 tubs of spirits and one of wine. On the 13th inst. the same station seized 100 tubs, but 15 of them were knocked to pieces among the rocks. On the 11th inst. the Cawsand station seized 47 tubs attached to a raft. The Harpy, R.C., whilst cruising off Roscoff, chased and captured two Cawsand boats, having made them destroy their cargoes, consisting, it is supposed, of 3 or 400 tubs. The crews of these vessels are under prosecution. On the 13th the Epple Bay station seized 32 tubs, and detained a man. Eleven half-ankers were picked up on the 12th by the Eastbourne crew. (See also our leading remarks).

ADMIRAL FLEMING.—An officer of great merit, but otherwise unknown to Admiral Fleeming, had been sent to superintend the unloading of a transport, and had quitted his post for a short time to procure refreshment; the circumstance was reported to the Admiral, who tried him by a Court-Martial, which sentenced him to be dismissed his ship. It so happened that the officer stood next on the Admiralty list for promotion, and a vacancy occurred within a few days of his dismissal; his prospects were blasted. What did Admiral Fleeming do? Justice and discipline having been enforced, his kind and generous disposition led him to do that which no other Admiral in the service would have done—he placed him on his staff as Flag-Lieutenant, to the disparagement of his own nephew, who held that situation, and the officer was ultimately promoted.—Correspondent, Morning Chronicle.

SIR PHILIP DURHAM AND THE ROYAL GEORGE.—[To the Editor of the Times.]—SIR,—Having observed in your paper of 11th inst. a statement that Mr. Webb, now residing at Morden College, Blackheath, is the only surviving officer of the Royal George, I beg leave to remind you that my brother, Admiral Sir P. C. Henderson Durham, G.C.B., who has only within a few months resigned the chief command at Portsmouth, was an acting Lieutenant on board the Royal George at the time of that vessel sinking. Sir Philip has for some time past endeavoured, without success, to trace out any survivor besides himself of the 1,200 brave men who formed the crew of the ill-fated ship, and it will, I am sure, give him great pleasure to learn that one of his comrades yet exists. It may, perhaps, gratify some of your readers to hear that one of the guns of the Royal George (a 32-pounder), which was fished up during my brother's command, was presented to me by the Admiralty, and is now mounted in front of my house here. JAMES DURHAM.

Largo, October 14th, 1839.

FALMOUTH, Oct. 12.—H.M.'s packet Petrel, Lieut. Crooke, Commander, arrived last night from the West Indies; left Cape Hayti on 16th Sept. with the regular mails. Also arrived H.M.'s packet Spey, Lieut. James, from Brazil; left Rio on 16th Aug., Bahia 24th, and Pernambuco on 4th Sept. with mails.

By the West India mail, received on Saturday, we learn that the Mixed Commission Court at the Havannah had sent to Jamaica 168 Africans, who had been liberated by that Court. The unhappy negroes formed part of the cargo of the slaver taken by H.M.'s sloop Pickle. Of 500 slaves on board the slave ship when she was chased, 178 only were saved, the rest having been thrown overboard by the wretches in command of the vessel. A number of planters had made applications for these Africans to work on their plantations. The whole of these persons, with the exception of eight, had accepted engagements from the planters to work in the cultivation of the land, and such was the demand for them, that the Governor had taken measures to obtain a further supply of liberated Africans from the Havannah, the planters paying the expenses incurred in bringing them to the colony. H.M.'s schooner Pickle, on 4th July, fell in with a suspicious ship, and fired into her. After a chase of six hours the vessel hoisted Portuguese colours, and ran on shore. Lieut. Holland sent his boats to capture the slaver, when the crew was seen throwing the Africans into the sea. On the boats of the schooner nearing the vessel, the crew jumped into the sea and swam ashore. The slaver proved to be the Sierra del Pilar, with 186 slaves on board, most of whom were in a most emaciated condition. A letter received at Jamaica from an officer on board H.M.S. Electra, dated 4th April last, states:—"We arrived at this beautiful place, after a tolerable good passage of 56 days. On 25th and 26th March we captured two slavers from the coast, with 480 slaves on board. The brigantine Caroline gave us a 12 hours' chase, and did not heave-to until the shot went over her. This inhuman traffic is carried on to such an extent, that 60,000 Africans are said to have been landed on the coast of Brazil during the last six months; and, unless the British Government send out a number of fast-sailing vessels, the trade will increase."

MALTA, 20th Sept.—The Hastings, 72, Capt. Lawrence, C.B., arrived this day from Lisbon. The Talavera, 72, sailed on the 11th, to rejoin Sir R. Stopford, and the Hastings is to follow. The British and French squadrons were still at anchor in Brisika Bay on 18th inst. The Gorgon had also joined Sir R. Stopford, with despatches from England, and Rhadamanthus sailed on 11th inst. from hence, for the same destination. The Mediterraneo affirms that the English and French Ambassadors were desirous that the combined fleets should sail up to Constantinople, but the Russian Ambassador protested against the measure, and threatened, in such case, to apply for his passport. Admiral Stopford intended sending back to England the Talavera, after receiving from her all the provisions that could be dispensed with on her passage home. The effective force of the two squadrons was as follows:—British, ten line-of battle ships, two small frigates, one of which was at Constantinople, three corvettes, one brig, and four steamers. French, nine ships of the line, two large frigates, two corvettes, two brigs, one schooner, and two steamers. Two other steamers, the Lavoisier and Veloce, of 220 horse power, were shortly expected. The English squadron frequently practised the cannon exercise, but never weighed anchor. The French squadron remained three days each week under sail, and also practised cannon firing. Provisions were becoming very scarce and dear along the Trojan coast.

SCOTCHMEN IN THE NAVY.—Of the many brave officers who fought and bled during the last war, were not many Scotchmen? Was not Lord Duncan a Scotchman? There will always be more Scotchmen in the Navy, in proportion, than Englishmen, for this simple reason, that Scotland, having proportionably more coast than England, has also proportionably more ships, sailors, and fishermen. Lord Keith, Sir Alexander Cochrane, Sir Pulteney Malcolm, Sir Robert Calder, Sir Richard Strachan, &c., &c., were Scotchmen, as is Sir Graham Moore, Sir P. C. H. Durham, Sir David Milne, &c. &c.—Morning Chronicle.

LISBON, Oct. 8.—In the Tagus; Donegal, Hercules, and Expedition. Hercules is under orders to proceed to Sheerness to be paid off, her time of service having expired. She will sail immediately after the arrival of the Blenheim.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FLEETS IN BASSIRA BAY.—(From a letter quoted by the Eclaireur of Toulon).—"The two Admirals have reciprocally invited each other to dinner, and some of the Captains have done the same, but the officers of the fleets do not in general interchange visits. It is our rule that the last comers pay the first visit to those whom they find at the same anchorage. We were in the Bay before the arrival of the English, and the attentions paid to the officers of Admiral Stopford when at Toulon, led us to expect they would be equally polite to us, but they have all remained on board their own ships. However, several French officers went to visit the Princess Charlotte, and it was naturally expected that their reception would have been cordial, but the want of politeness of the officers has created such a coldness between the two fleets, that one of our superior officers observed, 'We are separated by an ocean of ice.'"—Galignani.

R. MARINES.—Extract of a letter from a British Officer, dated Passages, Sept. 23.—We are here still, the R. Marine Battalion (upwards of 1,000 strong, and a splendid body) being sanguine in our expectations of seeing England in two months at the farthest. Our duty on guard here is very different from the do-nothing ones in England; for here it is no joke, and ensures the being up almost all night. The Officers have no regular mess, but three or four club together and form small ones. The barracks here were formerly a Jesuits' College, and are a queer-looking old range of buildings, bearing a date of 200 years, as must (I should imagine) every house in the place, from their old and ruinous appearance. We are all billeted on the inhabitants in the one long narrow street of which Passages consists; immediately above rises what may almost be called a mountain, on which Fort Hay, built by Capt. Bury, of the R. Marine Battalion, is very well constructed indeed. The Carlists once or twice attempted a surprise, but to no use, the heights on which it is constructed are called the Eastern, those on the opposite side of the harbour the Western, on which we have also a fort, garrisoned by one—the former by two companies. The entrance to the harbour is very striking; it is so excessively narrow that the ships are obliged to moor head and stern, not having room to swing. The hills on each side rise abruptly from the water to a good height, and as you advance further up the harbour, recede more, and are more sloping, prettily wooded, and dotted with cottages and convents, now mostly in ruins; and all on the opposite side from Passages, not long ago, occupied by Carlist outposts and picquets, who, when the battalion was out exercising on a beach close to the barracks, used frequently to amuse themselves by firing at them from the opposite beach, at the foot of the range of hills. Lord John Hay, Col. Parke, and the Light Company of the Royal Marine Battalion, as an escort, started on the 26th for Ideas. Gen. Hourigien accompanied them. We expect them back in a few days.

SERVICES OF CAPTAINS R.N.

Hon. G. A. Crofton, when Lieutenant of the Cambrian, commanded that ship's barge at the capture of a Spanish privateer of 14 guns, on the Halifax station. Commanded a brigade of seamen landed to co-operate with the Army against New Orleans, Baltimore, &c.

James P. Stewart, while commanding the Skeldrake in 1811 engaged a large Danish flotilla, one of which he captured. In the same year he engaged another, in which two were captured. When Captain of the Dictator, in conjunction with two sloops and a brig, destroyed, in 1812, a Danish frigate and several brigs on the Coast of Norway, after a gallant action.

Robert Maunsell was wounded in the boats of the Maidstone, off Toulon, while commanding the Procris sloop. Fought a gallant action with an enemy's flotilla off Java in 1811, in which he captured five. Served on shore at the capture of Batavia.

Sir Richard Spencer was Midshipman of the Leviathan in Howe's action, and in the Sans Pareil in Lord Bridport's, in which he was wounded. Commanding the Crafty schooner, fought a gallant action with a Spanish flotilla near Tetuan, in which he was captured and wounded. Was Captain of the Samarang at the taking of Amboyna.

V. F. Hatton lost his arm, and was otherwise severely wounded when Senior Lieutenant of the Sea Gull, in a gallant action with a Danish flotilla in 1809.

Joseph Symes was Senior Lieutenant of La Bonne Citoyenne sloop, at the capture of La Furieuse, French frigate, in 1809, for which he was promoted.

Henry Weir was posted from the Calypso sloop, for his gallantry in the attack on the Danish squadron on the Coast of Norway in 1812.

Sir A. W. J. Clifford, in the command of the Cephalus sloop, distinguished himself on various occasions in the Mediterranean, in action with the enemy's convoys and batteries.

Samuel Leslie was Midshipman of the Bellerophon at the Nile. When Lieutenant of La Chiffonne, was actively employed against the Pirates in the East Indies in 1809, and likewise as Captain of the Pylade in 1813.

Edward Ellicott was Senior Lieutenant of the Revolutionnaire at the capture of L'Unite, in 1798.

B. S. Bluett was made Commander for his gallantry in cutting out the Dutch brig Atalante, of 16 guns, in 1804.

E. A. Down was wounded when Mate of the Excellent at St. Vincent.

Thomas Whinyates was captured while commanding the Frolic, by the American sloop Wasp, of superior force, after a gallant defence of nearly an hour, in which he was wounded.

Geo. Moubray was Lieutenant of the Polyphemus at Trafalgar.

John William Andrew, in command of the Weasle, distinguished himself in the action with a French squadron in the Adriatic, in 1812, in which the Rivoli was captured, and a brig, the immediate opponent of the Weasle, blown up

William Robilliard, when commanding the Podargus, assisted at the destruction of a Danish frigate and several brigs on the Coast of Norway, in 1812.

Joseph N. Tayler, while commanding the Sparrow, was actively employed on the Coast of Spain, in 1812 and 1813, particularly at St. Sebastian, where he was severely wounded in the breaching batteries. Served in the Walcheren expedition.

J. F. Maples, when Lieutenant of the Magicienne, was slightly wounded in the West Indies. Served at Copenhagen in 1801; witnessed the battle of Trafalgar in the Naiad frigate. Commanded the Etna bomb at Cadiz. Was posted from the Pelican brig for having captured, after a very gallant action, the American sloop Argus, in 1813.

Robert Bloye, while commanding the Lyra on the Coast of Spain in 1812 and 1813, was distinguished for his activity and gallantry on many occasions.

Sir W. O Pell lost his leg while Midshipman of La Loire, in action with, and capture of La Pallas, French frigate, in 1800. While Lieutenant of the Mercury, assisted in the boats of that ship at the capture of a Spanish convoy off Cadiz in 1808. In the same ship was severely wounded while cutting out a gun-vessel from the harbour of Rovigno in 1809. In the same year he cut out a schooner from the harbour of Barletta; commanded the Thunder bomb at the siege of Cadiz.

Thomas P. Kennedy was First Lieutenant of the Temeraire at Trafalgar, and commanded the Cordelia in the Walcheren expedition.

Lewis Hole served when Lieutenant as Volunteer on board the Polyphemus at Copenhagen. Was Senior Lieutenant of Revenge at Trafalgar.

John M'Kerlie lost his arm while Midshipman of the Indefatigable in her gallant action with Les Droits de l'Homme. Assisted at the blowing up of the Insolente in the Morbihan River. Was First Lieutenant of the Spartiate at Trafalgar, and in the Calliope was actively employed in command of a small squadron on the German rivers in 1812-13.

T. R. Toker was senior Lieutenant of the Colossus at Trafalgar.

W. F. Carroll was made prisoner with Sir Sidney Smith in a boat of the Diamond in 1796. Was severely wounded when Midshipman of the Syren. Was Acting Lieutenant of the Centurion in her gallant defence when attacked by Linois' squadron. Assisted at the storming of Capri when Lieutenant of the Pompée. Served in the same ship in the expedition to Constantinople in 1807, on which occasion he landed and destroyed a redoubt of 31 guns. Commanded an armed tender at Copenhagen. Was employed in the gun-boats at the siege of Cadiz, where the one he commanded was sunk. Commanded the Volcano, and was actively employed on the coast of Catalonia.

Frederick J. Thomas was Midshipman of the Prince of Wales in Sir Robert Calder's action, and Acting Lieutenant of the Spartiate at Trafalgar. Commanded a division of gun-boats at Cadiz, in which he much distinguished himself.

Alex Gordon was in Howe's action, and in Lord Bridport's off L'Orient in 1795.

Henry T. Davies was First Lieutenant of the Blanche, in her gallant and successful action with La Guerriere. While commanding the Albacore, 16 guns, in company with several small vessels, beat off the Gloire French frigate of 40 guns in 1812.

Peter Fisher was wounded when Lieutenant of the Barfleur in Sir Robert Calder's action.

E. R. Sibly was Midshipman of the Royal George in Howe's action. In the Centaur he cut out with her boats a privateer of six guns from under the batteries of Basseterre, and was made Commander from the same ship for cutting out the Cæsar, of 18 guns, from the river Gironde, in which affair he was most severely wounded. While commanding the Swallow brig fought a gallant action with two French men-of-war near Frejus in 1812; and in 1813 assisted at the capture of a large convoy at Port D'Ando.

Hon. Sir James A. Maude assisted at the destruction of a French convoy in the Bay of Rosas, in which he was slightly wounded. Commanded the Glasgow at Navarin.

Sir A. P. Green was Lieutenant of Ganges at Copenhagen, and Neptune at Trafalgar. While commanding the Shamrock was actively employed in the Elbe, and commanded the seamen landed at the capture of Cuxhaven and Gluckstadt in 1813.

George Ferguson, when Lieutenant of the Redwing, was repeatedly officially commended for his gallantry in the boats of that sloop in the Mediterranean in 1808.

Sir W. G. Parker, gallantly cut out, with the boats of the Renommée, of which he was Lieutenant, a man-of-war schooner of 9 guns from under the fire of the guns of Torre de Vieja in 1806. In the same ship's boats he boarded a Tartan of 4 guns, and on the following day one of 2, from the port of Colon in Majorca.

THE ARMY AND NAVY.

On Wednesday a dinner upon a large scale was given at the Beneficial Society's Hall, Portsea, to the Right Hon. F. Baring, M.P., to celebrate the return of that gentleman at the last election for Portsmouth, and on this occasion the toasts of the Navy and Army gave rise to the following remarks:—

The Hon. Admiral Fleemiag rose to return thanks for the Navy, and was received with loud cheers. He spoke as follows:—Mr. President and gentlemen, I have the honour to return you my most grateful thanks for the compliment which you have paid the service to which I have the honour to belong, and which I have the honour to command at this port—(cheers). I hope the British Navy will always be ready to fulfil the wishes and expectations of the people—(hear). I trust, however, our Navy will not be called on for any exertions, for I believe that war would be a most fatal thing to this country—(hear, hear), not only to the commercial interests of the country, but to those interests which I more highly prize—the liberty of the country, and that cause which I have supported all my life—(loud cheers). I am opposed to war, although it would be my interest to have the chance of leading the British Navy to victory—to such victories as they have been used to achieve—(hear, hear). And, gentlemen, notwithstanding what has been said, I assure you that you need not fear that that Navy is in an inefficient state—(hear, hear). I have had the honour to command on two stations, and I can say of my own knowledge, that there are a sufficient number of ships and an equal number of efficient men—(cheers). Great obloquy has been thrown upon the present Ministry for the state of the Navy, but depend upon it, never since Britain has been Britain has the Navy been in a more efficient state than it is now in—(cheers), and I dare any one to deny it—(hear, hear). I have only to thank you for the compliment which you have done to that service in which I have spent the best part of my life—(great applause).

Major Travers said that he had more than once stood in an embarrassing situation, but he never felt in a more difficult one than that to which he was placed by being called upon to respond to the toast of the Army which they had just drank. With the modesty and diffidence belonging to an Irishman—(great laughter), however, he would endeavour to execute the task assigned to him. He must, at the same time, say, that while they had two such distinguished officers in the room as Lord George Lennox and the Hon. Colonel Greville, both of whom were higher in rank than he was, the committee would have done well if they had selected either of those officers to return thanks upon the present occasion. No man had seen more real service than the noble Lord near him, for when but very young he joined the Staff of the Duke of Wellington in Portugal; he was present at all the great battles in the Peninsula, and he wound up his distinguished military career by being present at Waterloo, when the fortunes of Napoleon bowed down beneath the prowess of the great Captain of the age—(cheers). Then, as to Colonel Greville, he had, in addition to his other service, distinguished himself in Spain, under General Evans, in fighting the battle of liberty, in opposition to that of despotism—(cheers). Both of these distinguished officers had, however, quitted the service, and that probably was the reason why he was called upon to return thanks on the part of the Army, which he did with great satisfaction—(applause).

Colonel Mengies next returned thanks for the toast of the "Royal Marine Corps."

BRITISH MILITARY TACTICS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It has often been held that the moment a system attains perfection is that which witnesses the commencement of its decline. Such seems particularly the case with the art of war. But before discussing the causes which are calculated to change our present mode of warfare, it may not be unadvisable to investigate those which led to its adoption, and brought it to its present palmy state. Strange as Colonel Mitchell's statements appear, it is undoubtedly true that our Infantry, five hundred years since, possessed greater relative power of destruction than they can exert now; but it is also certain that archers could not for a moment resist men furnished with fusils.

About 1350 the English foot had attained perfection. Each company consisted of two sub-divisions, one composed of archers each capable of projecting three shafts a minute to a distance of three hundred yards with murderous accuracy, and carrying twenty-four arrows, a sabre, small target, a leaden-headed mace, and a stake six feet long pointed at either end to serve as a palisade. The packs, the palisades, and the maces of the men, were borne on ponies, a certain number of which were allowed to every company. The other half were mailed shirts, and fought with broadswords and brown bills eight feet and a half long. To every Saxon division was attached a Welch regiment dressed in the national plaid, and armed simply with target and short two-edged Roman swords, some few officers carrying glaives, a species of heavy scimitar, screwed on a shaft about seven feet long. In action the archers fixed their palisades, and deployed behind them in open order; the bill-men also in open order formed in rear to charge the enemy when the discharge of missiles should cease, and the Welch lying down outside the palisades, like the Artillery at Waterloo before our squares, ready to jump and dash at the enemy the moment they shook.

When we consider this scheme of warfare, we must admit its efficiency. At Crécy and Poictiers the number of French killed doubled that of English engaged, for then, as now, they fought in solid columns of pikemen, covered by cross-bow trailleurs, and the masses once disordered found their armour useless against the Saxon bill, and mischievous in preventing their escape from the active Welch foot.

On the death of the Black Prince, however, John of Gaunt, elated with success, seems to have turned most of his bill-men into archers. Bertrand du Guesclin saw the error, and immediately headed his columns with a rank of dismounted knights, whose Milan armour was proof against missiles. From that time the tide of conquest turned against us, for the Bretons, our bravest allies, after the Black Prince's death, rallied round their chief Duguesclin, and became our fiercest opponents.

The reigns of Richard the Second and Henry the Fourth were unmarked by continual war. Fourteen successive campaigns against Sir Owen ap Glendower, the first ten of which failed wholly, and the last four of which only succeeded through a quarrel between Glendower and Sir Dafydd Gam, the Lord of Brecknock, had dimmed the reputation of English soldiership. Under the fifth Harry it was revived. Constant improvement in manufactures had made English arrow-heads keen enough to pierce the strongest corselet of chain mail. The result appeared at Agincourt. The French cavalry galloping up to the English lines were disordered by successive volleys, which caused their horses to rear and plunge, and wounded many. Dismounting to force the palisades, the two-handed swords and battle-axes required room to strike. They opened their ranks, and the Welch, with their short swords and targets, dashed in upon and stabbed them through the bars of their visors.

That Sir Dafydd Gam, Sir Gwillim Vaughan, and Sir Roger Llwyd, without help engaged and slew eighteen French knights, although resting on English testimony, seems to me a tradition forged to gratify the national pride of Henry the Eighth, who in that point as in some others was not very scrupulous. However, Sir Dafydd's gallantry on that day served to found the peerages of Powis, Caernarvon, and Pembroke; so that there can be no doubt he and his clansmen did their devoir.

The English infantry now stood the first in Europe, and its system of tactics, like that of the Great Frederick, was copied by all Europe, and like that also overpowered by a body of revolutionists whom martinets despised. The murder of John Huss had excited the Bohemian peasantry to madness, and stung the pride of the gentry, till they also appeared in arms. The Pope preached against them; a crusade and a hundred thousand French, German, and British volunteers, marched to the slaughter. But the Bohemians had selected a stern old chief. John Ziska knew the importance of insurgents to contend against regulars in their own way. He told off his troops by coborts and centuries, each composed of ten well-horsed cars, containing a section of fellows armed with slings, short sabres, and morning stars. At approach of an enemy each cohort formed square, the cars unlimbering and linked together composing a retrenchment proof against missiles, and too high for horsemen to ride over. When the first fury of attack had spent itself, they suddenly rushed out of the inclosure with irresistible impetuosity. A panic diffused itself through the invaders, and scarce any of their host returned home scathless. Following up his advantages, and impressing every horse, whether of friend or foe, Ziska made incursions with inconceivable rapidity at the head of his charioteers, annihilating brigade after brigade and division after division of heavy-armed foot. After his death, however, no chief arose of like talent; and the Emperor Sigismund, borrowing from Spain the use of artillery, easibly blew to pieces the feeble ramparts which had served good purpose against arrows alone. Once breached, the waggons were in the way. Procopius perished by an assassin. The bravest of the Hussites went down before superior numbers; their garrisons stationed at Tabor and Pilsen entered the Imperial service, and formed the foundation of those frontier corps which fight so well against the Turks.

Fearing to trespass on your columns, I must here for the present conclude. My next will show how fire-arms, both for infantry and cavalry, displaced the bow, the lance, and the sword, both for infantry and cavalry, and how both lance and sword came again to be relied on as the true weapons of mounted combatants. ARTHUR.

ADMIRAL FLEEMING.

SIR,—An attempt has been made by the government papers to justify the appointment of Admiral Fleming to the governorship of Greenwich Hospital, by an intement that Sir John Colpoys was similarly situated as to services, &c. With the exception of Lord Bridport's action (which was but a partial one) I am not aware that Sir John had opportunity of distinguishing himself against the enemy; but it should be remembered, that he served both as second in command, as well as commander-in-chief of the Channel fleet—as Port Admiral at Plymouth;—as a Lord of the Admiralty, was a G.C.B.; and that his services, even as a Flag-officer, entitled him to consideration;—and from his known ability and energy as an officer, had opportunity been thrown in his way, there can be no doubt but that he would have added to our Naval Trophies.

It might have been more laudable ambition in Admiral Fleming to have obtained a command afloat, or on a foreign station; but as a man of large property, without prominent services as captain, and none as Flag-officer, perhaps a more generous course would have been to have left such post as that of the governorship of Greenwich Hospital to the hardy veteran whose life has been devoted to the service.

J. C. H.

ADMIRAL FLEEMING.

SIR,—Though Admiral Fleeming and myself are as opposite as the poles in Politics, yet from my long knowledge of him, and his zeal for the service and its dauntless sons, I should say, that as far as they were concerned, a more judicious selection for the Governor of Greenwich Hospital could not have been made; for never has he neglected any fair opportunity of being of service to any deserving officer or man who has had the good fortune to serve under him; and what is still worthier of remark is, that when conferring a favour, he convinces you, from the manner in which it is done, that he derives as high a gratification in its accomplishment as the receiver of it does. Nor are they alone confined to personal exertions. That there may be officers who have had more frequent opportunities of distinguishing themselves in the service of their country than he has had it in his power to do, I can well imagine, but a better friend to the gallant inmates of Greenwich Hospital I will take upon myself to say could not be found. My only quarrel at his appointment is, that as he is in possession of a large independent income of his own, he may be preventing an equally deserving and senior officer of a situation who has not that advantage. TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—No. 8.

Captain Broke's Challenge to Captain Lawrence.

SIR,—"As the Chesapeake appears now ready for sea, I request you will do me the favour to meet the Shannon with her, ship to ship, to try the fortune of our respective flags. To an officer of your character it requires some apology for proceeding to further particulars. Be assured, Sir, that it is not from any doubt I can entertain of your wishing to close with my proposal, but merely to provide an answer to any objection which might be made, and very reasonably, upon the chance of our receiving unfair support.

"After the diligent attention which we had paid to Commodore Rodgers—the pains I took to detach all force but the Shannon and Tenedos, to such a distance that they could not possibly join in any action fought in sight of the Capes, and the various verbal messages which had been sent into Boston to that effect, we were much disappointed to find the Commodore had eluded us by sailing on the first change, after the prevailing easterly winds had obliged us to keep an offing from the coast. He, perhaps, wished for some stronger assurance of a fair meeting. I am, therefore, induced to address you more particularly, and to assure you that what I write I pledge my honour to perform to the utmost of my power.

"The Shannon mounts 24 guns upon her broadside, and one light boat-gun; 18-pounders upon her main-deck, and 32-pound carronades on her quarter-deck and forecastle, and is manned with a complement of 330 men and boys (a large proportion of the latter), besides 30 seamen, boys, and passengers, who were taken out of re-captured vessels lately. I am thus minute, because a report has prevailed in some of the Boston papers that we had 150 men additional lent us from La Hogue, which really never was the case. La Hogue is now gone to Halifax for provisions; and I will send all other ships beyond the power of interfering with us, and meet you, whenever it is most agreeable to you, within the limits of the undermentioned rendezvous, namely:—

"From six to ten leagues east of Cape Cod Lighthouse; from eight to ten leagues east of Cape Ann's light; on Cashe's Ledge, in 43 north; at any bearing and distance you please to fix, off the South Breakers of Nantucket, or the Shoal on St. George's Bank.

"If you will favour me with any plan of signals or telegraph, I will warn you (if sailing under this promise) should any of my friends be too nigh, or anywhere in sight, until I can detach them out of my way; or I would sail with you, under a flag of truce, to any place you think safest from our cruisers, hauling it down when fair to begin hostilities.

"You must, Sir, be aware that my proposals are highly advantageous to you, as you cannot proceed to sea singly in the Chesapeake without imminent risk of being crushed by the superior force of the numerous British squadrons which are now abroad, where all your efforts, in case of a rencontre, would, however gallant, be perfectly hopeless. I entreat you, Sir, not to imagine that I am urged by mere personal vanity to the wish of meeting the Chesapeake, or that I depend only upon your personal ambition for your acceding to this invitation: we have both nobler motives. You will feel it as a compliment if I say that the result of our meeting may be the most grateful service I can render to my country; and I doubt not that you, equally confident of success, will feel convinced that it is only by repeated triumphs in even combats that your little Navy can now hope to console your country for the loss of that trade it can no longer protect. Favour me with a speedy reply. We are short of provisions and water, and cannot stay long here. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient humble servant,

P. B. V. BROKE, Captain of H.B.M. ship Shannon."

"N.B.—For the general service of watching your coast, it is requisite for me to keep another ship in company, to support me with her guns and boats when employed near the land, and particularly to aid each other if either ship in chase should get on shore. You must be aware that I cannot, consistently with my duty, waive so great an advantage for this general service by detaching my consort without an assurance on your part of meeting me directly; and that you will neither seek nor admit aid from any other of your armed vessels, if I detache mine expressly for the sake of meeting you. Should any special order restrain you from thus answering a formal challenge, you may yet oblige me by keeping my proposal a secret, and appointing any place you like to meet me (within 300 miles of Boston) for a given number of days after you sail; as, unless you agree to an interview, I may be buried on other service, and perhaps be at a distance from Boston when you go to sea. Choose your terms, but let us meet."

"To the Commander of the U.S. frigate Chesapeake."

Endorsement on the envelope.

"We have 13 American prisoners on board, which I will give you for as many British sailors, if you will send them out, otherwise, being privateer's men, they must be detained."

No champion ever threw his gauntlet down with more chivalric spirit. No challenge to a public foe was ever written in so unassuming a style. Nor vaunt, nor assurance, nor ostentation, nor defiance, is here implied. The honour of the officer, his brightest characteristic, shines conspicuously in every period. The Shannon's armament and calibre, her exact complement of men and boys, are minutely stated for the information of her antagonist. The choice of arena is offered for the decision between British and American prowess. "Choose your terms, but let us meet." The expressive magnanimity of this emphatic sentence at the end graces the whole composition. The Shannon hove to in sight of the Chesapeake, not with pompous MOTTO-flags streaming aloft—not bedizened with the meretricious colours and ribands of the wanton; but, adorned with the one chaste ensign of her nation, she stately rested on the main, which BRITANNIA rules, for the trial of her virtue. In the presence of thousands of Columbian witnesses, like Virtue's self, she passed through the ordeal unscarred, and added glory to her fame and reputation.

Senior United Service Club, Oct. 14. TRISTRAM.

P.S.—It is due to the memory of Capt. Lawrence to promulgate that he did not receive Capt. Broke's challenge: the Chesapeake, steering for the Shannon, passed the boat which conveyed it.—T.—(To be continued.)

THE BRAZIL STATION.

SIR,—Having seen a statement in the Naval and Military Gazette that the Blonde is preparing to relieve the Stag, and having also seen in a Portsmouth paper that the Barham and Alfred are bringing forward, it is supposed for the Mediterranean, I am induced to trouble you with a few lines, hoping (should you give them a place in your Paper) they may meet the eyes of those in authority, and induce them to send one of the larger frigates to relieve Stag, instead of Blonde.

With our present force in the Mediterranean, the difference between a 50 and a 42-gun frigate can never seriously affect our superiority. But on the Brazil station, in case of any rupture with America or France, it might be of serious consequence, as both those nations have razeed 80-gun ships mounting 62 guns on that station, either of which is a match for our squadron there; and in the event of any rupture with France, arising out of the Eastern Question, or the Blockade of Buenos Ayres, our squadron then might be destroyed or blockaded in Rio Janeiro, and our trade be at the mercy of our opponents, before any reinforcement would reach it, as it would be impossible for the Blonde to offer any resistance to the French frigate with the slightest hopes of success; and in smaller vessels they are still more superior to us, AMICO.

FLUSH-DECKED VESSEL.

SIR,—I believe there is no one who ever was in a flush-decked vessel, can forget the delightful enjoyment of being battened down under hatches in a breeze or gale of wind; for myself, although it is now upwards of twenty-five years since I enjoyed this felicity, the recollection is as fresh to me as though it were but yesterday; it was upon a station where nothing but wood was burned; 'twas only four months I enjoyed this luxury; but as a counterpoise, from a pretty fair complexioned boy (as Sir Joseph Yorke would have called me) I became, by smoking, nearly as tawny as a Mulatto, and I doubt not, had I been tested, should have been found as good bacon as ever was dried in my native county, Hampshire; but the smoke-drying is of secondary consideration, compared with the danger of a vessel being taken aback, or otherwise encountered in a sudden squall, with the hatches off, as was, doubtless, the case with the unfortunate "Pincher;" which melancholy catastrophe suggested to me an idea which, in my opinion, would prevent the recurrence of a similar event, and also obviate the necessity of battening down the hatches at all, even if it blew hard enough to take the devil's horns off. My plan is to raise a berthing, nearly as high as the gunwale, instead of the combings (as at present) round the fore and main hatchway, well dove-tailed together, and bolted through and through all. If there is not length to stow the launch between them, then cut a niche in the after-part of the fore to receive her bows, and in the fore-part of the main to take her counter, padding the edges well with a good thrummed mat, to prevent injury to her by friction from the vessel's motion; then should a vessel ship a sea over-all, only such a portion as will fill the square of each hatchway can find its way between decks, which may be pumped up again in a quarter of an hour.

I am not ambitious that this plan should be adopted, but hope the suggestion will meet the eye of scientific men, and spur them on to contrive something better.

I can see no other inconvenience in it than that of the sailor having to run up about half-a-dozen steps more of a tether to get to the top of the hatchway, and to run down the same number to reach the main deck; while the advantage would be his life (which is the most consequence) is made to be much more safe; and another comfort is added to the very many enjoyed by those of the present day in the British Navy, which those of only thirty years back were strangers to. To Readers and Correspondents.

We feel much obliged to "Mr. E." for his letter and accompanying paper; but at present, for reasons given in a former No., we cannot make use of them.—"A Linesman," "R. L. T.," and "Ben Brace," have our best acknowledgments. Many thanks to "Colonel M.," though we were previously in possession of the facts.—A letter was forwarded to "Bombardier" on Wednesday.—The Advertisement was found, after writing to Lieut. S.

We cannot answer a Correspondent, who, under the signature "Half-pay," says "How does it happen that Lieut. R. Macbeath, Paymaster of Detachments at Edinburgh, holds also the appointment of Lieutenant in the Ceylon Rifle Regiment? It is a fact that he was gazetted to the full-pay Lieutenancy AFTER he received his Staff appointment, and has been now for two years receiving full-pay, although he has never seen his regiment since his appointment to it. By referring to the Army List, at pages 50 and 66, the truth of this statement will be seen.'

We do not think with "G. M." that we should promote the interest of the Paymaster by publishing the statement sent us. Our opinion is, that the case has been seriously affected by legal quirks.

We have much pleasure in announcing the promotion of five old Mates, to be Lieutenants, and the appointment of Lieut. Casey to Greenwich Hospital, in this day's Gazette.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1839.

THE United Service will have read with unmitigated disgust the virulent effusions of the daily press within the last few days, reflecting upon the professional character of distinguished officers. Having spent its violence on Admiral Fleeming, the abuse is now turned upon Sir George Parker, a gallant Officer, who was the late Sir James Saumarez's First Lieutenant in one of the most spirited frigate actions of the war. He has titles and distinctions attached to his name; but it is broadly asserted, that those have been unworthily bestowed, and all because it is rumoured that he is to succeed to the Portsmouth command, and is a liberal in politics. This tampering with the reputation of Officers is really too bad, and in this case intolerable; for, as we stated last week, Sir Edward Codrington will be the successor of Admiral Fleeming. Some of our contemporaries, who profess to address the United Service, reiterate these libels into their columns. They little know the indignant feelings which have been universally expressed by Officers as regards this matter, for no class of men are more averse to such proceedings, particularly when they emanate from cowardly and anonymous traducers, shielded from the consequences which such conduct would produce in convential society.

Is the system of "protocol and demonstration" the only one to be adopted by a nation like Great Britain! To a certain extent it carries a dignity with it, as evincing forbearance on the part of a power which is fully capable of adopting compulsory measures; but when had recourse to, on every successive occasion of diplomacy, such a system only heaps ridicule upon the nation so acting, and induces the belief that she is actuated by the unworthy motives of fear and pusillanimity. Such is the position of this country in regard to Russia at this moment. We know, and have long known, her designs upon Turkey—and we have sent a fleet for the protection of the latter. That fleet is made to ride at anchor, or cruise, off the Dardanelles, being denied entrance into the contiguous ports of Turkey; and at whose instigation? "Lord Ponsonby is said to have requested the Porte to appropriate a port at which the Anglo-French fleet could rendezvous in the winter; but that the Porte refused. M. De Boutenieff is said, on this occasion, to have declared he would quit Constantinople on the first appearance of a foreign ship-of-war in the Dardanelles." Must British seamen be unnecessarily exposed to winter storms and every discomforture at the dictation of the Russian Bear? But the manager of matters, it appears, is brute enough! and insists that it shall be so. Is not England the ally of Turkey? and if so, is it requisite that that ally, who is in the waters of the Dardanelles for the express protection of Turkey, should ask leave to shelter in her ports—and, when condescending to ask, to be refused? The fact resolves itself simply into this, that if, to please Russia, Turkey refuses admission into her ports to the British Navy, it is clear that, in order to accomplish its destined intent, that fleet must ride in an open sea, or road-stead, at a heavy expense for wear and tear; and that that Navy, moreover, must be kept up on a considerable scale, and proportionate cost. Now such being the case, would it not be far better that, since we must be on a war footing, we make the party, so compelling the necessity of that war establishment, pay the expenses, by at once going to open war, instead of maintaining a masked war, and capture her ships? A positive warfare will cost no more than a covert system, which renders a large force necessary—more especially when that large force is put to every inconvenience by a winter's crusade, without a port to go into, suitable to the purposes for which it is assembled?

But Russia is a wily antagonist; duplicity and intrigue have ever been the basis of her diplomacy. Has it not long been the undeviating policy of that nation to pursue a system of silent hostility against England, by undermining British influence throughout the world, but more especially the Eastern hemisphere; and to endeavour to excite a jealousy as to the genuineness of British professions of friendship; and, when mistrust has been implanted with adequate effect, to assume to herself that actual mask of friendship, which, by her intrigues, she had induced the belief was the part played by England? Why is Russia suffered to keep Europe in a ferment, by maintaining an armed neutrality during peace? If the internal commotions of her vast territory render extensive armies necessary, she cannot need fleets for that purpose;—and even those military forces should be circumscribed as to locality, and not be suffered to swarm around the walls of a neighbouring nation,—independent in name, but incapable of resisting aggression; and the possession of which by Russia is too portentous to British India to be suffered by England.

But whilst we "protocol and demonstrate," the Russian mole is undermining—well does she know the value of "time:" the barking of the cur does not intimidate the thief, but only induces him to be more cautious,—the deep growl of the mastiff has a vastly different effect on his nerves.

THE recruiting is proceeding most satisfactorily for all the regiments, at home and abroad; and even for the regiments in India, recruits are found to offer themselves in large numbers. They who would endeavour to persuade the world that the British is not a Military race, would do well to ask themselves, if any other nation in Europe could find men willing to enter the Army, with a tropical service of more than twenty years staring them in the face. We believe that Englishmen are the best soldiers; and most assuredly if a readiness to serve in all climates, and a recklessness of comfort, and even life, constitute a good soldier, we cannot be easily shaken out of that opinion. Since March last, more than three thousand recruits have been embarked for the several regiments of the line serving in India, and as many more will probably embark before the 1st of June next. These, with the large number of men enlisted for the East India Company's service, prove that bad climate and long banishment from home and kindred, are not sufficient to deter Britons from seeking the "bubble, reputation." While this undaunted spirit actuates our countrymen, we may defy the world in arms. We cannot, however, in stating this noble characteristic of the British soldier, fail to remark on the very unjust system adopted towards him. We inquire, in the name of humanity, why these noble and daring spirits should be doomed to rot in pestilential climates for twenty years. Ye philanthropists! turn towards your white brethren, the British soldiers—relieve and emancipate them.

WE are at liberty to state most positively, that Mates of the Royal Navy are to be appointed immediately, by the Admiralty, to fill the existing vacancies of Chief Officers in the Coast Guard Service, receiving pay at the rate of 9*s.* per day, and being on the same footing, as respects their claims to and chances of promotion, as the Lieutenants.

This is a most equitable measure, and, although some of the Lieutenants will no doubt think themselves very hardly used, because Officers of an inferior rank are to receive the same amount of pay as they have received, there can be no injustice in the case, as the sum of 9*s.* per diem is considered the remunerating pay for the duty required, and whether performed by a Lieutenant or a Mate cannot, in a civil service like the Coast Guard (in spite of the endeavour to call it one essentially Naval), be deemed an arrangement detracting in any way from the value of the superior officer in Naval rank, or elevating the merit of the other. It will be a source of no small pleasure to many Mates of long standing in the service, to find that an opening of so desirable a nature has at length presented itself in their favour.

No directions have been yet given for the supercession of those Officers in the Coast Guard Service, whose triennial period of command expired on the 10th instant.

LETTERS have reached us this week, explaining that there is but one feeling in the gallant corps of Royal Marines, with respect to the libels on the Master-General of the Ordnance, noticed in our last.

As regards the case of Cadet Childs, son of Captain Childs, Royal Marines, there is no doubt that, although ill-treated by Cadet Maude, the latter had no intention of seriously injuring him. Maude, however, was very properly dismissed, and the Master-General resisted the entreaties of persons of the highest influence for his restoration; but when, after the vacation, the whole of the Cadets addressed a memorial to Sir Hussey Vivian, requesting he would forgive Maude, and in which memorial they pledged themselves to desist from ill-treating the Juniors, he (the Master-General) took advantage of the pledge, and, we believe, of an earnest appeal also from Captain Childs to forgive Maude, at the same time addressing the Cadets, and telling them that, in the event of any instance of similar conduct again occurring, the offender should at once be dismissed. Cadet Childs, it seems, why or wherefore we know not, was again the victim, and the Cadet who was guilty of ill-treating him was at once sent away.

In our last, we noticed that several sons of Marine officers are provided for in the Ordnance corps. We believe that Captain Childs, without any other interest than that of being an old and good officer, obtained a Cadetship for his son; and we could, from our own knowledge, prove several cases in which sons have obtained like favour through the character and conduct of their parents as Marine officers. The corps, therefore, duly appreciate the liberal and soldier-like feeling of the gallant Master-General.

As the Report of the Naval and Military Commission has not yet been promulgated, it may not be out of season to revert to certain defects in the system, by which promotions and other rewards for military services are regulated.

We do not mean in the slightest degree to reflect on the distinguished individuals at the head of the Military Department of our country; they are doubtless aware that the system, the working of which they superintend with as much impartiality as it will admit of, is far from being a perfect one, they may individually wish to see it altered for a better, but it evidently can only be done effectually by a Commission such as is now provided.

Since the termination of the great Continental War in 1815, there have been some, though few, occasions for an Officer's doing good service for his country in Hindoostan, in Burmah, in South Africa, in subduing insurrections in the West Indies and in North America, and the means of acquiring a knowledge of military service have occurred during the civil wars of Spain and Portugal. Yet, by the purchase of promotion, and wealth being as it were a standard of military merit, service Officers of old standing constantly see themselves superseded by their inferiors with heavier purses.

One would think, that in a country such as ours, possessing a Colonial empire, acquired and defended surely as much by our soldiers as our sailors, that an equal measure of reward would be dealt out to both branches of "the Service," but this is not the case,—on the occasions of general promotions (and we earnestly hope that, on the fortunate event of Her Majesty's marriage at no distant day, we shall see again a general promotion), Naval Officers, for length of service, obtain effective rank and pay, whereas a large proportion of Army promotions are not accompanied with these advantages; also, for distinguished services, Naval Officers obtain effective rank and pay, whereas Army Officers obtain only brevet rank, which is attended with this great disadvantage, that it subjects Field-Officers to serve under Officers of inferior Army rank, which never happens to Naval Officers.

Colonels are thus liable to serve as junior Captains, or else continue on half-pay for the rest of their lives; whereas Post-Captains (the rank corresponding to that of Colonel) never serve under Lieutenants on any occasion. Thus comparing the two services makes the hardship of the Army service in this respect more apparent.

A case in point is that of Sir De Lacy Evans, who is a Brevet-Colonel, a Knight-Commander of the Bath, a Grand Cross of St. Ferdinand, &c., and who, if placed on full-pay, would be obliged to become the junior Captain of a regiment, and serve under three Field-Officers and nine Captains, "with all his blushing honours."

Having touched on this defect in the Military system, let us look for a remedy: when half-pay Lieutenants, of ten years' service on full-pay, come again on full-pay, let them come in as Captains, and let no Captains be promoted to Brevet-Majorities but such as have been at least five years on full-pay; and, having been so long on full-pay, would it be unfair to allow them to join regiments on the same terms as unattached Majors do? that is, to take their place at once as Field-Officers, without going to the bottom of the list of Captains. Naval Captains are never called upon to serve under an inferior Officer or in an inferior command.

Again; it is a cause of great complaint throughout the British Army that honorary marks of distinction, as crosses and medals, have been so partially distributed. No individual in the Peninsular War, however he may have distinguished himself, had any chance of obtaining a bit of ribbon unless he held a command equivalent to that of a regiment or a staff appointment, with the rank of Field-Officer.

We give an instance of the effect of this strange principle, which regulated the distribution of honorary marks of distinction. Two English Officers, in command of a considerable body of cavalry, saw, on one occasion, a body of the enemy's cavalry in such a position that they might have been easily surprised and cut off. The Officers were naturally inclined to make the attempt, but one of them remarked, "Suppose we succeed, shall we be rewarded with promotion or a decoration? No,—then let us leave it alone!"

We believe that the Sepoys, who, compared with the Europeans, played a secondary part in the late Burman war (which lasted two years, and in which our loss, from the sword of the enemy and from sickness, amounted to 40,000 men!) were decorated with medals, and that the Queen's troops were not, because the Peninsular soldiers had not been so decorated. The Duke of Wellington wished for more of his Peninsular heroes at Waterloo, but they were elsewhere employed, and though many Peninsular soldiers got Waterloo medals, yet a large proportion of them fell to the share of raw levies.

For the remedy for this last grievance, the partial distribution of honorary rewards, we look to the Duke of Wellington.

Sir Edward Codrington has given notice of a motion for next Session, with reference to the Merchant Seamen's dues, and intends, we understand, moving for a committee, to inquire into the amount and appropriation of the monthly contributions collected from all seamen employed.

We have before, more than once, adverted to this subject, and we will now briefly recapitulate the causes which have again excited the gallant Admiral's known sympathy in the seaman's behalf.

For upwards of a century, indeed since the establishment of Greenwich Hospital as a retreat for worn-out seamen, all those serving afloat, whether in Her Majesty's or in trading ships, were required to contribute sixpence monthly towards the support of that institution. The intention, as set forth in the act (7th and 8th of Wm. III., cap. 21, passed in 1696), was, that the fund, so formed, should be applied for the support, first, of those who were maimed, wounded, and worn-out in the Royal Navy; secondly, those who had served in merchant ships.

Owing to the successive and continual wars we engaged in, whilst combating with the fleets of Holland, France, and Spain, for the dominion of the sea, the funds of the establishment, although aided to a great extent from other sources, fell far short of the whole intention. Indeed, to relieve the seamen qualified in the Navy alone, required occasional grants from Parliament in aid of the Hospital revenue; and the merchant seamen, unless they had also served in the fleet, which was however the case with the great majority, derived no benefit whatever from a fund to which they were still required to contribute.

This was frequently complained of in Parliament by the gentlemen representing the shipping interest; but the ready answer was given, that, wanting the protection of the Navy, merchant seamen could not follow their calling, without the risk, nay the certainty, of being captured. That those who derived the greatest advantage should be required to make some compensation to the persons who exposed their lives and limbs to peril; consequently, no considerable feeling was created upon the subject in Parliament, until the continuance of this long peace afforded leisure to men to consider deliberately on these and other matters connected therewith.

Six or seven years ago, notice of a motion was given, by Mr. Lyall we believe, that one of the members for the city of London, and a gentleman intimately connected with the shipping interests—in fact, the representative thereof. He brought in a bill for abolishing the payments of sixpence to Greenwich Hospital, but substituting monthly contributions of one shilling for seamen and two shillings for Masters and Mates, to form a fund for the relief of disabled, and the widows of deceased seamen, and providing a corporation consisting of President, Governors, and other officers, for the proper conducting thereof. Trustees were to be appointed in the several outports, and in fact the whole machinery and arrangement was very little different from what passed into law.

At first the Government resisted this bill, on the plea of the reduction which would take place in the revenue of Greenwich Hospital, estimated at no less than twenty-three thousand pounds per annum. But, in the Session of 1834, Sir James Graham, then First Lord of the Admiralty, consented to withdraw the opposition to the measure, upon the understanding, that 20,000*l.* per annum should be voted to the Hospital from the Consolidated Fund. The bill then passed through committee with some trifling amendments, proposed by the President of the Board of Trade, and having been enacted in that Session, under the title of 4 and 5 Wm. IV., cap. 34, came into operation on the 1st of January, 1835.

This is a brief history of the case,—and it was natural to suppose, that a considerable income being thus provided, with cheap machinery,—for the Governors and Trustees give their labours gratuitously, we believe,—the seamen who had occasion for relief would meet with prompt attention; but the complaints are now more general than ever, and reiterated week after week in the provincial papers, to show that, from some cause or other, there is no adequate relief for the most urgent distress, and many would absolutely starve, notwithstanding their undoubted claims on the fund, were it not for the charity of benevolent individuals, or their own provident forethought, in subscribing to benefit societies.

We are very far from insinuating any charges against the gentlemen to whom the management of this business is delegated, either in London or the outports. Mr. Watson, the general Secretary, we believe to be an upright and honourable man, but complaints have been made, more particularly in the out-ports, that assistance is not afforded when most needed; and that the funds are put out to interest, instead of being applied to the relief of the contributors. This may be all very good policy as regards future claimants, for no doubt a splendid revenue will be accumulated in due season, but in the meantime "whilst the grass grows the horse starves," and to remedy this, and produce an explanation of all the circumstances is, we presume, the intention of Sir Edward Codrington's promised motion.

Now, should the Government grant a committee up stairs, to examine witnesses, &c., we earnestly hope that they will not content themselves with this simple inquiry, but that the gallant Admiral will so shape his motion, as to enable them to investigate and report upon the best course to be adopted, so as to apply their monthly payments, and other contributions that may be provided, to the general benefit of seamen, their widows, and orphans. If such an investigation is gone into with an honest spirit by members competent to the task, we are sanguine in believing, that the plan we have proposed of once more reverting to Greenwich Hospital as the groundwork of an extensive measure, which shall extend its benefits to the Merchant as well as the Queen's seamen;—in fact, to go back to the original intention, we confidently expect that a satisfactory plan may be produced, which shall bind the interests of all up in one common cause.

We have the more reason to think this very desirable matter may be accomplished since the appointment of Admiral Fleeming to the Governorship of the Hospital, for he possesses, like his regretted predecessor, those qualities which in our opinion are desirable if not indispensable in the Officer filling that post—we mean habits of business, kindness of temper, hospitality and generosity of disposition, and urbanity of manner, so as to insure his being esteemed, respected, and beloved, as he always has been by all those within his control.

Relief of Regiments in India

We have been repeatedly asked by our Military friends, how the regiments serving on the continent of India are, or may be, benefitted by the rotation system, and we must confess that, as far as we have hitherto observed, we are unable to answer the question. It certainly does seem strange that, whilst great care is taken to relieve regiments serving in the West Indies every three or four years, there should be no attention paid—at least apparently—to the fact, that the climate of India is to the full as injurious to the constitution of European Officers and soldiers as that of Dominica, Jamaica, or Demerara. And yet our troops are left twenty years in India, banished far from their country, exposed to the attacks of Asiatic cholera, and are withdrawn after, say at the utmost, four years' service in the West India Islands, beside which, nearly one-third of the Officers on the latter station are entitled to remain at the depot, while our Indian regiments allow but one Captain to remain at Chatham, commanding a recruiting company.

Government is now sending out the Royals, 7th, and 25th Regiments to Gibraltar and the Cape, for the purpose of relieving corps, none of which have been abroad for a longer period than twelve years, and have served the whole time on good foreign stations; but no care is taken of the 16th and 54th (who cannot leave India, at the earliest, sooner than January, 1840, although relieved by the 21st Fusiliers from Van Diemen's Land), both which regiments have more than completed their twenty years' service in the East; or of the 3rd Buffs, 6th Foot, 41st, 44th, 49th, and 55th, almost all of which regiments have been eighteen years abroad, and have served the greater part of that time in India.

The relief for corps serving in India is now even less than it was some years back, when regiments were generally sent on from the Cape, the Mauritius, and Ceylon, as well as from New South Wales; now they are sent from the last named colony alone. We do not take into consideration the fact of the 9th Regiment having proceeded to India from the Mauritius, because it was sent to the latter place as a supernumerary regiment, and when its services were no longer required there it was sent to its original destination, Bengal. But this is an exception; the rule being, that the reliefs for regiments in India are to be given from New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land only.

We appeal to the Quarter-master-General whether this is fair, and we trust we shall speedily see so glaring an evil remedied.

Having promised last week to examine into the anecdote * which we inserted on the 5th, with reference to the Duke and Waterloo, and which, as we acknowledged at the time, was taken from the Dover Chronicle, we must confess our belief that few military men will be willing to give credence to an anecdote of the Duke which implies, that after quitting the Duchess of Richmond's ball on the night of the 15th, where he certainly was after eleven o'clock, if not much later, he started off for Sombref, the Prussian head-quarters, about twenty-seven or twenty-eight miles distant, where he spent the night in conference with Blucher, Bulow, D'Yorck, and Kleist, and remained until after the commencement of the battle of Ligny, that is, until past three in the afternoon of the 16th, although his own troops in advance had been engaged on the evening of the 15th! In a military point of view the Duke could not have been paid a worse compliment.

As to the conference, Bulow was at Liege on the night of the 15th, and did not arrive even in time to share in the battle of Ligny, although this did not terminate until nine o'clock on the evening of the 16th. As to D'Yorck and Kleist, neither of them served in that campaign! Then with regard to Grouchy's answer to General Foy, we strongly suspect this is another blunder, and that it properly refers to the controversy between Grouchy and General (now Marshal) Gérard. In fact, it appears to be a tissue of blunders from beginning to end; and we cannot help thinking that the reporter of the anecdote gave a most confused version of what the Duke told him. Our opinion is, that the Duke took a short rest that night after the ball, proceeded early next morning to Quatre Bras, and finding that Ney was not advancing in very great force, and that the Prince of Orange would be able to keep him in check until the arrival of reinforcements from Brussels, which were on the road, he repaired in the meantime to the Prussian head-quarters to consult Blucher, whom he found at the Mill of Bussy. He there saw the Prussian dispositions for battle, as also the advance of the French army against Blucher, and then returned to Quatre Bras.

* Waterloo.—The following anecdote of the Duke of Wellington, not generally known, and never before published, cannot but be acceptable to the reader. It exhibits in a strong light the indefatigable perseverance and foresight of the Duke, and especially exonerates his Grace from the charge raised against him by many writers of allowing himself to be surprised by Bonaparte while amusing himself at a ball at Brussels at the time referred to:—At a dinner a short time since, the Duke was asked—"Has your Grace seen the pamphlet published in America by General Grouchy, in answer to General Foy's attack on him respecting the manœuvres on the days previous to Waterloo?" "I have," answered the Duke, "and Grouchy has the best of it. He could not move without orders, and orders he certainly did not receive as to his manœuvres, I know all about them; I was a witness to them." "You!" exclaimed one of the party; "every one thought your Grace was in Brussels." "I know they did, but they were wrong; for on the evening in question, I and Gordon (who was killed at Waterloo) left Brussels, took a squadron of horse as an escort, no one knowing us, and joined the Prussian head-quarters. I passed the whole of that night in conference with Blucher, Bulow, D'Yorck, and Kleist. In the morning I observed to Bulow—'If I had an English army in the position yours now is, I should expect to be most confoundedly thrashed.' The attack of Grouchy soon after commenced, and the Prussians were defeated. I waited long enough to see that event, and then thought it time to be off, and on the 17th Bonaparte made that momentous movement on my flank which was the commencement of the battle of Waterloo."—Dover Chronicle.

The Court.

The Queen and the Duchess of Kent continue in excellent health, and Her Majesty has taken her usual equestrian exercises on most days of the week.

The Privy Council on Monday for the prorogation of Parliament will be attended by all the Cabinet Ministers in the vicinity of the metropolis.

The Queen Dowager on Tuesday arrived at the station of the London and Birmingham railway in Euston-square, and left town, attended by her suite, by the 12 o'clock train, for the seat of the Earl of Denbigh, Newnham Paddox, Warwickshire.

Prince Albert.—His Highness, it is very generally understood, is likely to become the husband of Queen Victoria, and now all the world are on the alert to learn what he is like. The Prince is of a cheerful disposition, most unaffected in his manners, and speaks English well. Those who have had access to him, speak in the warmest terms of his personal accomplishments and general carriage. His eyes are blue; his hair and whiskers rather sandy; his stature tall.

Windsor Castle.—On Wednesday se'nnight several panes of glass were broken from the exterior of the Queen's dressing-room by a maniac, who got into the Home-park before the gates were locked, and remained there during the whole of that night, sheltering himself under the trees, being furnished with flint-stones for the purpose, which he so effectually accomplished, of throwing them over the terrace-wall. It appears that when he threw the stones he stationed himself just underneath the wall where the sentry was on duty. The man is in custody.—Last Wednesday an alarm of fire was given by the sounding of the bugle of the castle guard, when the troops turned out to render the necessary assistance. It was found, however, that the chimney of the laundry (which is situated in the eastern wing, nearly under the corridor) was on fire, and the neighbouring offices filled with smoke. After some short time the fire was got under. It was occasioned by one of the female servants throwing a sheet of paper on the fire, which was taken by the current of air up the chimney in a burning state, and this caused the soot to ignite.

Despatches, dated Sept. 24, were received on Saturday at the Foreign Department, from Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople; and others dated Sept. 28, from the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg: also at the Colonial Department from the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, from the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands, and from Sir John Harvey, Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick. On Monday despatches were received from the Governor of Jamaica, and also from Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar. On Tuesday despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for the Marquis of Clanricarde, at St. Petersburg, and from the Colonial Department for the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and for the Officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. On Wednesday despatches, dated 20th Sept., were received at the Foreign Department from Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, and others dated 1st inst., from the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg; also at the Colonial-office from Sir J. Colborne, Governor of the Canadas; from Sir G. Arthur, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada; from Colonel Reid, Governor of Bermuda; and from Sir John Franklin, Lieut.-Governor of Van Diemen's Land. Despatches for the Right Hon. C. Poulett Thomson, Governor of the Canadas, were sent off last evening from the Colonial-office.

The Marchioness of Salisbury died on Monday morning at her residence in Arlington-st. Her Ladyship was the daughter and heiress of Bamber Gascoigne, Esq., and was married to the present Marquis of Salisbury in Feb. 1821.

Improvements in St. James's.—It is intended to continue Pall-mall in a straight line to the Green Park, pulling down the club-houses and the hotel at the corner of St. James's-st., the whole of Cleveland-row, the stables belonging to the Marquis of Stafford, the houses opposite, as well as those behind. These improvements will leave an uninterrupted view of the park and Her Majesty's new palace, and will allow a grand carriage-way into the park and to Buckingham Palace. It is also intended to remove Little St. James's-st., and several houses in that neighbourhood. A grand crescent is to be built on the ground now occupied by Cleveland-row and Little St. James's-street.

The Marquis of Huntly's Failure.—We understand the state of affairs at first prepared showed a probable dividend of twelve shillings and sixpence per pound.—Arbroath Herald.

Lord Lyttelton has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Worcestershire, in the room of Lord Foley.

Lieut.-Colonel Angelo took his departure from Bolton last week, and has since addressed a letter to the Mayor, wherein "he tenders his resignation as Commissioner of Police, and states that it would be a complete robbery upon the inhabitants of Bolton to receive from them the sum of 500*l.* per annum, for the fulfilment of an office no more important than the business of a common corporal in the regular service—viz., the management of twenty men."—Manchester Courier.

A Militia-Colonel and M.P., who has involved himself and friends by mining speculations, is reported to have left the country.

Notwithstanding all that is reported to the contrary with respect to the negociations between Russia and England, it is quite certain that the question of the East remains just where it was a month ago. One of the Ambassadors in Paris, alluding to these reports two or three days ago, said, "We are just where we were; each power is waiting to see what the others will do;" any statement, therefore, as to alliances and counter-alliances, must be received with the greatest caution. Russia will certainly do nothing rashly to provoke the other powers, but she has a fixed policy, from which she is not to be easily diverted.

A scene took place, a few evenings since, at Lady Aylmer's soirée, which has afforded the Parisians much food for gossip and comment. Mr. Henry Bulwer, who represents Lord Granville during his Lordship's absence, was passing through one of the salons, when he encountered Lady Bulwer, who has been residing at Paris for some time, to whom he politely bowed. Her Ladyship, who, it is said, had gone to the soirée with the express intention of insulting her husband's brother, made a dead stop as he passed, and, placing her arms "a-kimbo," commenced a series of grimaces that have scarcely been equalled since the best days of Grimaldi, and continued her vulgar gestures until Mr. Bulwer had passed beyond her sight. The affair has created a feeling of disgust in the minds of all persons, and it is probable that her Ladyship will not have another opportunity of displaying her grotesque performances, either at Lady Aylmer's or elsewhere.—Court Journal.

Sir E. Lytton Bulwer's play, about to be produced at the Haymarket Theatre under the superintendence of Mr. Macready, is called Norman, or the Birthright.

The adjourned meeting of the Army and Navy and Widows' Fund Society took place on Wednesday, and was well attended. Sir George Cockburn was in the chair, and the revised rules referred to in our last were agreed to, with some few exceptions, after four hours' discussion, when the meeting again adjourned to Thursday next. We heartily wish prosperity to the Institution.

We are happy to find that there is no truth in the statement put forth by a contemporary of the death of Sir William Beatty, and that, having returned from Germany, he is now in England. Sir William was at Greenwich Hospital on Tuesday last, and his appearance gave no signs of illness or dissolution.

Clarence Club House.—At an early hour yesterday morning, a fire broke out at this club-house, in Waterloo-place, Pall-mall. The alarm was raised by some of the domestics, and engines were very speedily brought to the spot, fortunately in time to subdue the flames before they had extended to any serious magnitude. The damage is wholly confined to the book-library, which is stated to be much burnt, and a great number of valuable books and other property destroyed. It was caused by carelessness.

Sir Tyrwhitt Jones.—The decease of this Hon. Baronet took place at his seat, Stanley Hall, Shropshire, in his 46th year. He has been for several years an invalid. Sir Tyrwhitt married in 1821 Elizabeth Walwyn, daughter of John M'Namara, Esq., sister to the Dowager Lady Cranstoun, and aunt to Mrs. Nisbett and the Misses Mordaunt, the popular actresses.

Opening of the Bute Docks at Cardiff.—The splendid docks and ship canal at Cardiff, so munificently undertaken and completed at the cost of the Marquis of Bute, were opened on Wednesday se'ennight with great ceremony. A procession was formed upwards of a mile in length, which proceeded from the castle to escort the Noble Marquis to the docks, the gates of which were opened at high water, amid the joyous shouts of about 14,000 spectators, when the Lady Charlotte steamer, Capt. H. T. Parfit entered the lock, towing in the schooner Celerity of Cardiff, the temporary batteries on each side firing salutes; the Samson steamer followed with the fine ship Manlius, with 1,140 tons of timber from Quebec, and which fortuitously reached the dock-gates almost at the moment of their opening, and entered the dock without casting anchor from the time of her leaving Quebec. A public dinner was afterwards given to celebrate the important event to the town of Cardiff.

The British Queen left New York on the 1st inst. at two o'clock P.M., and arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday at one P.M., thus effecting the passage in 14 clear days. She had on board 57 passengers, and about 200,000*l.* in specie. Other securities have been remitted to the amount of about a million.

The Nelson Memorial.—It seems that the doubts which have arisen as to the practicability of carrying into effect the design chosen for the Nelson Memorial, have been confirmed by a report from Sir Robert Smirke, to whom the question had been referred by her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods, &c.

In our advertising columns will be seen the announcement of a new General Life and Invalid Association, the plan and objects of which offer peculiar claims to attention. In addition to the opportunities it affords for effecting assurances of the usual kind, it presents the novel advantage of enabling individuals to make provision for themselves during life, when disabled by business or accidents from their business avocations. An association of this kind has long been wanting, and its establishment must be regarded as a great public benefit. The wealth and respectability of the individuals whose names are inscribed in the list of Directors afford an ample guarantee for the stability of this new association.

At the Kensington Petty Sessions on Wednesday, Ensign Joseph Southwell Stokes, half-pay 80th Foot, described as a short thick-set individual, about 45 years of age, with remarkably curly hair, attired in the dress of a sailor, and wearing a pair of purple morocco slippers, was placed at the bar on several charges of disorderly conduct and wilful damage—viz., destroying the furniture of his landlord, bringing to the house drunken and disorderly characters at all times of the night, &c., &c. He was compelled to pay the damages, and also held to bail.

Steam Navigation.—On Monday last the Archimedes steamer performed an experimental trip from London-bridge to Gravesend and back. The Archimedes has no paddle-wheels, but is propelled by a screw, which is placed in the stern or dead wood of the vessel, under her counter, and just before the rudder. This screw is wholly under water, and the security from an enemy's shot afforded by its being so placed, as well as the absence of paddle-cases, leaving the whole of the ship's sides clear for her guns, in the same manner as the sides of any sailing-vessel, show at once the superiority of the screw propeller over the paddle-wheel, as applicable to fighting vessels; while the position of the screw yields another important advantage in the case of having a strong wind on the ship's beam sufficient in some cases absolutely to lift the windward paddle-wheel out of the water, and nearly to bury the leeward wheel under it; whereas the screw, being in midships and always under water, its action must be uniform, no matter whether the wind be on the beam or otherwise. The Archimedes went at the rate of nine miles an hour with the tide, and about five miles an hour against it—that is, measuring the distances by the shore; and one measured mile she performed in six minutes. She steered easily and accurately, and turned in about double her own length. She also backed with apparent facility, although not so quickly as a vessel propelled by paddle-wheels would have done. In her progress she did not agitate the water as is done by paddle-wheels, and therefore did not cause any danger to small boats or craft approaching her. The water under her stern was smooth, and the only ripple running along her sides was that proceeding from her cutwater, in the same manner as from that of a sailing vessel moving with equal velocity.

Another Suicide from the Top of the Monument.—Yesterday afternoon, at about a quarter past five, a youth of sixteen precipitated himself from the Monument. His body was deplorably mangled by the fall, and upon his being taken up it was found life was extinct. The body was removed to a neighbouring public-house. His name or the cause of self-destruction were not known.

British Auxiliary Legion.—The claims upon the Spanish Government are now in a fair way of being speedily settled. Under the auspices of the British embassy at Madrid, a proposal has been made, within the last few days, by the highly respectable banking-house of O'Shea and Co., of that city, to undertake to make payments of 25,000*l.* every three months, until the whole sum (now about 300,000*l.*) shall have been liquidated. This proposal has been officially notified by the Spanish Government to Sir de Lacy Evans, who leaves London in a few days for Madrid, to complete the arrangement.

Covent Garden.—Artaxerxes was performed for the first time under the new management on Wednesday last, to a house literally crammed. The opera has been got up with a lavish expenditure of money upon entirely new dresses, scenery, and decorations; the whole, not only truly splendid, but in excellent keeping with time and place. In these, as in all other respects, the "management" of Madame is directed by good taste, and an evident desire to provide a rich entertainment for the public.

Haymarket.—The new farce by Mr. Bernard, His Last Legs, produced this week at this theatre, abounds with touches of true humour. Power has taught us to expect the quintessence of impudence in the stage Irishman, and his O'Callaghan does not disappoint us; it is the spirit of easy assurance: we have the brow of brass and the fluent wit of the theatrical Milesian. The farce was received with loud and general applause.

Adelphi.—An elephant made his bow, not metaphorically, but actually, on Monday night, to a very good audience at this theatre, amidst a storm of applause, and went through a series of performances, which evinced his perfect docility, and much greater knowledge of the stage than has fallen to the lot of many popular (biped) performers. He lifted his keeper on his tusks, carried him on his back, assisted him in his descent therefrom, laid himself down, rose up again, walked as if lame, &c., at the word of command, and performed many other extraordinary things.

COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

MEMORIALS FOR ANNUAL PROMOTION.

[For the Naval and Military Gazette.]

Come write, my friends, 'tis now your time, the Service is petitioning,
The Board of Customs wait to read what you've to say.
Be quick, good Sirs, and state your claims; and pray excuse my mentioning,
Your humble memos. all should end with "ever pray."
Don't be squeamish,—never let your modesty get the better of you;
It matters little what you state, they only want a letter from you.
Promotion, Sirs, is now at stake, that's what the world's all trying for;
The Coast Guard world I mean to say, 'tis that they're all applying for.
All you want 's a little brass,—what signifies what others write,
Your merits can't be known to them,—who cares a fig for all their spite?
I'll give you just a hint or two, to show you how to make a case,
And just the heads of all the points which will sound well;
Only bear in mind, you must, that if by chance you lose the race,
It will be through your want of luck and not of zeal.
For after all that's said and done, your memos. may be all too late;
The Board's selection may be made, and your's may be a d—d hard fate:
For others have been in the field, and some of those who, months ago,
Were superseded, still may think they'll carry all before them now.
But quick, get down your book of words, and all the subjects you've reserved;
Count all the tubs your men have seized, and all the lives that they've preserved.
Talk largely of the state of things, so shocking ere you took possession;
Invent some dozen runs just then, and now show their complete suppression.
Nothing, too, would sound so well, nor few things, too, could better tell,
Than touching on the Chartist chaps, and all the rows you helped to quell.
But first and foremost call the Doctor,—let him see if any bones
Have broken, bruised, or injured been, by brick-bats, cudgels, sticks, or stones.
A rupture, too, would not be bad,—a fall or two from off your horse,—
And if by luck you've been half drowned! in every case pray make it worse.
You've heard of some who write at length, and dwell much on humanity;
But I don't think there's much in that, in fact I think it's all my eye.
And some, whose force was rather weak, prefer themselves to throw with double;
Some claim because the chest was fat, whilst others claim for all their trouble
In toiling up the num'rous hills, and falling down and breaking knees, Killing horses;—who knows what they'll claim for next, such times as these!
Some may claim for runs they've proved, and wicked deeds they've brought to light,
Enumerating scores of tubs they've no doubt have been run,—or might.
Don't fail to claim, if, moped about, you've had to sell your traps and lumber;
Don't fail to say you have no friends, although you have them without number.
You'll claim, because you caught a cold, and which brought on a raging fever:—
Don't say you've never been on leave, they'll think you but a gay deceiver.
Enumerate all mighty deeds, your aggrandisement of the nation,
Because you've lots of seizures made through some right trusty information:—
In fact write on, because you're in, your claims are paramount no doubt,
Let others on the half-pay list feed on their hopes, although they're out.
But write, my friends, look sharp, be quick, you'll lose your chance as sure as fate,
And one with half your zeal and claims will profit by your being too late.
Write, write! write!

PEGASUS IN ORDINARY TO THE COAST-GUARD.

Literary Notices.

Nicholas Nickleby. Chapman and Hall.

Now that this admirable work has reached its triumphant conclusion (for such we must pronounce the last two Numbers to be), we cannot refuse ourselves the pleasure of attempting to express, however imperfectly and briefly, the delighted gratitude we owe to its author, and have felt to be accumulating upon us at every succeeding Number, till we fairly despair of finding words to give it due utterance. And we feel this public testimony to be the more a duty, that we find our opinions and sentiments on this truly beautiful and noble production differing in a marked degree—by comparison at least—from those of many enlightened and intelligent friends, from whom we are accustomed to look for a just critical award on matters of this nature. There is a prevalent opinion among the reading world (we do not speak of the writing portion of it, which has not yet had a legitimate opportunity of expressing itself on this subject), that "Nicholas Nickleby" is the least meritorious of Mr. Dickens's productions—that it is inferior in power and pathos to "Oliver Twist,"—in drollery and humour to the "Pickwick Papers,"—and, in just and various views of human life, character, and manners, to both those works.— From this opinion we must dissent, toto cœlo. We hold it to be a mistaken one in each and all of its parts, and still more defective in that point on which it does not express itself: we allude to the moral result likely to ensue from each of the works respectively. From the "Pickwick Papers" there is no moral result to be looked for, and there is none sought, beyond that unconscious and informal one which must ever attend just and judicious satire temperately applied, and which never yet failed to wait upon that most effectual mode of making men better—the making them happier. It is seldom that individual vice or folly is cured by laughing at it—still more seldom by vituperating it; but more rare than either is it that a man is made happier than he was before, without being made wiser and better:—and who ever read "Pickwick,"—from the prince on his throne to the beggar in his back slums,—that did grow the happier man at every chapter?

With regard to "Oliver Twist" on the other hand, we feel constrained to express something more than a doubt that, notwithstanding its unequalled merit as a picture of human nature under those aspects of it which are, more than any other, difficult to delineate, its moral result upon a very large class of its readers has been, upon the whole, anything but salutary. Let it not for a moment be supposed that we would fall into the miserable cant of interdicting or discouraging the delineations of all aspects of human life and society, but those which are familiar and acceptable to eyes polite. But there is a wise and just medium in these matters. Moreover, "there is a time for all things;" and the time for setting forth in a sunny light the amiabilities of house-breakers, the virtues of prostitutes, and the pleasant places of a life of pickpocketing, is not yet arrived. True, there are noble points of moral truth, nobly, however unconsciously, illustrated and inculcated, in "Oliver Twist;" and, viewing it as a whole, we should be sorry if it were unwritten, even looking at it in a didactic light. But we must still feel that its general result upon the mind of the age will not be salutary. At any rate, we cannot help contrasting it, in our imagination, with that which must ensue, from the beautiful and almost perfect production which has called forth the the foregoing remarks. With the single exception of the best productions of Scott, there is no work of the present, and scarcely one of the last century, which, while it takes so kind, and wise, and just a view of our common nature, turns that view to such happy account—not one which makes so large an amount of immediate delight and entertainment, if not subservient, at least conducive, to so wide a range of beneficial results. Nor is there, to the best of our recollection, a single counteracting feature in the whole work, a single character that is not conceived and drawn in that spirit of mingled justice and kindliness, in the absence of which it is a mockery to tell us that we are made in the image of our Creator. Even Squeers has a heart—for his cub of a boy; and Ralph Nickleby himself, with thousands still left in his pocket, cannot survive the discovery that it was his own flesh and blood he had been persecuting to the death.

We must not be tempted into details respecting a work which has perhaps been more extensively read than any other ever was in the time that has elapsed since its publication. But there are two or three features of "Nicholas Nickleby" at which we must be allowed to glance; and the rather that we have not seen them noticed elsewhere, or even heard them referred to in the frequent table-talk which the works of "Boz" have called forth in so extraordinary and unparalleled a degree. And first as to the conception and execution of the two most original characters in the work,—Newman Noggs and Mrs. Nickleby. A great poet has finely described a state of being when "we feel that we are happier than we know;" and something of a similar kind is observable in the great body of the readers of this work, as regards the two characters we have referred to: they feel the truth of every trait and touch of those characters, while they hold the opinion that they are often false and always exaggerated. The truth is that the world, like honest Dogberry in the play, is not half so great a fool as it often insists upon having itself written down. It is the only infallible critic, and has been so any time these three thousand years—though entirely without knowing it—like the man who had been speaking prose all his life, in total ignorance of the fact. We have never met with a more striking instance than the one now in question, of the world being wiser than it fancies itself; and if Mr. Dickens has ever chanced to be vexed by hearing his two admirable creations, as above referred to, spoken of disparagingly, in the course of that stage-coach criticism which is in itself the truest criterion of fame,—let him be consoled with the assurance that his judges did not feel the less wisely and justly because they thought and talked foolishly.

There are several other characters in "Nicholas Nickleby" to which the above remarks apply in a minor degree: but we must not pause to refer to them in detail. Indeed, having already exceeded our limits, we must only notice further the exquisite close of poor Smike's earthly career. It is no exaggeration to say that the scene is truly Shaksperian. There is nothing more touching in human language; nothing more triumphantly consistent with the whole previous conception and execution of one of the finest characters in modern fiction.

The Chronicles of Monstrelet. With Notes and Woodcuts, uniform with the recent edition of "Froissart." W. Smith.

The "Chronicles of Monstrelet" truly, says the introductory note, form an immediate continuation of those of "Froissart," and take up the general history of Europe, from the point at which that work terminates. Extending over a space of fifty-three years, they furnish as minute details of the occurrences of the times as the volumes of his celebrated predecessor, and they are further distinguished by the greater accuracy of the dates, and the singular fidelity of his transcripts of public acts and original documents. This accuracy has rendered the "Chronicles of Monstrelet" one of the most valuable storehouses from whence more modern historians have drawn materials for the correction of the errors or misrepresentations of contemporary writers, and they are esteemed accordingly. But this business-like accuracy has not interfered with the spirited flow of narration, which so charms us in the pages of Froissart; we may point to the account of the battle of Azincourt as a striking instance of his descriptive power. "The character of Monstrelet," says the writer of his life in the Biographie Universelle, "stands high as an historian. Henault, Bayle, Moreri, la père Lelong, Foppens, Duverdier, Duchene, Sórel, Lenglet-Dufresnoy, all unite in praising the accuracy of his dates, the simplicity (naiveté) of his style, and his lucid narration. His work is a rich mine, which may be explored with advantage by the philosopher who labours to ascertain facts, and to trace the causes which have influenced the springs of action."

We will only add that the Parts before us, I. to IV., are beautifully printed and illustrated, and extraordinarily cheap. The publication will form an excellent library book, valuable to the historian, the classic, and to every Military reader.

Friendship's Offering and Winter's Wreath. Smith and Elder.

Of "Christmas presents," this, the first in the field, has high claim to public favour. We have always considered it to be one of the most pleasing of the "Annuals." Its literary portion possesses a various and vivid interest, and the plates, ten in number, are full of beauty and character. They are engraved by Bull, Cook, Higham, Jeavons, Periam, Simmons, and Smith, from drawings and pictures by Lady Burghersh, Miss Corbaux, Messrs. Andrews, Corbould, Hervé, Roberts, Salter Stone, and Warren.

Memoirs of My Dog. By Ingram Cobbin, M.A. G. Berger.

A very entertaining little volume, prettily got up, admirably calculated to interest youth, improve the mind, and create kindly feelings towards that affectionate and faithful friend of man, the dog, and indeed towards the whole of the animal creation.

Major Laing.—On the death of this enterprising traveller in Africa, the Africans took an inventory of his effects, with a view to sending them to the British Admiral. They were sorely puzzled to make out the catalogue, and in utter despair, described a couple of tooth-brushes as "Two scrapers made of pig's hair," and set down his spectacles as "Two looking-glasses for the nose."

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Bart., K.C.B., was appointed commander-in-chief of the Company's forces on the Bombay establishment.

By general orders, dated 10th July, 1839, the Commander-in-chief at Madras has directed it to be notified for general information, that his Excellency has determined to discontinue the practice of appointing officers to act as adjutants and quarter-masters of native corps, in anticipation of their subsequently qualifying themselves to pass the prescribed examination in the Hindostanee language; and that for the future, no officer will be appointed who has not been previously passed as adjutant, or interpreted respectively, unless in emergent cases, which may not at the time admit of any other arrangement.

Joudpore.—The Joudpore Rajah continues to pursue the course he has been permitted to follow for the last five or six years, in refusing to pay tribute, and still evades the demands of the British Government.

Col. Sutherland has called for two regiments of cavalry, one of European Infantry, six of N. I., a strong detachment of horse and foot artillery, together with a heavy battering train, the whole to be in readiness by Sept., so as to reach Joudpore by October. It appears, that at the last interview, Rajah Maun Sing was closeted with Col. Sutherland for the better part of the day, and agreed to concede every point that was exacted. No sooner was the resident's back turned, than the infatuated chief undid his own work, by a positive refusal to put his promises in execution. Personally, Maun Sing is not ill-disposed to the fulfilment of his promises, but he is completely in the hands of his gooroo and other paths, whose influence over him has led to his vacillation and abandonment of pledge; and he hopes to evade the punishment due to his duplicity, by throwing any blame that may attach, upon their shoulders. Maun Sing has a large and well equipped body of horse, with abundant troops of other descriptions. The presence of so strong a corps as the one required by Col. Sutherland, will have its full effect in humbling the pride of other pugnacious neighbours in Rajwara, who, though jealous enough of each other, would willingly unite in opposition to our supremacy, if the force about to be employed were, from the smallness of its numbers, incompetent to the task of subduing their refractory spirit.

On the 4th July, the bank of Bengal declared a dividend of eight per cent. per annum on its past six months' transactions. This is a falling off of about two per cent. since its last half-year's dividend, whereas, the Union Bank was expected to make a dividend, at the next half-yearly meeting, of ten or eleven per cent.

The number of shares taken in the new steam project at Bengal, amounted on the 15th June to 1923, while at Madras the number of shares subscribed is only 194.

Indian Coal.—A trial has just been made of Indian coal in the small steamer, and the result is most satisfactory. In the experiments trial was made (for the purpose of comparison) of good Scotch and of Hosingabad coal. The steam was got up by charging each of the furnaces with one kind exclusively. From that supplied with Hosingabad, the steam was procured fifteen minutes sooner than from that charged with the Scotch, and with one-half the expenditure of fuel. Experiments were likewise made by burning both kinds for a given time alternately, and in both the furnaces. The result was, that for every five cwt. of the Indian coal, six of the Scotch were consumed, and no difference was observable in the production of steam. The Indian coal, which had been brought upon camels, was, in consequence of the carriage, much broken, and contained a large proportion of dust, which, however, was not separated, but weighed with the rest. The rate of steaming was upwards of ten miles an hour. Reflecting upon what these experiments must soon inevitably lead to, we think they will be regarded as the most important ever made in India.—Bombay Times, June 15.

China.—The Ariel sailed from Macao, with private despatches direct to Suez, on the 30th May. A private letter from Macao of that date, states that 20,291 chests of opium, value 3,100,000*l.*, is delivered up to the Chinese. All British subjects will be out of Canton next week. Every ship is to-day out of the Whampoa Reach. The Chinese opened the river eight days since to incoming vessels, but no ship has yet applied for a pilot. It is feared the Americans will remain in Canton, and try to monopolize the China trade. Commissioner Lin's edict of the 19th May, remits the punishment of the sixteen hostages, by the heavenly benevolence of the Great Emperor. They were to give bond never to return to the celestial empire again. The Superintendant, Capt. Elliott, left Canton, accompanied by the sixteen hostages, in official order, on the 22d May.

Cavalry Buying-Out Fund.—The following letter appears in the Englishman, June 20:—"Notice to absentees from Cavalry corps, interested in the Establishment of a Fund for Buying-Out Lieut.-Cols.—Dear Gentlemen—We have unbounded satisfaction in announcing, that our persevering and unwearied efforts, hopeless as these seemed for a long while, have at length been crowned with success, the whole of our ten regiments having now unanimously agreed to join the establishment of a fund for buying out lieut.-cols. of our branch of the army. Having consented to act as a committee to conduct the mangement of the general business of the fund, we have made an offer of the bonus to those lieut-cols. likely to accept it immediately, and have prepared the several regiments to be ready with their respective contributions the moment we intimate the number of steps that are procurable. The fund may thus be said to be now in actual operation. For all particulars of the scheme of the fund, and for the scale of contributions, &c., we refer you to your respective corps, and remain, Dear Gentlemen, yours faithfully, R. Austruther, Maj. 6th L. C.—J. A. D. Fergusson.—F. Macmullin.—Sultanpore Benares, 12th June."

The following extracts contain some interesting details respecting the death of the late Rajah Runjeet Singh. This event took place at Lahore, on the 27th June, and had been for some time considered as fast approaching. The immediate cause of his death was dropsy, attended with fever. A vast concourse of devotees, attracted by the boundless liberality with which he dispensed his treasure among them, had assembled from all the neighbouring states, to offer up prayers to the gods for his recovery. As he became very ill, dreading the idea of departing from all his worldly wealth, he ordered his treasures and jewels to be brought forth. One hundred cows with horns gilded, one hundred caparisoned horses, and five of the best breed all equipped with gold and jewelled saddles, four elephants with gold and silver bowdahs, a golden chair and bed-stead, plates, strings of pearls, swords, guns, and innumerable other valuables, were given in alms, and deposited with Missur Bellee Ram, to be distributed in all parts of India, and at Gya, Juggernaut, and all the sacred Hindoo shrines and temples. The gifts made on the day of his death are computed to have amounted to about two crores of rupees, but, making allowances for exaggeration, it can be no less than one crore, 1,000,000*l*. The Maharajah sent for the precious diamond Koh-i-noor, from Bellee Ram, and wanted to give it in alms, but he was dissuaded by the Rajas, who represented how invaluable a diamond it was, worth the revenues of all India, and that there would be no one to buy it from the Brahmins. This celebrated jewel, it is said, the Maharajah has bequeathed to the temple of Juggernaut, to adorn the Hindoo image.

The death of the Maharajah being known, the Ranees, Koonwur Khurruck Singh, Raja Dhian Singh Jemedar, Khooshal Singh and others, raised cries and lamentations, tearing their hair, casting earth on their heads, throwing themselves on the ground and striking their heads against bricks and stones. Raja Dhian Singh prepared to burn himself with the Maharajah; but the Koonwur and the sirdars threw their turbans at his feet to dissuade him, alleging that without him the affairs of the state would be deranged. It was not until after some hours passed in thus beseeching him, that they could prevail upon him. Four Ranees came and approached the corpse weeping, and resolved to burn themselves with their husband. Runee Guddun, taking Rajah Dhian Singh by the hand, and placing it on the breast of the corpse, made him swear never to be a traitor to Koonwur Khurruck Singh, and Now Nehal Singh, or to be inattentive to the welfare of the state. Koonwur Khurruck Singh was in like manner made to swear to be led away by no misrepresentations of interested parties to renounce Raja Dhian Singh; and the torments due for the slaughter of a thousand cows were imprecated on him who should violate his oath. The four Ranees, clad in the richest apparel and jewels, with many lacs of rupees, accompanied the procession, bestowing every now and then some portion of their jewels and ornaments on the singers; and the Brahmins having arrived at the funeral pile, made of sandal-wood, the corpse was placed upon it. At ten o'clock, nearly the time fixed by the Brahmins, Koonwur Khurruck Singh set fire to the pile, and the ruler of the Punjab, with four Ranees and seven slave-girls, were reduced to ashes. A small cloud appeared in the sky over the burning pile, and having shed a few drops, cleared away. No one saw a hope of relief, but in resignation. Rajah Dhian Singh attempted four times to jump into the burning pile, but was withheld by the multitude. After the ceremony was over, Koonwur Khurruck Singh and the other chiefs, bathed themselves in the Ruva, and returned to the Hugoree Garden.

Every thing having been prepared the previous day for the removal of the ashes towards the sacred Ganges at Hurdwar, the procession left the palace on the morning of the 2d July. Every thing was conducted as if he had been alive travelling about; so much so, that a person accustomed to his way of travelling, and arriving, unaware of his demise, would not have seen any thing that could have led him to suspect that event, except, perhaps, the absence of troops, and the sirdars and umlah's tents, &c. All has hitherto gone on in the most tranquil manner possible, and there is every prospect of a continuance of this state of affairs. The Rajah Dhian Singh continues premier, and all the other places are to be kept by those who held them in the Maharajah's lifetime; the army is to be kept on the same footing as formerly.

The quiet manner in which this important event has passed off, is owing to the arrangements made in contemplation of it, under the management of Mr. Clerk, the British envoy at Lahore. The question of succession has been long since settled with our government, and one of the implied conditions of our recent treaties has been, that we should support the cause of the heir Khurruck Singh. The rivals against him may be divided into three classes; the followers of No Nehal Singh, those of Shere Singh, and those of the European generals. Our troops at Ferozepore and Loodianah will, doubtless, advance, and the energy and firmness of Mr. Clerk, in charge of our political relations with the court, is a warranty that British interest and British influence will not be lost sight of.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—July 28—HELEN, Henderson, from Calcutta. 24th—FORTITUDE, Wilson, from London, and sailed 31st for Van Diemen's Land. 17th—SOMERSETSHIRE, Jackson, sailed for South Australia. 19th—ANNA MARIA, Edwards, for Calcutta. 20th—JOHN FLEMING, Rose, for Madras.

MEMORANDUM.—The PREMIER spoke the PANAMA, from China, June 4, which reported all British ships to have left the Whampoa except the ANNE JANE, which would load for England. The whole of the British Residents were at Macao, and the merchants refused to take any consignments of ships attempting to pass the Bogue, and not complying with the Superintendent's orders. The BELRAVEN was refused by the consignees, or would have proceeded up the river.

THE BRITISH OFFICER AT THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE LATE WAR*.

AMONGST the superior officers of the period to which we refer were some precious relics of what was termed "The American War School," men who had flogged their soldiers from one end of the continent of America to the other; out of whose mouths every third word was an oath, every third sentence a "brag." They were blusterers by profession, floggers by principle as well as inclination and habit, and surpassed Bacchus himself in their power of deglutition. They in their very hearts believed that there could be no other method of making the soldier either fight or obey than that of flogging; and as these worthies were looked up to by the young officer as the very "Gods of War," upon whom he modelled himself, whose aim and ambition it was to become one day or other as they were, it was no wonder that flogging was perpetuated †, and that drinking and swearing continued to flourish as they did for many years afterwards both

* From a Pamphlet by Major Ulysses Macnamara.

† We ourselves remember having witnessed the infliction of nine hundred lashes on the body of a man who had at the same time been reduced to the ranks from Serjeant, by one of these worthies, of whom the following characteristic anecdote is related. He had learnt that some young officers of his regiment (amongst whom was one that he had recently offended) were in the habit of practising with pistols at a mark. One day at dinner, and immediately after the cloth was removed, he rose from his chair, and thus addressed the President of the mess:—"Mr. President, I understand that some of the officers of this regiment are in the habit of amusing themselves by pistol-firing. Their object is best known to themselves. But I wish you and every officer of this corps to understand that I have a brown coat at home, and that I am quite ready to put it on whenever they feel in the slightest degree desirous that I should appear in it."

amongst the officers ‡ and soldiers. The morality of the Army (we use the word in its ordinary acceptation) was left entirely to the soothing influence of the articles of war. There were garrison chaplains, it is true; but whether the torrent of iniquity was too rapid, or the temptation they were exposed to too strong, well as they might have been disposed at the outset, they generally ended by becoming mute or running with the stream; and either silently witnessed, or themselves enacted a part in, scenes that were certainly anything but evangelical. That they were more respected for thus acting we will not take upon ourselves to assert, but this we will say, that they were not only better liked, but had frequently the satisfaction of hearing themselves called "Devilish good fellows§."

It was at this period considered that no man went into the Army who was fit for anything else. The service was considered to be a sort of refuge for the destitute in morals as well as in abilities. To offer a son as a "sacrifice to gunpowder," as it was termed, was a measure resorted to only in very extreme cases indeed—when "young hopeful" had become either an irreclaimable profligate or an immeasurable dunce. We of course allude to the higher and wealthier orders. There were always, as there still is, abundance of men who sought for commissions as a mere means of subsistence, or who, tired of the drudgery of a counter, were willing to "work at the Army," under the visionary notion that the King's commission converted a jackass into a gentleman; fellows who in an action would leave their men to run after a horse, or go to the rear to help the pioneers to bring up ammunition; quill-drivers and measurers of tape, who, as they brought "nothing" into the Army, took as little away with them, when they were killed, out of it.

Some there were who became soldiers from higher and nobler views and feelings—ambition, patriotism, the love of fame and distinction—who were born gentlemen, and who were gentlemen; but they were scarcely in the proportion of one to five, and were to be found for the most part in "privileged corps ||." The great mass of the officers of the British regiments of the line were, at the commencement of the last war, far under par (taking any European Army of the day as the standard) in any of the military essentials or even in common education.

The consequences, unnoticed or deemed unimportant whilst the Army remained at home, or was employed only in desultory warfare, blazed forth conspicuously, when, at a future period, and joined to foreign troops, it took the field on the continent of Europe. Happy was the man (then) who understood some half-dozen words of French or German, or who had not quite forgotten his Latin accidence, who had completely mastered his "pot-hooks" before he left school, and could write a tolerable legible and well-spelt letter. He was sought for with avidity. Generals vied with one another to get him on their staff, appointments courted his acceptance. So few, however, of these gifted individuals could be found, that many confidential staff situations were necessarily held by foreigners, and we have heard of a General Officer in command of a British Army (opposed to a French Army) in the field, whose first and principal Aide-de-Camp was a Frenchman ¶.

The fact is, that as character and morals were points of perfect indifference as regarded the soldier, so were education and military attainments as related to the officer. The Commander-in-Chief no more thought of ascertaining whether a boy had been sent to school before he recommended him to his Majesty for a commission in the Army, than the recruiting-Serjeant did of satisfying himself that the candidate for the stripes was not either a drunkard or a thief before he put a shilling into his hand. We do not mean to say exactly that there were at this time MANY officers in the Army who could neither read nor write, but we certainly happened to know one (and a young Scotchman, moreover, who could scarcely speak three words of any other language than Gallic) when he joined an English regiment, and we do not think it very likely that he had been taught to write even that; all that we contend for is (and it is sufficient for our purpose), that the candidates for the British Army were not, at this period, generally even average men in point of education and abilities, and that, consequently, as the executors of a military system based, as we have said, on entirely false principles, and of unexampled severity, the soldier was much more likely to suffer than to profit by their ignorance. After an officer had once joined his regiment, if he could manage to become perfect master of polish and pipe clay, and conduct a company through the eighteen manœuvres of Dundas, all beyond this was considered by his superiors to be mere "leather and prunella."

‡ At this period an officer's military reputation in a great measure depended upon the quantity of wine he could take in at one sitting, without being obliged to take up his quarters for the night under the mess-table. The higher grades were not without a suspicion that their fitness for command was measured by the same rule. Our Vice-Chairman once saw a Commander of the Forces and the Admiral commanding his Majesty's fleet on one of the foreign stations, with four dozen of their respective suites, fully caparisoned, dance a "Sarabande" on the table at three o'clock in the morning, amidst the decanters and wine-glasses.

§ We have been more than once in company with "gentlemen in black" at the mess-table after twelve o'clock on a Saturday night, from whom we have heard a most edifying sermon on sobriety a few hours afterwards.

‖ Usually styled "gentlemen's sons," to denote their inferiority in the purely military accomplishments of the day. We well remember when we looked upon them as mere "tailors," and when we would not have exchanged our five-and threepenny parchment for a "Lew-tenant Kurnelcy in the Goarden." We were, indeed, once offered a Lieutenancy in the sacred phalanx in exchange for one in the Flatfoots, which we refused. We are not quite sure, however, if such an exchange was now offered to us, upon equal terms, that we might not feel disposed to accept it.

¶ An officer who had been Secretary to Sir Charles Grey, in the West Indies, had the command of the western district at the commencement of the late war. In common with others in command, he was directed to send with his half-yearly reports a descriptive sketch of the country within his command, the course, length, and breadth of rivers, &c., and general face of the country. The following is, verbatim, a copy of his report.—"The Welsh mountains in this climate deserve consideration."

When Admiral Bingley was appointed to the East India station he was a young and healthy man; but, being anxious to secure a competency for his family, he insured his life for the sum of 1,500*l*. On the very day, however, that he effected this assurance, he got a severe wetting, erysipelas ensued, and the Admiral died within 48 hours. His widow received the full amount of the assurance in less than a fortnight afterwards.

THE LATE SIR PETER HALKETT, BART.,
ADMIRAL OF THE BLUE, G.C.H., ETC. ETC.

THIS officer was the second son of the late Sir John Halkett, Bart., of Pitfirran, in Fifeshire, by Mary, daughter of the Honourable John Hamilton, a branch of the Haddington family.

He appears to have entered the Navy in August, 1777, and to have been made Lieutenant in October, 1789; but there is no record of his early services, until we find him in that capacity on board the Syren frigate, attached to the Duke of York's expedition to Holland in 1793.

His Royal Highness having taken his passage to Holland in that ship, had the opportunity of noticing the zeal and activity displayed by Mr. Halkett, particularly in assisting the garrison of Williamstadt, at that time besieged by the French. The Duke obtained for him the rank of Commander in April, 1793; and so strongly recommended him that he was made Post 13th August, 1794, and soon appointed to the Circe, of 28 guns, on the North Sea station.

During the mutiny of 1797, Capt. Halkett's ship, the Circe, was one of those that escaped the contagion, and he received the thanks of the Admiralty and the freedom of the town of Hull, for the judicious conduct which he adopted on that occasion.

Throughout the year 1797, the Circe formed part of Sir Henry Trollope's squadron, watching the Dutch Fleet in the Texel; and in the battle of Camperdown, on the 11th of October, that ship was one of Admiral Duncan's repeaters.

Captain Halkett was next appointed to the Apollo, which ship was unfortunately lost on the Haak Sands, Jan. 7, 1799. The crew were all saved, and brought to England in a neutral vessel, and the officers (excepting the Pilot, to whose neglect the accident was owing) were acquitted of all blame.

A new frigate having been named Apollo shortly after, Captain Halkett was appointed to command her; and from that period up to the Spring of 1802, when he paid her off at Portsmouth, performed much active service in the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico, capturing several of the enemy's privateers.

His next command was the Ganges, 74; and on the 12th of August, 1812, he obtained his flag, and hoisted it in 1814 on board the Gladiator, as second in command at Portsmouth. At the general promotion of July, 1821, he was advanced to Vice-Admiral; and on the change of Ministry in the winter of 1834, when Sir George Cockburn was recalled from the West Indies to take his seat at the Board of Admiralty, Sir Peter Halkett was appointed to succeed him. Sir George Cockburn was advised to retain his post, on account of the inability of Sir Robert Peel's Government; but when his tour of service had expired, Sir Peter Halkett, who had incurred considerable expense of outfit, named his Captain, Secretary, Flag Lieutenant, &c., and for these reasons felt his disappointment keenly, was most handsomely and considerately confirmed by Lord Minto in the intended appointment, and succeeded Sir George Cockburn in the North American and West India command, 12th Feb., 1836. This being a Vice-Admiral's command, he relinquished, on his promotion to Admiral of the Blue, 10th January, 1837; since which time, the gallant officer has resided principally at his seat in Scotland, where he died at a very advanced age, greatly respected, on the 8th inst. Sir Peter was member of the Committee of the Kinlock Bequest for relief of wounded seamen and soldiers, and he had a medal from the Prince of Orange for his services in Holland.

Sir Peter Halkett succeeded to his title as sixth Baronet, on the decease of his brother, 26th Jan., 1837. He married, 2d Oct., 1802, Elizabeth, daughter of W. Todd, Esq., by whom he had one son, now Sir John Halkett, Bart., a Commander in the Royal Navy, who married Amelia, daughter of Col. Conway, and succeeds to the title and estates.

Tender Wish.—A beggar at Dublin had been a long time besieging an old gouty limping gentleman, who refused his mite with much irritability, on which the mendicant said—"Ah, please your honour, I wish your heart was as tender as your toes."

Kissing.—The grammar of the kiss has not yet been written. True, a young lady being once asked whether the kiss, being a substantive, was proper or common, archly replied that it was both proper and common; but a more enlarged view may be taken of the subject. I find there are only three regular kisses (properly so called), and these may be denominated—1, the kiss negative, 2, the kiss positive, and, 3, the kiss superlative. The first, or negative, consists in kissing a lady's hand. The second, or positive, consists in kissing her cheek. And the third, or superlative, consists in kissing her lips. There are, besides, two auxiliary kisses—viz., the kiss passive, such as is inflicted by old maiden aunts, nurses, and grandmothers, and the kiss active, in use (principally) on the Gretna-green road, per gli amanti, e novelli sposi. The first (the kiss passive) is generally declined by the kisee, whilst the latter (the kiss active) governs both kisser and kissee (or, as it is more analytically written, kiss-ER and kiss-EE), in number as well as in gender. Independent of the preceding regular and auxiliary kisses, there are, for the convenience of society, a few supernumerary (or irregular) ones, such as the incidental, or stage kiss; the cooing, or a-la-turterelle kiss; the echo, or percussion kiss: and the barley-sugar kiss, or kiss en papiotte.

PRAYER AT SEA.—If prayer was not instinctive to man, it is here that it would have been invented, by being left alone with their thoughts and their weaknesses in the presence of the abyss of the heavens, in the immensity of which the sight is lost, and of the sea, from which they are only separated by a fragile plank, the ocean roaring meanwhile, whistling and howling like the cries of a thousand wild beasts, the blasts of wind making the cordages yield a harsh sound, and the approach of night increasing every peril and multiplying every terror. But prayer was not invented: it was born with the first sigh, with the first joy, the first sorrow of the human heart; or rather, man was born to pray, to glorify God, or to implore Him was his only mission here below; all else perishes before him or with him; but the cry of glory, of admiration, or of love, which he raises to the Creator, does not perish on his passing from the earth; it re-ascends, it resounds from age to age, in the ear of the Almighty, like the echo of his own voice, like the reflection of his own magnificence. It is the only thing in man which is divine, and which he can exhale with joy and pride, for this pride is a homage to him to whom closer homage is due, the infinite Being.—Lamartine's Pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

BLOWING UP THE ROYAL GEORGE.—At Woolwich Academy, on 24th June, 1789, the contrivance of one Sergeant Bell for blowing up the Royal George was tried upon a vessel built by his directions upon a scale of one inch to fifty of the Royal George's size. The vessel was sunk in the river Thames, and, with 50lb. of powder afterwards conducted into her magazine, was blown to pieces. The experiment took place at high water, and answered every expectation of the inventor of it.—Gentleman's Magazine, 1789, p. 753.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

TO RAILROAD and COACH TRAVELLERS.—AROMATIC SPICE PLASTERS for the CHEST.—Coughs, Colds, Asthmas, Shortness of Breath, Pain or Tightness of the Chest, Affections of the Lungs, &c., are effectually relieved, and in many cases entirely prevented by the timely application of WRAY'S Aromatic Spice Plasters to the Chest, which are far superior to the common Warm Plasters, and, in many cases, entirely supersede the use of internal remedies. No person during the winter ought to be without one, travellers by railroad in particular.—Prepared only by M. O. AT A SPONTANEOUS MEETING, held in the ROYAL NAVAL ANNUITANT SOCIETY'S OFFICE, at DEVONPORT, on the 5th day of October, 1839, GEORGE LEACH, Esq. in the Chair.

It appearing to this meeting that the hapless destitution amongst the Female Orphans calls loudly upon the sympathies of the benevolent Public for the establishment of an Asylum, to reclaim them from idleness, and rear them to habits of industry and usefulness, and to qualify them as good domestic servants.

It having also been reported to the meeting, that the Lord of the Manor of Stoke Damerel, had offered a spot of ground in a most eligible situation, for a term of Ninety-nine Years, upon the payment of a small Annual Conventionary Rent, whereon to erect an Asylum—

It was resolved unanimously—That the same be gratefully accepted. That an Institution be forthwith established, denominated "The British Female Orphan Asylum," for Seamen, Soldiers, Artificers, and Mechanics, who are now, or have been, employed in any department of Her Majesty's service, together with the Orphans of Civilians That a Committee of Management be appointed, and a Committee was nominated accordingly, with permission to add to its numbers. That Mr. G. F. Somerville do act as Secretary, and be instructed to prepare an address to the Public, a code of Rules, &c., and when the same are complete, to lay them before this Committee. Adjourned.

GEORGE LEACH, Chairman.
G. F. SOMERVILLE, Acting Secretary.

THE BRITISH FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

Established for the Female Orphans of Seamen, Soldiers, Artificers, and Mechanics, who are now, or who have been, employed in any Department of Her Majesty's Service, together with the Orphans of Civilians.

Established at Devonport the 5th of October, 1839.

ADDRESS.

The Projectors of this most benevolent Institution, together with all the charitable and humane who reside in Devonport, Stonehouse, and their vicinities, containing extensive Naval and Military Establishments, and surrounded by a population of about 100,000, a considerable proportion of whom are directly connected with the Public Service, have long felt the absolute necessity of an Institution, upon an enlarged and liberal basis, for the maintenance and education, in habits of industry, of the poor female children belonging to those classes, in order to qualify them for the situation of domestic servant; the want of whom has been, and still is, experienced by almost every housekeeper.

It is a well-known fact, that the best servants are those who have been drilled into a system, and have undergone the discipline taught in a well-conducted Institution; mutual esteem is produced by the knowledge that they are watched over, and cared for long after they have quitted such an establishment; and great good is effected through the instrumentality of an efficient Registry Department, granting periodical rewards to those who can produce certificates of good conduct from their employers, for long continuance in the same service.

Although the Projectors have the ability, yet it would be needless to recount the many instances of distress and destitution that have come under their immediate observation, caused by the death of either parent, by which the young female has lost that restraint so necessary to her future success in life; thoughtlessness and inexperience so natural to youth lead them into many irregularities, and consequent misery ensues. This it is the principal object of the Institution to prevent.

A few years since, the Naval and Marine Officers, resident in this vicinity, created a Fund, from which they at present maintain nine Orphans of Seamen and Marines in the Devon and Cornwall Orphan Asylum, but they have no control over the Institution; and, deeply feeling the disappointment which numbers of poor orphans experience upon the election of the fortunate candidates, they have become convinced of the absolute necessity for a more extended Institution.

The Army and Civil Departments are altogether neglected, and will hail the "British Female Orphan Asylum" as a great boon.

The Lord of the Manor of Stoke Damerel has very generously offered to the Institution an ample and eligible spot of ground for a building, upon a nominal rent.

We are commanded by Divine authority to assist the widow and protect the helpless orphan, and in following out these precepts, the blessing of Almighty God will assuredly rest upon this Institution.

The following Donations for the Building, and Annual Subscriptions were forthwith entered into:—

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.

By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the KALYDOR. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its SPECIFIC QUALITIES, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all harshness and irritability, and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each Bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

A LADY, the Daughter of an Officer of Rank in the Army, is desirous to obtain the situation of Governess in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family. She has resided upwards of Six Years on the Continent, and would not object to return thither. Is perfectly conversant with the French and Italian Languages, Drawing and Painting, Music, Plain and Ornamental Needle-Work, &c. &c.; is a native of England and a Protestant. Applications at the Office of the Naval and Military Gazette will meet with due attention.

JOHN CARTER, CHRONOMETER-MAKER TO THE ROYAL NAVY, in compliance with the wishes of his numerous friends, begs to inform them that he has opened a City Establishment for the sale of his Marine TIME PIECES, at No. 61, CORNHILL, where Merchants, Captains, and other scientific men, may always meet with Chronometers, Clocks, and Watches of the same sterling quality as those which have called forth from the Astronomer-Royal the following important certificate:—

"Royal Observatory, Greenwich, Oct. 22, 1838.

"I certify that since the commencement of the annual trials of Chronometers at the Royal Observatory, in competition for rewards offered by the Government for the best Chronometers, Mr. Carter, Chronometer-maker, of Tooley-street, has obtained a greater number of rewards than any other Chronometer-maker, and that he obtained the two last rewards given by the Government.

"I certify also, that since I have had charge of the Royal Observatory, several Chronometers constructed by Mr. Carter, either belonging to the Royal Navy, or on trial for purchase by the Government, have been rated at the Royal Observatory, and that they have generally been extremely good. (Signed)

"G. B. AIRY."

Chronometers carefully adjusted, timed, and rated.—61, Cornhill.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain and inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I wrote last to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-st., Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, Sir, yours truly, "T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievious, it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. SHARWOOD is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vender not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

Advantages of this Association.

An ample subscribed capital.

Assurers admitted to the same rights as the Shareholders.

Four-fifths of the profits divided every five years.

Advances made to the assured, on giving security for future premiums and interest.

An important and peculiar feature in this Association is, that the assurers may reside in any part of the globe either by paying an extra premium, (or at their option,) by an arrangement for a stipulated deduction from the sum assured in case of death abroad, but for Europe, Australia, the Cape of Good Hope, or the British Possessions in North America, no extra premium or deduction is incurred.

Premiums may be paid quarterly, half yearly, or annually.

Policies may be made payable on the assured attaining any given age, such as 55, 60, or 65, or on death previously.

ANNUITY BRANCH.

In addition to the following advantageous Scale of Rates, four-fifths of the profits are divided among the annuitants every three years by way of bonus.

It will be seen by the Tables of this association, that a person aged 20 may, by paying 6s. 9d. a-month, or 3l. 10s. 6d. a-year, secure to himself 1l. a-week, during Sickness, and 100l. at Death, even should he have made but one payment. Other ages are also provided for at a gradual increase of premium, to the amount of 5l. a-week in Sickness, and 100l. at Death.

For Shares and Prospectuses, apply (post paid) at the Office, 19, Chatham-place, London, and to the Company's Agents in most of the large towns in the Kingdom.

N.B.—The appropriation of the Shares of this Association will take place the 31st instant, and their Office will open for the General Business of Assurance on the 1st of November next.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.—J. DELCROIX and CO., 158, New Bond-street, beg leave most respectfully to solicit the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to their extensive, long, and highly-celebrated Establishment, and to inform them that the only genuine, exquisitely-fragrant, and delicate Perfumes, are those which are manufactured by themselves, and which bear the address of 158, New Bond-street, with the signature of J. Delcroix.

The high and envied celebrity of J. Delcroix's Perfumes has produced many spurious imitations, for the selling of which J. Delcroix and Co. have obtained Injunctions from the High Court of Chancery against several parties; and they beg to apprize their connexion that they will persist in their determination to proceed against all persons that may attempt any invasion of their rights.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 8.—(From our own Correspondent.) Hercules, Scout, and Medea steam frigate, have all gone to the eastward; the first two to be paid off, the latter to have a complete refit. The Sapphire went early on Monday morning to Glasgow or Greenock to embark troops and convey them to Gibraltar. Mr. Miller, her proper Commander, is to assume the command there. The Numa transport has gone to Gravesend with some invalids of the 18th and 58th regiments, she is afterwards to be sent to Bermuda with stores, &c. Pantaloon has been down Channel and returned again; she was ordered off suddenly to cruize for the relief of the homeward-bound trade, but by the time she got to Falmouth the wind came round to S. W., and she bore up. Revenge came from Plymouth yesterday morning, and is now at Spithead. She is about thirty AB's short, but this will not detain her proceeding to sea again, so soon as the crew are paid advance. Blonde has been hauled into the Dock-yard basin this day to be in readiness for fitting so soon as Captain Thomas Bourchier joins, and enters the marines and a few petty officers. Emerald tender has returned from the river; in the late severe weather she sprung her mast, and is now alongside the Dock-yard to have another. Col. Pasley's fleet have been brought into harbour by the Messenger steamer: all further attempts at the wreck of the Royal George are postponed until the spring of next year. It is settled that Capt. John W. Montagu is to supersede Capt. Ellice in the command of the Britannia. Admiral Sir Edward Codrington will be down at the next Quarterly Naval Dinner, but it is not expected that he will hoist his flag until the 1st of December; the only change which has yet taken place in the Britannia is Mr. Cole having relieved Mr. Yule in his appointment as Master of her. The ships having the preference with the Dock-yard are Queen and Warspite. Madagascar will be reported ready next week. Fantome has opened a rendezvous at this place for them. Ships in Port—Revenge at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Messenger and Emerald in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, 7th Nov.—(From our own Correspondent.)—1st—Sailed the Camel tender for Holyhead and Liverpool, with stores for the packet service. 2nd—Sailed the Hamoaze tender for Falmouth, with stores, and returned to this port on the 6th with old stores. 3rd—Arrived the Tortoise tender, with returned stores from Pembroke. 4th—Arrived the Pantaloon, 10, from Spithead. 5th—Sailed the Revenge, 78, Capt. Hon. W. Waldegrave, for Spithead, and the Raven cutter, 4, Lieut.-Com. D. R. B. Mapleton, from Liverpool, with volunteers for the Revenge. 6th—Arrived the Fearless, st.-v., Mr. Wm. Combes, Acting-Master, from Milyhead, and sailed the following day for Portsmouth. 7th—Sailed the Wizard, 10, Lieut.-Com. Thos. F. Birch, for South America, with despatches for Commodore Sulivan. The Rolla, 10, Lieut.-Com. Charles Hull, is in daily expectation of sailing for the Cape of Good Hope. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Carron st.-v., Diligence N.T.—In Bampool—Pantaloon. In the Sound—Rolla, Raven.

MILFORD HAVEN, 6th Nov.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On Thursday last Lieut. Reed joined Her Majesty's mail steam-packet Prospero on this station, vice Lieut. Hoseason, appointed to the Alecto at Woolwich. Lieut. Roepel has been appointed to the Pygmy steamer at this port, but has not yet joined. The Old Monkey steamer is expected here every hour in charge of Mr. Armstrong from the Clyde, on passage to Portsmouth to be paid off. She has been employed on surveying service on that coast. Mr. Fullager of Pembroke-yard has been appointed Principal Converter at Woolwich, and Mr. Weymouth, Inspector from the same establishment, as Second Converter at Sheerness. The Adder mail steam-packet, having had her machinery repaired, and additional power given to her engines, is expected to return to the station from Holyhead the latter end of the month.

DEPTFORD, 6th Nov., 1839.—The Egbert has proceeded to St. Katherine's Docks to load for Bermuda, and the St. Lawrence has sailed for same place; and the Mangles and Runnymede convict-ships for Woolwich, Sheerness, and Portsmouth, to embark convicts; the Gilbert Henderson is fitting for convicts. Remain fitting for troops—transports Lord Lynedoch, Lieut. Scrymsour, Agent; Buretio Junior, Lieut. Lugg; and Pestonjee Bomanjee, Lieut. Crawford.

The Firefly will leave Woolwich about the 15th inst., and convey Gen. Maister, &c., to Jamaica.

Mr. P. C. Beatte is appointed resident Engineer at Jamaica Dock-yard.

Lieut. Wolfe, R.N., commanding the Admiralty Survey of the river Shannon, and tributaries, has discontinued operations until the ensuing spring. Mr. Taylor, Master in the Navy, is appointed recently to assist in this important operation.

John Wood, Master of the Aid lighter, has been dismissed the service for irregularities.

Mr. Smallman, Master of the Goodwill dock-yard lighter, has been appointed to the Aid, and Mr. Cranby, Mate of the Aid, to command the Goodwill.

The Thalia is expected to be commissioned in a few days.

Orders have been received at Woolwich for the arming of six steam ships—four of them men-of-war, two for the packet service: the order for the armament of the Queen is also received; she is to have 66-cwt. 32-pounders on the lower and middle decks, six 68-pounder guns on the lower deck, and four 68-pounder guns on the middle deck, and THIRTY 42-cwt. 32-pounders of 8 feet long on the main deck or upper deck; these last are the new guns, and when have been found to answer well on trial; 25-cwt. 32-pounders on the quarter-deck and forecastle. The larger steamers are to have each two 10-inch guns, and four long 32-pounder guns. The packets to have each a 32-pounder.

The Admiralty having directed reports to be made on the merits of the solution prepared by Sir W. Burnett, Physician-Gen. of the Navy, for preserving cord, canvas, and cloth from rotting, that officer is at present at Portsmouth, superintending the trials which are being exhibited.

In Port.

The Ceylon, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Sir J. Louis, Bart.; Edinburgh, 74; Benbow, 74, Belleisle, 74; Weazle, 10; steamer Acheron, 2; and the French steamers Sesostris and Tancrede.

The Benbow and Edinburgh arrived on Saturday from Lisbon, and the Belleisle on Sunday from Gibraltar.

The British Naval force in the Mediterranean now consists of fifteen line of battle ships, five frigates, five sloops, four brigs, and one cutter-of-war, four steam-frigates, one steam-tender, one receiving-ship, and five steam-packets and one bombard in the Post-office service—a much larger force, in time of [illegible] than at any period during the late war!—Names of these ships, with the number of guns they severally carry, viz.—Ships-of-the-line: Princess Charlotte 104 (with the flag of Adm. Sir [illegible] Stopford), Rodney 92 (with the broad pendant of Commodore Hyde Parker), Asia 84, Belleisle 74, Bellerophon 86, Benbow 74, Edinburgh 74, Ganges 84, Hastings 74, Implacable 74, Minden 74, Pembroke 74, Powerful 84, Talavera 74, and Vanguard 80. Frigates: Carysfort 26, Castor 36, Talbot 28, Tribune 24, and Tyne 28. Sloops: Beacon 6 (surveying-vessel), Daphne 18, Dido 18, Hazard 18, and Wasp 16. Brigs: Jaseur 10, Scorpion 10, Weazle 10, and Zebra 16. Cutter: Maupas 4 (in the surveying service). Steam-frigates: Gorgon 4, Hydra 4, Phœnix 4, and Rhadamanthus 4. Steam-tender: Confiance 2. Steam-packets Acheron 2, Blazer 2, Hermes 2, Megæra 2, and Volcano 2, and Packet-bombard Augusta 2 (the six last mentioned in the Post-office service), and the receiving ship Ceylon 6 (with the flag of the Rear-Adm. and Superintendent of the Malta Dock-yard, Sir John Louis)—making in all a total of 43 pendants, carrying 1696 guns. Besides the above, the Queen 104, the Revenge 78, the Blenheim 72, ships-of-the-line; the Cyclops (1260 tons); and the Salamander steam-frigates, are looked for from England, and other vessels of war are ordered to be prepared for being commissioned; and it is said to be in contemplation to reinforce the squadron by a strong detachment of Rl. Marines from England.

NAVAL AND MILITARY COMMISSION.—"A friend has handed us the following as a part of the recommendation of the Commission. If it be correct, the division of the Captains' list is bad, as there cannot be three-deckers for all the elder meritorious officers, whose services may be required, and if no three-decker is vacant the usefulness of many a valuable officer may be lost. With respect to the pay, also, the sums should have respectively been 700*l.*, 600*l.*, and 500*l.*, and Commanders 400*l.*; we never had a doubt but that the attention of the committee would be much more drawn to the effective rather than the non-effective portion of the service. 'Captains are to be divided into three classes:—first class to command three-deckers; second class ditto, two-deckers; third ditto, frigates.' their full pay to be 800*l.*, 600*l.*, and 400*l.* per annum. Commanders never to be styled captains; instead they are to be designated "Commanders of Corvettes." First Lieutenants to have in all classes 11*s.* per diem, all other Lieutenants, actually serving afloat, 9*s.* per diem. Mates to have 15*l.* additional pay, and those serving under Lieutenants in brigs, cutters, packets, &c., 2*s.* extra. The uniform generally to be altered and assimilated with the French. Adjutants in the Army to be paid as First Lieutenants in the Navy."—Hampsh. Teleg.

NAVAL HERO.—Aberdeen, Nov. 2.—Died here, on the 30th ult., William Smith, one of the oldest seamen belonging to this port, having attained his 78th year. He was amongst the last of the heroes who fought under Admiral Hyde Parker, in the action with the Dutch fleet, commanded by Admiral Zoutman, off the Dogger Bank, on the 5th August, 1781. He used to give an animated detail of the particulars of this severe engagement, and spoke feelingly of the fate of part of the crew of the Dutch 74, Neptune, who perished when that ship sunk, about the close of, or soon after, the action. The only survivor of that well-fought and memorable battle believed (to be in this quarter is a Mr. Gray, late of the Customs, now in his 81st year, who lost an arm on the occasion, and regretted that a present indisposition prevented him attending the funeral of his departed companion in arms.—Aberdeen Herald.

RL. MARINES.—(From a Private Letter.)—Preparations are making at Passages for the evacuation of the British troops. Fort Morafre, which important place was garrisoned by the Royal Marines, is having its guns, &c., removed, as are the other places. The Artillery are daily engaged returning stores, ammunition, &c., to the Government stores. It is expected the Rl. Marine Battalion will leave by divisions, and probably all will not be removed before a new year commences. Lord John Hay, General Sarregui, Cole, Parke, and Colquhoun, and light company of the Rl. Marines, have visited several places, and caused much surprise and admiration to the inhabitants of the different villages, &c.—Capt. Edward A. Parker has arrived from the battalion in Spain.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have sanctioned an exchange of Divisions between Lieut. Snow, of the Chatham, and Lieut. L. G. F. March, of the Plymouth Divisions.

COURT OF QUEEN'S-BENCH, SATURDAY 2ND NOV.

[We give the following verbatim from the Times, and without comment.—ED. N. & M. G.]

THE QUEEN v. WATTS.—The Attorney General said he was instructed to move, on behalf of Sir John Ommanney, for a rule to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against Alaric Attila Watts, the printer and publisher of the United Service Gazette, for having published in that paper a libel reflecting on the character of Sir John Ommanney, an Admiral in the Navy. If this libel had been true, the character of Sir John Ommanney would have been such as to render him totally unfit to hold any office under the Crown. The libel of which Sir John Ommanney complained, charged him with having deliberately, from motives of the most sordid kind, insulted a lady of the most exalted station—a lady who was reverenced as much for her virtues as for her rank—he meant Queen Adelaide, the Queen Dowager. The affidavits of Sir John Ommanney and Earl Howe stated, that in the month of April last Her Majesty was expected to come to the Tagus, on her way from Malta to England. Sir John Ommanney, whose squadron was stationed there, sent a ship-of-war to conduct the Hastings, in which Her Majesty sailed, into the Tagus, and as soon as the Hastings appeared in sight with the Royal flag flying, a Royal salute of 21 guns was fired from the whole of the English ships in the Tagus, and Sir John Ommanney immediately sent an officer on board the Hastings, wishing to know when he should have the honour of waiting upon Her Majesty to pay his respects and receive her commands. Her Majesty replied that she would receive Sir John as soon as the Hastings came to anchor. The Hastings having subsequently anchored, Sir John Ommanney, with all the officers of his squadron, went on board, and the usual etiquette observed on such occasions was strictly attended to. The party was introduced to Her Majesty by Earl Howe, and Sir John Ommanney's further attendance was then dispensed with. Sir John caused a frigate and a [illegible]p-of-war to be stationed close to the Hastings, and Her Majesty afterwards expressed a desire that Sir John Ommanney should be relieved from daily attendance, and directed that the Hastings should communicate by signal Her Majesty's further commands. In the course of a few days Sir John Ommanney and the officers of the squadron had the honour of dining with Her Majesty, and they went in their full uniform. When the Hastings was leaving the Tagus Her Majesty requested that the usual salute might be omitted. Everything, however, had been done for Her Majesty's comfort; and to show her respect a Royal salute was fired, and the ships-of-war conveyed the Hastings some distance beyond the limits of the station. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to express her entire satisfaction with the behaviour of Sir John Ommanney and the officers under his command. In spite of this, however, there appeared in a newspaper, called the Hampshire Advertiser, a statement that Admiral Ommanney had intended to treat Her Majesty with disrespect, and had received her with plain clothes, and had omitted firing the usual Royal salutes. Although this was untrue, yet it had been stated in a manner that would not have called for Sir John Ommanney's interference; but upon the 6th of July there appeared in the United Service Gazette a paragraph which had led to the present application. It first purported to give an extract from the Hampshire Advertiser, under the head of "Sir John Ommanney," and it then stated that the omission of the gallant Admiral to fire a Royal salute, as well as his appearing in plain clothes, had been denied, and that upon making inquiry it was discovered that the denial was confirmed, except that Sir John Ommanney was in an undress instead of being in plain clothes. To this statement was appended a note with the letters "Ed. U.S.G.," meaning "Editor of the United Service Gazette," and this note stated that it was part of the duty, if not the only duty, of the ancient drivelling (as we understood the Attorney-General) to insult the Queen Dowager. He knew that his insolence to that distinguished lady would gratify the "Minto gang" at home. He (the Attorney-General) hardly need remind their Lordships that Lord Minto was First Lord of the Admiralty, and this charged Sir John Ommanney with having deliberately insulted the Queen Dowager, upon the base supposition that thereby he would please the Government at home, and further his own promotion. Sir J. Ommanney, in his affidavit, positively denied ever having done anything which did not show his anxiety to pay respect to Her Majesty. In addition to this he had the affidavit of Earl Howe, confirming him, and setting out a letter which that nobleman wrote to Lady Ommanney by Her Majesty's command, and which he would read

"Madam,—I cannot allow a post to leave this place without obeying the command of Queen Adelaide, and hastening to express the annoyance Her Majesty has felt at reading in the papers the shameful attack made on Sir John Ommanney. Never was a more abominable falsehood than the whole. The Queen commands me to assure you that nothing could more kind and attentive than Sir John's demeanour during Majesty's temporary stay in the Tagus. That he was particularly anxious to mark such attention, by directing a part of the squadron to drop down to Belem from their usual anchorage, afterwards attend Her Majesty's considerable way to sea that Sir John and all his officers, both in their costume and firing their usual salutes, did everything in their power to honour their visitor. Queen Adelaide is most anxious you should receive the most speedy refutation on the part of Majesty of these abominable slanders, and anxiously hopes statement I have made will prove quite satisfactory to you ings, and those of the Admiral. I have the honour to be Ladyship's very faithful servant, "HOWE

"(Copsall), July 17.

"To Lady Ommanney."

The Attorney-General continued.—Here was an attack against an English officer, charging him with having been gu

Lord Denman.—Take a Rule.

THE QUEEN v. WATTS.—Mr. Theiger was instructed to a for a rule to show cause why a criminal information should be filed against Alaric Attila Watts, the editor, printer, and proprietor of the United Service Gazette. He moved, on behalf of Captain Reeve, a Commander in the Navy, who had to complain of libels published against him in the United Service Gazette. It appeared from the affidavits, that in 1838 Captain Reeve was on the African station in command of the Lily, sloop-of-war. That on the 10th of August it was reported to him by an officer on watch, that on his entering the cabin of the First Lieutenant he had found in bed with him a boy of about 14 years of age. Captain Reeve immediately ordered the parties to be put under arrest, and reported the fact the same day to the commanding officer, Admiral Elliot, from whom he received directions to detain the parties under arrest until they could be sent home by the Pelican. Shortly afterwards the same Lieutenant, whose name was Inman, was missing from the vessel, which was also reported by Captain Reeve to the Admiral. Lieutenant Inman had afterwards, however, returned to the Lily, and delivered himself up as a deserter, and under the circumstances, Admiral Elliot had thought it necessary to order Captain Reeve to take the Lily home, in order that there might be a Court Martial, and he directed that the boy should be kept apart from the Lieutenant, until it should be determined whether he should be examined as a witness or tried as a prisoner. The Court Martial was held at Plymouth, and the result was, that although the officers were of opinion that the most serious part of the charge was not established, in consequence of Lieutenant Inman being intoxicated, yet they determined that so much had been proved that he must be dismissed the service, and that sentence was accordingly passed. This Court-Martial was the signal for a variety of attacks against Captain Reeve in the United Service Gazette. It became necessary, unfortunately, afterwards, that Captain Reeve should bring to a Court Martial two other officers, one of whom had been admonished, and the other severely reprimanded, and on the 8th of June the article of which Captain Reeve complained appeared in the United Service Gazette, in which, after speaking of Courts Martial with contempt, it described Captain Reeve as an inexorable martinet, having brought guilty and contemptible charges against two officers. It then charged him with having acted with harshness and cruelty to the boy in Lieutenant Inman's affair, and it stated that the prosecution of Captain Reeve before the Court Martial was so gross, that if the inquiry had been before a civil tribunal, he would have been admonished on the spot, instead of being allowed to continue in a command which he had disgraced by his conduct. The article then went on to say, a Court Martial appeared to suffer from a court of law in one respect, that in the latter every court was given in favour of the prisoner, while the members of a Court Martial seemed to think they ought not to be convinced by nothing, and fancied their duty had not been performed satisfactorily, if the prisoner was allowed to escape from his vindictive prosecutor. Whether Captain Reeve was to be appointed to the command of another ship remained to be seen, but if he should be, it would be known to what he had to attribute his promotion. He had affidavits to show that no harshness had been used towards the boy, that he had been allowed two hours a day for exercise, and had been permitted to sleep in his berth. With regard to prosecution, Captain Reeve was not a witness for the Crown, but had been called by Lieutenant Inman, and had given his evidence very favourably to him. Mr. Thesiger, submitted that this was such a case as called for the interposition of the Court, and he felt confident their Lordships would grant the rule. Rule granted.

INFANTRY.

Foot Guards—On Thursday morning the usual half-yearly inspection of the Foot Guards now in town took place on the parade in St. James's Park. General Lord Hill and his Staff were present; but there were few spectators in consequence of the state of the weather.

Scots Fusilier Guards.—

Lord Ludlow served in the American war, and was made prisoner at York Town. In 1793 he joined the Army in Flanders, and served in the different actions of that and the following campaign until wounded, the 17th May, 1794, near Roubaix, when, having lost the left arm, he returned to England. Lord Ludlow accompanied Sir James Pulteney to the Ferrol, took part in the Egyptian campaign in 1801; commanded a division in the expedition to Hanover in 1805, and was present at the capture of Copenhagen in 1807.—Col. Astell also accompanied the expedition to Copenhagen in 1807. In 1808 proceeded with the Army under Sir Arthur Wellesley to the Peninsula, and was present at the passage of the Douro, taking of Oporto, and subsequent pursuit of Soult's Army. At Talavera he was wounded in the arm while carrying the King's colour, which was also shot through. He served in the campaigns of 1810, 12, 13, and 14, and was present at Bussaco, Salamanca, capture of Madrid, siege of Burgos, battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, St. Jean de Luz, passage of the Adour, battle of the Nive, investment and sortie from Bayonne.—Sir J. A. Hope accompanied the expedition to Copenhagen in 1807. He served during the whole of the campaign in Spain and Portugal under Sir John Moore; accompanied the expedition to Walcheren. He was present at Lugo, Corunna, Barossa, Ciudad Rodrigo, Salamanca, Vittoria, Tolosa, St. Sebastian, the passage of the Bidassoa, Sarre, the passage of the Nive, Orthez, Toulouse, &c. &c., and has received a cross and one clasp.—Col. Scott proceeded to the Peninsula in 1808, and was present at the passage of the Douro, capture of Oporto, and subsequent retreat of Soult's Army. Wounded through the body at Talavera, and being left there in hospital, was made prisoner by the enemy.—Col. W. Drummond served in the Peninsula from 1809 to 1812, including the battles of Busaco and Fuentes d'Onor, the retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras, and subsequent advance from thence. Served also the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the bombardment of Antwerp and the storming of Bergen-op-Zoom. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Col. B. Drummond served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the storming of Bergen-op-Zoom. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Col. Scudden served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the bombardment of Antwerp, and storming of Bergen-op-Zoom. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Col. Knollys was present at the sortie from Bayonne, on which occasion Sir Henry Sullivan and ten officers of the Guards were killed or died of their wounds.—Col. Digby served with the expedition to Walcheren in 1809, and subsequently in the Peninsula, including the siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, retreat from Burgos, battle of Vittoria, affairs at Tarbes and d'Oleron, battles of Orthes and Toulouse.—Col. Hornby served the campaigns of 1810, 11, 12, and 13, in the Peninsula, including the blockading of Cadiz in 1810, battle of Vittoria, and sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajoz, and San Sebastian.—Col. Montagu was present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Quartermaster Aston served the campaign of 1814 in Holland, including the bombardment of Antwerp, and storming of Bergen-op-Zoom. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Quartermaster Copeland served in the Peninsula from March, 1813, to the end of the war, including the battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, passage of the Bidassoa, the Nive, and the Adour, investment of and sortie from Bayonne. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—Dr. Goon served with the expedition to Copenhagen in 1807. Proceeded with the Army to the Peninsula in 1808, and served there until the end of the war, including the passage of the Douro, taking of Oporto, battles of Busaco and Fuentes d'Onor, sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz, battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid, siege of Burgos, battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, passage of the Bidassoa, the Nive, and the Adour, and investment of Bayonne. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo.—New Army List.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The Sapphire and Atholl troop-ships have been ordered to receive the Royals on board, for service at Gibraltar. A detachment arrived at Chatham on the 7th inst. (having landed at Gravesend from the Leith steamer) from Glasgow, via Leith, for further proceeding to Gibraltar, 2 Subs, 2 Serj., 40 r. and f.

2d Depot—Lieut. Faulkner is ordered for embarkation in the Catherine.

4th—Head-quarters, Poonah, 16th July, 1839.—The leave of absence granted by his Excellency Lieut.-Gen. Sir Jasper Nicolls, K.C.B., to Lieut.-Col. Breton to proceed to New South Wales on medical certificate, and to be absent on that account for two years from the date of embarkation, is confirmed. Lieut.-Col. Breton has 25 years full-pay service.

The Commander-in-Chief in India has been pleased to make the following promotions and appointment, until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be known:—Lieut. Thomas Gibson to be Capt., without purchase, v. Chambers, deceased, 1st July, 1839. Ens. E. J. Baldwin to be Lieut., v. Gibson, promoted, 1st July, 1839. Lieut. Gibson has been 27 years in the Army, of which 12 years on full pay.

5th Depot—The draft for the service cos. consists of 1 Capt., 4 Subalterns, and 150 r. and f.

7th Depot—Maj. Stuart has taken the command.

8th—Surgeon Fraser has come home on sick leave. This officer served in the American war, and was at the capture of Oswego.

12th Depot—The draft for the service cos. consists of 1 Capt., 4 Subalterns, and 150 r. and f. Two cos. moved from Brecon to Monmouth and Newport, for the suppression of the Chartist disturbances.

16th Depot—Lieuts. Jodrell and Graves are ordered for embarkation in the Catherine.

20th—Some very intemperate letters have appeared in the Morning Chronicle reflecting upon Col. Thomas and officers of this regiment who were present at the Ashton-under-Lyne Operative Conservative Association dinner, and calling upon Lord Hill to remove them from the service. We believe that an inquiry has been instituted to ascertain correctly what was said at the meeting, and we are satisfied that disloyalty to the Queen was never entertained or countenanced by any officer of this gallant corps.

22d—On Monday last, the officers of this corps at the Ri. Barracks, Dublin, entertained at dinner Col. Falconar, their late Commander, who has recently been appointed Inspecting Field Officer of the Liverpool district. Col. D'Aguilar, Dep. Adjutant-General, Col. M'Gregor, Inspection-General of the Constabulary, an old and very intimate friend of Col. Falconar, Lieut.-Col. Ratcliff, Enniskillen Dragoons, and Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, 19th Foot, were specially invited upon this interesting occasion. It would be impossible to express the warm and enthusiastic style in which the Colonel's health was responded to by his brother officers, or the generous and kindly manner in which his most affectionate address in returning thanks was received. It was altogether such a scene as is scarcely ever witnessed, except amongst Military society; and it must have been highly gratifying to the gallant officer, that such an exhibition of attachment and appreciation of his very many excellent and manly qualities should have been manifested in the presence of these distinguished guests, and those who have served under his command for the last eleven years.

26th—A Court-Martial was holden in the Fort on 14th and 15th instant, on an officer of the 20th Reg. We are in possession of a copy of the charge and the evidence taken, but we abstain from publication or remark, until the proceedings shall have been returned from head quarters.—Mr. Hume, the barrister, was engaged on behalf of the prisoner.—Englishman, Aug. 17.

29th—On the 1st inst., Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield, the Commandant at Woolwich, inspected this crack regiment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. the Hon. C. A. Wrottesley, in light marching order, on the Garrison Parade. After the usual salute, the regiment marched past in review order, in slow, and afterwards in quick time, when, after performing a variety of evolutions with great precision, the officers were severally presented to his Lordship, who was pleased to express his marked approbation of the soldier-like appearance and excellent discipline of the regiment, in a manner that was as creditable as it was deserved. Capts. Weir, Palairet, and Byng's companies are detached, under the command of Maj. Sharrock, to perform the duties at Deptford Dock and Victualling Yards. Ensign Murchison is Acting Adjutant of the detachment.

To Lieut.-Colonel Henry E. Robinson, 30th Regiment, Commander of the Troops.

SIR,—We, the undersigned, being a Committee appointed by the inhabitants of the parish of St. George to wait upon you with a Resolve entered into by them on the 14th inst., have now the honour of presenting it; and in doing so, we beg most respectfully to assure you, that the parishioners will always entertain a lively sense of the deep obligation they are under, both to yourself and the garrison, for the very humane and energetic manner in which the troops came forward to alleviate, by their manual labour, the distress of the sufferers by the late terrific hurricane, with which it pleased the Almighty to visit these islands on the 11th inst. We have, &c.,

JOHN J. TUCKER, JOS. STUART HUNTER (Mayor), THOS. B. TUCKER, T. B. TUCKER, JOHN T. FISHER.

St. George, Bermuda, Sept. 16, 1839.

"Bermuda. Parish of St. George, Sept. 14, 1839.

"At a meeting of the parishioners, held this day at St. Peter's Church, to take into consideration the propriety of adopting measures for the relief of the sufferers in said parish by the terrific hurricane with which these islands were visited on the night of the 11th inst., it was, on motion of Daniel Leon, Esq., seconded by J. B. Tucker, Esq., unanimously resolved—That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Lieutenant-Colonel Henry E. Robinson, Commandant, for the very kind and humane manner in which he offered the use of the troops to the assistance of the inhabitants, and for the timely and efficient aid afforded by them."

33d Depot—The draft for the service cos. consists of 2 Capts., 2 Subalterns, 4 Serj., and 60 r. and f.

34th—1 Capt., 1 Sub, 2 Serj., 40 r. and f., to Harwich, and 1 Sub, 1 Serj., 32 r. and f. to Sheerness.

34th Depot—W. M'Coy was tried by District Court-Martial on the 5th Nov., Major Tennant, 35th, President.

36th Depot—2 cos. from Tralee to Limerick, Nov. 1 to Nov. 6. Remaining 2 cos. and head-qrs. from do. to do. Nov. 11 to Nov. 15.

39th—Head quarters, Poonah, 18th July, 1839.—The leave of absence granted by his Excel. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Jasper Nicolls, K.C.B., to Capt. and Paymaster Durnford, and to Lieut. Herbert, to proceed to England on medical certificate, and to be absent each for two years on that account, from the date of embarkation, is confirmed. The appointment of Lieut. Werge to act as Paymaster during the absence, and on the responsibility of Paymaster Durnford, is confirmed. The leave of absence granted to Lieut. Gray, to proceed to Ceylon on medical certificate, and to be absent on that account for one year, is confirmed. Ens. T. S. Little to be Lieut. v. Monro, appointed Adjt. 28th April, 1839.

39th Depot—The detachments embarked in the Harrison for Madras on the 2d.

42d—Ens. Sir F. W. Dunbar, Bart. is about to retire from the service, being on the eve of a matrimonial alliance with a lady of the greatest personal attractions in the county Limerick. Ens. Hay has joined. The Royal Highlanders are permitted to resume the sphinx on their caps, in commemoration of the regiment's distinguished services in the Egyptian campaign, under Sir Ralph Abercromby, in 1801.

44th—Assist.-Surg. Primrose is in medical charge of the detachments of 39th, 57th, 62d, and 63d, embarked on board the Harrison for Madras.

Head-quarters, Poonah, 14th July, 1839.—The leave of absence granted by the Officer commanding the Forces in Bengal to Ens. Roberts, to proceed to England on medical certificate, and to be absent on that account for two years from the date of embarkation, is confirmed.

45th—The conduct of Lieut. Gray in command of a detachment of this corps in suppressing the riots at Newport, has given the greatest satisfaction. It has been the universal theme of praise at the Horse-Guards. But for this officer's firmness and presence of mind, Newport would have been burnt to the ground, or in the possession of the Chartists. It appears there were but 30 men at the Westgate Hotel at the time the attack was commenced. The Chartists marched down in Military army, armed in the most formidable manner, with guns, pikes, axes, clubs, &c., and commenced firing on the windows, having first summoned the parties in possession to "surrender themselves prisoners." They then made a charge on the house, and took possession of the greater part of the basement story. The gallant little band of soldiers, however, placed themselves in the principal dining room and a room on the first floor, which gave them a commanding position. All being prepared, the windows were thrown open, and Lieut. Gray advancing, called on the Chartists to disperse, telling them the soldiers were prepared to fire. This was answered by several shots. The detachment was then ordered to take aim and fire, and they went to work in earnest, firing from the windows upon the rioters in front of the house, and from over the bannisters on those who had forced an entrance. In the course of a quarter of an hour they dispersed and routed this formidable force. The rioters fled in all directions, and left many of their wretched victims on the ground, together with a great quantity of arms. Several cart loads of implements have been collected from the streets and fields in the immediate neighbourhood. The inhabitants are loud in their praises and thankfulness to their gallant little band of preservers, and say almost universally that had it not been for them every soul in the town would have been murdered, and the town reduced to a heap of ruins. Lieut. Gray has been 12 years in the service, and on full-pay: he richly deserves promotion.

48th Depot—1 Capt., 2 Serj., 1 Dr., 40 r. and f., from Templemore to Thurles, Nov. 1, to relieve the comp., 56th. Lieut. Tidy has gone on leave for three months. Ens. Corcoran acts as Paymaster in the interim. Lieut. Mussy has obtained leave to the 14th inst.

49th Depot—Ens. Faunt is on leave to 10th Jan. next.

51st—Lieut. Capel Somerset is appointed an extra A.D.C. to Sir M. C. O'Connell, at New South Wales.

52nd—The men of this regiment, who survived the storming of Rodrigo and Badajoz, that is, those men who volunteered in the forlorn hope,—were distinguished with a badge of laurel on the right arm. It was given by the Commanding Officer as a testimonial of their gallant conduct, which was expressed by the two letters "V. S." placed beneath the laurel on the arm, signifying valiant stormer.—Costello's Memoirs.

52d Depot—The draft for the service cos. consists of 4 Subs., 2 Serjts., and 50 r. and f.

54th Depot—Ens. Paget is on leave to Nov. 29, and Ens. Cocks to 14th Dec.

55th—Lieut. Saunders vacates the Fort Adjutancy at Gambia, on promotion from the Royal African Corps to this regiment.

56th Depot—The comp. from Thurles to Roscrea, Nov. 1 and 2. 3 cos. and head-qrs. from Templemore to Nenagh, Nov. 2. 1 Sub., 1 Serj., 21 r. and f., from do. to Killaloe, Nov. 2 to Nov. 4, to relieve the detachment of 59th.

57th Depot—The detachments embarked in the Harrison for Madras on the 2d.

59th Depot—One comp. from Nenagh to Tralee, Nov. 1 to Nov. 8. Remaining 2 cos. and head-qrs., from do. to do., Nov. 2 to Nov. 9. The comp. from Roscrea to Tralee, Nov. 2 to Nov. 11. The detachment from Killaloe to do., Nov. 4 to Nov. 11. Capt. Boland is on sick leave.

61st Depot—The Court-Martial intended to have been held on an officer of this depot, for the escape of military prisoners at Cork, will not assemble.

62d Depot—The detachments embarked in the Harrison for Madras on the 2d.

63d Depot—The detachments embarked in the Harrison for Madras on the 2d.

64th Depot—At the Londonderry City Sessions, on 30th ult., Capt. W. J. James was tried for an assault on a soldier, on 21st July last; after a patient hearing of the whole of the evidence, the jury, without an instant's hesitation, returned a verdict of not guilty. Upon this trial the Londonderry Sentinel has the following observation.

"By far the most interesting and important case which has been tried at the City Sessions for some time, was that which was heard before the Recorder on Wednesday last, which we have reported at considerable length elsewhere. The dreadful injuries which the complainant sustained excited for him universal sympathy and compassion, and a strong prejudice did undoubtedly exist in the minds of many against the accused. Every individual, however, who heard the case, must have been impressed with the perfect equity and impartiality of the verdict, and felt gratified that an honourable acquittal from the foul charge was awarded to Capt James, who is now restored to society and to his regiment without the slightest stain on his reputation. Even on the evidence for the prosecution, the jury would, we believe, from the vagueness and inconsistency of the prosecutor's story, and the evident injury which his memory had suffered, have yielded to the doubts that must have crossed their minds, and pronounced a similar verdict, but it was happy for him that he was enabled to produce such unexceptionable testimony to his 'whereabouts" as to banish every vestige of doubt as to his innocence. Much praise is due to Mr. Colhoun for the complete and satisfactory manner in which the defence was got up, and his endeavours were ably seconded by the learned counsel. It is much to be regretted, nevertheless, that a gentleman of rank, and possessing the nicest sense of honour, should have been subjected to the mental suffering, the pecuniary expense, and, for a time, the bodily restraint, which befell Capt. James. We understand that some additional light has been thrown on this mysterious outrage since the late trial, and that there is some prospect of the real culprit being brought to justice. All must deplore the savage treatment which the soldier Brown experienced; but it is clear that the charge against his superior officer proceeded either from some hallucination of mind, from mistake, or from feelings of enmity or self-interest."

A large draft is under orders for the service cos.

65th Depot—Ens. Harvey is to perform the duties of Depot Paymaster at Clare Castle until Lieut. Whittaker's health shall be completely restored.

69th Depot—Capt. Brooke Pigot has left on three months' leave.

70th—Assist.-Surg. Davidson, M.D., is appointed to the medical charge of the 48th Depot, at Templemore, during the illness of Dr. Johnston.

73d—Capt. W. L. Russell, Unattached, late Adjutant 73d Reg., will shortly be appointed to a company in the 28th, at New South Wales, where he will ultimately settle. The vacancy has been kept open for him at the request of Maj.-Gen. Sir M. C. O'Connell, commanding the troops in that colony. Lieut. D'Arcy and Ens. Littlehales are on leave.

81st Depot—A large draft is under orders for the service cos.

85th—Assist.-Surg. Carson, M.D., is on leave.

87th—[illegible] from what I saw of the Constitution off the Texel before the American war, that our 38's must knock under to the American 44's. Where was the Macedonian's masterly skill in the shy-tagging aun of the long 18's on the main deck?

87th Depot—Brev.-Maj. Moore, Capts. Campbell and Keating, Lieuts. North and Moore, are on leave.

88th—On the 1st inst. Lieut.-Col. O'Hara, on promotion, took the command. Maj. Rutherford is about to retire, when Capt. Sir W. P. Gallwey and Lieut. Ormsby get the Majority and company, by purchase.

90th Depot—Furnished the guard of honour (1 Capt., 1 Sub, 3 Serj., and 50 r. and f.) on the occasion of the Duke of Wellington's visit to Dover on the 1st, and again on the 5th, when his Grace held the Harbour Sessions. Capt. Eld has joined from leave, and Capt. Griffith is on leave to the end of the month. George Hughes was tried by District Court-Martial on the 5th Nov., Major Tennant, 35th, President.

93d Depot—Surgeon Campbell has joined the depot, and Assist.-Surg. Cruickshank has proceeded, via New York, to join the service cos.

94th—The Com.-in-Chief in India has been pleased to antedate the commission of Capt. H. Nicholls, 94th Reg., who had served 15 years and upwards as a Subaltern previously to his promotion to a company, to 24th July, 1828. This Officer has been 29 years in the service, of which 22 years on full-pay.

94th Depot—The last division of this reg. having embarked, the depot company, under the command of Capt. Spitler, was transferred to the Provisional Batt. on the 4th inst. Nearly 40 men have been turned over to the General Hospital, Fort Pitt, to be invalided.

97th—Lieut. Lisle will shortly succeed to a company, as Capt. Thatcher is about to retire. This Officer has been 32 years in the service, of which 22 years on full-pay. He served in the Peninsula from Aug., 1811, to the end of the war, including the action at Fuentes Guinaldo, sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz (wounded), battles of Salamanca (wounded), Vittoria, Pampeluna, Pyrenees, Vera (wounded), Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse. Lieut. Craigie and Ens. Lane have come in from leave, and Ens. Burton on appointment.

98th—The corps was inspected at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by Maj.-Gen. Sir C. Napier, who praised this fine body of men for their soldier-like appearance, and the high state of discipline he found them in. Capt. Wallace is on leave.

1st West India Reg.—Capt. Douglas, senior Captain (18 years' full-pay) died at Sierra Leone in Sept. last.

2d West India Reg.—Capt. Lardner is on sick leave. This officer was severely wounded in retaking Fort Bullen, on the River Gambia, 11th Nov., 1837. Assist.-Surg. R. Tuthill cut a tumour of 9lbs. from the neck of a black woman at Jamaica, who is doing well.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—On Monday a Court-Martial was held at the barracks in Sheet-street, Windsor, upon Private Daniel Hobbs, who was charged with leaving his post, and totally neglecting his duty during the period he was stationed as sentry on the north-east portion of the terrace of the castle, at the time Her Majesty was promenading in front of the private apartments. It appeared that the soldier had wandered upwards of 20 yards from his post, for the supposed purpose of gratifying his curiosity by having a closer view of the Queen. During the period of the man's temporary absence, upwards of sixty persons obtruded themselves upon that part of the new terrace (from which they would have otherwise been excluded), to the great annoyance of Her Majesty, and of her distinguished visitors and suite. The court found the prisoner guilty of neglect of duty, and deserting his post, and sentenced him to 20 days' confinement in the black hole.

Rl. Artillery—On Tuesday Maj. Sandilands's troop, Rl. Horse Artillery, received a sudden order to march for Newport, Monmouthshire, in consequence of the Chartist riots. It proceeded that evening to Reading by the Great Western Railway. In consequence of Major Sandilands and Lieut. Poulden being members of the General Court-Martial, of which Col. Paterson is President, and which is under orders to reassemble, the troop marched under the command of Capt. Bloomfield. Lieuts. Wood and Popham went with it. Lt.-Col. Bastard, who was to have embarked on Thursday to proceed to Malta, for the purpose of relieving Lt.-Col. Wallace in the command at that island, has been obliged to postpone his departure, he being a member of the General Court-Martial ordered to reassemble.—Capt. Collington and Lieut. Burrell are to do duty with the reserve of instruction until further orders. A detachment is ordered to be in readiness for embarkation on 15th inst., to complete the cos. serving in Jamaica. Lieut.-Col. Rudyerd embarked at six A.M., on 31st ult., to relieve Lieut.-Col. Nicolls, now serving on that island. Doctor Seaton has joined the Ordnance Medical Department, from Quebec. Lieut. Turner embarked on board an Irish steamer, to join his company at Ballincollig; and Lieut. W. R. Gichard proceeded to join Maj. Colebrooke's company, at Portsmouth, on 1st inst.

Garrison Order, Oct. 30, 1839.—His Lordship the Commandant has much pleasure in communicating to the Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, and men of Major Hanwell's company the following Report from Col. Cleaveland, on the efficient state of B Field Battery, which he has had great satisfaction in receiving "The company have generally been very attentive, and the exertions of Maj. Hanwell, with his officers, Lieuts. Tylte and Crawford, most praise-worthy. The material, with the horses and harness, are in excellent order, and I am happy to express to your Lordship my conviction of their general efficiency."

G. O., Oct. 31, 1839.—The insertions in that part of the Soldier's Pocket Ledger appropriated to his "next of kin," are frequently found to be erroneous. Commanding Officers of the several stations at home and abroad, are directed to cause this part of the soldier's Pocket Ledger to be carefully read over to every man under their command, soon after the 1st of January in each year, and every variation which has occurred in the particulars therein entered, to be accurately noted in the Ledger by the Pay-Serjeant of the company. All alterations made must be communicated to the Commanding Officers of Battalions and Corps at head-quarters, in order that the Registry of Kin be amended. A. Dickson, Dep. Adj. Gen.

G. O., 2nd Nov. 1839.—Second Lieut. Rogers is transferred from Major Hamtain's company, 7th batt., to Capt. Charleton's company, 1st batt., by order of the Master-General.

A. Dickson, Deputy Adjutant General.

G. O., 4th Nov. 1839.—Second Lieut. Fitzroy is transferred from Major Stopford's company, 3rd batt., to Lieut.-Colonel Wyld's company, 8th batt., by order of the Master-General.

A. Dickson, Deputy Adjutant General.

G. O., Woolwich, 8th Nov.—Second Lieut M'Cartney is transferred from Major Fraser's company, 7th batt., to Capt. Palmer's company, 6th batt., by order of the Master-General.

C. Jones, Lieut.-Colonel, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Rl. Engineers—Capt. Henderson has closed his operations for this season, as connected with the "Grand Trigonometrical Survey of Scotland," and his party have returned to head-quarters. The detachment recently employed at Spithead, in the demolition of the Royal George, are to embark for head-quarters in the Medea as soon as she is ready.

Half-Yearly Public Examination at Sandhurst.—The usual half-yearly Public Examination of the Officers and Gentlemen Cadets studying at the Royal Military College took place on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the 5th, 6th, and 7th inst., on which occasion the Institution was honoured with the presence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. At the close of the examination the following Officers were presented with the usual certificates of qualification:—

Capt. R. Manners	.	79th Regiment
— M. W. Smith	.	15th Hussars
Lieut. A. H. Russell	.	22nd Regiment
— A. Barton,	.	9th Do.
— H. D. Fanshawe	.	12th Do.

In consequence of the very superior acquirements displayed by Capt. Smith, Lieuts. Barton and Fanshawe, and Captain Manners, in the highest branches of mathematical science, a special honorary addition was made to those officers' certificates. The high qualifications of the first three of these officers, viz., Captain Smith and Lieuts. Barton and Fanshawe, in Military surveying, was also particularly noticed; and the following Gentlemen Cadets, who had completed their qualifications for commissions, were recommended to the General Commanding-in-Chief for appointments to Ensigncies in the Line without purchase.

1. John H. Dickson
2. Robert E. Stratton
3. Robert Carey
4. William Crawley
5. Denis Godley
6. Henry Rice
7. Augustus J. Roberts
8. Arthur Oakes
9. James Woods
10. Edward W. Donovan
11. Hugh G. Colvill
12. Robert Portal
13. John L. R. Pollard
14. The Hon. Percy E. Herbert
15. George Raban
16. Robert N. Clarke
17. Charles H. Pallen

By the result of the examinations about fifty other young gentlemen were declared to have made various steps towards qualifying themselves for Commissions in those branches of the mathematics which are applicable to Military purposes in permanent and field fortifications, and the attack and defence of fortresses, in Latin and general history, and in the modern languages; and nineteen had also, during the half year, completed the course of professional education in Military surveying; and twenty-six in the actual construction of intrenchments and saps in the field, pontooning, &c.

Major-General Sir Francis Doyle.—We regret to announce the death of the above gallant baronet, which took place on Wednesday last. The deceased, who was Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower, and Chairman of the Commissioners of Excise, was in his 59th year.

Two experienced officers—Colonel Considine, who has just returned from his Government mission to Tunis, and Major John Henry Cook of the 25th regiment, and late candidate for the Chief Commissionership of Police for the City of London—have left town officially to take command of the troops at Newport.

The New Observatory at Woolwich, some time since in contemplation, for the Officers of the Royal Artillery and Engineers, is now in course of immediate construction. The site for the building is in the barrack-field, between the Repository and the Mortar Battery, on the right wing of the barracks.

The depots of the 77th and 81st Regts., stationed in the Citadel at Hull, were on Monday last inspected by Major-Gen. Sir C. Napier, Commander of the Northern District, who was accompanied as Aide-de-Camp by his nephew, Lieut. Napier, son of Major-Gen. Sir G. T. Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. They afterwards visited the armoury and storehouse, under the charge of Mr. Carte, the Ordnance Storekeeper. At the battle of Corunna Sir Charles distinguished himself as a Major under Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Moore.—Eastern Counties Herald.

Wreck of the "Royal George."—In the N. & M. Gazette of 19th Oct. (p. 678), we published a paragraph from the Gentleman's Magazine, stating that on 24th June, 789, Serj. Bell, R.A. Artilleryman, proposed to blow the wreck of the Royal George to pieces, and that he exemplified his plan of operation by sinking a model of that ship and demolishing it under water by a small charge of gunpowder, which experiment took place at Woolwich. Upon this paragraph Colonel Pasley has written a letter, in which he states, that though he never heard of this circumstance before, he has not the smallest doubt of the fact, especially as Serjeant Bell was a man so much respected in the Royal Artillery, that after he (Col. P.) obtained his first commission as a 2d Lieutenant in that corps, in Dec. 1797, he often heard his name mentioned with applause, as a man of superior talent and of an inventive genius. The Colonel adds, "I recollect particularly that the important expedient of firing a shell from a mortar, with a rope attached to it, for the relief of vessels in distress, was at that time—namely, at the close of 1797 and beginning of 1798—exclusively ascribed to Serj. Bell, who was said to have tried the experiment at Portsmouth with success. Whether he or Captain Manby was the first inventor I do not pretend to say, but the latter certainly had great merit in bringing this useful operation into general and public notice; for whatever part Serj. Bell may have taken in respect to it, has long since been forgotten, even in his own corps. It is a pity that this should be the case; for I have also been informed by an Admiral in the Royal Navy, that when he was a boy at the High School of Edinburgh, the same intelligent Serjeant distinguished himself by blowing up a sunken rock in the Frith of Forth. All these circumstances combined, render it desirable that there should be some biographical notice of a man of Serjeant Bell's merit."—Two Officers laid claim to a supposed invention of a "sweep piece" applied to the gun-carriages of ships of war: while this mighty question was pending, and proofs on both sides collecting, Col. Pasley fished up from the wreck of the Royal George a lower-deck gun-carriage, having the new sweep attached to it! As the ship was sunk some years before either of the aspirants for fame were born, they could neither be the copyists nor the inventors!

The Army List for the present month does not give the depots of either the 7th Fusiliers or 25th inst.

In accordance with the provisions of the Act for the suppression of secret societies, the masonic lodge of the 42d Highlanders has been duly registered before the Clerk of the Peace for Limerick. We trust the various regiments having masonic lodges in them, for instance, the 29th, 46th, and 79th, will at once follow their example, as otherwise the warrants for holding the lodge must be cancelled by the grand lodges of the three kingdoms, and the members can no longer meet as Freemasons.

We lately noticed the promotion to Lieutenancies of Adjutants Wheatstone, 36th—Capel, 12th Lancers—and D'Arcy, 91th. The Ensigncy of Adj Garvock, 10th Foot, bears date 1835, senior by a year to Lieut. Wheatstone's commission, and nevertheless Mr. Garvock has not been promoted. Surely the services of the late Major Garvock ought not to be so soon forgotten.

We believe that Major-General Sir Charles Napier has for some time contemplated a change of the head-quarters of the Northern District from Nottingham to Chester.

Yesterday a General Court-Martial was to assemble at Cork. Major-General Sir William Macbean, President. The members to be furnished from the adjoining districts.

The Infantry barracks at Mallow are ordered to be given over to the police, but should troops be required to be stationed there at a future period they will be given up to the Ordnance Department.

Mr. Monk, the inventor of the heavy piece of ordnance named after him, which has been recently so satisfactorily tested by the Artillery experimental detachment at Sandown, has been appointed by the Master-General to the vacancy in the Rl. Arsenal, Woolwich, occasioned by the retirement of Richard White, Esq.

Col. Chesborough Grant Falconer, K.H. (retired on half-pay), and late Lieut.-Colonel commanding the 22d Regiment is appointed Inspecting Field Officer of the Northern Recruiting District, head-quarters, Liverpool, vice Col. John Campbell, C.B., half-pay unattached, retired.

On Tuesday, in the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Thesiger, on behalf of Colonel Sir C. Shaw, applied for a rule to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against the printer, proprietor, and publisher, and also against the editor of the Manchester Chronicle, for the publication of libellous articles in that paper. The rule was granted.

Staff Assist.-Surg. Wordsworth has left Chatham, to prepare his passage to Corfu. Staff Assist.-Surgeons Johnston and Macdonald have also left, to prepare for service in Canada.

Staff Assist.-Surg. Grant has left Chatham for York, to take medical charge of the depots of the 1st Dragoon Guards and 7th Hussars.

[illegible] 1812, including the [illegible] [illegible] retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras, and subsequent advance from thence [illegible] served also the campaign of 1814 in Holland including the bombardment of Antwerp and the storming of [illegible] gun-up Zoom. Present at Quatre Bras and Waterloo,—[illegible] commanded [illegible] the [illegible] of 1814 in Holland, the munition waggons, each drawn by four horses, loaded with powder, left the Tower for Bristol, from whence they will proceed to Newport.

Rl. Military Academy.—The following are the names of the Gentlemen Cadets dismissed:—Messrs. Arnold, Muldmay, Romer, Neill, Philips, Carter, Holme, Maude, Caulfield, Harend, Elgee, Calder, Peers, Willett, W. King.

Recapitulation of Drafts in immediate Orders for Embarkation.—5th—Capt, two Lieuts., 150 r. and f. 12th—Capt., two Lieuts., two Ens., 150 r. and f. 27th—Capt., Ens. 40 r. and f. 33d—Two Capts., two Ens., 60 r. and f. 35th—Major, Capt., Lieut., three Ens., 120 r. and f. 46th—Capt., Lieut., Assist.-Surg., 140 r. and f. 47th—Maj., two Lieuts., three Ens., 140 r. and f. 48th—Capt., Ens., 140 r. and f. 52d—Two Lieuts., two Ens., 50 r. and f. 59th—Two Capts., two Lieuts., two Ens., 150 r. and f. 60th (1st Batt.)—Capt., two Ens., 125 r. and f. 60th (2d Battalion)—Two Captains, Lieutenant, two Second Lieutenants, 160 rank and file. 63th—Captain, two Ensigns, 100 rank and file. 70th—Captain, four Lieuts., three Ensigns, 160 r. and f. 74th—Maj., two Ens., 50 r. and f. 76th—Lieut.-Col., two Capts., Lieut., Ens., 50 r. and f. 77th—Capt., Lieut., two Ens., 100 r. and f. 81st—Capt., Lieut., Ens., 100 r. and f. 82d—Capt., Lieut., two Ens., 100 r. and f. 87th—Capt., Lieut., Asst. Lieut., Assist.-Surg., 170 r. and f. 89th—Capt., three Lieuts., 130 r. and f. 92d—Capt., Ens., 60 r. and f.

The Atholl, now at Cork, will embark the drafts for the 5th, 33d, 46th, 47th, 48th, 59th, 60th, 77th, and 92d, in the Mediterranean.

Queen's and Company's Second Lieutenants.—The Harkaru of the 16th inst. has a long article on the above subject, elicited by the arrival of H.M.'s 21st Fusiliers in Calcutta; and the confusion of ranks which it shows to be the natural consequence of the present state of things, certainly requires an immediate remedy. The case stands briefly thus. Queen's and Company's Second Lieutenants both hold Queen's commissions for the rank of Second Lieutenant, and of course on all public occasions, such as Courts-Martial and the like, take precedence according to the dates of their respective commissions. In the Royal Army, however, Second Lieutenants take precedence of all Ensigns, while in the Company's Army an Ensign takes precedence of a Second Lieutenant, if the date of his commission as Ensign be prior to that of the other as Second Lieutenant. Thus, taking A to be a Queen's Second Lieutenant, with a commission dated in 1832, B a Company's Second Lieutenant, commission dated 1831, and C a Company's Ensign, commission dated 1830, we should have this anomaly—A must yield precedence to B, who again, under the present system, must yield it to C: but, on the other hand, A would take precedence of C. We cannot understand what possible objection there could ever have been to assimilating the regulations of the Company's troops to those of Her Majesty's Army, but now that the difference between them may possibly give rise to disputes about precedence, and so lessen the harmony existing between the two services, the assimilation should be made without delay.—Madras Herald, 29th May.

Edward Blakeney, Lieut.-General Commanding.

Recent Intelligence.—In the year 1833 the depot of the 34th Regt. was quartered at Portsmouth, and the arrival of the head-quarters from India was anxiously looked for every day. One cold, wet, cheerless evening, about the latter end of November, a report prevailed in barracks that the Drum-Major of a regiment on foreign service had just landed from a troop-ship, who, it was said, had seen the regiment at the Cape of Good Hope. This intelligence was most gratifying to all, as it was calculated, from the arrival of the vessel which brought the Drum-Major, that the 34th Regt. could not be far behind. The Serjeant-Major of the depot resolved to ascertain the fact, and, in spite of the pouring rain, sallied forth himself to find the new comer. He traversed the Point, threaded the mazes of all the public-houses in Green-row and St. Thomas's-street, and, when thoroughly drenched, succeeded at last in finding the man he sought, very comfortably settled over a tumbler of punch in a house on the Common-hard at Portsea. Between the "non commissioned" there is usually a good deal of formal civility when the parties belonging to different regiments meet, but in this instance the Serjeant-Major's anxiety allowed him scarcely time to dash the water off his cap before he spoke. "Well, Drum Major," he exclaimed, "I'm told you have seen our regiment at the Cape." "What!" said the latter, eyeing the button of the querist's wet great coat, "what, the 34th? Yes I have, but I'm from the West Indies myself." "The West Indies!" shouted the Serjeant-Major. "Yes," said the Drum Major, "I'm from Demerary, but I saw your regiment at the Cape in 1801!" Only 32 years had elapsed since the occurrence, the 34th being then on its way out. The revulsion of feeling was too much for the Serjeant-Major, he quitted the public-house without a glance at the proffered punch.

WAR STEAMERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As the following description of a war-steamer, to be propelled by a wheel in the centre, may not be considered uninteresting to some of your Naval readers, I take the liberty of offering it for insertion in your valuable Paper, together with a few scattered ideas on other matters:—

First, then, allow me to observe, that the period may not be far distant which must call in question England's Naval supremacy. I am not one of those who think her right arm the least weaker than in former times; nor am I to be numbered amongst the discontented and grumbling. My career through a long peace, though it has not, could not have been glorious, has, nevertheless, passed away in activity, and pleasurable occupations relating solely to my profession—occasionally presenting models, on various plans, to the Admiralty, and, notwithstanding their rejection, still exercising my ingenuity in finding out others. These details, though uninteresting to the general reader, may, however, tend to inspire some degree of "esprit de corps" in those who, like myself, depend wholly on their own merits for preferment.

Steam-ships are now so generally used by all nations, there can no longer be any doubt, that whichever country can produce the most efficient steam navy in the event of a war, will not only rule the waves, but spread dismay, with gigantic strides, to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Ought we not then, blessed as this country is with every resource—a happy and enlightened Government—men with comprehensive minds and public spirit, ready to sacrifice all private interest when put in competition with that "amor patriæ, the pride and boast of every English heart;"—ought we not, I say, to strain every nerve to arrive at this supremacy; nor let any false notions of economy interfere with the remedies about to be proposed for ameliorating the wrongs and grievances of both services?

This is the age for improvement—the "march of intellect." View the powerful agency of steam, its utility to commerce, and certain effects in offensive warfare;—look on surrounding nations gradually becoming more and more powerful—the rapid intercourse with the New World—the revolution in this country—her vast resources, endless improvements, and happy people,—pause then, and wonder! Yet, amongst all these visible improvements and advantages, so beneficial to society at large, the "pride of Old England," her Navy, has been forgotten and neglected! The Admiralty have done much in creating a thorough reformation in the construction of our ships; and I am sure they have every inclination to reward the meritorious and deserving officer, whenever Parliament will grant them the means of doing so.

I am but young and inexperienced in these our nation's affairs; but I have observation enough to see, that whilst our Navy is vastly improved in the form and qualifications of its ships, the "esprit de corps" of its veteran band is very nearly extinguished. Ships in themselves, however good their qualities may be, are of no avail, unless commanded by skilful and zealous officers. With these qualifications, it is well known that a handy ship, thus commanded, though it may be greatly inferior in force, is a match for one more unwieldy, and less skilfully conducted. Thus should it be a nation's greatest care in peace to cherish rather than neglect the faithful guardians of honour, and to stimulate them zeal from time to time with appropriate rewards and arrangements.

I now come to the dimensions and description of the war-steamer, and being the work of my own hands, any of your readers may see it by going to the Model-room at the Admiralty:—Length on the water line, 240 feet; extreme breadth, 48 feet; draught of water, 18 feet; height of middle of main-deck port, 7 feet 6 inches; length of engine-room, 60 feet; height from platform, 17 feet; main-deck battery, thirty-four long 32-pounders; upper-deck, two long 96-pounders, and stows 500 tons of coal. The main-deck has no other interruption in it but the paddle-box in the centre, which occupies little more space than the pens would do in a frigate; and the junction of the bodies taking place at the load water-line, and where the lower-deck beams cross, it is not apprehended that her structure would be inferior in strength to ships of the common form, whilst it would possess greater stability, and very easy rolling—qualities so very desirable in steam navigation.

It is presumed that her engines, with one-third less power, would propel her at the same rate as steam-ships of the common form, from the paddle-wheel (which should be Morgan's) acting on a column of water passing between the bodies; whereas in a ship with paddles at her sides, great loss of power must ensue from the extent and frequent roughness of the water's surface, as also the constant rolling motion.

This vessel possessing greater breadth compared with other steam-ships, she should be rigged with three topsails, topgallant sails and royals, and fore and aft sails on the lower masts, and being unincumbered with wheels at her sides, it may be expected that her sailing qualities would be superior to any other steam-ship.

I am aware there is nothing new in propelling vessels on rivers by a wheel in the centre, but the method I have pursued in connecting the bodies, that the weakest part of the structure may be wholly immersed, will I think be found to answer every purpose; whilst the body above the line of floatation is the same to the eye, and as compact, and strong as any other ship.

EDMUND WILSON, Lieut. of the Port of Gibraltar.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.

SIR,—After the Guerriere's capture and destruction, it was apprehended by every Naval officer that other British 38's would fall easy sacrifices to the American 44's. Mr. Cooper is very brief in his account of the action between the UNITED STATES and the MACEDONIAN. Page 205, vol. ii.—'On the 25th of October * * * the United States, then in lat. 29. N., long. 29. 30. W., made a large sail to windward. It was Sunday, and there was a good breeze, with a heavy sea on. It was soon ascertained that the stranger was an enemy, and every exertion was made to get alongside of him, though the English ship, having the advantage of the wind, which she tenaciously maintained, was enabled for some time to prevent it."

"At length, believing himself to be within reach of his guns, Com. Decatur ordered a broadside to be fired from the United States, but it was found that most of the shot fell short. Keeping her luff, however, the ship was enabled to get nearer, and after a short delay she opened again with effect. A heavy and steady cannonade now commenced from the long guns of both vessels, carronades being useless for the first half hour.

"It was soon apparent that the American ship was cutting her antagonist to pieces, while she sustained but very little injury herself. As a matter of course, the English ship fell to leeward, while the American both closed and fore-reached on her. Finding herself far enough a-head and to windward, the United States at length tacked, and ranged up under the enemy's lee. At this moment the mizen-mast of the latter was shot away, her main and foretop masts were gone, her mainyard was hanging in two pieces, and no colours were flying." Thus struck the second bona-mene frigate, that barked, but did not bite.

"The Macedonian was a very fine ship of her class" (the truth) "mounting as usual 49 guns—eighteen on her gun-deck, and thirty two-pound carronades above. She was smaller, of lighter armament, and had fewer men than her opponent, of course; but the disproportion between the force of the two vessels was much less than that between the execution." (truth again.) "In this action the advantage of position was with the British ship, until she was crippled, and the combat was little more than a plain cannonade at a distance, that rendered grape and musketry of little or no use for the greater part of the time. The fire of the United States took effect so heavily in the waist of her antagonist, that it is said the marines of the latter were removed to the batteries, which circumstance increased the efficiency of the ship by enabling new crews to be placed at guns that had been once cleared of their men. On the other hand, the marines of the United States remained drawn up in the waist of that ship most of the time quite useless, though they are understood to have shown the utmost steadiness and good conduct under the example of their Commander, the weight of the enemy's fire passing a short distance above their heads." (No casualties were required to be filled up on the main-deck of the American frigate, she having so few of her crew hors de combat). "Of her officers and people (478) five were killed and seven wounded. Of the latter, two died, one of whom was Mr. John Musser FUNK, the Junior Lieutenant of the ship. No other officer was hurt." "Of 300 men on board the Macedonian, 36 were killed, and 68 wounded.—(For comparison and effect I extract from one page to another, thus, page 206.) "On taking possession, the enemy was found fearfully cut to pieces, having received no less than 100 round shot in her hull alone" Page 207.—"The United States suffered surprisingly little, considering the length of the cannonade and her equal exposure. She lost one of her top-gallant masts (!) received some wounds in the spars, had a good deal of rigging cut, and was otherwise injured aloft, but was hulled but a few times." The Macedonian, as has been stated, was hulled 100 times, lost her mizenmast, fore and main-top masts, and her mainyard hung in two pieces.

"Her two principal masts were secured, and a jury mizen-mast was rigged by the First Lieutenant, Mr. Allen, with great ingenuity, so as to convert the Macedonian into a bark." She arrived safe in Newport, and was added to the list of the American Navy.

It is a well-known fact that the Macedonian was a beaten ship before she herself was in action; that is, she was crippled by the United States at long-shot, in which that ship excelled, therefore, on the British side there was scarcely an action worth naming. The American dealt out shot by wholesale—the British by retail. I am writing to be comprehensible to shopmen as well as to seamen. The Macedonian's broadsides certainly carried away a top-gallant mast (a topgallant shot that), and hulled her antagonist a few times. Her eighteen 32-pound carronades, 12-pound carronade, and two 9-pounders on the quarter-deck and forecastle, were all disabled but two *. How were these carronades disabled? By raking shot cutting the breechings and chocks outside, fitted (I believe) upon the NON-RECOIL principle. Without the most masterly skill in gunnery, tactics, and seamanship, aided by fortunate circumstances, I, for one, felt assured, from what I saw of the Constitution off the Texel before the American war, that our 38's must knock under to the American 44's. Where was the Macedonian's masterly skill in the sky-ranging aim of the long 18's on the main deck? Where her masterly tactics in being raked with the weather-gage? Where her masterly judgment in being mangled at long balls when her only chance was at SHORT? The United States was not only superior in number of crew and weight of metal, but in her every action and manœuvre. Il faut le coup de maître, pour donner le coup de grace.

God forbid that any person should entertain even a transient idea, from these observations, that there was a want of heart, or zeal, or the utmost exertion, on board the Macedonian in the unequal combat; I merely submit an opinion, that without the master-ability of the seaman, artillerist, and tactician, no British 38 had a chance with an American almighty 44. The boldness of the lion avails him not, when caught in the net, or within the deadly range of the expert and practised hunter.

Comparative force of the two ships		Macedonian	United States.

Complement: Men		270	474

Mark well here, Mr. Cooper, the superiority of the United States of full one-third over her enemy in armament, complement, and tonnage. Now behold the VOTE OF CONGRESS!!

"The national legislature voted their thanks to Com. Decatur, officers, and crew of the frigate United States; also a gold medal to Com. Decatur, and silver medals to each of the officers, in honour of the brilliant victory (!) gained by the frigate United States over the British frigate Macedonian."

AVA PRIZE MONEY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—From a paragraph in your valuable journal some weeks since, it would appear there was then some prospect of the claimants of the Ava prize money who are in Europe being speedily paid. As I am aware you are cautious in giving insertion to mere vague rumours, can you say whether any steps are taking for the settlement of these claims? It is now within about two months of three years since payment of these claims commenced in Bengal. If I am correctly informed, all interest on the capital ceased from 1st January, 1837, so that the numerous parties in Europe, the West Indies, America, &c., who are still unpaid, are not only kept out of the principal, but it is no longer bearing interest. There surely can be no just or reasonable cause why three years should elapse, and still no payment be commenced in London. D. R.

MILFORD HAVEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As a constant reader of your valuable Journal, I have remarked those is seldom a subject to which you give your advocacy that does not sooner or later come to pass. I therefore beg to trouble you with a few observations on the unprotected state of Milford Haven, for insertion in your pages, and I trust the hints thrown out may meet the eye of the powers that be, and induce them to give the subject that attention its importance so justly merits.

Milford Haven has long been considered a port of immense importance to the British nation, and some 80 or 90 years ago steps were taken to fortify it. Surveys were then made, and sites in different places fixed upon for forts and batteries as follows:—

Burton Point—one for sixteen 24-pounders, with lodgings for 150 men.
Dale Point—one for six 24-pounders, with lodgings for 30 men.
West Nangle Point—one for eighteen 24-pounders and six 6-pounders, with lodgings for 150 men.
Popton Point—one for twelve 24-pounders, and four 6-pounders, with lodgings for 100 men.
Pater Point—one for six 24-pounders, and four 6-pounders, with lodgings for 50 men.
Neyland—one for six 24-pounders, and six 6-pounders, with barracks for 50 men.

Of these none were brought to maturity but the one at "Pater Point," which, as far as strength of material goes, is efficient enough, being twenty-three 24-pounders, but then there are no troops to make use of them. At Pembroke Dock, indeed, there is a handful of marines, say 60 or 70 men and officers, and 10 or 12 Artillerymen—an anomaly quite as regards the protection of the place. Thus the Royal Dockyard, with its several ships on the stocks—stores to the amount of thousands and thousands of pounds—timber in abundance for ship-building—offices—residences for officers, &c., &c., are all left to the mercy of the first boat's crew of any belligerent nation, or even the meanest gang of incendiaries or disaffected individuals prowling about in these unsettled times. I call then—and oh that my voice could be heard at the Council Board!—upon the responsible advisers of [my Sovereign no longer to neglect that unrivalled port, but to spare some of the forces disposable, at least to guard the dock-yard. There is but a Serjeant's guard mounted there, and the Superintendant's residence: the entrance to the yard, and even the office of the Clerk of the Cheque, where the money is lodged, are without sentinels. For the honour of the Navy, and the safety of the public property, this state of things ought not to exist!! But enough—verbum sats PHILOTHEORUS.

Gradations of Drunkenness.—There is a Rabbinica tradition related by Fabricius, which has whim, ingenuity and humour, at least, to recommend it. When Noah planted the vine, it states that Satan attended, and sacrificed a sheep, a lion, an ape, and a sow. These animals were to symbolise the gradations of inebriety. When man begins to drink he is as meek and innocent as the lamb; then becomes bold as the lion; his courage is soon transformed into the foolishness of the ape; and at last he wallows in the mire like the sow.

Sitting Duel.—When the celebrated Benjamin Constant fought with M. des Isarts, both being equally incapacitated from fighting on their legs, they were placed in chairs at the proper distances, and exchanged two shots apiece—luckily without effect.

To Readers and Correspondents.

The feeling entertained in the Navy respecting the promotion alluded to by "An Old Subscriber" is such as we have described it. Admitting that it included some hundreds of meritorious officers, it also included many, who have never performed, nor desired to perform, a day's service since the date of their commissions.

"A Serjeant of Militia" is informed that nothing is yet decided, and that the transfer cannot take place.—We have endeavoured to meet the wishes of "Clio."

We hope Captain D will not forget his promise to furnish us with a copy of his data in regard to Waterloo.

"Miles," "One of the Old 10th Legion," and "A Luff of the War," next week—"M.," who compliments us for the course we have adopted in regard to the U. S. Annuity Institution, should give us his name. In the meantime, and until we have fairly and fully reviewed the Rules, we need not enter upon the inquiry of our correspondent, "Why the Senior Officers of the Army do not support the Institution?" Should the Rules prove to be based on sound principles, support will then follow.

In answer to "Vindex," "A. L.," and other correspondents, we can positively state that the Queen's pleasure has not yet been taken on the proceedings of the Courts-Martial on Assist.-Surgeon Foulis, 20th Foot, and Paymaster Dunlevie, 98th, but our correspondents will find that we have not erred in our conjectures.

We have the pleasure of announcing this day the promotion of two meritorious officers, who have lately distinguished themselves by great activity on the Coast of Africa.

The officer whom "S." writes about, is on board Inconstant, ordered home from America.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1839.

A HASTY perusal of the observations in our last has led one or two correspondents to infer an invidious preference of Her Majesty's over the Company's army in the late brilliant undertaking before Ghuznee. We are, therefore, anxious to do ample justice to the gallant conduct of the Bengal European Regiment, one company of which, in conjunction with the flank companies of H.M.'s 2nd and 17th Regiments, formed the advance; and to the body of the regiment, and the remainder of H.M.'s 2nd Regiment, were entrusted the leading storming party. The high encomium passed by Sir J. Keane on the Bengal European regiment, together with the fact of their having sustained the most severe loss of any of the corps, bear testimony to their gallant conduct in the affair, and show how closely they engaged hand to hand with the enemy.

CAN any of our correspondents account for the extraordinary falling-off in the Offreckonings payable to the Colonels of the Indian Army within the last two years? There has been no reduction of that Army since 1829, previous to which the Offreckonings to Colonels appointed since May, 1824, averaged from 730*l.* to 740*l.* a-year. After the reduction of two companies in each regiment of Native Infantry on the 1st of May, 1829 (the policy of which, as it put a complete stop to the promotion of the Native Commissioned and Non-Commissioned Officers for some years, we are not now going to discuss) the Offreckonings remained for several years exceeding or about 600*l.* a-year, as the following statement, omitting fractions, will show:—

1830	648	1834	599
1831	661	1835	595
1832	605

In 1836 they fell to 571*l.*, and in 1837 to 530*l.*, being, in nine years, a diminution of 119*l.*, and in the last two years of 65*l.*

We are not aware that there has been any reduction in the numerical strength of the Army in the years 1836 and 1837, but rather imagine an increase by the raising of some local corps in Bengal; nor do we believe that the prices of broadcloth and other articles of clothing have increased during these, to many an old officer, disastrous years. Our impression on the contrary is, that prices have fallen on almost every description of material required for the dress of the European and native soldier. There has been, likewise, another cause which one should naturally have supposed would have tended to increase instead of diminishing the Offreckoning fund. We allude to the deaths of late years of several veteran officers, who, previous to 1824, were on what was termed the Senior List, and who, although removed from the actual command of regiments, received a proportion of Offreckonings from the general fund.

Assuming, as a matter of course, that the East India Company are acting on the square towards their old officers, it would be very satisfactory if some valid cause could be shown for this serious diminution in their income. To the favoured few who have returned with handsome fortunes, it may be a matter of secondary importance; but we fear, there are a great many Colonels who, after forty or fifty years service, are almost entirely dependent on their pay and emoluments; and to them the loss of between 60*l.* and 70*l.* a-year, without any assignable cause, from 1835 to 1837, is a misfortune of no ordinary magnitude.

WE are inundated with communications, pointing out to us, that we are in error in stating that Lieutenants of the Coast-Guard are in the receipt of pay at the rate of 9*s.* per diem, out of which certain deductions are made by the Customs for rent, and by requiring monthly receipts for pay, &c. With respect to the amount of pay received, we have no further observations to present beyond those offered in our former remarks. It is certain, that, whilst in the Coast-Guard, Lieutenants do not draw their half-pay from the Admiralty, although they receive a compensation from the Customs to the same amount. The Customs Establishment is consequently charged with the whole sum which the Lieutenants, whilst employed in the Coast-Guard, receive; and we have no doubt they are considered by the departments by whom they are paid to receive the sum of 9*s.* per day at the least—and where the half-pay exceeds 5*s.* per diem, the Customs' compensation is regulated accordingly. The continuance of an officer of this rank, in a service which he does not think remunerates him sufficiently, must be matter of decision for himself alone; but, once employed, he should be guided by, and not complain of, the regulations the service imposes, unless they are derogatory.

The deduction of 9*l.* per annum, for the accommodation afforded to the officers in buildings erected at the expense of the Crown, we see no reasonable objection to. On parts of the coast where such residences are not provided, we have heard of officers complaining of being obliged to pay nearly three times that sum. We know that in watch-vessels or in watch-houses no rent is charged; and where the accommodation offered by the Crown to the officer is of an inferior description, a reduction of rent may be expected to be allowed.

We cannot see any grievance in the Crown's requiring a receipt for their officers' monthly pay, so long as it happens to be the law of the land that receipts shall be required for any amount of or exceeding 5*l.* The mode of paying day pay monthly, is naturally looked upon as an indulgence to the officer, and if he is charged 3*d.* per month, the whole sum at the end of the year not exceeding 3*s.*, can scarcely be supposed worth the trouble of noticing.

We are always willing to be the channel through which officers, who see any grievances, in their opinion, calling for redress, may bring them under the notice of the department with whom the power of applying remedies may rest; but we are induced to bestow more attention upon this subject on the present occasion than we might otherwise have done, from a wish to remove prejudices which have been excited, we must say unfairly, against a service which, from its general usefulness, has strong claims to our best support.

We would notice one more question which has been put to us, inquiring, how officers serving in the Coast-Guard stand with regard to the order in Council of 15th July, 1836? We do not consider the order applies to Coast-Guard Officers, inasmuch as that, by the regulations laid down in 1831, the Coast-Guard Service was rendered by Sir James Graham essentially NAVAL. The Naval Officers serving in it have no claim to any superannuation, gratuity, or other allowance, on quitting it. The deduction made throughout the service, by the Treasury regulation of 11th August, 1829, towards the superannuation fund, is not put in force in the case of Naval officers. Moreover, Officers of the Royal Navy serving in the Coast-Guard are exempted from contributing to the Widow's Charity from their pay, and the claims of their widows are not affected thereby. In a word, the order in Council refers to Officers holding any Civil appointment, and cannot apply to a service which is constituted essentially Naval.

IT is evident, from the recent appointments in the Coast Guard, which will be found in another column, that the Admiralty have not extended the period of command to those officers whose triennial service expired on the 10th ultimo, which it was anticipated would have been the case, from the unusual delay in superseding them; it is, however, greatly to be hoped that the measure, which is understood to be in contemplation, may not be further delayed, and that the very reasonable hopes still entertained by the officers now employed, and which have been excited by reports which were well founded we believe, may not be disappointed.

We published in our Gazette of the 12th ultimo a very sensible letter on this subject; there can be no question that the service must derive considerable benefit by the continuance in employment of officers of experience and tried value, and we do not anticipate that the Admiralty, where there is no objection to its adoption other than the temporary suspension of patronage, will, from a motive of this nature, withhold their acquiescence.

WE have lately taken some considerable pains to ascertain the truth respecting the constant recrimination of complaints between the Masters of merchant vessels and their crews, and attended the hearing of several police cases with this view. Our previous impression is strengthened by what we have seen and heard, that, although for reasons we shall presently show, the accusations of the Masters are the most prominent before the public, the evil they complain of is brought about, in nine cases out of ten, by their own conduct.

When a Master can substantiate a charge against one of his crew, it is easy enough for him to prosecute it to conviction; a lawyer, with a shipowner for a client, will go to work with spirit; the truth is only ascertained by the patience of the magistrate, when he chooses to exercise it, in investigating the facts. But cases are continually occurring where the seaman is deprived of his remedy at law for the same reason that prevents the penniless starveling from entering the open door of the London Tavern. No lawyer will undertake his cause without a fee, or some security that after he has been at the expense of the preliminary proceedings, the party shall continue in the same mind, or be forthcoming to substantiate his case, and to bring forward his witnesses when the time of trial arrives.

Now, it frequently happens that the seaman's wages are withheld, or even if he is willing to give the lawyer the greatest part of this pittance, how can he maintain his witnesses and himself for weeks, or even days, pending the advent of a trial? Every practical man knows this to be impossible; he is either tampered with, or necessity drives him to sea to earn his bread, and the lawyer and the cause are left in the lurch. The reader may be assured, therefore, that whilst every complaint of the shipmasters against the crew is made public through the police reports, there are thousands of recriminatory cases of far greater hardship disposed of in the manner we have shown, and of which the public never hear.

The crews of merchant vessels are, in nine cases out of ten, made discontented by the violation of some stipulated or customary obligation, or by the inconsiderate, selfish, and brutal conduct of those in authority over them; and when a bad feeling is created and cherished we need not wonder that on some occasions it breaks out in turbulence and mutiny. Let any one go on board of a West Indiaman on her arrival in the docks, and inspect the miserable hole assigned for the accommodation of the crew, and let him consider whether men so treated, whose health and comfort are made secondary to the freight of a few hogsheads of sugar, let him imagine what must be the feeling produced by such usage.

We are induced to these observations by lately reading, in our useful contemporary, the Nautical Magazine, a complaint of very aggravated conduct on the part of the crew of a British schooner in South America, which appears to have been lightly punished, not from any defect in the law, but the state of prison discipline in the port where the offence occurred. The complainant, after stating this case, ingenuously confesses and enumerates a number of evils to which the crew of almost every vessel is more or less subject, from the tyranny and brutality exercised over them by the Masters and Mates. The complainant and his commentator blame the law as the cause of this, and require that more stringent powers should be placed in the hands of Masters of vessels. Shipmasters are continually clamouring for this, and pointing to the inefficiency of Sir James Graham's act. Now, we have had the curiosity to look over the clauses of that act, which apply to the punishment of refractory seamen, and also the statutes which are consolidated into that act, and we are not able to discover that any material alteration is made in the old law, except that the means of conviction are more prompt, and, as we think, the punishment more severe, under the existing act.

We know not why seamen should be subjected to heavier infliction for transgressions of the same character than other classes, and we imagine that fourteen days' imprisonment and hard labour would be considered a pretty heavy infliction by those who are so ready to accord it; and certain we are that the Legislature will never be induced to place more stringent authority in the hands of these men, or permit them to proceed to extremities, without the sanction of a magistrate, until, by considerably reforming their own conduct, they make it appear that they are worthy of the trust. We have no patience with these people. By their own improvidence in neglecting their apprentices, or brutal treatment of their crews, they produce the evil, and then weary the public with their complaints, and the Legislature with petitions for redress.

We recollect hearing that, when the provisions of the Merchant Seaman's Act were under consideration, a deputation of Shipowners waited on Sir James Graham, and proposed that a clause should be inserted, authorising Captains in command of Her Majesty's ships to adjudicate complaints, and to flog refractory seamen; we do not recollect that any provision was proposed respecting the possible culpability of Masters, which we presume was considered impossible. This proposal was rejected, because in a foreign port there is always a Consul, and he has authority to punish the guilty parties, and it was considered derogatory to impose this task on Naval Officers, and thus make the appearance of a ship-of-war dreaded, instead of being hailed with respect as a natural protector in foreign parts.

The remedy for the evils complained of is in the hands of the Shipowners themselves. Let them use proper discrimination in selecting persons to command their vessels, oblige them to pass an examination as to their capacity, and above all insist upon proper regulations for the treatment of the crew, but more particularly in training and instructing the apprentice boys in their employment, and instilling into them habits of subordination.

We could name several extensive Shipowners, whose Masters and Mates have been all reared up in their service, and in whose vessels there are seldom or never complaints occurring, because they are careful in selecting their crews, and frequently employ the same seamen for years in one ship or other belonging to them, either in coasting or foreign voyages.

We published on the 26th ultimo a letter, directing attention to the extremely unjust tax on the correspondence of Officers in the Army, one of the numerous paltry exactions which we are sure only requires proper representation to induce the authorities to interfere for the protection of the Officers.

It is impossible to conceive how the tax in question was ever allowed to be imposed. Officers are necessarily, from circumstances merely arising from their constant change of place and distance from relatives and friends, subjected to a much greater expense of postage than they would otherwise be; and, in order to persecute them as much as possible in this respect, their correspondence is made the subject of a tax, which neither the Government nor the richest persons in the realm are liable to. Surely the paltry exaction of a penny for each letter received by the officer, sometimes amounting to fifty per cent. on the postage, must be discontinued. The poor officer cannot have a letter franked to him! Pay something for it he must. Why, there is not a tradesman in the realm who would be mean enough to allow one of his porters to exact extra money, besides the postage, for distributing the letters to his clerks.

Let it not be supposed, however, that we wish to deprive the Drum-Major of his emolument. Far from it. We merely insist that, as the necessity of his or some other person handling the letters in transit to the officers arises out of the circumstances of the service, the Government should satisfy him; for it is obviously nothing but common justice that the officer should be allowed to receive his letters on as reasonable terms as other people. Besides, the Government oblige the Drum-Major to fetch their letters regularly without any emolument.

The penny postage, considered by many so great a boon to the nation, if the tax in question be allowed to continue, will only be a source of extra expense, and an additional tax on the officer's correspondence with his friends. We trust, however, we shall be the means of getting an unjust and obnoxious tax removed from one of his greatest solaces—the intercourse by letter with his far distant friends. Some persons may attempt to sneer at what they may consider a paltry consideration, but there is nothing paltry about the thing but the imposition, and we repeat that the officer ought not to pay more for his letters than civilians.

In directing last week the attention of our Military readers to the subject of relieving the regiments stationed in the West Indies, by means of those now serving in America; we would not have it supposed that we intended — were our suggestions adopted and acted on by the Horse Guards—that the 23rd, 43rd, and 85th, to which may be added the 71st Light Infantry, should remain in the West Indies during the entire term of their foreign service.

The rule we should wish to see adopted is, that regiments leaving England for ten years foreign service should proceed in the first instance to America, the climate of which bears a greater resemblance than that of Gibraltar to the climate of Great Britain; after serving three years in America let them pass to the West Indies, and thence proceed to Malta or the Ionian Islands, for three years, at the end of which time their turn for home service would arrive.

This is our plan of rotation for regiments serving in the West Indies and Canada.

In the case of a regiment intended for service in the East, we would propose to send it to Gibraltar for two or three years, remove it thence to the Cape of Good Hope for three years, and at the end of that time send it on to Ceylon, India, or the Mauritius.

We should thus bring Gibraltar into the eastern instead of the western system of rotation; and here let us observe, that the two companies, which garrison St. Helena, ought to be detached from Gibraltar, and not, as at present, from the Cape of Good Hope. The remaining four companies of the extra regiment, required for this purpose at Gibraltar, would then just supply a sufficient number of men for Gibraltar garrison, which is acknowledged to be most inadequately supplied with troops, so much so, that complaints of severe duty come oftener from Gibraltar than almost any foreign station.

Since the above was in type, the following letter has reached us.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Two years have now elapsed since the commencement of the Rotation System, during which time it has furnished the subject of much discussion. But previous to the appearance of a paragraph in your last Saturday's Number, I have seen nothing on the important question—"Why are the reliefs of regiments in the W. Indies not made from Canada as well as from the Mediterranean?" and I look upon it as a matter of congratulation to the corps in the W. Indies that you have led the way in making this enquiry, as we may hope that the same zeal and efficiency with which you have advocated other salutary measures will be exerted on the present occasion, and tend to beneficial results by promoting punctuality and fairness in the relief of regiments on the new system.

We must give the originators of the Rotation System credit for too much sagacity, to suppose that in proposing and establishing the system of Down Trains from the Mediterranean they overlooked the practicability of an Up Train from Canada. Why then has it not been started? A variety of reasons might be given under the head of surmises, but in the few remarks we wish to offer, we would avoid conjecture as much as possible. The principle of the Rotation System in itself must be admitted to have its foundation in equity and justice, and we hope to see it carried on on those principles, and that as in theory we were led to believe, so in practice we shall find that henceforward no regiment shall be consigned to the evile W. Indian islands for a longer period than three years; and if it appear, upon taking all things into consideration, that any regiment in Canada should in fairness be the first to go to the W. Indies, we are quite at a loss to conceive why that regiment should not forthwith proceed to relieve a regiment that has served its period in the W Indies, as there is no reason that we are aware of for assuming that a change from Canada to the W. Indies will be in the least degree more detrimental to the health of the troops than the change from England or the Mediterranean to that noxious climate, and it is very reasonable to suppose that the change from the W. Indies afterwards to the genial climate of the Mediterranean, will be found in the highest degree restorative.

The empirical doctrine of SEASONING troops by the Mediterranean for the W. Indies we conceive has been pretty well disposed of by the mortality that has occurred amongst these troops on whom the experiment has been tried: we therefore presume no one will henceforward give, as a reason for making the first period of service in the Mediterranean, that the troops are thereby inured or seasoned for the W. Indian climate; nothing can be sent there well seasoned for the country but a regiment of Salamanders or black niggers.

In answer to any objections that may be made to moving troops from Canada to the West Indies, on the score that the men of a regiment in Canada would desert if they thought they were to go to the W. Indies, we can only say that it appears rather derogatory to the discipline of the Army, and certainly a startling assertion "that the troops in Canada have taken up their position in that country, and dare to say, You shall not move us to the West Indies, for if you attempt to do so we shall desert."

With regard to another point deserving attention, the expense of transporting the troops regularly on the new system, there indeed, we believe, lies a stumbling-block; the greatness and richness of this country, and the various reforms and improvements that are daily taking place, may be traced to the exertions of private individuals either singly or combined; the measures of our Government are but too frequently characterised by a lavish prodigality on the one hand, and on the other by a niggardly paltry economy, ill-becoming any country great or small; and although many thousands may easily be found to build a stable or coachhouse, we always find that if a fiftieth part of the sum is wanted to remove a regiment that has served its time amidst the pestilence and famine of the W. Indies, or under the scorching heats of India, the means of transport cannot be obtained, and it is put off from day to day, and year to year, as if the prolonging the misery of some, and terminating the existence of others, by detaining them in such climates, were trivial matters.

In addition to those regiments in Canada which you have enumerated as fit subjects for the West Indies, there are some in the Mediterranean, such as the 53d and 60th, who ought certainly not to escape.

M.

WITH Mr. Tufnell's political opinions we have nothing to do. Upon this point his declarations appear in harmony with the constituency he has addressed, as the result of his successful canvas proves. But we think this gentleman has a claim for the support of Naval Officers, on account of the disposition he has invariably manifested to advance their petitions and memorials, and assist them in framing their requests.

Taking into consideration the immense mass of matter brought daily before the First Lord of the Admiralty, the many claims he has to resolve upon, boards, councils, and commissions to attend, &c. &c., it is evident that, when he possesses a Private Secretary, in whose experience and judgment he confides, he will be greatly assisted by that gentleman's marking the most prominent passages of a memorial, or investigating the merits of a claim, winnowing out as it were the grain from the chaff, and reducing the business to a tangible shape, so that he may the more readily decide upon it.

The requests for promotions or appointments are small in comparison to the variety of other matter which we imagine must be brought under the First Lord's attention; scarce a week elapses but that ourselves are consulted by officers anxious to frame their memorials or requests in such a shape as might best promote success. Whenever we thought our advice would be of service we have freely bestowed it, but on several, indeed many, occasions, within these three or four years, we have recommended the claimant to ask for an interview with the Private Secretary, to explain to him as concisely as possible the nature of his request, and to solicit his advice as to the best manner in which he should shape his memorial or prefer his claim.

In many instances these officers have returned to us to express their admiration of the considerate, attentive, and friendly manner in which Mr. Tufnell has received them; and several have attributed their eventual success to the pains that gentleman has bestowed in investigating their claims, and, when satisfied of their justice and merits, bringing them in proper shape and in proper season under the consideration of the First Lord.

For these reasons, and in order to mark their gratitude for such conduct in Mr. Tufnell,—and to stimulate the like in his successor, whoever he may be,—we trust that gentleman will receive the suffrages of many Naval Officers, voters for Devonport, who may not go the whole length of his politics. No Conservative candidate has been yet announced, and there does not appear a prospect of success for any, even should both the liberal candidates go to the poll; for, in 1835, Mr. Dawson, even with the aid of the Government patronage, was nearly 200 below Sir George Grey. Mr. Tufnell is, we understand, a gentleman of ample fortune, fond of official business, and emulous, no doubt, of political preferment. As he must have acquired considerable insight into Naval affairs, we calculate on possessing in him an able advocate in the Legislature, whenever the interests of that service shall come under discussion; and we are confident that, whatever advancement he may obtain, he will never forget the claims of the Navy upon the country, and do all in his power to substantiate them.

THE opinion we last week gave of the romance of "Jack Sheppard" must find approval in the breast of every one who values the character of our national literature, and (a subject still more important) that of our national manners and morals, upon which (in an age when babies and beggars read) that literature must exercise a powerful influence. The topic, though not immediately adapted to the general purposes of the N. & M. Gazette, may yet merit some prolonged attention from its readers, in common with other English gentlemen, who may be willing seriously to reflect whether they wish their daughters or sisters qualified to patter flash with the denizens of East Smithfield and St. Giles's, for to this happy consummation, together with a perfect theoretical acquaintance with the lowest as well as most atrocious habits of vice, their perusal of the Newgate-Calendar school of Romance, together with that of the daily and most of the weekly papers, must directly tend. And if their choice of books be free from direct superintendence, (rarely exercised, we fear, though exceedingly wholesome and proper, at least on the sunny side of that most fluctuating "certain age,") how should they, however willing to avoid food fit only for male digestion, if not absolutely poisonous, be prepared for what is placed before them? And this willingness is not universal, for this, the age of much of false and ultra refinement, is far from being favourable to the perfection of true feminine delicacy. We are by no means absolutely intolerant of slang if kept in its proper place, and not employed in aid of a low standard of morality; and probably few of the fair sex would invade the pages of Pierce Egan or Jon Bee, or the columns of Bell's Life in London, (all, by the way, infinitely more decent and moral, as well as more natural, than some of the fashionable romances), and if they did so it would be recklessly and with their eyes open: but this is not the case when the author of "Pelham" (the very champion of the silver-fork school) enters the field; or "Boz," whose first work, though not free from the present reproach, was yet far different from his "Oliver Twist;" or even Mr. Ainsworth, with his well-sounding titles of "Rookwood" and "Crichton." Nor is every lady obliged to know that "Jack Sheppard" (against the mangling of whose real history and character we beg to issue a passing protest) was a celebrated thief and housebreaker. He might be, as his surname should import, but the inhabitant of some rustic Arcadia.

It is mere nonsense to offer the example of older writers, of Fielding, Smollett, Congreve, Farquhar, &c., up to Shakspeare himself, as an apology for the indecencies of modern romances. When all these authors lived, readers were infinitely few in any rank or either sex: ladies, children, and half-educated mechanics in particular, were not great consumers of books; even the theatres, during their most licentious period, were never visited by women of any pretensions to modesty or respectability. We know that Fielding in his "Jonathan Wild" goes a step or two beyond Ainsworth in his "Jack Sheppard," but that work was not written "virginibus puerisque." Scott, in one or two of his matchless romances, chiefly in the "Fortunes of Nigel," has introduced a modicum of slang, and a few scenes adapted thereunto: sufficient indeed to show that had he chosen to pursue such a course, he would there, as elsewhere, have proved himself facile princeps; but with good judgment and policy he avoided the path when he felt the quagmire shake under him. But where he scarce wetted his foot, Mr. Ainsworth has plunged in over neck, ears, and all; and of the muddy Helicon which Scott scarce deigned to touch with his lips, he, misapplying the poetic maxim, "Drink deep, or taste not," has taken a potent draught. In the lowest of all his styles, if he equal or surpass the Wonder of the North, it is only because that great writer felt that his genius would be debased by such exertion. Our modern flash novellists dare not indeed give the finishing touches to their thieves and prostitutes; they dare not make them say or do all that they should to be perfectly real, and thus the picture is just sufficiently true to be unutterably disgusting, without presenting us with the whole truth. However, to do him justice, there is a good deal of nature (if the word can be applied to the manners of the off-scourings of great cities) and truth in the Jack Sheppard blackguardism; whereas "Boz," in our opinion, fails when he dips his pen in the kennel. We allow, though objecting even to any mixture of the ingredient in a book intended for the drawing-room, that some of the lighter and less offensive slang of Sam Weller comes trippingly and pleasantly enough off the tongue of that worthy, but the much vaunted "Oliver Twist" is, in our opinion, a failure. Its ruffians, though ruffianly and disgusting enough certainly, have not an air of reality; nor does the author shine in scenes of violence of any kind. We will endeavour to illustrate this by one instance, we might produce many. The murder in "Oliver Twist" is much spoken of, and no doubt it is horrible enough, but it is sufficiently improbable to prove that "Boz" would make but a bungling assassin, a regular muff at such butchering work. He had evidently been studying all the most noted cases of the kind, recorded in the newspapers from twenty years back to the present time, and out of several of these he has constructed a very sorry mélange. He remembered the unusual circumstance of Thurtell, when his pistol failed to inflict a mortal wound, using it promptly and effectually as a weapon of close attack, by punching in with its barrel the skull of his wretched companion. Hereupon Mr. Dickens makes his murderer, afraid of firing on account of noise, employ his pistol in a similar manner, but not on the head but the face of his prepared and imploring mistress, and this mangling work several times repeated, we are to believe that the unfortunate woman endures in silence! We will venture to say that, common as atrocities are and have been, such a murder was never yet committed.

The Queen and the Duchess of Kent continue in the enjoyment of excellent health; but owing to the unfavourable state of the weather, Her Majesty has not taken her usual equestrian exercises during the week. Sunday was the birth-day of the Princess Sophia, and yesterday that of the Princess Augusta.

On Tuesday accounts reached town from the West of England, that an organised and armed insurrection had broken out in the counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan. At Newport a number of rioters were killed, and some of the special constables and soldiers employed in dispersing them seriously wounded. The Mayor was also severely wounded. The rioters, to the number of several thousands, entered Newport in the morning from the neighbouring hills, where they had assembled under the command of Frost, who was recently discharged from the commission of the peace, in consequence of his attending Chartist meetings. The first object of attack was the inn at which the magistrates were assembled, and where a small detachment of the 45th were in readiness. The soldiers were ordered to fire on the rioters, twenty of whom were killed, and several others mortally wounded. The Chartists were many of them armed with guns, with which they returned the fire of the military; but they were soon routed, and in their flight they threw away their pikes and other weapons. Frost, and another man named Walters, have been apprehended, and after a lengthened examination before the magistrates, have been committed for high treason. A seizure of papers in the house of the former prisoner, as well as in that of Partridge, the Chartist printer, has been made. The latest accounts state that large bodies of insurgents were still on the hills, but had not thought it advisable to renew their attempt upon Newport, in consequence of reinforcements, consisting of a troop of the 12th Lancers, and two companies of the 12th Foot, which had arrived since the previous attack. It is said that the papers seized in the house of Frost reveal a wide-laid revolutionary conspiracy, of which the attack on Newport was the preliminary movement. Under the head of the 45th Regiment, we have noticed the gallant conduct of the officer in command of the detachment of that corps. Upon this riot the Times has the following just remark: "It is the growth and lowering aspect of this dreadful conspiracy to which we have stood indebted for the reduction of the military force in Ireland to a pitch of weakness utterly incapable of protecting life or property, when Mr. O'Connell, having first provided for his own safety, shall order the flag of confiscation and massacre to be unfurled. It is the Chartist league which suspended the sailing orders of several regiments destined six months ago to relieve a portion of the Queen's troops serving for twelve years past in our distant colonies, and which, unless matters mend at home—a dismal chance, we apprehend—bids fair to keep the bulk of the British Army in perpetual exile."

Despatches were sent off on Saturday evening from the Colonial-Office for Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar. On Monday despatches from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Howard Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, were received at the Colonial-Office; also from Sir Alexander Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar; and from Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry Bouverie, the Governor of Malta. Despatches, dated 17th ult., were received on Thursday at the foreign department, from Lord Ponsonby, the British ambassador at Constantinople, and despatches were forwarded for the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British ambassador at St. Petersburgh. Despatches were received from the Governors of Upper and Lower Canada, and despatches were sent off from the Colonial-office for the Right Hon. C. P. Thomson, and also for Sir John Harvey.

The Duke of Wellington arrived at the Antwerp Inn, Dover, at 11 o'clock on Friday, under a salute from the heights, for the purpose of holding a Court of Load Manage. He was received by Colonel Munro and a guard of honour of the 90th Regt. His Grace proceeded at once to St. James's church, followed by the whole of the Trinity pilots. On taking his seat near the communion table, he was supported by the Mayors of Dover and Sandwich, the Deputy Governor of Dover Castle, and others, Captains and Lieutenants holding appointments under him. The Court being formed, and the usual ceremony having been gone through of electing a Master Warden for the fellowship of pilots, his Grace again returned to the Antwerp, there to fill up the vacancies in that body occasioned by deaths, &c. At 5 o'clock the Wardens and the newly admitted members had the honour of dining with his Grace.

Sir Robert Rolfe, Solicitor-General, is appointed to succeed the late Mr. Justice Vaughan. The elevation to the bench of the learned Solicitor-General will occasion a vacancy in the representation of Falmouth; but the writ commanding the election cannot be moved for till the commencement of the session.

The decision of the Treasury on the Postage question —retarded by the number of proposals sent in and other mechanical causes—is now announced as likely to be given at no distant period.

Lieut.-General Sir John Colborne has taken Lyneham Hall, the late residence of J. Bulteel, Esq., near Plymouth.

We stated some time ago that Mr. Lockhart was about to lead to the hymeneal altar the celebrated Miss Burdett Coutts, daughter of the late "Old Glory of Westminster;" we have great pleasure in now stating that the arrangements are nearly complete, and that the worthy heiress is devoted to the accomplished author.—Sheffield Iris. Fudge!

Lady Lytton Bulwer has addressed a letter to the Morning Post, complaining of a mis-statement which appeared in that paper and in the Court Journal of the 19th ult., which professed to describe a scene between her Ladyship and Mr. Henry Bulwer at Lady Aylmer's soirée. Lady Bulwer contradicts the whole affair, and states that Mr. Bulwer was not even present at the party alluded to. We regret, under any circumstances, being instrumental in circulating an erroneous report, but in the present instance our regret is somewhat diminished in consequence of the uncourteous—not to say unladylike—terms used by Lady Bulwer in speaking of the Court Journal. From the circumstance of the occurrence finding a place in the columns of the Morning Post and the Court Journal simultaneously, it is evident that the rumour did not originate with us, and it is equally clear that the rumour was currently circulated in Paris, from its finding its way into two Journals whose channels of information are altogether different.—Court Journal. [The whole affair is a discreditable hoax; and we should be glad to see the parties exposed.—ED. N. & M. G.]

Covent Garden.—On Monday Mr Sheridan Knowles' new play in five acts, and entitled Love, was produced. The drama has been got up in the very first style of decoration, the scenery and dresses being of the most enchanting and magnificent description. The design of the author is to represent the character of a proud woman under the contending passions of pride and love. The style of the play is throughout beautiful, and the master-passion, love, is exquisitely and forcibly painted. The acting was remarkably good, and the play announced for repetition amidst the greatest applause. We are glad to find Sheridan Knowles bearing testimony to the liberality of the management, not only in the getting up of the play, but in recompensing the author. "Mr. and Mrs. Mathews," he says, "have granted me the highest terms I ever yet received for a play."

Haymarket.—The universal interest excited by the announcement of Sir E. Lytton Bulwer's new play, entitled The Sea Captain, was fully gratified by its production on Friday week to the most brilliant and delighted audience of the season. As, from the necessary delay in our notice of it, this admirable play has no doubt already been seen by a large majority of our readers, we shall only say of it that it has continued to attract full audiences every evening since its production, and that there is but one feeling among all, as to the intense interest which some of its scenes excite, and the striking and impressive effect of the performance as a whole. Though entirely different in style and character from all the previous dramatic works of its writer, it has nevertheless all that force, spirit, and dramatic tact which so eminently distinguish them from those of all their modern rivals in the same line, and if upon the whole the Sea Captain is not calculated, from the very sombre and almost painful nature of the principal female character, to be so generally attractive as The Lady of Lyons and Richelieu, we doubt if it does not include more depth of poetic feeling, and more force of character, than either of those works. The two principal characters were beautifully acted by Macready and Mrs. Warner; and we never remember to have seen Strickland display so much real dramatic talent as in Sir Maurice, though the character is a painful and disagreeable one. Miss Faucit was exquisitely touching in the little she had to do, and the drama was perfectly well acted throughout.

Adelphi.—This theatre continues to be crowded every night. The fine acting of Mrs. Keeley in Jack Sheppard is wonderfully attractive. A new burletta, called the Beadle of the Parish, has been performed with the greatest success.

St. James's.—This theatre opened on Tuesday, under the management, (we fear we shall have to say mismanagement) of the late lessee of Drury-Lane. The performances consisted of a revival of Monsieur Jacques, and a ballet called the 'Fille mal Gardée.' The latter is sad trash, but as the Literary Gazette justly observes,—"those whose habits of life lead them to take pleasure in such exhibitions will find every thing to gratify their appetites on these boards, with their filles unguarded enough, and almost undressed."

On Two Announcements of last Tuesday.

One paragraph tells—"here I am on my pins,"
Another, that "failure has more than begun."
One tells—"from this evening my business begins;"
Another makes known that "my labours are done"

A manager blame not, as wanting in soul,

Where others must finish—the London Gazette.

SPAIN.—The Emperor of Austria has signified his willingness to recognise both the Spanish and Portuguese constitutional governments, on condition of a marriage between the eldest son of Don Carlos and the Queen of Spain, the restoration of all the property of Don Carlos and Don Miguel, with pensions suitable to their rank, and the reform of the clergy in both countries under the direction of his Holiness the Pope. It is also stipulated that all the loans contracted by Don Carlos and Don Miguel shall be recognised.

EGYPT.—Before the departure of Commander Stopford, of the Zebra, in an audience which he had of the Pasha, the latter addressed to him the following words: "Tell your father (Admiral Stopford) that I will not give up the Turkish fleet—that in the long course of my life I was never guilty of cowardice, a gross act of which it would be if I were to submit to the absolute will of the great Powers." A great mortality has broken out amongst the crew of the Turkish fleet at Alexandria. Up to 13th Oct. more than 2,000 had died, and upwards of 1,500 were in the hospitals. The malady, however, was subsiding when the last accounts left.

CHINA.—Orders have been sent to India for the ships-of-war on that station to proceed at once to China. The Druid, and some other frigates, are, it is said, ordered also to join the squadron and blockade the Chinese coasts, seize upon their junks, and harass them in every possible way, until redress has been obtained, in the shape of 2,000,000*l.*, for the opium lately taken possession of and destroyed by the Chinese Government.

The latest news from China brings us intelligence of the actual destruction of the opium surrendered. All parties are anxiously looking as to the course to be pursued by the British Government. The British merchants had all left Canton and repaired to Macao. The American houses still continued to transact business at Canton, and were deriving great advantages from the trans-shipment of British goods in American vessels.

UNITED STATES.—The steam-ship Liverpool, Lieut. Fayrer, R.N., arrived at Liverpool on Thursday morning, after a passage of 17 days, from New York. The news brought by the Liverpool is most important. The Bank of the United States had suspended payment several days before the arrival of the Liverpool at New York, news from Europe of the monetary difficulties of the times having been received by the London packet. The Baltimore and nearly all the banks in the South had also suspended. The New York and the Boston banks alone stood firm.

THE BOLD YOUNG HUSSAR.

Oh who can help loving a bold young hussar?
What magnificent creatures those officers are!
There's Swillit I'm sure, though he's not over tall,
How imposing his gait, and how martial withal!
With nostrils all wide, how majestic his pace!
I wonder what foe could e'er look in his face!
Hear the clink of his spurs, see the turn of his toes!
There's fire in his eye, and there's fire in his nose:
Such a turtle in peace, such a tiger in war!
Oh who can help loving a bold young hussar?

When he strides into Doolly's, and calls out for supple,
How deadly the fire of his dark rolling eye!
And then, so voracious he dives in his fork,
You would think he was busy transfixing a Turk!
Again into Colton's behold him advance,
How the 'bacco-boy crouches beneath his stern glance!
There envelop'd he stands like a tableau of Mars
In his element smoke,—though it be but cigars.
Such a turtle in peace, such a tiger in war!
Oh who can help loving a gallant hussar?

Sure when nations are tranquil, and peace is restored,
And their country demands not the aid of the sword,
How justly deserving those officers are
Of their country's respect, and the smiles of the fair!
Yet men are so jealous; and, strange though it seem,
They seldom command their own sex's esteem!—
Yes,—woman alone of true valour's the judge,
And her smiles and her favours she never will grudge
To those turtles in peace, and those tigers in war,
Oh who can help loving a brave young hussar?

MAJOR MACNAMARA'S SKETCH OF THE BRITISH OFFICER AT THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE LATE WAR.—(Continued from p. 693.)

THE officer's commission was quite as easily got at as the soldier's back; the prerogative Courts-Martial and starvation upon half-pay were formidable antagonists for the mere soldier of fortune to contend with, who ventured on any subject to have an opinion of his own; and yet amidst an immense mass of dregs there was a considerable portion of rich and valuable ore that could not be deteriorated even by the corruption that surrounded it. There is, moreover, something in the profession of arms which, although it will not exactly operate upon mere fools or cowards, certainly tends to ennoble all those who are not fools or cowards—a species of alchymy that extracts rich and valuable metal from the rudest and apparently most worthless material. The conventional code of the Army, even at this time, acted as a strong corrective to the evils of the system we have described. Bravery, open and honourable dealing, the conduct and manners of a gentleman, were scrupulously exacted by one officer from another, and out of these qualities, artificial as some of them might be, others were generated, so that in process of time, either by a natural impulse, or the weariness and disgust of ignorance and vice that almost every man feels at one period or other of his life, such minds appeared who were neither afraid or ashamed to cast off their trammels, or to express their contempt and abhorrence of those who continued wilfully to wear them. There gradually arose a "class apart," "Methodists," as they were then termed, an embryo of what the older British officer became towards the conclusion of the last war, many living examples of which are happily still to be found—patriots, warriors, statesmen, men who were as admirable in their professional capacity as they were exemplary in the private relations of life, and who, we must insist upon it, ought to be (if they are not so) the pride and boast of England, and whom it is the bounden duty as well as the interest of Englishmen to cherish and reward, that the race may be perpetuated, that it may live for ever "in their descendants," the glory and the security of a great, a free, and an enlightened people.

These were the men who, in defiance of a system the most vicious and unnatural that ever was devised, and to which they were bound by letters that cramped and confined equally their mental and physical faculties, became, as it were by intuition, alive to the utter degradation in which that system involved the profession of arms, and sought to counteract it by gentleness and humanity—dealing with the brutalised soldier as if he had still some slight remnant of those feelings which, in the order of nature, are common to both, and resorting to punishment only when rewarding, persuasion, and reproof, had become entirely unavailing. This they were often obliged to do as it were by stealth: the system was denounced by the "flagellists" as a "milk-and-water" one, and its devisers and practisers ridiculed as "old women." It nevertheless worked well, and in a short space of time effected a marked and decided improvement in the conduct and condition of the soldier. The previous indiscriminate character of the punishment he was subjected to having changed, he began to feel that the good opinion of his officer was of some real value to him, and sought not only to acquire it, but to retain it; he began to regard his officer not only as his master but as his friend, became personally attached to him as such, and studiously endeavoured to avoid punishment, not only because he feared it, but because he also felt and knew that to enforce it would give his officer pain. The grand and decisive benefit however that this milder and more rational system of Military administration conferred upon the Army was, that it not only reconciled the service who were frequently in the habit of even maiming themselves to escape from it, but it created an "esprit de corps," a regimental attachment and emulation that, more than anything else perhaps, enabled the British Army, a few years later, to answer the demand "at sight" made upon it by one of its greatest leaders, as well as one of the most accomplished gentlemen of the day, and to enter the lists with advantage against the best and choicest troops of France.

The amended system, however, was far from being generally adopted throughout the service; the dawning of its effects might indeed be discerned in most regiments, but it was generally acted upon in few. The articles of war, and the rules and regulations, remained in all their power, might, majesty and dominion (however nominally as we have shown in some instances), to work out the utter demoralisation. Military as well as moral, of the Helots they were designed to govern, and it was not until the Army took the field in the Peninsula that they were necessarily modified, and by being made rather more flexible, perhaps, better adapted to the changes of position and circumstances to which the Army was liable. But they were far from assuming a milder character; they were, if anything, more sanguinary than before, but happily their effects continued to be counteracted by the necessities of the times, and by the sense, wisdom, and discretion of their great leader, who, casting aside the mere trivialities of the service, which had hitherto constituted its very soul and essence, looked for field capabilities only from his officers and soldiers, and cared as little whether the soldier could see to shave himself by the lustre of his pouch, as whether he was shaved at all, provided his musket and bayonet were effective, and his heart and arm ready to use them; and who, provided a regiment was brought readily and steadily into line of battle, troubled himself quite as little about the means and method by which it was effected. The Regimental Commanding Officer had then, for the first time, fair play given him. Few men can attain that station without acquiring some slight knowledge of human nature generally, as well as a tolerably correct conception of individual character; but if he had possessed these attainments, he had been debarred the means of making them practically useful, and, controlled as he was, would have been better without them; he had now full and ample power, combined with discretion, and the result was highly creditable to the shades of British officers, never were British regiments more generally orderly and efficient, and never was flogging so little practised in the British service.

In the foregoing sketch of the British officer and soldier towards the conclusion of the 18th century, it will be perceived that we have "nothing exaggerated," and we confidently appeal to any of the surviving disciples* of the "pig-tail and jupe-lay school of arms" whether we have "aught set down in anger," whether, indeed, we have said even one-half of what they themselves would have said in support of our position, that the Military system of England was a disgrace to a civilised community—a system that so utterly annihilated the mental energies of both officer and soldier as to prevent them from becoming any thing but mere automatons,—that flogging has been perpetuated in the British Army, not by the vicious and irreclaimable character of the soldier, but by the cruel and abominable system under which he had been trained and governed. We have described the "original man" † (officer and soldier) as he stood after he had been created or regenerated by that system. And if we have described them rightly, it follows in our apprehension that if they were not then what they were intended to be, they never could have become otherwise under such a system of government.

MODEL OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

[Visit by a French Officer].—At Planchenoit, near the margin of the model, and close upon the road to La Maison du Roi, there is a battery of four guns in a corn-field; and in a potato-field still nearer to the village are three guns, placed in rather a difficult position as to access, with an opening cut in the hedge, through which one of them is firing. On going to this spot, the officer alluded to said, "Well, this is extraordinary. These guns (pointing to the four in the corn-field) I commanded: originally there were seven, but upon the second advance of the Prussians, I detached one gun, and myself assisted in lifting it up this bank (pointing to an elevation of about five or six feet); we brought it to the corner of this field, where we cut an opening in the hedge, and fired upon the Prussians. Finding the range to be good, we afterwards detached two others, but had not worked them long before the general retreat took place, and we left the guns on the spot, which I perfectly recollect and identify."

The above curious anecdote strongly confirms our opinion of the accuracy of this beautiful Model. We have understood from a Staff Officer, that on it being communicated to Mr. Siborn, he explained, that although he was very certain that he had correctly placed the battery in the corn-field alluded to, he had been guided solely by his own judgment in posting the detached guns in advance, adapting his military knowledge to the formation of the ground, and to the circumstances of the action at that particular moment. Of course he must be much gratified at finding that his ideas of what would have been the disposition of these guns upon such ground, and under such circumstances, have proved to be in strict accordance with that which actually occurred.

We could not have a more satisfactory proof of the correctness of Mr. Siborn's coup d'œil, as also of his professional knowledge and acquirements; and our surprise is shared by the whole service, that this officer should be allowed to remain twenty-six years a Subaltern, notwithstanding the labour and ingenuity displayed in the modelling of a work, from which the Army and the public derive so much gratification and instruction.

Literary Notices.

Koch's Revolutions of Empires. Translated by Andrew Crichton. Whittaker and Co.

This is the first number of a series of publications entitled the "Popular Library of Modern Authors," to include not merely books that have already been presented in a variety of shapes, but approved works to which valuable copyrights are attached, and which have hitherto only appeared in a more expensive form. Koch's "Revolutions of Empires" is a work judiciously selected for this undertaking, and we hope the spirited publishers will experience the most liberal encouragement. The works to follow are, Thierry's History of the Conquest of England by the Normans, Life of Sir William Wallace of Elderslie, Browning's History of the Huguenots, &c. All valuable historical works.

Life and Services of Viscount Nelson. Fisher, Son & Co.

We have here the first volume of a new edition of Clarke and M'Arthur's Life of the immortal Nelson, illustrated with five portraits and a view of the Parsonage House in which he was born. The edition is got up in good taste, and regardless of expense; it is most appropriately dedicated to the late Sir Thomas Hardy, the chosen friend of him "whose name is England's pride, whose example her shield and strength." The work should find its way into every Naval circle.

The Sporting Almanac for 1840. Churton.
The Oracle of Rural Life for 1840. A. H. Baily.

Between these rival publications for sportsmen and country gentlemen, we hardly know which to prefer: they both embody an abundance of facts relating to shooting, hunting, fishing, gardening, dogs, guns, and rural affairs in general, besides having all the useful tables which are given with other almanacs, and numerous beautiful illustrations. No sportsman or country gentleman should be without both.

The Juvenile Scrap Book. By Mrs. Ellis. Fisher, Son and Co.

The most beautiful book for our young friends that the season has yet produced: the embellishments are remarkably good, and the tales moral and instructive. Mrs. Ellis's endeavour has been to furnish the rising generation materials for thought, without casting a shade over their harmless mirth, but rather with an earnest hope that they may, in their turn, employ their lively spirits in diffusing cheerfulness around the winter's hearth; not sharing their merriment alone with those who are young and vigorous and noisy like themselves, but letting it be so tempered by kind feeling, so innocent and pure, that the aged or the suffering may smile with them, and the experienced and good partake of their enjoyment. Mrs. Ellis has shown herself well calculated to "teach the young idea how to shoot:" her book we most strongly recommend to all who have the care of youth.

The Child's Book of Zoology; or, Gleanings from Natural History. By J. H. Fennell. J. Thomas.

A very useful and attractive little book, forming another volume of "The Child's Library:" its anecdotes and facts are calculated to improve the mind.

The Romancist and Novelist's Library. Second Volume. J. Clements.

This is decidedly the cheapest publication in existence. It contains many of the works of fiction that are popular in this country and on the continent; for instance, the "Hunchback of Notre Dame;" "The Young Robber" and "The Enchanted Island," by Washington Irving; "The Wild Irish Boy," by Maturin; "The Barber of Paris," by Paul de Koch, &c. &c.

Several Notices in type are unavoidably postponed.

Making it Noon.—Reporting noon is an amusing routine at sea, and exemplifies the great authority of the Captain; for he actually assumes the power which Joshua possessed, of making time stand still. It is usual for the master, when he has ascertained that the sun's ascension is at its height, to salute the Captain, or officer of the watch, informing him that it is "twelve o'clock." If all things are ready, he replies, "Make it so, and pipe to dinner;" but, if anything remains to be done which requires a few minutes' labour, he hesitates not to suspend the event until such is accomplished; and when ready, and not before, he declares his pleasure that it shall be noon.

THE HOSPITAL OF THE PENSIONERS.

THE CHELSEA HOSPITAL OF FRANCE*.

The Pensioner can, in living with his better-half, console himself about the half of his body that he has lost. The children are put to school at the expense of Government, and everything goes on quite straight, provided a man mounts his guard in his proper turn, and loves and respects his Governor, who is something like a Marshal of France. Then there are, moreover, all sorts of amusements. There's the game of skittles, and the game of bowls, and the game of Siam, and the game of the tub,—in fact, every game: and, what's more than all, a first-rate library, and in it the portrait of Napoleon Bonaparte.

There are men for you, true to the back-bone, faithful fellows, and such as one can really depend upon. An old fellow there, an old good fellow, an old odd fellow, a venerable fellow, quite white hair, and very little of it, scarcely a breath left in him; his eyes raised towards Heaven, where he is upon the point of going: scarcely can he utter a sound. They press round him: silence is obtained, he is on the point of death; but before he dies, something is necessary to his happiness; he wishes, poor old fellow, he wishes to see his Emperor. This is not exactly convenient: he's at St. Helena, it's a long way off, and it's strictly forbidden to go there; moreover, the old boy hasn't time,—he can't last half-an-hour. O! there! it is his idea, he who is ill,—those that are well never think of anything. Before the portrait of my Emperor he gasps, they carry him there. Oh, it breaks my very heart to think of it—this poor brave old boy—look! he smiles, he weeps, he is choking, all around him groan; there, he is rather quieter now, his eyes are dried, there are no more tears or oil in the lamp. Gone! gone! Good God! good God! I am crying at it even now, and so are you. Come, let's have a drain to his memory, to the health of trustworthy friends.

He drew from his pocket several small figures of men drawn upon pasteboard, and cut out, and he began thus—"Valour need never wait to number years. . . .

He needs no forefathers who serves the state. . . .
A lucky soldier was the first of kings. . . .
Who perils nothing ne'er with glory triumphs. . . ."

"Valour," &c. There, that's something that is not very far from the truth, with respect to these old tipplers of Pensioners; viz., that it was quite necessary there should be no waiting a number of years before they could come with glory to be kept warm and comfortable, and to be fed and lodged at the expense of Government.

"He needs," &c. That he needs no anecdotes, as this here line tells us, is again very true. A man doesn't want a forefather to be a Pensioner, as he is, in a general way, quite old enough to be his own forefather.

"A lucky soldier," &c. This is truer than ever, as we all know that the pensioners are not the Kings of France. This is easily enough explained by the fact, that the first King was a first soldier; but since that time, having had a tolerable quantity of soldiers, and very few kings, it is no longer extraordinary that the Pensioner should not be King of France.

"Who perils," &c. This is the reason why our old crippled, withered, hop-and-go-on veterans have invariably been covered, and always will be covered, with glory, all the world over, seeing that their triumphs have never been achieved without great dangers: and while upon this subject, I must say that I honour and respect the individual whose name I don't however, know, whose verses with regard to the old soldiers are quite the ticket. I, likewise,—I'll write you some verses upon the old soldiers, and the first subject I'll take shall be the old Pensioner, but then a man must know them as I know them, to do the thing at all properly.

I now asked him to begin; he calmed his enthusiasm a little, took breath, and showed me his little pasteboard figures.

This, Sir, represents a little boy with a drum, which he is in the act of beating; he has on an uniform, which is that of the drummers of the Pensioners. The children of all the cripples of the place form part of the staff of the Hotel. I speak to you knowingly upon the subject, since I handled the drumsticks a little myself, in the building of Louis XIV.

This fellow that you see next, with the crooked legs and round back, in his uniform and his cotton nightcap on, is the Inspecting Corporal, who is going his rounds. What the devil is all this row about? what an infernal noise. Ah, it's the breakfast-hour; regular helter-skelter of all the old human machinery, who march as bravely to the table as they formerly did to battle.

What do I see here, in that patent arm chair? Ah, it is one of the glorious remains of the Ex —, who has lost both his legs and both his arms. He is, however, in the perfect enjoyment of his trunk. What do I see by his side?—A pretty young girl, with eyes as soft as velvet, and the manners of a dove. Ah! she has just been giving the trunk something to drink: some gossiping people declare that she is his daughter. It's true enough; it beats all to nothing the story in ancient history of the woman who suckled her papa in limbo, like a baby. Our young Pensioner is much more striking; she nourishes her papa with wine her modesty and innocence not permitting her to suckle him.

Gracious Heaven! what do I behold? The triumph of surgery. The Pensioner with the silver head. It is the celebrated Grenadier, who had his head carried off by a cannon ball at the very moment he was thanking his Emperor, who had given him the Cross of the Legion of Honour for an act of courage and valour. A subscription was made in his favour at the benefit of the Poles which is the reason that his means enable him to stick a silver head of such enormous expense upon his shoulders.

What can be the matter with this fellow, who is running like a perfect madman? Where are you going, Sir! in the name of wonder; if you don't look out, you'll break your nose. What nonsense! this warrior has got no nose; he's going to hide himself in his room, under pretence of being ill, to escape the inspection: he is dreadfully afraid lest any inquiries should be made about his nose; he is just come from putting it in pawn at the Mont de Piété.

In the name of Heaven separate them, separate them! They have been beating each other to death: they have just been quarrelling, and both of them are in the right. It is the one who has no arm that has given the one who has no leg a severe box on the ear, because the one who has no leg had given him a violent kick in a part of his person that was not, by any means, made of silver.

Ah! here's the sentinel, who is holding a lance in his hand;—not so, not so,—the lance is held by an iron hook, which does duty for all the phalanges natural to man.

Attention! here's a new picture. Here are two fellows, who although but with one arm each, are by no means one-handed lads when it comes to filling themselves a pipe; you see one has holds the steel, and the other the flint.

Ah! here's a fellow who appears to be in a hobble: he was fishing with a line on the edge of the water, and had taken o

* We mean of the reformed class, of course. Some few there are, we understand, who continue to believe that the safety of the nation in a great measure, if not entirely, depends upon the practice of flogging. Amongst them, we regret to say, is our gallant friend, Sir Marmaduke Mustard,—our only hope, if unfortunately he should outlive the Duke.

† We use this term because it has often been said that "The Duke of York CREATED the soldier with which the Duke of Wellington conquered." This, however, we deny. The Duke created that soldier himself, as well as the officer who led him. We well remember what we were when we first took the field in the Peninsula, and we leave it to the Duke to say what we had become when he gave us the Brevet.—U. M.

his wooden legs, which are travelling down the stream like little pleasure boats. Luckily for him, a companion of his, who has just finished washing his snuffy pocket-handkerchief, stops the progress of his old friend's wooden legs with his walking-stick, which, as he had established himself washerwoman in an old broken-down punt, he manages to accomplish without great difficulty.

Where, in the name of goodness, are these fellows going, with their sleeves on like the public scriveners, so as not to dirty themselves? Oh! they are going to fire off the handsome cannons that are above, by the borders of the mont of the Hôtel. It is a fête day,—military fête day. Oh, if you knew how happy the old boys are when listening to the noise of the cannons! One reads in their faces the warlike recollections of the troubled times of the empire. Behind the cannoneers you see several other pensioners, who are making all sorts of circles in the dust with their canes.

They have finished firing off the cannon, and they are having a snug little game at bowls and skittles. Gracious Heavens! Look, look! there's one fellow on his back: see, he's laughing ready to split his sides; what the deuce is he saying? It was the ball that mistook his pins for the nine-pins. Ha! ha! ha! he'll never leave off laughing.

It is night-time; there's one fellow going to bed: he is putting an ancient pair of spectacles, with only one glass to them, on his nose. See, he is reading over again the reports in the Moniteur of the movements of the Grand Army. He looks as if he had a tremendous inclination to sleep; he is yawning and stretching out his legs and arms for all the world as naturally as if he had them all: he is placing his head upon his pillow. Hallo! he has forgotten to put out his candle. What's he doing there?—he is scratching his nose—no, he is only taking off his spectacles. Well, that is a pretty go; if he hasn't positively taken off his nose, and put the candle out with it! A silver extinguisher, my eye!—what do you think of that for style, eh? There, now he's asleep. Pleasant dreams.

Look, here's another one without arms, who has a knack of folding them on his breast, in order to resemble more strikingly his Emperor.

And this other fellow, where is he going? Ah! he is blind, but yet he walks as well as if he had the perfect use of his sight. What a thing custom is, after all. He is going to stand treat to his comrades. What, then, is he richer than they are? Yes, certainly, for, as he hasn't the slightest occasion for his allowance of candles, he sinks it in small glasses of brandy.

What—what, in the name of patience, is this? Where's this one-armed fellow going with his flint and steel? See, he is going out of the Hôtel. Ah! he's on guard at the corner of the fire, in a watch-box, like the check takers at a theatre: he's fairly in for a night of it in the destruction way, and he ought to know a little about that kind of business—he who has been suffering destruction all his life. He has come across another one-armed veteran, his intimate friend, his right hand, a famous counsellor when it comes to the discussion of an omelette. Counsellors, however, are seldom fourkers-out. What a wonder! they are bidding each other good-bye: they have just got sufficient arms between them to enable them to shake hands.

Ah! here's Father La Joie; he is playing at hop scotch with a number of little boys: he is standing on one foot, with his wooden leg tucked under the half of the arm that he has left.

Well, I hope you have seen a splendid lot of cripples, who are not half such idle dogs as many that are quite whole. Honour to valour, although unfortunate, and respect to brave men, say I.

MILITARY LIFE WHEN CAMPAIGNING.

The intervals in war are often long, frequent, and wearisome; but experience suggests a variety of methods to make them pass agreeably; and British officers, beyond those of other nations, possess the art of combining relaxation and pleasure with hardships and strict duty. In the early campaigns in the Peninsula, coursing, shooting, and fishing, were sports very generally pursued in the several divisions of the Army—Greyhounds and pointers forming part of the equipments of many individuals. But now (1811) fox hounds and harriers were to be seen lending animation to the fine mountain scenery of the Beira frontier: and we may aver, without fear of contradiction, that the Quorn or Belvoir hounds never drew together more numerous "fields" of red-coats than were there to be seen,—mounted on charger, cob, or baggage animal,—aspiring to the honour of bearing off the brush. Into the exhilirating and healthful amusement of hunting, no one entered more heartily than Lord Wellington, who at this time established regular days for his own pack to meet, the places for throwing off being made generally known, in order that all who chose to partake of the sport might attend: a practice observed ever after, when the troops were not in the field; and many a distinguished officer now looks back with pleasure to those merry meetings.

But it was not recreation only that Lord Wellington had in view, when inviting his officers to join in the pleasure of the chase. He justly regarded hunting as an amusement which, by leading its votaries to observe and study the features of a country, gradually familiarized them with every variety of ground, and insensibly conveyed to them that most essential of all military acquirements, the coup-d'œil, without the possession of which the study of the art of war may be said to be vain and profitless. A facility of reconnoitering and describing ground was thus acquired, which often afterwards proved of infinite service; for, as Machiavelli well observes, "a clear knowledge of one country leads us to that of any other." Then, again, on these occasions Lord Wellington met and conversed with his Generals; who thus, without the formality of a visit or of a letter, could make known particulars relating to their troops, which gave him an insight into the state of his Army, such as few Commanders have succeeded in obtaining.

Nor did Lord Wellington evince less desire to afford amusement and occupation to the soldiers; for by encouraging races, theatrical exhibitions, and other pastimes in which they could partake, he found means to effect his purpose. By such a system all were kept in good humour; while the spirit of hospitality and good-fellowship that universally prevailed, tended in no degree to injure the discipline and efficiency of the Army.

Let it not be supposed that, even when in the field, a soldier's life is altogether destitute of enjoyment. His viands, it is true, are coarse and oftimes scanty, but he is no martyr to dyspepsia; and, with a never-failing appetite, possesses a stomach equal to the task of digesting the toughest of all known aliment—ration beef. His is a life of high excitement, and totally devoid of care; resembling, in the latter respect, that of the gipsy bands so numerous throughout Europe, the members of which, despising the artificial state of existence led by civilized man, cling to the habits of a kind of savage life with a pertinacity only to be accounted for by supposing it is an extraordinary degree congenial to the nature of untutored man. The above, it will be said, is the bright side of the medal. Alas! the other exhibits, in strong relief, the demoralizing and brutalizing effects of warfare,—over which we must be permitted to draw a veil.—Major Jackson and Captain Scott's Life of Wellington.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR HENRY TROLLOPE, G.C.B.

This distinguished officer was born at Norwich about the year 1750, and entered the Navy, under the auspices of the late Earl of Sandwich, at a very early age. In 1777 he was made Lieutenant, and appointed to command the Kite cutter, and so pleased was his patron, then First Lord of the Admiralty, at the gallant and active conduct of his protégé, that he placed the Kite on the establishment of a sloop-of-war, by which means her Commander obtained a step of promotion. In the spring of 1781 he accompanied Vice-Admiral Darby's squadron to the relief of Gibraltar, and was made Post on the 4th of June in that year.

Being next appointed to the Rainbow, of 48 guns, Captain Trollope sailed from Plymouth to join Commodore Elliot's squadron, on the 4th of September, 1782. On the 6th he fell in with the French frigate La Hebé, of 40 guns, and, after a running fight, captured her off the Isle de Bas, with the loss of only one man. Captain Trollope continued in command of the Rainbow until the peace of 1783, when he purchased the lease of Laughrne Castle in Carmarthenshire, and diffused with liberality his ample fortune.

When the expedition, known as the Spanish armament, was prepared, Captain Trollope was appointed to the Prudente, of 38 guns; and subsequently to the Hussar frigate in the Mediterranean.

In 1795 many vessels, capable of being armed, were purchased into the Navy: and the Glatton, an Indiaman, was armed after a plan proposed by Captain Trollope, who was appointed to command her.

He had proved in the Rainbow the great effect of heavy metal, and was one of the first (if not the first) Naval Officers who recommended the adoption of 68-pounder carronades, called smashers, to be substituted for long guns of the same weight, but of inferior calibre.

Accordingly, the Glatton was armed throughout with carronades, having twenty-eight 68-pounders and the same number of 32-pounders, by which means she could discharge a heavier broadside than any two-decked ship in the Navy.

During the winter of 1795 and the spring of 1796, the Glatton formed part of the fleet of Adm. Duncan in the North Sea. On the 15th of July in the latter year, on making the coast of Holland, Capt. Trollope discovered a French squadron, consisting of three large frigates, two smaller ones, and a cutter, besides another frigate and brig at some distance to leeward.

Nothing daunted by this immense disparity of force, Captain Trollope instantly resolved to attack them, and try the effect of his heavy metal. Ranging up between the two largest, he opened his fire on both sides with such tremendous effect as speedily to oblige them to sheer off; and their places being occupied by fresh ships, he compelled them also to retire;—in fact, after an action of twenty minutes, he put to flight the whole of the French squadron, and was only prevented from capturing their ships by the dismantled state of the Glatton.

It is remarkable, that although engaged for nearly the whole of the time within pistol-shot, the Glatton had not a single man killed, and only two wounded. Scarcely half a-dozen shots struck her hull; but her rigging and sails were cut to pieces, and the masts badly wounded.

For this very gallant exploit Captain Trollope obtained great reputation, and the merchants of London voted him a piece of plate of the value of 100 guineas.

In the summer of 1797 Captain Trollope was appointed to the Russell, 74; and to him was confided the task of watching the Dutch fleet, under De Winter, and communicating to Admiral Duncan any movement of the enemy. In the battle of Camperdown the Russell bore a distinguished part; and when His Majesty George the Third visited the fleet, so anxious was he to mark his sense of Captain Trollope's gallant services, that he conferred upon him the honour of Knighthood as Knight Bannaret, which, however, was afterwards found to be irregular, as such distinction can only be conferred upon the field of battle.

During the remainder of the revolutionary war, Sir Henry Trollope continued to command the Russell, and afterwards the Juste, 84, in the Channel fleet. He was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral, Jan. 1, 1801; Vice-Admiral, Nov. 9, 1805; Admiral, Aug. 12, 1812; and created an extra K.C.B., May 20, 1820.

Sir Henry Trollope married, in 1782, Miss Fanny Best, a native of London.

For several years this officer has lived in retirement, and repeated attacks of the gout, upon a frame enfeebled by extreme age, had produced aberration of mind. In a fit of insanity he committed suicide at Freshford, near Bath, on the 2d of Nov., being, according to the newspaper reports, in the 84th, but, as we believe, in the 90th, year of his age.

THE LATE REAR-ADMIRAL FRANCIS GODOLPHIN BOND.

This officer entered the Navy in 1774, and was made Lieutenant 14th May, 1782, and served as First of the Providence under Captain Bligh in the bread-fruit expedition from 1791 to 1793, when the object of the voyage having been successfully accomplished, Mr. Bond was appointed to command either the Netley or Milbrooke schooner, on the Lisbon station, where he greatly distinguished himself; was promoted by Lord St. Vincent to Commander 11th Dec., 1800; and to Post rank 29th April, 1802. In June, 1803, he was appointed to the Sea Fencibles, and was never afterwards in command afloat. He became a retired Rear-Admiral at the general promotion, 10th of January, 1837. Admiral Bond was always esteemed as a brave and zealous officer, and his early career was marked by great ability and success in his profession. We are not aware of the reason for his being overlooked in a later period, unless circumstances induced him to prefer the civil service. He died at Exeter, at the advanced age of 74, universally beloved, esteemed, and regretted, by an extensive circle of friends and acquaintance.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Bart., K.C.B., the new Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces on the Bombay establishment, was appointed second member of the Council at that Presidency.

Khybur Pass.—Lieut.-Col. Wade, with Shazada Timoor and his party, supported by a strong force of Mahommedan auxiliaries furnished by the Sikh Government, captured the fort of Alli Mujid in the Khybur Pass on the night on the 26th July, the place having been attacked during the day, and evacuated at night by the garison. Since then, Col. Wade has obtained entire command of the Pass, and by the last accounts of 7th Aug., was encamped beyond its western extremity. The country had generally acknowledged the authority of Shah Soojah-ool-Moolk, and supplies were brought in abundance to Col. Wade's camp. An advance movement would be made in a day or two to Jelalabad, from which place Mahomed Ukbur Khan, the son of Dost Mahomed, who was stationed there, had fled. The stories of the Sikhs having abandoned Col. Wade at Peshawur are wholly without foundation; in fact Koonwer Nob Nehal Singh had remained honourably at his post in Peshawur, notwithstanding many inducements which were held out after the death of his grandfather to call him to Lahore, and he has done so for the sole purpose of fulfilling the obligation of the Sikh Durbar to the British Government.—Delhi Gazette, Aug. 21.

An order has been issued by the Court of Directors, and published by the President in Council at Fort William, authorising the assimilation of the uniform of Members of the Medical Board and Superintending Surgeons with that of the corresponding ranks in H.M.'s service, being those of Inspector-General and Deputy Inspector-General. The Inspector-Generals in the Royal Army having the relative rank of Brigadier-Generals, the Members of the Medical Board are directed to be placed on the same footing.

Kurnool.—(Extract of a letter from an officer of the 16th Madras N.I., dated Camp Ghooty, 3d Sept., 1839.) "You will see by the above date that we have left Cuddapah, although I fear but for a temporary period. We were ordered to march suddenly to join a force assembling in this district, for the purpose of chastising a Nabob of a neighbouring territory, Kurnool, who has foolishly determined to measure his strength with our Government. He has for years been a turbulent troublesome fellow, and his country a resort for all the rebellious people of India. We are now marching towards his capital to relieve him of his ill-managed dominions. It appears some letters of his to some ally in the north of India were intercepted and carried to Lord Auckland, who demanded an immediate explanation of their contents, instead of rendering which he has been taking several thousand Arabs and Mussulmen into his service, and bought all the arms and military stores he can lay hands on. We are now marching to Adonii, where our force is to rendezvous about 7 000 men under Maj.-Gen. Wilson. There are two Commissioners gone to the Rajah for his final answer, and if it is not unconditional submission, we are at him immediately, in which case I think we may get some more prize-money, as he is reported to have lots of coin in his treasury. The Government appear determined not to trifle with him, by thus ordering out so large a force, so strong as to prevent the possibility of a reverse, indeed such might be attended with very serious consequences in the present unsettled state of the country. We arrived at Ghooty this morning, called the Gibraltar of the East, being the strongest hill fort in India. Another regiment has joined us from Bangalore, and in four days we shall be at Adoni; the march from thence to the scene of action will be about 60 miles. My next will tell you the result of the affair, which I suspect will end very bloodlessly."

The Staff and appointments connected with this force will be found in the last week's G. O., under the head Madras.

Major James Glencairn Burns, 3rd Bengal N.I., son of the celebrated poet, has retired from the Army.

The following orders have been issued relative to the increase in the Indian Army:—G.O., 25th July.—Under instructions from the Hon. Court of Directors, the Hon. the President in Council is pleased to authorise the addition of one regiment of European infantry, of ten companies at each Presidency, composed of 1 Colonel, 2 Lieut.-Colonels, 2 Majors, 10 Captains, 16 Lieutenants, 8 Ensigns, and 920 non-commissioned rank and file.

G. O., 31st July.—The Hon. the President in Council having resolved in the secret and separate department that an additional, or ninth, company of the present strength, consisting of 1 Subadar, 1 Jemadar, 6 Havildars, 6 Naicks, 2 Drummers, and 100 privates, be raised for each infantry regiment of the line, of the Native Army of the three Presidencies, the Governments of Fort St. George and Bombay, and the Commander of the Forces in Bengal, are requested to give immediate effect to the measure.

The Court of Directors have decided, in the case of Major W. Gregory, that any officer who may have served the prescribed period entitling him to the benefit of the recent pension regulations (before his transfer to the Invalid Establishment) does not, in consequence of such transfer, forfeit his title to the pension allotted to his period of service on the effective strength of the Army. It is at the same time directed, that time passed in India, after transfer to the Invalid Establishment, shall confer no additional claim.—Bombay Times, Sept. 11.

Recent instructions have been received from the Governor-General, which direct H.M. troop-ship Jupiter to remain at Trincomalee, and the Conway to proceed to Rangoon, and inform the Admiral that his services are not immediately required in India, so that His Excellency may go at once to China, to adopt whatever measures he there sees fit. It is also said the Admiral is anxious to engage 90 or 100 seamen.—Colombo Observer, August 15.

A considerable reduction has been made in the pay of officers of the Indian Navy, commanding steamers. They are now to receive 400 instead of 1100 rupees per mensem.

The Military movements of the past month have not been confined to the Army of the Indus. Two field forces have been ordered to assemble: one, composed of troops on the Bengal establishment, is ordered to rendezvous at Nusseerabad for the purpose of attacking Joudpore. It consists of four squadrons of Native Infantry, one troop of horse, and two and a half companies of foot Artillery, with six regiments of Native Infantry, and two companies of Sappers and Miners, the whole being commanded by Maj.-Gen. R. Hopton. The other is commanded by Maj.-Gen. Wilson, and consists of one Cavalry and two Infantry Brigades, with proportionate details of Artillery and Engineers. This force is drawn from the Madras establishment, and will assemble at Adoni for the reduction of Kurnool. Government appears determined to chastise the insolence of the native Princess. Our successes in Afghanistan, the preparations against Joudpore and Kurnool, and the recent deposition of the Sattara Rajah, will probably induce even the most refractory to succumb. The reports circulated during the last month, relative to Ava and Nepaul, are rather contradictory. On the whole it would appear that the Nepalese will choose their own time to attack us, whilst the orders which have been issued to the general service corps in Bengal, as well as the detention of the Jupiter and H.M.'s 61st Regiment in Ceylon, would induce us to believe that the Supreme Government intends to take the first favourable opportunity for chastising the insolence of the Burmese monarch.

The late Lieutenant-Colonel Edward Lloyd Smythe, of the Madras Cavalry.—After 36 years' residence in India, he had revisited his native land in 1836, to comfort an aged mother and two beloved sisters, and was just returned to renew his Military services in the hope of obtaining higher rank within a few years, and then retiring to spend his last days in the bosom of his family, but he was carried off, after a short illness, by the rapid progress of dysentery. He had witnessed the successes of the British arms in India for many years, having served at the battle of Assaye, under the Duke of Wellington, then Sir Arthur Wellesley. He was descended from an ancient family at Notley Nibley, in the county of Gloucester. He was an excellent officer, an affectionate relative and friend, a highly talented man, and a sincere Christian.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

SIR,—The necessity or propriety of inducing in the recruit a love for his duties and drill being pretty self-evident, we will, with your permission, revert to this the original subject of our correspondence.

By the increase of bounty, we have made a great step towards this point as regards the infantry, but our friend of the cavalry remains still in the back-ground, though of course not to the extent as formerly, yet sufficient to draw the kind consideration of the authorities in his behalf; but of this more anon.

The period of stoppages for the infantry soldier has been shortened, the amount of his debt considerably lessened, indeed, comparatively speaking, it is merely nominal; and now that his pocket-money has increased, and still a good share of leisure time on his hands, permit the suggestion of a few modes of employing the one and the other to a good purpose.

It may be matter of discussion as to the necessity of providing a third meal; to the old and steady soldier it is not of so great consequence, but to the recruit it is a decided advantage, as from various causes it could be supplied him at a less rate, of a better quality, and more regularly than he can supply himself, keeping him more in barracks, and thus engender a love of quiet and study, in preference to noise and dissipation.

The utter eradication of drunkenness occupies a prominent feature in the improvement of the soldier, and it would not be a very expensive trial towards attaining this end, if every canteen was gutted and turn into a gymnasium. It must strike every reflecting person as rather paradoxical, that a revenue should be desired, or collected, from a source which has been considered the only stain on the British soldier's character—one that is continually subjecting him to disgrace and punishment. The necessity for these places in times past may have existed, when the detention of the recruit within the precincts of the barrack-yard was requisite until he had either spent his bounty or embarked, but they now only offer to the man confined to barracks as a punishment, the means of evading his officer's decision.

Those who recollect that there are canteens which once paid from 2s. 6d. to 4s. for every ten men on the barrack-master's return (in addition to the rent), are aware of the misery they have caused. To what end are the canteens now continued, and who are the better for them? Does the officer benefit by them? Certainly not; the rubbish generally sold would deter him from selling for anything, had he no mess. Does the N.C. officer derive advantage from them? No. It is only a thorn in his side, a temptation (if inclined to tipple) continually besetting him, notwithstanding all his struggles. The multifarious duties devolving upon a N.C. officer, especially the sergeant, requiring him to be continually in attendance, oblige him to time his visit to the public-house, and from the distance frequently preventing his going; but here stands his arch-enemy with arms extended, continually tempting him; and not until his unsteady gait or flushed countenance brings him into notice, is the evil thought of. To the private they are certainly of occasional utility, as when warned for guard he can just provision to parade slip across and take his glass of rum (if he has the money), and thus enable the officer of the day to judge correctly of his refined taste by the smell; or when in a hurry and requiring a smoke, he may procure tobacco that elsewhere would not find a purchaser.

As to the shops (save the mark) attached to them, they too frequently cause the soldier's wife, who is not a first-rate economist, to run up a score, or the indolent one to save herself a walk to the town or village at a sacrifice of 20 or 30 per cent. For the love of sobriety, then, abolish the canteens, and throw them open as schools of exercise and recreation for the soldiers at all hours, and thousands will live to bless the authorities for their kindness.

This would offer a place of amusement and healthy excitement not only to the rank and file, but to the serjeant; who, however, unwilling that his officers should know he was at the canteen, would feel no dislike to leaving word in his own, or at the orderly-room, that if wanted, he would be found in the gymnasium.

Having previously adverted to the benefit derivable from the establishment of garrison libraries, it is with an equal share of regret with yourself, Sir, that in the list of books ordered, as appears by the list published in the Naval and Military Gazette, No. 329, there is scarcely a work tending to the improvement of the professional knowledge of the soldier. Not that I would presume to decry works of fiction, &c., &c., but as amusement and recreation may be blended with our exercise and duties, so may a more intimate and scientific knowledge of our duties be blended with our amusement. It is not necessary that every soldier should be an engineer or artillerist, but it is desirable that every soldier should have a knowledge of the principles or a slight idea of the various requisites in a body of men, to complete the work cut out for them by their general. Bull-dog courage (has and) will effect much. Personal firmness, and a reliance on the correct judgment of his officer (has and) will carry the soldier through all his difficulties, but a man will not work in the trenches or go on a fatigue party with an engineer officer and eight or ten sappers, less serviceable, by knowing a double sap from a gabion; neither will he cover his brigade of guns any the worse by fitting himself to work as No. 9 or No. 1, should he be required.

It has been said, "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing:" true if possessed by those who command, but in one who is commanded, and knows that his first and only duty is to lay every muscle of his body and principle of his mind at the service and disposal of his officer, a little knowledge will assist him in carrying his orders into execution.

If a seaman is prized, who can reef and steer, knows every knot required in splicing, is acquainted with the use of every block and stay from the truck to the kelson, and from stem to stern, if he is prized, Sir, beyond the waisters, surely a N.C. officer, or private, who could, with a thorough knowledge of the work in hand, carry a scaling ladder, assist in running a gallery, cut out a sap when marked by the engineer officer, or help tamp a mine, would be equally valuable, and render more service than one whose ideas were bounded by the manual and platoon, or extended no farther than keeping step when marching past, even though he should eat fire occasionally when asked.

To facilitate this end, permit me, Sir, to name a few works that deserve a prominent situation in garrison libraries, Brougham's Preliminary treatise, a discourse on the objects, advantages, and pleasures of science. Macnaly on Field Fortification; Stuith on Fortification and Artillery; Jackson on Military Surveying; Pasley's practical Operations of a Siege; Fielding's Perspective; Jebb's Defence of Outposts; Jebb's Attack of Military Posts; A work or two on Geometry, and of which there is a variety from Playnock's Catechism to Euclid; Roland and others on Fencing; a correctly printed copy of Field Evolutions.

If it is necessary, Sir, for an officer to make himself acquainted with the construction* of abattis and breastworks, or defence of posts, it is equally necessary that the instruments he works with should be well adapted for the particular service he requires. No mechanic would think of dividing a log of timber with a mitre saw, or burnishing a steel scabbard with a rasp, and it needs only to cultivate the soldier's intellectual and bodily powers to enable him to cut through every obstacle with greater celerity, or polish off any opponent with a finer touch or higher finish than he has hitherto done. CHEVRON.

* Part v. of the Regulations. See 8 para. 18; also para. 7, page 317.

COURT-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial assembled at Karrach, 26th June, 1839, Assist.-Surgeon W. R. Williams, Med. Est., was tried on the following charge, viz.—

For highly disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, whilst in charge of the medical duties of the Hon. Company's sloop-of-war Elphinstone, in the following instances, viz.—1st. In being in a state of intoxication on board the said sloop-of-war in Bushire Roads, on 8th Nov., 1838. 2d—In having at the same time and place made use of highly abusive and insulting language to Mr. F. C. Manners, Mate of the said sloop-of-war, on the quarter-deck of the same. 3d—In having at the same time and place assaulted the said Mr. Manners, by striking him with his clenched fist on the quarter-deck of the said sloop-of-war.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—That the prisoner, Assist.-Surg. W. R. Williams, is not guilty of the first instance of the charge, and do therefore acquit him of the same. With respect to the second instance, that he is guilty. With respect to the third instance, that he is not guilty, and do therefore acquit him of the same.

The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above stated, do sentence him, Assist.-Surg. W. R. Williams, to be dismissed the service. J. F. FITZGERALD, Maj.-Gen. Commanding the Forces.

Remarks by the Commander of the Forces.—The Commander of the Forces cannot possibly concur in the finding of the Court on the third instance of the charge, as it has entirely overlooked the essential point of offence therein set forth; and, if circumstances had admitted, a revision of that part of the verdict would have been directed. For although Mr. Manners asserted in his original statement, drawn up on the day of the occurrence, and which was adduced on the defence, that Assist.-Surg. Williams struck him with his clenched first, whilst on the trial, after a lapse of about eight months, he states that he does not know whether the hand was open or shut, still he positively deposes that Mr. Williams did strike him, which is corroborated by the testimony of Mr. Midshipman Reethon, who states that he heard the sound of a blow, "as if a person had struck another on the cheek;" and this strong proof of an assault having been committed by Mr. Williams, is very unsatisfactorily attempted to be refuted by his endeavouring to prove that the noise of the blow proceeded from slapping his thigh. The circumstances, therefore, of the manner in which the outrage was committed, ought to have formed a very immaterial consideration in deciding on an act involving "highly disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman," and the verdict of the Court on the instance under action would have been strictly in conformity with the evidence before it, by finding the prisoner "guilty of having assaulted Mr. Manners, by striking him, but not with a clenched fist."

Under the above view of the case, as set forth in the proceedings on the trial, it becomes the painful, but imperative duty of the Commander of the Forces, in support of the honour and respectability of the Army entrusted to his charge, to approve and confirm the sentence passed on Assist.-Surg. Williams, for the gross misbehaviour of which he has been found guilty.

The name of Assist.-Surg. W. R. Williams to be struck off the strength of the medical establishment of the Army from this date. By order of the Comm. of the Forces, STRATFORD POWELL, Lt.-Col., Adj.-Gen. of the Army.

INDERWICK'S Wholesale Warehouses for every description of SMOKING APPARATUS, 58, Princes-street, Leicester-square, London, and vis-à-vis La Sophia Mosch, Constantinople, Inventor and Patentee of the Improved Persian Hookah for smoking through Water, and part Proprietor of the Keff Ell, or better known as the Meerschaum Pits of the Crimea in Asia Minor, of which those beautiful ECUMS DE MER PIPES are made, which, from the peculiar properties they possess of imbibing the oil of the tobacco, and giving it a most delicious flavour, are so much esteemed and patronised by H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, and the nobility and Gentry.

I. I. begs respectfully to acquaint Tobacconists, Silversmiths, and others, that they may be supplied at all times with the undermentioned articles, of the first quality:—Meerschaums and every description of Foreign Smoking Pipes, suitable in quality and price from the Prince to the Peasant. Snuff Boxes from every Manufactory in Europe. Cigar Cases of every description, together with every article connected with the above line.

Sole Agent in London for the real Laurence Kirk Snuff Boxes. Merchants or others going out to any of the new Settlements supplied at the Continental prices.

J. DELCROIX AND CO.,
Perfumers to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, &c. &c.,
158, NEW BOND-STREET, (opposite Steven's Hotel.)

THE great superiority of J. DELCROIX and CO.'S PERFUMERY has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.:—

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared specially for Her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY'S (GEORGE IV.'S) PERFUME BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the Skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the Hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE à LA REINE, and PATE AU MIEL, so justly esteemed for their healing and softening qualities.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hair.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR, and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, J. D. and Co., can with every confidence recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

MECCA, CAMPHOR, and other FANCY SOAPS.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the best description.

J. DELCROIX and Co. respectfully request that particular attention be paid to the address upon their Labels, No. 158, NEW BOND-STREET, none others being genuine; and they beg to suggest that the Nobility and Gentry will do well to return the articles foisted upon them by other perfumers as the genuine productions of their long-established and highly-celebrated Perfumery Warehouse, 158, NEW BOND-STEET.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR. By its use, the effects of atmospheric influence upon the Skin are entirely neutralised, and that constant healthy action of the minute vessels promoted—on which depend continued delicacy of texture and tint. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions are also promptly eradicated by the KALYDOR. Spots, Pimples, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a smoothness and transparency of the skin, giving rise to the most pleasurable sensations; it is infallible in removing all harshness and irritability; and will be found highly useful to Gentlemen who suffer from those causes after Shaving. In fact, whether as an appendage to the elegant Toilet, the Dressing-room, or the Travelling Equipment, ROWLAND'S KALYDOR will be found to realise the most sanguine expectation that can be formed of its refreshing, purifying, and restorative powers.

Price 4s. 6d. and 9s. 6d. per Bottle.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, are engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in red, on the Wrapper in which each Bottle is enclosed. Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,
FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 10s. 6d.

INVESTIGATION of MORTALITY in the INDIAN ARMY.

By W. S. B. WOOLHOUSE, F.R.A.S, &c.,

Actuary to the National Loan Fund Life Assurance Society.

The advantages of providing against the contingencies of human life and misfortune, and the duty of taking refuge in those advantages, cannot be too strongly enforced in the case of the OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN ARMY and their dependent relatives, whose prospects are more than usually precarious and uncertain. It is fortunate for them, that their large numbers, and the accurate official accounts published in the country, have served to determine the law of their mortality to perhaps greater accuracy than that of any other class of Her Majesty's subjects, thus guarding them in a society's calculation, against all apprehension of insecurity, at the same time protecting them from exorbitant charges.

Proposals to the NATIONAL LOAN FUND SOCIETY for LIFE ASSURANCE and DEFERRED ANNUITIES are accepted on the lowest terms consistent with the calculated Table; and in all their arrangements the convenience and interest of the assured are specially considered.

London: A. H. Baily and Co., 83, Cornhill.

New York, Oct. 28, by the GARRICK, Palmer, by the HIBERNIA, Cobb—both arrived at Liverpool.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 15.—(From our own Correspondent.) Revenge has been mustered and inspected by the Commander in-chief, and now only waits orders to be paid, and then go to Lisbon. She will be kept there some time it is presumed, as she has landed the Mediterranean Supernumeraries and despatches. The Revenge is complete in her crew. Blonde was commissioned on Tuesday morning by Capt. Bourchier—already a number of men have joined, and when the marines embark next Tuesday, the officers will begin to work. Pantaloon has been sent to Plymouth. Imogene came to Spithead yesterday morning—last from Rio—she has a large freight of upwards of two millions of dollars, and they have been busy landing it. She is then to go to Plymouth to be paid off. The Imogene quitted Valparaiso the early part of August—the President had been left there; Admiral Ross had hoisted his flag in the Fly, and had gone to Callao—the President consequently was the only vessel at Valparaiso; the Samarang was daily expected at Callao, when it was presumed that Admiral Ross would transfer his flag to her. At Rio the Stag and Orestes were lying; the latter with orders to proceed round the Horn, and would sail about the end of September: she is to relieve the Fly. Actæon and Calliope were in the River Plate. The Imogene has brought home the late crew of the Basilisk ketch paid off in South America; the men discharged in disgrace from the Sulphur surveying vessel for insubordination; several invalids from the squadron, and D. Douglas, R.N., recently promoted. The purser of the President is dead, and his vacancy has been given by Admiral Ross to Mr. Milner, one of the secretary's clerks. Fly is the next ship ordered home; on the arrival of Samarang at Valparaiso from Callao, she was to sail to collect the Mexican freight. Nothing to say about the new Admiral here; it is still thought he will not relieve Admiral Fleming until the 30th inst. The secretary is not fixed on, and it is generally hoped that the present most effective one will remain. There are not any orders to commission Magicienne. Ships in Port—Revenge and Imogene at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Blonde, Messenger steamer, Emerald yacht, in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, 12th Nov.—(From our own Correspondent.)—8th—Arrived the Sapphire, troop-ship, 28, from Spithead, and having had some slight defects repaired, proceeded for Glasgow on the 13th, where she will embark troops, and convey them to Gibraltar. The Wizard, 10, Lieut.-Com. Thos. F. Birch, which sailed yesterday for South America, returned to her anchorage this day, being obliged to put back by a heavy gale from the S.W.; she, however, started again for her destination on the 11th, with a fine breeze from the Northward. 10th—Sailed the Diligence, Navy transport, with stores for Portsmouth, Sheerness, and Chatham Dock-yards. 12th—The following tenders sailed this day, viz.:—Falmouth, with stores for the Dock-yards to the Eastward; Ald, with stores for Portsmouth and Sheerness; Rochester, for Milford. The Canopus, 84, has been brought alongside the jetty, and is to be taken into dock to be repaired. The Nimrod, 20, and Pylades, 18, both ready to receive men, are expected shortly to be commissioned. The Albion, 90, ordered to be built in this dock-yard, has her keel laid, her stem erected, and a number of her floor timbers in their places, and great progress is daily making to complete her frame. The North Dock, which has been lengthened 20 feet, will be ready for docking ships the latter end of this month, and is allowed to be the finest single dry dock in the kingdom. The Talavera, 72, Capt. W. B. Mends, left Malta on the 23d ult. for England, touching at Lisbon. The Pembroke, 72, Capt. F. Moresby, was to sail for England, as soon as the Hastings, 72, Capt. J. Lawrence, joined the fleet. It is generally reported that Com. Sulivan, on the South American station, will be relieved by Lord John Hay. In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Carron, st.-v.—In Barnpool—Pantaloon, Raven.—In the Sound—Rolla.—In Dock—Foudroyant, 78, Endymion, 50, Portland, 50.

MILFORD HAVEN, 13th Nov., 1839.—[From our own Correspondent.]—The Monkey steamer, in charge of Mr. Armstrong, and having on board the seamen belonging to the Victory, employed in navigating the Stromboli to Greenock, arrived at this port on Friday last; she was hauled on shore into the Western Camber on Monday, and her defects examined, which having been made good, she now waits orders to proceed to Portsmouth, where she is to be paid off. The Captain-Superintendent returns to duty next week. Lieut. J. Roepel, appointed to the Pigmy mail steam-packet on this station, joined on Wednesday, the 6th inst. Mr. Bonnywell has been appointed principal Converter at Pembroke, vice Fullager, promoted. The Effort barque has just arrived at this port with timber, from Quebec, but brings no news.

DEPTFORD.—Arrived Numa transport, Lieut. Howe, Agent, from Portsmouth. Sailed Barretto Junior, Lieut. Lugg, Agent, to embark troops from Gravesend. Arrived the Verdant to load, for Malta. Remain, Lord Lyndoch, Pestongee Bomongie, and Numa transports, fitting.

The next quarterly dinner of the Portsmouth Naval Club will be held on the 28th inst., when Sir T. Hastings will take the chair. It had been intended to hold it on the 21st, but the Southampton Ball having been previously fixed for that evening, the dinner is put off as above.

H.M.S. Hercules, Capt. Barnard, will not be paid off until the 22d or 23d inst. The Rl. Marines and boys are expected to be sent round to Plymouth by a Government steamer.

T. W. Wright, Esq., of the Navy Pay Office, succeeds the late W. T. Hardy, Esq. as Chief Clerk in that department. He will have a house allowed him in Chatham dock-yard.

H.M.S. BUZZARD.—On Oct. 3, a splendid fete was given on board by the officers, to a numerous party of ladies and gentlemen, as some slight return for the kindness, hospitality, and generous friendship evinced by their transatlantic friends during their stay there, than which nothing can be more flattering and gratifying. The Buzzard has been lying there for some time, with the slavers brought in by her, and will shortly depart for Bermuda, on her way home.

By a recent regulation, several of the boys of the upper school of Greenwich Hospital have been sent to Her Majesty's ships and vessels, there to be brought up in the respective lines of Clerks and Engineers. This most laudable arrangement cannot fail of exciting a spirit of emulation in the scholars, and gratitude in the parents, for securing such beneficial and honourable provision for life to their offspring.

The Medea, Commander Nott, arrived in the river from Halifax on Thursday, and anchored off Woolwich. A young man of the name of M'Taggart, the third Engineer, asked leave to go on shore, but for some irregularity was refused. On Friday night M'Taggart jumped off the larboard anchor, having confidence in his prowess as a swimmer. A boat was immediately lowered, but the night being extremely dark, nothing but his hat was picked up. It is supposed he had a good deal of money about him, as little has been found in his chest, and it was known he had upwards of 60*l.* at Portsmouth, at which place he was not allowed to [illegible] steadiness and good order of which they expressed themselves much pleased. The regiment then marched, under the command of its Colonel (Col. Brown), to the Home-park, where it went through a variety of evolutions in the presence of the Princes and their suite; her Majesty, attended by a numerous retinue, arrived.

Letters from H.M.S. Rodney, 92, Com. Hyde Parker, state that there is no immediate chance of that ship returning to England.

The Madagascar, 44, recently returned from the West India station, is preparing for commission. Rumour says she is to relieve the Seringapatam, at Barbadoes.

Lieutenant Fraser, R.N., commanding the Admiralty survey of the coast of Ireland, and who has the last summer been examining the dangerous line of banks along the Eastern coast, has discontinued operations until the ensuing spring.

H.M.'s packet Shelldrake, Lieut. Passingham, Commander, arrived at Falmouth on the 12th inst., from Brazil, having left Rio de Janeiro on 19th Sept.; Bahia, 30th; and Pernambuco, on 10th ult., with the usual mails, and on freight 16,000*l.*

Letters from Constantinople of the 23d ult., announce that the British fleet was to leave Beshika Bay, for Vourla, on that day.

The Scout was paid off at Sheerness on Wednesday.

Quebec, Oct. 16.—Information was received in town this morning that H. M.'s ship Pique was off at L'Islet last night, with his Excellency the Right Hon. C. P. Thomson and General Jackson on board. The wind being westerly, the Canada st. went down at six o'clock, by order of Sir Jas. Macdonnell, to tow the frigate up, and she is expected this evening. 5 P.M.—The Canada is in sight, returning to port without the Pique. A guard of honour of the 11th regt. is just going down to the wharf.

Mulroy (Ireland.)—Mr. Harry, chief officer, from Dunfanaghy, is removed to Port Muck, in the port of Belfast.

By a letter from the Lakes of Canada, dated the 12th ult., we find Mr. John Elliott, son of Mr. Elliott, Purser of the San Josef, has been appointed an Acting Lieutenant (by Commodore Sandom), and put in command of H.M.'s schooner Montreal. This is the young officer, who, at the age of only 19, so gallantly exerted himself in the Tagus, in 1833, and saved the lives of two of the men of the Leveret, who were upset in a boat with him, for which he received the silver medal from the Royal Humane Society.

Messrs. Price, jun., and Haughton are appointed engineers to Columbia st. vess. Messrs. Powell, Stow, and Bailey to Flamer; and Mr. Kirkpatrick, from third to second engineer of Gorgon, vice Ramsey, to be first engineer of Confiance.

The Columbia steamer is just commissioned at Woolwich, as a troop-ship, by Mr. A. Thomson, Master, R.N.

Mr. Milner, Sec. Clerk in Rear-Admiral Ross's office, Portsmouth, is promoted to the death vacancy of Mr. J. Gliddon, late Purser of the President.

The following were the only Midshipmen examined and passed at the Naval College on Tuesday:—Mr. Robert B. Æneas Macleod. Mr. W. Bisshopp G. Johnson, Blenheim.

Fifty Royal Marines have landed from Halifax, to do duty on the Canadian Lakes.

H.M.S ——, Valparaiso, 2d Aug.—(From our own Correspondent.)—No doubt you have long ago heard of the termination of the war between Chili and Peru, by the defeat of Santa Cruz—his subsequent flight and narrow escape from Arequipa to Islay, where he found an asylum in the British Consul's house, whence he was conveyed by the Samarang to Guyaquil, with General Miller and others of his Staff. The Chilian squadron arrived here some days ago from Callao, bringing up the greater part of the troops, General Bulnes having been left in Lima with a remnant till affairs are fairly settled. So soon, however, as Peru is wholly evacuated by the Chilians, fresh and bloody revolutions are expected, as Gamarra and La Fuente, candidates for President's chair, are far from being popular; so that the fine country lately flourishing under the enlightened Santa Cruz, is likely to be unsettled for many a day. Commerce seems to go on briskly here, Chili having now styled herself Mistress of the Pacific. Great festivities, balls, &c., were given lately to the President on his visiting the port. That fine building called the Bolsa or Reading-room, belonging to the merchants here, was a few weeks ago accidentally burnt to the ground, with part of a neighbouring store; and, had it not been for the activity of the crew of the Fly, headed by Captain and First Lieutenant, with the crew of the French brig Alacrity, the whole of the town, Custom-house, &c., might have been destroyed. A severe gale occurred in the bay last week, called a norther, causing great destruction to the Chilian squadron. Their large frigate the Monteagudo was totally wrecked, and the other vessels drove close to the beach, with loss of bowsprits, boats, &c. The crew of the wreck were, with one or two exceptions, saved, by the gallantry of Lieut. Collinson, late of the Sulphur, and Lieut. Craven, of the United States Navy, who volunteered at midnight to go off in a whale-boat, and, assisted by Fly's pinnace, they were safely deposited on board here. The Southampton, English brig, was saved by an officer and crew from the President; no other damage was sustained of moment, the President, Imogene, and Fly, riding out the gale nobly. The squadron is at present distributed as follows:—Fly (with Admiral Ross's flag since 31st May) and Imogene at anchor here; President sailed some days ago for Callao; Samarang, at Callao; Electra, at Rio Leja; Sparrowhawk, gone to the Islands; Basilisk, at Panama; Imogene arrived from Mexico a few days ago, and goes to England with two million dollars; Fly is the next ship for home, but as anticipating a trip to coast of Mexico, she will not be in Old England till the summer of 1840.

Beshika Bay, Oct. 18.—The corvette Hazard relieves the Dido on the Smyrna station. The ships of the line Ganges, Powerful, Vengeance, and Implacable, which have been some days under the command of Capt. Napier, cruising off Smyrna, have joined the Admiral at Beshika Bay. It is not certain whether any other portion of the squadron will go on the same cruise.

Hastings, Nov. 14.—H. M.'s steamer Borer, Capt. Bullock (1838), arrived yesterday morning, on a survey of the coast, for the information and guidance of the Commissioners appointed by the House of Commons in the last Session of Parliament, and it is much wished this may ultimately lead to the making of a harbour at Hastings, which is a most eligible situation for the purpose, with an abundant supply of good stone close at hand for the works. Capt. Bullock and his officers have been employed yesterday and this day in laying down buoys, and in taking their levels and soundings, which they will resume again to-morrow, if the weather permit.

Bail-Court, 13th Nov.—The Queen v. Alaric Alexander Watts.—In this case rules had been obtained on the first day of term, calling upon the defendant, who is the proprietor of the United Service Gazette, to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for publishing a libel upon Admiral Ommanney, and another upon Captain Eneve, of H.M.S. Lily.

Sir Frederick Pollock now applied to his Lordship to order these rules to be enlarged until the latter end of the present term, on the ground that the defendant had not had time to procure affidavits necessary to his defence from certain parties who were now residing at Portsmouth, and also those of other parties who were engaged elsewhere in Her Majesty's service.

Mr. Justice Littledale said he thought that the affidavits might be obtained in sufficient time to enable the prosecutors to answer them in the course of the present term.

Sir F. Pollock said he had no doubt that could be done; at all events, if the affidavits were not ready within the last four days of term, he would make an application to his Lordship for further time. Mr. Justice Littledale, with this understanding, granted the application.

[From the Morning Chronicle.]—The Queen on the prosecution of Ommanney v. Alaric Alexander Watts.—The Queen on the prosecution of Reeve v. Alaric Alexander Watts.

To the Editor of the Morning Chronicle.

Sir,—In your reports of the applications for rules nisi in these cases on Monday week, you were pleased to designate me Alaric Attila Watts, instead of Alaric Alexander Watts, although the name was correctly given throughout the proceedings. This mistake (if mistake it was) has occasioned me great inconvenience, and considerable additional expense, as, in several affidavits from distant parts of the country, in the second case, I am incorrectly designated (on the authority of the newspapers), an error which renders the affidavits useless, and has compelled me to apply to the Court for an extension of the rule. Requesting you will do me the favour to point this out prominently, I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Alaric Alexander Watts.

United Service Gazette Office, Nov. 13, 1839.

CAVALRY.

Rl. Horse Guards—Cornet the Earl of March has returned to the Regent's Park Barracks from leave.

4th Dr. Guards—Capts. Mayow and Hodge, and Lieut. Coster are on leave.

6th Dr. Guards—Lieut. Conolly is on leave.

Sir John Slade has received a Medal and one Clasp for Corunna and Fuentes d'Onor.—Sir J. M. Wallace served at Waterloo on the 16th, 17th, and 18th June.—Cornet Henley served the campaign of 1814 in the Peninsula, including the battle of Toulouse.—Dr. Barlow's services:—Expedition to Copenhagen in 1807; capture of Martinique in 1809; campaign of 1815 in the Netherlands and France.—Mr. Constant served at Waterloo on the 16th, 17th, and 18th June.—New Army List.

6th Dr. Guards—Capt. Browne, Lieuts. Johnston, Scott, and Cox, and Cornet Knox are on leave.

Sir Thomas Hawker was present in the actions in North Holland, the Helder expedition, on the 10th and 19th September, 2d and 6th October, 1799; and was present in command of the 20th Light Dragoons in every action in which the British troops were engaged on the eastern coast of Spain, in 1813 and 1814. He has subsequently served on the Staff in India as Major-General.—Colonel Jackson served in the Peninsula from April, 1809, to the end of the war, including the battles of Oporto, Talavera, Busaco, Redinha, Fuentes d'Onor; first siege of Badajoz, from 29th May to 16th June, 1811; action at Elbodon; siege and capture of Ciudad Rodrigo; second siege and capture of Badajoz, Apr. 6, 1812; battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Maya Pass, Pampeluna (16th July), Pyrenees (30th July), Nivelle, Nive, and Bayonne. Present at Waterloo, and with the army of occupation in France. Served in India and Arabia from 1819 to 1826, including the capture of Beni Boo-Ali, as Military Secretary to Sir Lionel Smith, and for which service he was recommended by the Marquis of Hastings for the rank of Lieut.-Col.—Capt. Smyth served in India with the 16th Lancers, and was at the siege of Bhurtpore under Lord Combermere.—Dr. Herlot served in the Peninsula from June, 1809, to the end of the war, including the battles of Talavera and Salamanca, siege of Burgos, and battles of Vittoria, the Pyrenees, and Orthes.—New Army List.

7th Dr. Guards—Capt. W. Sandilands, and Lieuts. C. H. Thomson, Greene, and Stevenson, are on leave.

Sir Evan Lloyd served on regimental full-pay from 1780 to 1812, the whole period in the 17th Light Dragoons, and was present with that Corps in nearly all the actions and sieges in which it was engaged in India. He also served in South America in 1806 and 7, and was at the taking of Monte Video, and in the expedition to Buenos Ayres.—Col. Clark Kennedy served in the Peninsula from Sept., 1809, to Sept., 1813, including the battles of Fuentes d'Onor and Vittoria, besides various affairs of outposts. Received two wounds at Waterloo. While leading his squadron in a successful charge against the Count D'Erlon's corps at Waterloo, perceiving an Eagle to the left, he changed the direction of his squadron, and ran the officer through the body who carried it, and which belonged to the 105th French Regiment of Infantry, and is now deposited in Whitehall.—Dr. Cuthbert served at the capture of Martinique in 1809, and Guadaloupe in 1810. Also throughout the Chinese war, and was present in almost every action and [illegible] ing party during the war.—New Army List.

2d Dragoons—Lieut. Campbell is seriously ill. Cornet Milbank has joined at Cahir from Ballincollig.

CONTRACT FOR PEARL AND SCOTCH BARLEY.

Department of the Physician-General of the Navy, Somer-set-place, November 13, 1839.

THE Commissioners for executing the Office commanded by Lt.-Col. Badcock, arrived at Bombay, in the Herefordshire, 19th Sept.

16th Lancers—Brigadier Arnold died at Cabool 20th Aug.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The detachment lately arrived from Glasgow, embarked in the Barretto Junior, transport, at Gravesend on the 11th inst.

7th—On the 6th inst., the service cos., under the command of Lieut.-Col. Farquharson, were conveyed to Cove by steamers, and embarked on board the Apollo tr.-ship for Gibraltar. The Apollo was to sail on the 10th, but the Shipping Gazette states she has been countermanded. Letters, however, were received in town yesterday from the depot, stating that the troop-ship had sailed. The cos. comprise one Lieut.-Col., one Major, six Captains, 12 Lieuts., 28 Serjeants, 493 r. and f.

We omitted in our last publication to notice the exemplary conduct of the 7th Fusiliers, under the command of that gallant officer, Major Stuart, on the occasion of rescuing two policemen from a furious mob last July, the principals in the riot being convicted at the late sessions, and amply punished for their lawless proceedings. The conduct of both the commanding officer and the men, who so promptly executed his orders in assisting the civil authorities, deserve the marked approbation of the inhabitants, and we regret they did not express their sentiments, in a suitable manner, on the subject before the departure of Major Stuart's detachment. Had the gallant officer waited till he could obtain the order of a magistrate, two policemen would have been killed on the spot; he, however, did not stand upon etiquette, or wait till he could ascertain whether the military could be called out or not, in which case the two men would have been sacrificed. No. he proceeded in quick time to the scene of action—rescued the policemen—arrested the leading rioters, and lodged them in the county gaol. Such conduct being of very rare occurrence, we think it highly deserving of public approbation, and we hope will operate as a salutary lesson to those deluded people who imagine that the military are not warranted in cases of emergency to assist the civil powers.—Carlow Sentinel.

7th Depot—consists of one Major (Stuart), 4 Capts., 7 Lieuts., 8 Serj., 217 r. and f.

10th—On leave: Capts. Wilmot and Franks, Lieuts. Harford and Fenwick.

Sir John Lambert served in Flanders, and was at Lincelles and the sieges of Valenciennes and Dunkirk; has received a cross for Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse.—Col. Custance was severely wounded at the passage of the Nive, and again in France.—Major Broom was at the siege and capture of Mulligaum, in the East Indies, in 1818.—Capt. Jauncey expedition to Walcheren. Peninsula from July, 1812, to June, 1814, including battle of Castalla, siege of Tarragona, retreat from do., and second siege; retreat from Villa Franca after the battle of the pass of Ordal; investment of Barcelona in 1814. Expedition to Naples in 1815.—Lieut. Shanly served the campaigns of 1813, 14, and 15, in Upper Canada, and was present at the battles of Chippewa and Lundy's Lane (wounded).—Quartermaster Blenkinsop was present at the action before Aleoy in Spain.—Dr. Regan served in the expedition against New Orleans.—New Army List.

10th.—Ensign Campbell is cashiered.

1861.—We have unquestionable authority for stating that the Royal Irish, one company of the Royal Artillery, one company of the Gun Lascars, and six companies of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment (being the force placed by this Government at the disposal of the Governor-General of India) have been warned to hold themselves in readiness to embark for Moulmein, in case their services shall be required. The 61st will, therefore, remain for the present in the colony, whilst the Jupiter is ordered to England direct, as the Supreme Government consider her further detention as a useless expense, because, if transports are required, the Indian seas can provide ample shipping."—Colombo Observer, Aug. 1.

16th Depot—This company was transferred to the Provisional Battalion on the 9th inst.

19th—On Saturday Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney inspected this corps in Dublin.

20th—The following officers are on leave:—Maj. Hutchinson; Capts. Campbell, Barker, and Smith; Lieuts. Vivian, Evelegh, and Crespigny; Ens. Stevens and Masterson.

21st Depot—Lieut. Shawe's leave is extended to 27th Feb.

22d—Lieut.-Col. Pennefather has taken the command. Capt. Preston is on leave.

27th Depot—Lieut. Watson has returned, and Capts. Lonsdale and Verner will rejoin in a few weeks.

28th Depot—Capt. Sawbridge is on leave to 14th Feb., 1840.

29th—Capt. Hemphill, Lieuts. Brown and Coker, and Ens. Henry, are on leave. Lieut. Molle has joined the detachment under the command of Major Shamrock, at Deptford.

G.O., Nov. 2, 1839.—The Commandant has great satisfaction in conveying to Lieut.-Col. Wrottesley, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of the 29th Reg., his entire approbation, not only of their appearance in the field, but of the steadiness and precision with which the several manœuvres were directed and executed.

34th Depot—Capt. Norris is on leave to 24th Dec.

35th Depot—The detachments stationed at Sheerness and Harwich, are ordered to be relieved by the 30th Depot. Maj. Tennant, Brev.-Maj. Cooper, Lieut. Chatterton, Ensigns Crosbie, Teulon, and Ewart, with a draft of 120 men, are ordered to embark for the Mauritius.

36th Depot—took the Castle Barrack guard, Limerick, on the 8th inst., from the 42d.

38th—Private W. Page was tried on 4th inst. by a General Court-Martial, for attempting to shoot Colour-Serjeant Dolan, at Belfast.

41st Depot—Capt. Wetherall has obtained three months' leave of absence; Ens. Hessing is on leave to 29th inst.

42d—1 comp., 34 r. and f., from Limerick to Cappawhite, Nov. 11. Maj. Macdougall has returned from leave. Lieut. the Hon. R. Rollo joined on Sunday from fifteen months' leave.

43d—Capt. Egerton has sailed for England.

45th—We noticed in our last the exemplary conduct of Lieut. Gray, in command of a detachment of this corps at the Westgate Hotel, Newport, and we again refer to it this week in our leading remarks. The following is the evidence of this gallant soldier before the magistrates:—

"Basil Gray sworn.—I am Lieutenant in the 45th Regiment of Foot, doing duty at Newport. I received orders on Monday morning last, at a little after 8 o'clock, from Capt. Stack, to proceed to the Westgate Hotel and put myself under the orders of the Mayor. I repaired there immediately with 30 men, and formed in front of the building. The Mayor then desired me to enter the court-yard, the gate of which was closed after me. He then took me to the building on the right of the hotel, and asked me if that was fit for my services. It was a room on the right flank. It did so, and I immediately proceeded to get it cleared of furniture and other articles with which it was crowded; this took me some time, as the room was filled with smoke and not habitable; it had been full of constables all night. I then marched my men in. The Mayor gave me instructions to conceal my men as much as possible, to avoid irritating the mob, which was then approaching; to effect which I closed the under shutters of the room, which had three projecting bow windows, and latched them. I had only time to give my men a few necessary instructions when I heard cheering, and the Mayor told me they were approaching; they formed in front of the house, and I saw a few of their spearheads over our half-shutters; they immediately let fly a volley of small-arms, this demolished the windows of the room we were in. I immediately gave the word to load. I did not do this before, as I hoped matters would not have turned out so serious. While my men were loading, which took a very short time, about one third of a minute, the crowd effected an entrance into the passage which communicated with a door of our room. As soon as we were loaded, I stepped forward to unlatch one of the window-shutters. The Mayor handsomely opened another. This unmasked us, and a quantity of small-arms were discharged at us, by which the Mayor was twice wounded, and my Serjeant by my side (Serjeant Daly) wounded in the head. I saw him covered with blood immediately after. I heard them both say they were hit. The Mayor said it to me only in a whisper, which could not be heard by my men, and went and sat down. The Serjeant also only spoke to me. Our men soon got to work, and enfiladed the streets from the bow windows and the passage of the house from the doorway of our room. This continued for about ten minutes, when I saw our shots were becoming thin from want of objects. The Chartist shots were not repeated after our soldiers commenced firing. I then went into the passage with a few men to see how things were looking. I saw there was no more attack, and I returned to the room and ordered them to cease firing from the bow window, which order was obeyed immediately. I then made every preparation to strengthen my position in case of a second attack, and while so employed I entered a side room leading from the passage, and found the two prisoners at the bar in a corner. I ordered them to follow me, and gave them over to my men prisoners. I saw nothing in their hands, but on examining their persons they found a quantity of ball ammunition on Benfield. When I saw them I was employed in removing a dead body from the passage, in case of a second attack. They had evidently gone into the room to avoid the fire of our men, and could not get out again without exposing themselves to our fire. My men searched them, and just after their pockets were turned out I saw the prisoners eating bread and cheese given them by my men. I collected nine dead bodies. I dare say the Mayor gave me orders to fire, but I don't recollect. When I was fired upon, I did not want any instructions to return it. The Mayor was by my side."

"It is rather a remarkable circumstance that Capt. Stack's company, the brave fellows that have covered themselves with so many laurels in Newport, formed one of the two companies summoned out by the Kentish Magistrates to put down the insane attempt of Thom, alias Sir William Courtney, some two years back. One of Capt Stark's men fell on that occasion, and Lieut. Bennett, of the other company, lost his gallant life by a ball fired from the musket which the madman Thom carried himself."—Monmouthshire Merlin.

We take the annexed passages from a letter in the Times:—

"I wish to ask the public at large, whether such conduct as that reported of the handful of men of this ever-glorious 45th Regiment, at Newport (see N. & M. G. of last week), can be permitted to pass over with empty praise only, like sounding brass and tinkling cymbals? For my own part I have watched your papers for the last two or three days, expecting to find that the good people of Newport had raised a subscription for those who, with such frightful multitudes, preserved their town from pillage, fire, and sword, and, above all, rapine! Good God, only pause and consider, had these 30 or 40 men retreated and fled over the back premises of the Westgate Inn, as some of the civil force did in the hour of danger and terror, where would Newport have now been, and what would the women and children have endured!

"It is only some few weeks that I drove expressly to Windsor to be hoaxed by a friend of mine to be present at one of the most delightful and soul stirring scenes to a Military man (for I am a volunteer) of hearing Royalty itself, with suitable pomp, give this identical regiment its new colours.

"But what was my disappointment to hear that it was intended to allow these men to leave the Castle without that honour being paid to the shades and manes of immortal Picton? Perhaps Picton and the 45th will be remembered when those who ought to have known better will be forgotten."

Lieuts. Lewis and Shaw are on leave.

48th Depot—The comp. from Thurles to Templemore, Nov. 12.

49th—Lieut. and Adjt. O'Callaghan is daily expected from India on sick leave, and Lt. Browne is appointed Acting-Adjutant to the corps, now stationed at Dinapore, during his absence.

50th—By the last accounts, the corps were concentrating their detachments at Sydney from out-quarters, preparatory to sailing for India.

56th Depot—1 comp., 50 r. and f., from Nenagh to Thurles, Nov. 11 and 12.

58th—On leave:—Maj. Irving; Capts. Beverhoudt, Grant, and Hume; Lieuts. Hardy, Nugent, and Mayers.

60th, 1st Batt. (Depot)—The comp. from Maryborough to Birr, Nov. 12. Lieut. O'Grady is on leave.

61st—See 18th Regiment.

62d Depot—Lieut. Scott commands the depot at Chatham.

65th Depot—Lieutenant Whitaker, who has been in ill health for some time, died on the 5th inst., at Clare Castle. He was gazetted out on the 8th inst.

70th Depot—The comp. from Cappawhite to Templemore, Nov. 11 and 12.

72d—Capt. Frith is on leave in Dublin.

74th—Major Manin died, Oct. 13th, on board H.M.'s packet-brig Delight, aged 50. This gallant officer was 30 years in the Army. He served in the Peninsula, North America, and West Indies, and was on his return to Europe for the recovery of his health, at the recommendation of a Medical Board, when the melancholy event took place.

76th—Captain W. A. Blakeney, whose retirement appeared in our last week's Paper, commanded a company in the 87th Foot in 1794. He is an elder brother of Lt.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney, and was for some years Adjutant of the London Recruiting District.

80th—Some mischievous fellow left a note at a newspaper office at Sydney, desiring the editor to insert a notice of the death of Lieut. Lightbody, by a fall from his horse, the expense to be charged to Lt.-Col. Baker. The notice was inserted, but it turns out to be a falsehood.

84th—1 comp., 2 officers, and 40 r. and f., from Kilkenny to Maryborough, Nov. 11 to 13.

85th—Maj. French and Capt. Brockman have left head-qrs. for England.

86th—Capt. Everard, Lieuts. Fenwick, Gore, and Rideout, Ensigns Mahon and Edwards, and Surg. Coghlan, are on leave.

87th Depot—Capt. Campbell, Second-Lieut. Rush, and the draft, embark at Cove for the Mauritius.

88th—The half-yearly inspection took place on Monday; Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney inspected the corps, and expressed himself highly pleased with the appearance and every department connected with the regt. The General gave the Adjutant much praise for the very creditable manner in which the books belonging to the orderly room were kept, owing, we believe, to his own exertions, and to the attention of his clerks.

93d—Ens. Crawford is on leave.

94th Depot—Ens. Maclean is on leave to 10th Jan.

99th—1 Field-Officer from Athlone to Drogheda, to take charge of the detachment, there being 3 Field-Officers at head-quarters, Athlone.

1st West India Regt.—Capt. James Douglas; George, aged 14, son of Capt. Robeson; and Quartermaster-Serj. Leonard, have become victims to the pestilential climate of Sierra Leone.

RIFLE-BRIGADE, 2d Batt.—On Monday morning Prince Ernest of Saxe Coburg inspected the battalion in the barracks at Windsor, accompanied by his brother, Prince Albert, and attended by Count Kalowrath and Baron Alvensleben. Lord Alfred Paget was likewise in attendance. The party arrived at the barracks on horseback about eleven o'clock, when the whole of the battalion were drawn up ready to receive them. The Prince, after alighting from his horse, walked through the ranks, and very minutely inspected the men, and closely examined their arms and accoutrements. One of the men was then taken from the ranks, who went through the exercise of loading, &c., for the purpose of enabling the Prince the mode of placing the ammunition in the pouch, and putting on the caps, the regiment having, since May last, been provided with entirely new rifles, with percussion locks. The barrels of the rifles are of an extraordinary and novel construction, there being two grooves in the bore of the barrel, and these descend to the touch-hole in a spiral direction. The balls are likewise novelly constructed, with a projection around them to fit the groove, which may be described as having the appearance (if we may search so far for a simile) of "Sisera and his belt." The inspection having been gone through, the party then went over a great portion of the rooms of the men, with the cleanliness and good order of which they expressed themselves much pleased. The regiment then marched, under the command of its Colonel (Col. Brown), to the Home-park, where it went through a variety of evolutions in the presence of the Princes and their suite; her Majesty, attended by a numerous retinue, viewing the movements of the troops from the New Terrace. Before Prince Ernest left the ground, he summoned the officers around him, expressed the high gratification he had experienced, and highly complimented both officers and men upon the admirable discipline which prevailed throughout the regiment. The Prince, likewise, before he left the barracks in Sheet-st., expressed himself much pleased with the order and regularity which there prevailed. Col. Brown and Maj. Irton (of the Rifle Brigade) received the royal commands to dine with her Majesty at the Castle on Monday.—Maj. Stevenson, Capts. Napier, Egerton, and Dolphin, and Lts. Horsford, Fergusson, Wilkins, Beresford, Jenkinson, Reynard and Macdonell, are on leave.

Horse Guards, Nov. 13, 1839.

The General Commanding in Chief having had the honour to lay before the Queen the proceedings of a General Court-Martial, held at Woolwich on the 19th Sept. 1839, for the trial of Private Charles Jones, of the 2d Batt. of the Rifle Brigade, who was arraigned upon the under-mentioned charge, viz.—"For that he, Charles Jones, being a private in the 45th Regt., did, on or about the 10th Feb. 1836, enlist into the 2d Batt. of the Rifle Brigade, from which last-mentioned corps, when stationed at Woolwich, he did afterwards on the 14th day of August 1839, desert;" upon which charge the Court came to the following decision:—"The Court, having maturely considered the evidence in support of the charge against the prisoner, and he having nothing to offer in his defence, is of opinion that he is GUILTY of the charge preferred against him;" the Court having thus found the prisoner, Private Charles Jones, 2d Batt. Rifle Brigade, guilty of the charge preferred against him as aforesaid, which being in breach of the Articles of War, and taking into consideration the evidence produced against him of general bad character, do, by virtue of the said Articles of War, sentence him, the prisoner Charles Jones, 2d Batt. Rifle Brigade, to be transported as a felon for seven years," which sentence Her Majesty has been pleased to approve and confirm. The Court-Martial is hereby dissolved.

N.B.—The prisoner has been in confinement at Woolwich since the Court-Martial.

Rl. Artillery.—Sergeant-Major Robert Bayfield, 5th Batt., died on the 8th inst., at his quarters in the Rl. Artillery Barracks, Woolwich. He was 50 years of age, 35 of which were spent in this corps. He served through the Peninsular campaigns, in the last American war, and in the campaign of 1815; he was then in the Rl. Artillery Drivers, rating as Serg.-Major of the Pontoon Train with the army of occupation until Nov. 1818. He joined the 5th Batt. as Sergeant on the incorporation of the Drivers with the Battalions, and was appointed Sergeant-Major on the promotion of Serg.-Major Barker to Quartermaster. His funeral, which took place on Wednesday, was attended by almost all the officers at head-quarters. Col. Bredin has proceeded to Malta for the benefit of his health, which has been precarious for some time.—Lieut. H. W. Stace is absent on leave.—The Court-Martial, of which Col. T. Paterson is President, reassembled on Monday at the mess-room, by order of Her Majesty, for the purpose of revising its proceedings.—The experimental party is expected to leave Deal, on return to Woolwich, some day next week; the heavy ordnance are to remain there, as the practice will have to be resumed next summer.—Lt.-Col. Bastard is expected to leave for Malta about the 21st inst., and Lt.-Col. Faddy for Gibraltar about the same date.—Lieut. Inglefield will proceed with Lt.-Col. Bastard to Malta, and join Col. Chesney's Comp.

G.O., Nov. 9, 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to direct Lt. Grant of the Rocket Troop to be attached to, and do duty with the General Regimental Depot, under the command of Lt.-Col. R. Jones, until further orders, vice 3d Capt. Teesdale, promoted. J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., A. A. General.

G.O., Nov. 9, 1839.—With reference to the General Order of the 7th ult., increasing the amount of levy money for recruits, the Hon. Board of Ordnance, by letter dated 30th October 1839, S-634, having been pleased to direct that the allowance of 12*s.* 6*d.* to the party be paid on final approval, instead of being divided into 7*s.* 6*d.* on intermediate, and 5*s.* on final approval.

J. E. Jones, Lt.-Col., A. A. General.

G.O., Nov. 14, 1839.—It being desirable that the number of badges of distinction for good conduct, worn by soldiers of the Rl. Artillery should be shown against their names in the Troop and Company Monthly Returns, an additional column for that purpose is to be made to the right of the column of remarks. On all occasions when men are about to be discharged, the number of distinguishing marks they are in possession of is to be inserted in their discharge, immediately under the report of the soldier's character. A. Dickson, D. A. Gen.

Rl. Engineers.—The detachment of Rl. Sappers and Miners employed at Spithead arrived at Woolwich dock-yard on the 8th inst., on board the Medea steam-frigate, under the charge of Serj.-Maj. Jones, Col. Pasley having concluded his operations against the Royal George for this season. It is intended to recommence operations about May next. There has been consumed during these experiments 1c2,940 lbs. of powder. Above 100 tons of the wreck have been recovered, and placed in the dockyard at Portsmouth, with five brass and six iron guns. The experiments have been conducted in a manner highly creditable to Col. Pasley and the engineering department. Great credit is also due to Lieut. Simons, Serj.-Maj. Jones and the non-commissioned officers and privates who had the difficult and arduous duty of carrying out the working details. The total expense incurred has been more than defrayed by the value of the articles recovered.—Maj. Barry has left Limerick for Tralee, on a tour of barrack inspection.

The late Lt.-Col. Thomas Aird, who died at his house, in Derwent-street, Bishopwearmouth, on the 1st inst., in his 79th year, was formerly of the Scotch Greys, and late of the Rl. Waggon Train. He was a Scotchman, and entered the Scotch Greys previously to the commencement of the war of the French Revolution. His career of active service commenced with this war; for he was in the Duke of York's campaigns in Flanders in 1793; and during the spirit-stirring times which then began, and which continued for a quarter of a century, there was no scene of European warfare, comprising the operation of British troops, in which he was not engaged. He was at the Helder, at Copenhagen, and in the Peninsula with Sir John Moore, where he shared the hardships of the disastrous retreat to Corunna, and distinguished himself under circumstances difficult to the bravest and the best. He formed part of the ill-fated expedition to Walcheren; and subsequently partook of the dangers, the hardships, but, let us add, too, of the glory of that first of British wars;—that war equally glorious in its object, its conduct, and its results,—the Peninsular war, under the illustrious Wellington. It will be observed, that Lieut.-Col. Aird's period of service was coeval with that eventful time, when the war of the French Revolution passed over Europe, and impressed an entirely new character on its civilisation. The events of this time are now in a state of transition from contemporaneous to past history; and it may not be useless to remind some of our readers, that, at this period, above all others, Britain required men of strong heads, stout hearts, and robust constitutions. Such were not wanting at her call, and by their exertions, under the superintendence of a protecting Providence, she emerged victorious from a conflict unparalleled in history. Among those of her sons who stood by her in the hour of need, the deceased was ever conspicuous for gallantry in the field, the punctual discharge of all his duties, and a fortitude which never quailed before what all who have experienced them know to be more formidable than the dangers of a campaign, its toils and privations. He quitted the service without being rewarded by his country with very exalted rank, but with one universal testimony to his merit as an officer, and his unsullied honour as a man; and he has now departed this life, leaving in the memory of his children, grandchildren, and all who knew him, a pleasing remembrance of the kind parent, friend, and companion.

Gruzuee.—A correspondent of the Edinburgh Observer states, that the expedient of blowing open the gate with a quantity of powder in a leathern bag, was first brought to notice by Lieut.-Col. James Tennant, (a native of Edinburgh), of the Bengal Artillery, and its complete efficacy proved repeatedly at Dum Dum, the head-quarters of the Bengal Artillery, where he has seen two gates, the strongest we could make, shivered to atoms by 50 and 80lbs. of powder respectively, contained in leathern bags. Capt. Thompson, of the Bengal Engineers, has had the happiness of first practically applying this most simple, but most effective mode of blowing open a gate.

At the Chelmsford Petty Sessions, on the 8th inst., Serjt. Blunden, of the Rl. Marines, was fined 40*s.* and costs, for taking 2*s.* from Mr. Gusani, of the Travellers' Friend public-house, to excuse him from receiving two soldiers on billet for a month.

2500 troops will be withdrawn from England and Ireland by the drafts from the depots ordered to join the service cos.

We understand that the Duke of Wellington has appointed Col. Gurwood Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower, as successor to the late Major-General Sir Francis Doyle.

Recruiting Districts.—Lieut. Lee, 87th, has succeeded Lieut. Taylor, 96th, at Antrim. Lieut. Taylor is transferred to Leicester. Lieut. Lucas, 17th, has replaced Lieut. Cruice, 95th, at Boyle, the latter being transferred to Kilkenny.

A district Court-Martial assembled at Chatham on the 14th, Major Ruxton, 34th, President, for the trial of privates George Stacey, 15th Hussars, and Thomas Corrie, 39th foot.

David Walker, Esq., returned to Dublin on the 10th inst. from leave of absence, and has returned to his duties as Deputy Judge Advocate General.

Yesterday there was a cast of brass ordnance at the royal foundry, Woolwich.

Newport is now the head-quarters of a large Military force, and has all the appearance of a garrison town. Six hundred troops, including artillery, have arrived, and additional detachments are expected. The artillery is most formidable, and is largely supplied with shot, calculated to produce the most destructive effects on large masses. Companies of the troops are now proceeding to the chief towns and districts, where the disaffected lately appeared in numbers.—Monmouthshire Merlin.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Colborne left Montreal for Quebec on the 19th ult. On the day of his departure an address, containing 3,000 signatures, was presented to his Excellency, declaratory of the regret experienced by the inhabitants at his departure.

We take the following from the Montreal Herald of Oct. 19:—

"Yesterday morning the public were taken by surprise in learning that his Excellency Sir J. Colborne was to take his final departure from this city at five in the afternoon. It was not generally known, however, until near that hour, otherwise something more than a merely crowded wharf would have honoured the gallant veteran. As it was, nearly the whole of the British inhabitants of the city, male as well as female, assembled to pay an affectionate tribute of respect to the man whom they delighted to honour. A guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards was formed in front of the steamer British America, and when the advance of the Hussars guard of honour appeared, the utmost anxiety and death-like stillness prevailed among the assembled thousands. But when the hero of a hundred fights appeared, attended by the most numerous Staff we ever beheld in this country, the welkin rang with deafening cheers, while hats and handkerchiefs were waving in the air,

"The cheering continued during the whole line of march to the steam-boat, and was acknowledged by his Excellency repeatedly bowing, and uncovering his venerable head. A considerable number of gentlemen were on board, on purpose to bid his Excellency farewell. He seemed deeply affected at the voluntary manifestation of feeling which was tendered him by the British inhabitants of this city: the Canadians, of course, kept quietly at home. The vessels in the harbour displayed their gaudy colours; yet, amid the joyous appearance, many a heart throbbed quick, and many an eyelid acknowledged an unconscious tear. When his Excellency embarked, the band of the 61st Regiment played "Auld lang syne," and as soon as the British America was fairly under weigh, the crowd on the wharfs gave three cheers, which his Excellency, who was on the upper deck, politely acknowledged. We fervently trust that he may arrive in safety in his native land, and long live in the enjoyment of health, as well as of the pure and unmingled satisfaction of having performed his duty to his Queen and his country, during a period of great difficulty and danger."

Horse Guards, 4th November, 1839.

Memorandum for the guidance of Officers commanding regiments in India, Ceylon, &c.—The practice which has recently prevailed, of transmitting letters and returns by the overland mail via Marseilles, being found to create a very considerable expense to the public, is hereby strictly forbidden, and no communication is to be transmitted by the above route, except from the General Officers commanding, and then only in cases of emergency, and such as require dispatch. In transmitting returns and official communications to the several Military Departments, as directed by the General Regulations and Orders of the Army,—Commanding Officers are to cause the words "via Falmouth" to be superscribed on the cover; and they are enjoined to prevent any letters of a private nature, or not intended for the departments, being enclosed under Official Covers.

By Command of the Right Hon. General Lord Hill, G.C.B., General Commanding-in-Chief.

(Signed) John Macdonald, Adjutant-General.

Literary Notices.

The Flying Dutchman; or, a Legend of the High Seas. By the Author of "Cavendish." 3 vols. H. Colburn. Though we begin to think that we have had enough tales of the sea for a century or so to come—that is to say, till seafaring people and things take a new aspect, and offer new themes for illustration and interest—yet if the public call for works of this class, (which we believe they still do) we have few writers better qualified to supply the want, and few, if any, topics more appropriate as a material on which to work, than the writer and the topic now before us. And though in the present instance neither the talents of the writer nor the topic he has taken up have been turned to the best account of which they are susceptible, still we have a very amusing work, and one which will convey new images and impressions even to the most inveterate reader of nautical novels that the most nautical of our seaports can boast.

Mr. Neale has also avoided what we conceive to have been the mistake of his popular predecessor in the same course, Captain Marryat, in his treatment of the same inviting topic. Though taking all proper advantage of the prevalent superstition in the Navy, touching the well-known tradition of the Phantom Ship, he has nevertheless treated the matter by means of natural agency. But it would not be fair to anticipate the nature of the plot of "The Flying Dutchman" further than the above. Suffice it that the author has used much ingenuity in his management of that portion of his subject which relates more peculiarly to the title of his work; while in the general nautical descriptions and details that are incident to such a subject, he has displayed considerable spirit, and of course a competent degree of knowledge and nautical experience. The result is a work that will be generally read by all who are not tired of this (to our thinking) too "exclusive" style of narrative fiction. A novel—that boast and glory of our modern literature—ought to be "as broad and general as the casing air;" and when it is so, it becomes one of the noblest compositions of literary art. But when "cabined, cribbed, confined,"—when its scene and its characters are "bound in by saucy winds and waves"—it sinks into comparative insignificance, at least as a philosophical fiction. On the other hand, as mere sea-side reading at a watering place, such works as "The Flying Dutchman" are fully competent to their pleasant office.

Love. A Play. In Five Acts. By James Sheridan Knowles, author of "The Hunchback," &c. Moxon.

We spoke last week of the acting of this very agreeable play, which had just then received the early plaudits of an admiring and delighted public; and, had time and space permitted, we should have gone more largely into its merits as a dramatic composition. For a lengthened or elaborate critique the season is now past, as nearly the whole town has already seen, or read—or both seen and read—the drama of "Love," and consequently formed its own judgment. We cannot, however, suffer the opportunity to pass away altogether without remark, or without indicating two or three passages more especially entitled to praise.

With the construction of the fable of "Love," we confess we are not entirely satisfied. The interest of the reader, or spectator, has risen to its greatest climax at the close of the third act; and it would have been well could all that follows have been compressed into one more act, instead of being expanded into two. The under-plot, between Catherine and her lovers, is deficient in freshness, force, and spirit; in fact, it rather impairs than heightens the effect of the main subject. And the fate of the Countess and Huon having been finally and satisfactorily disposed of in the last act, no one cares about Catherine and Sir Rupert, whose comic intrusion then seems an impertinence, and throws almost an air of burlesque upon the whole. How, too, could so able and so experienced a writer as Mr. Knowles fall upon the feeble expedient—an expedient upon which much depends—of imagining it possible that Huon, associated from his infancy with the Countess, could have remained in ignorance of her Christian name?

The diction of the play is beautiful, though, perhaps, not in all respects equal to that of some of Mr. Knowles's former productions; for, as the editor of the Literary Gazette has happily observed, "there is more of rhetoric than of feeling to touch the heart throughout." For much, indeed, of the intenseness of purpose of which the spectator imagines himself sensible in the representation, the writer is indebted to the admirable persuasion of the Countess by Miss Ellen Tree. To the performer, this character is of a most arduous nature, both physically and mentally: mentally, from the incessantly conflicting emotions which it becomes imperatively necessary for the actress to both feel and exhibit, for without feeling them deeply she cannot exhibit them effectively; and physically, from the great and almost constant exertion of speech—of speech in its most impassioned strain—throughout. In nothing has Mr. Knowles evinced more acuteness of discrimination, or soundness of judgment, than in the conception and execution of the part of the Countess, with reference to its stage exhibition by Miss Tree. He has "taken measure" of that lady's powers to the utmost nicety, and with the happiest and most successful effect. Just as they have been to a certain extent, we do not think our critical contemporaries have given Miss Tree half the credit to which she is entitled for her exquisite and highly-finished performance of the Countess. There is no other actress upon the London boards who could have so carried through, and illustrated by the lofty power of mind, the purpose of the author. Not that we consider Miss Tree's style of acting to have been at all improved by her transatlantic trip: on the contrary, she appears to have picked up a few petty peculiarities, both of speech and action, amongst the Yankees, which it will be wise of her to discard with all practicable expedition. But when we first witnessed Miss Tree's histrionic efforts, now six or eight years ago, in "The Wife of Mantua," we pronounced her to be incomparably the best actress that had appeared since the days of Miss O'Neil; and we have been corroborated in this opinion by each successive performance of hers that it has been our fortune to attend.

In the part of Huon, also, Mr. Knowles has formed a very correct estimate of the capabilities of Anderson, who was never before seen to equal advantage. If Anderson could but forget that he had ever seen Macready, he might become, if not actually a first-rate actor, the chief of the second-rate. Macready, with all his genius, is the worst possible model that can be selected: to go no further, his "snip-snap-short" mode of breaking up sentences, and even words, as labourers break up granite into "nubbly bits," as the old women say, for macadamising a road, is an utter abomination. A word also to Mr. Anderson respecting his acting in the impressive scene between Huon and the Duke, in the first scene of the third act, whilst the Duke is writing the contract for Huon's intended marriage with Catherine. Here is the noble speech referred to:—

HUON. That I were dead!
O, what is death, compared to slavery!
Brutes may bear bondage—they were made for it,
When Heaven set man above them; but no mark,
Definite and indelible, it put
Upon one man to mark him from another,
That he should live his slave. O heavy curse!
To have thought, reason, judgment, feelings, tastes,
Passions, and conscience, like another man,
And not have equal liberty to use them,
But call his mood their master! Why was I born
With passion to be free—with faculties
To use enlargement—with desires that cleave
To high achievements—and with sympathies
Attracting me to objects fair and noble,—
And yet with power over myself as little
As any beast of burden? Why should I live?
There are of brutes themselves that will not tame,
So high is their nature;—whom the spur
And lash, instead of curbing, only chafe
Into prouder mettle,—that will let you kill them,
Ere they will suffer you to master them.
I am a man, and live!

In the most exalted strain of rant, rave, roar, and bellow, this is delivered in the very ear of the Duke; so that unless the poor dying old man were literally "as deaf as a post," he could not help hearing it, and at the grievous expense of his nervous system. We will indicate to Mr. Anderson two modes, by the adoption of either of which he may avoid so glaring a violation of propriety, of common sense, and of the illusion of the scene. If he deem it essential to indulge in the exercise of shouting whilst his master is in the act of writing, he may retire to the back of the stage, and storm at pleasure; or, what would be infinitely more gratifying to the ear and eye of the judicious, he may come down to the front, diagonally from the Duke, and say what he has to say in an equally manly, though more subdued tone.

As to the moral purpose of Mr. Knowles's drama, it is merely another exemplification of the old adages, omnia vincit amor, and virtus sola nobilitat.

We had purposed giving two or three more short extracts; but, perhaps, (especially as we are deficient in space,) the subjoined portion of one of the most impassioned scenes between Huon and the Countess, after the return of the former, in the fourth act, will convey as fair an idea of the general character of the drama as aught that we could select:—

COUNTESS. We do not meet to talk of grievances,
Huon. I offer'd you my hand just now
Why do you weep? I did not give it you
To kiss it with your tears!
HUON. O, 'tis a hand
Thou hast forbidden mine to meet.
COUNTESS. No, Huon,
Not as friends!—(recovering herself)—I'll see him clearly first— (Aside.
Sit down and let us talk. I have fifty things
I want to say to you, yet know not which
To begin with. Huon, do you like the Empress?
HUON. Like her!
COUNTESS. Yes; like her,—that's the word I said.
Perhaps it should be "love her?"
HUON. Love her, madam!—
COUNTESS (interrupting him). I see you do! Go on! What were you going To say?
HUON. O, contrast marvellous! beyond
Belief of nature!
COUNTESS. Ay! 'twixt her and me!
Go on! The contrast? Best we understand
Each other! Well 'The contrast?
HUON. 'Twere as one
Should find the sun by following the night!
Should plunge into her regions, and for chill,
And gloom, and sternleness, find light, and warmth,
And verdure,—such as should belong to day!
'Twere as death owned a heart, and life had none,
But with the shows of animation
Did lodge within its breast a core of stone,
While the still ribs of death had pulse within them!
COUNTESS. Am I that day, that life, compared to which Death, night, are e'en so rich? Is she thou servest
That death, that night, preferr'd to life and day?
HUON. O, I did love thee to oblivion
Of myself! What Nature gave me to assert
The man neglecting, as despised things
Compared to thee! That she intended me
For deeds of nobleness I may confess,
Seeing that others own I have achieved them.
Yet I abused her bounties,—and, for what?
Scorns—wrongs—through love of thee preferr'd them!
And which I bore, until the cause itself,
That made me bear them, thou didst make a means
Of yet unknown oppression. That I bore!
But there did patience cease. Yes! not, until Coerced there, where, spared, I were content
To last the thrall of passion's lethargy,
Did I rebel! But when I was struck down
Prostrate, as, for the sake of flesh and blood,
Behoves not slaves to lie,—with marvel on't
I waked to sense of what I ought to be!
Of what, against my will, 'twas past the sport
Of power to change me from I A MAN!—and straight
A man I started up! a man, resolved
To use his attributes as fits a man
To vindicate the ancient, common birth-right,
And answer the design of Him that framed him!
COUNTESS. So! you have register'd your debts to me,
No item overlooked thou knowest of.
What, now, if I could name to thee one debt
Would blot out all the rest!—not known to thee,
A debt thy dreams did never give thee glimpse of,— Thy dreams where thou didst soar, didst cast away
The clog, last morn put on, and mount as high
As e'er ambition left at large could wing,
Daring the eagle to come up to thee!
HUON. No debt that thou couldst name were gain to me.
I keep no register of aught between us.
Or, if I do, I never turn to it,
Unless enforced, as now. Whate'er has pass'd,
Is pass'd, and, profitless to memory,
Were better be forgotten.
COUNTESS. Ay! Indeed!
So easily done? Well, be it so! 'Tis past,
And so should be forgotten. Please you, now
Turn to the Empress. You have painted me;
Proceed to her. Come, let me see what hand
You will make of her picture. When I ask'd you now
If you liked her, you did echo me!—and then
I ask'd you if you loved her, and again
You echo'd me! I want an answer, not An echo. Well, sir? well?
HUON. Madam, I love
And honour her. (She starts from her seat; he rises also.)
COUNTESS. Thou art rewarded, pride!
Meet'st thy deserts! Show thy high breeding now!
Tread stately! throw thy spurning glances round!
And talk as mighty things as though the earth
Were made for thee alone! Where's thy domain?
Gone! And thy palace, what is it! a ruin!
And what art thou thyself! a beggar now!
Huon, you loved me once! (Bursting into tears.)
HUON. I loved thee once!
Oh, tell me, when was it I loved thee not?
Was't in my childhood, boyhood, manhood? Oh!
In all of them I loved thee! And were I now
To live the span of my first life, twice told,
And then to wither, thou surviving me,
And yet I lived in thy sweet memory,
Then might'st thou say of me, "He loved me once;
But that was all his life!"
COUNTESS. 'Twas heart for heart!
I loved thee ever! Yes! the passion now
Thrills on the woman's tongue; the girl's had told thee
Had I been bold as fond; for even then
I saw thy worth, but did not see thy station,
Till others, not so well affected towards thee,
Reveal'd it to me by their cold regards.
I could not help my nature. From that time
Two passions strove in my divided soul
For mastery—scorn of thy station, love
For thee—each feeding on the other's hate,
And growing stronger; till I thought their strife
Would shake my frame to dissolution! Yes!
Oh, Huon! when my brow sat cloudy oft
Over my cold eye, that look'd askant at thee,
Thou little thought what friend there was within
Would make that brow clear as a summer sky,
That eye bright, glowing as a summer's sun,
To kindle thee—as they, their world, with life,
And health, and wealth, and gladness!
HUON. Say'st thou this
To me? or do I dream I hear thee say it?
Or is the past a dream? I did not yield
At thy command, to marry Catherine?
Thou didst not see me wed her? Fancy forged
The ring I thought I put upon her finger?
Thou wast not by at all? From first to last,
Hadst not a hand in it? or, if thou hadst,
Why then untimely this unfold to me?
For I do know thee to be pride of all Proud honour's children! Art thou offspring prime Of cruelty as well? O, Heaven, to think
She loved me, and could give me to another,
Nor yet to her alone!—another!—

Aristocracy in America. From the Sketch-book of a German Nobleman. Edited by Francis J. Grund, Author of "The Americans in their Moral, Social, and Political Relations. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

THIS very amusing work, containing very severe satire on our transatlantic friends by one of their own body (for the German Nobleman appears to be altogether fictitious), goes far to confirm all that our own most anti-American tourists have written respecting them. Mrs. Trollope, much as has been said of her exaggerations, has scarcely drawn more ludicrous pictures of absurdity than Mr. Grund; and, truly, the state of society amongst the aristocratic portion of Americans affords slight temptation to English gentlemen of any degree to make any part of the Union their adopted country.

The infatuation of that people has, indeed, often excited our wonder and pity. That, blessed with a boundless territory, with the free air of heaven (such as it is), and plenty awaiting on rural industry, they should yet imbibe that "centralising" mania which is occasioning such miseries in the old countries of Europe, where, from circumstances, its influence is comparatively less surprising; that they should prefer manufactures to agriculture, and the acquirement of wealth by ceaseless, unwholesome drudgery, to the healthful pursuits and pleasures of the country, or to some rational enjoyment of ease, accompanied by such tastes and habits as lend real elegance to human manners,—is passing strange. From such preferences springs naturally that unbounded homage to wealth, rather than to those qualities which mark "the aristocracy of nature," or even to the less real though more often respected accidental claims of birth, which distinguishes the people of the United States. Hence the singular vulgarity which pervades all the attempts of our former colonial brethren to ape the tone of fashionable society as it appears in Europe.

But although as yet in this worship of riches the Americans appear conspicuous above all the nations of the earth, let us be careful that whilst smiling, or, it may be, laughing outright at their foibles, we remain free from the same egregious absurdities. Is not the pursuit of wealth fast becoming almost the sole object of all classes amongst ourselves; and, when obtained, is it not the grand idol of adoration? Are not talents constantly perverted to the worst purposes for gold, from the novelist who has caused Ainsworth's Dictionary to be henceforth confounded with Goose's, to the politician who, a raging destructive under Tory rule (because that party thought him not worth their purchase), is now satisfied with very moderate reform, and can defend Whig corruption when that faction have gratified Cerberus with a sop? This is, indeed, the reign of Mammon, and his rule is not confined to the western hemisphere.

We might quote many laughable passages from these volumes, but we prefer to present our readers with the following extracts, the first of which relates to Dr. Channing's opinion of Bonaparte, wherein he seems so far to coincide with a great military writer at home:—

"What induced him to preach against General Jackson?" demanded I.

"Because General Jackson was very nigh involving the country in a war with France, and Dr. Channing is opposed to war, on account of its wickedness. It completely obscures 'moral grandeur,' and sets a high premium on the lower qualities of the mind, such as courage, patriotism, and the like. He is in general opposed to 'Military greatness,' and is just as severe on Napoleon, Nelson, Wellington, and Jackson, as Pope was upon woman, only he is not quite so satirical," observed the old gentleman. "He thinks those men will have 'a very low standing' in the other world. Isn't it so, thy child?"

"Precisely so, father; Dr. Channing always speaks of Napoleon as of 'the miscalled great man.'"

"Then the French were right in calling him le petit caporal."

"Why, the Doctor calls Napoleon only a third-rate man!"

"Then, I assure you, he has been sinking the bathos in a professional manner. Such a speech might have been piquant some twenty-five or thirty years ago at a nobleman's table; but no one can venture on it now without betraying the most profound ignorance of history, and the most ridiculous conceit at the same time. None but great men do great things; the saying and writing them is left to inferior minds, and often to mere scribblers. Napoleon tamed the Revolution; he changed its corrosive nature, which alone ought to have entitled him to the respect of the Tories."

Whether the following character of General Jackson is too flattering we know not, but we are inclined to respect the old warrior, and have no grudge against him for his victory at New Orleans. Moreover, in many points it seems to resemble that of some distinguished soldiers and statesmen of our own country:—

"What the French call 'le génie du caractère,' which is the true talisman of popular favour, is perhaps the highest talent with which mortals can be endowed. It is a pure gift of Heaven, and has accomplished the noblest deeds in history. When Napoleon reproached Voltaire with not having sufficiently appreciated the character of Mahomed, whom the French poet introduced in the drama of the same name as a mere impostor, he felt that none but a great mind could have conceived and executed what to ordinary men would have appeared absurd or chimerical; and that he who had the power to instil a lasting enthusiasm for a new cause into millions, and on that enthusiasm to establish an empire which he spread over half the world, must have been more than a mere charlatan, for he must have been possessed of a thorough knowledge of human character. This is a thing a man cannot acquire by study, if he do not possess it by intuition; and hence it can neither be defined nor understood by men not similarly gifted, who applying their own scale to what is merely incommensurable, are always astonished at the success of those whom they were all their lives accustomed to look upon as second or third-rate men.

"Have we not heard it objected to Napoleon, that he could not write an elegant epistle? Do the French not pity Shakspeare for having been so little of a scholar, and so inelegant in his expressions? And yet, wherein consisted the particular genius of these men, so entirely opposite to one another, if it was not principally in the perfect knowledge which truly intuitively they possessed of human character?

"In the same manner it has been said of General Jackson, that he is incapable of writing a good English sentence, as if this were the standard by which to measure the capacity of a political chief, especially in America, where, out of a hundred senators and representatives, scarcely one has received what in Europe would be called a literary education. If classical learning were to constitute the scale by which to measure the talents of our statesmen, how far would they not rank behind the paltriest Prussian schoolmaster! General Jackson understood the people of the United States better than, perhaps, any President before him, and developed as much energy in his administration as any American statesman. I do not here speak as a partisan, nor do I wish to inquire whether all his measures were beneficial to the people; but they were at least all in unison with his political doctrines, and carried through with an iron consequence, notwithstanding the enormous opposition that wealth, and, in a great degree also, talent, put in the way of their execution; and yet they call Jackson a second-rate man, because he is not a regular speechifier, or has never published a long article in the newspapers!

"No abstract argument can drive him from his position, for he is nothing separate. He is a politician, a soldier, an enthusiast for the rights of the people, and a Christian at the same time. If the politician is convinced, there remains still the soldier, the enthusiast, and the Christian to be satisfied; if the soldier is captured, there remains still the enthusiast; and so on. He is always a whole; head, heart, and hand—conception, determination, and action—being one and inseparable. Such men are always a riddle to the world, accustomed as the vulgar are to ascribe every signal success to a particular talent, or to this or that capacity, without ever considering the connexion between mind and character.

"Of General Jackson's enthusiasm I soon had an opportunity of satisfying myself. Miss Martineau being at that time in Washington, and having been overheard to make a remark at her boarding-house to this effect—'That it was really a wonder General Jackson succeeded against the United States' Bank, considering that all the talent and the genius of the country were against him,' my friend seized the opportunity to direct the General's attention to the peculiar manner in which British writers were accustomed to view his government. Upon this he rose from his chair, drew himself up to his full height, and, with his eyes flashing fire, remarked to the senator:—'You might have told her, Sir, that all the honesty and integrity of the country were on my side.' Then, without uttering another syllable, he resumed his seat, and was as friendly and agreeable as before."

The Keepsake for 1840. Edited by the Lady E. Stuart Wortley. Longman and Co.

This is very justly considered the patrician Annual, for it has more titled contributors to its pages than any other, and has always been got up in the first style of elegance and good taste. The present volume is fully equal to the preceding years' publications. Several of the essays, both prose and verse, have the stamp of genius, and are appropriate and characteristic with the exquisitely finished engravings; the typography and paper beautiful. Of the twelve plates it might be difficult to say to which the palm of excellence should be awarded: they are, almost without an exception, of a high order of merit. However, those we prefer are the Somnambulist, by Miss Sharpe, and Leslie's Mary as the Improvisatrice. The description, by Lady Londonderry, of some of the Russian Palaces, Lady Stuart Wortley's Constantinople scen and the "Character of the Earl of Scarborough," by the celebrated Earl of Chesterfield, now for the first time published, from the original manuscript in the possession of the Duke of Rutland, are papers of more remarkable interest than we expect to find in these gay and fashionable souvenirs.

Memoirs of the late Duchess of St. Albans. By Mrs. Cornwell Baron Wilson. 2 vols. H. Colburn.

Mrs. Wilson has here given two more very pleasant and readable volumes on a topic with which she had in some degree familiarised herself in preparing her memoir of Monk Lewis; and in point of variety and incidents this new production claims precedence, though the numerous original letters of the work on Lewis formed a feature which the present is without. The singular career of the Duchess of St. Albans is so fresh in the memory of most of our readers, that we must not allow ourselves to be tempted, by Mrs. Wilson's inviting pages, to any details respecting it. We must say, however, in the most distinct terms, that the moral character of the Duchess-actress comes out, from the trial to which a necessarily impartial examination has subjected it, with a degree of credit that must prove highly acceptable to all who were connected with her in the early no less than in the later and more brilliant period of her life. Indeed, considering the extraordinary circumstances in which she was placed, it gives us pleasure to record our opinion, that no woman ever passed through so dangerous and difficult an ordeal with less injury to every valuable quality of mind, heart, and temper, than did the late Duchess of St. Albans; nor, indeed, do we find that any one of the venial weaknesses and human errors, which showed themselves in the trying years of her unparalleled prosperity, were other than such as might have been almost certainly predicated, from the tenor of her early training and education—or rather the total absence of both; while her prosperity—the early stages of it at least—brought out features which would have done honour to any training.

Mrs. Wilson more than complies with the critical dictum of "beginning at the beginning;" she very properly makes us acquainted with much that is of interest concerning the parents of Miss Mellon—particularly her mother, to whose singular tact and sagacity (blended though it was with a want of cultivation, and even of common civilisation, almost amounting to the savage) she entirely owed her extraordinary rise. She then takes up the career of the young Harriot almost from her humble and sordid cradle, and pursues it, in an uninterrupted narrative, to her gorgeous and escutcheoned grave. Such a tale could not fail to include a large portion of high moral interest; and the numerous anecdotes with which it is lightened and illustrated, give to it a popular character, which will undoubtedly command for the work not only a wide circulation at the moment, but a permanent place in the libraries of all who take an interest in theatrical affairs.

Early Efforts; a Volume of Poems. By the Misses Moss. Whittaker and Co.

A SECOND edition of poems by two young ladies of the Hebrew nation, aged 18 and 16. The versification is smooth and elegant.

A Distinguished Member of the Humane Society. Painted by Edwin Landseer, R.A.; engraved by Thomas Landseer. Moon.

It is a great misfortune for a clever painter to have his works fall into the hands of a stupid or talentless engraver. The converse of this proposition is equally true; ergo, in having his fine portrait of a "Distinguished Member of the Humane Society" transferred from canvas to steel, or copper, by a master of the burin and scraper so accomplished as Thomas Landseer, Edwin Landseer must deem himself a most fortunate man. Excepting that he has not shown himself competent to make three feet of copper equal to nine feet of canvas, and to fill his strokes with all the vivid hues of the bold and magnificent original, the engraver has not fallen short of the painter.

Gentle reader, the "Distinguished Member of the Humane Society," of whom we have just been speaking—whose portrait has been so admirably painted by Edwin and so admirably engraved by Thomas Landseer, and which Mr. Moon has just published in his accustomed style of excellence—is not a man, but that very contemptible animal, a dog!—a creature upon one of whose species the maudlin poet, Byron, had once the sickly sentimentality to write an epitaph! An epitaph upon a dog, indeed! What shall we have next? No matter. We believe we are almost as great fools as Byron; for we remember when we were at the Royal Academy in the summer of 1838, and saw, for the first time, Landseer's portrait of this "Distinguished Member," &c., we remained so long to gaze upon and admire it, that, when the light grew dim, and we turned round to ascertain the cause, we found ourselves standing in "a banquet hall deserted," and had a narrow escape—through the civility of one of the keepers—from being locked in for the first time in his life, if not already.

night! We were of the same opinion then that we are now—that this is one of Landseer's noblest and most successful pictures.

The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe. R. Tyas.—Parts 1, 2, and 3, of a new edition, illustrated with 300 wood engravings, cleverly executed, from characteristic designs by Grandville. The work is cheap and good, and as one of the best and most real of fictions, there can be no doubt of the success of the present enterprise.

Gulliver's Travels. Hayward and Moore.—This is the commencement of another "standard edition" of one of the British classics, to be illustrated with upwards of 400 wood engravings, after designs by Grandville, and notes by Dr. Taylor. The woodcuts are truly effective, the paper and typography excellent, and as this clever satire of Dean Swift is now for the first time illustrated, and moreover in the first style of excellence, the edition will be deservedly popular.

"H. B.," the political caricaturist and inimitable artist, has issued three new sketches illustrative of recent events, full of characteristic point and amazing felicity of expression. In the first, O'Connell is represented as one of those not very respectable gentry who usually frequent fairs and racecourses, and let vulgo vocatur "a knock 'em down, three goes a-penny." Perched on the tallest stick, and brought prominently into the foreground, is the model of a neat little church, whose spire, however, seems to have encountered some heavy blows, and is already in a dilapidated, if not tottering, condition. The other pins in immediate juxtaposition are quite erect, with crowns and coronets, and other fine things emblematic of the different ranks and estates in the realm. The Premier player, if we may so describe the first gentleman, who, by the by, greatly resembles Lord Melbourne, seems determined to have a most destructive fling at them, but just as he takes his aim with the stick he has received, the head of which betrays considerable resemblance to the features of Mr. Sheil, a prim conceited-looking little gentleman, with features somewhat like Lord John Russell, says, "Now, M—lb—ne, mind your hits; it will require some nicety to knock it down without disturbing the rest." The Premier, however, is in no degree daunted; sure of his mark, he handles his weapon with the utmost nonchalance, but still he does not seem altogether pleased with it, and inquires of the Irishman, "Have you nothing better than this bit of crab to offer me? No stick of more weight? But here goes." "Little as it is," replies Dan, "I promise you it can do some execution; see what a nob it has got." In the back-ground, among other spectators, may be descried a young lady, not very unlike the Queen, saying to a smart young gentleman by her side, with a rather Saxon physiognomy, "I have staked a crown upon the result, although I confess I am very inexperienced in the game. Don't you think it was bold?" To which the latter, with most complacent gallantry, replies, "It was certainly rather hazardous; but if you'll allow me, I will, with the greatest pleasure, stand half your stake."—No. 618 represents a wake after the true Irish fashion. Three mourners in cloaks occupy the fore-ground; the Duke of Wellington, who seems to feel acutely the loss of his new friend; Lord Lyndhurst, on his knees, who, with hands upraised, and an expression of loud forensic sorrow on his countenance, deplores in interrogative grief the departure of the deceased; and a third figure, huddled up in a corner, whom we guess to be Count d'Orsay, only because we see a neat French boot and spur, and have a surmise that he has put his foot in it. In the back-ground is a host of revellers, those to whom a death-bed is a scene, if not of mirth, at any rate of enjoyment, and here the dear friends of the deceased are congregated, lamenting his virtues, extolling his bad propensities, and shedding tears and whiskey, though not in equal proportions. In this group the likenesses of O'Connell, Lords Normanby, Duncannon, John Russell, Monteagle, and Melbourne, are conspicuous, the latter particularly so, as much from the linear resemblance as from the political truth to which his words bear witness. In another compartment of the picture appears "The subject of all verse," the unkilled one, whose head appears above the counterpane of the bed in which he lies, with one eye open, and a knowingness of expression in it, that says, more pertinently than the label above, "What are they saying of the departed?" The question is addressed to Mr. Leader, who, in the costume of a physician, enjoins the strictest silence—an edict which the patient, from his known mobility of temperament, must find it difficult to obey.—No. 619 called "Friar Tuck and the Sacristan," represents that scene in Ivanhoe, where Athelstane, supposed to be dead, comes suddenly upon those who have done him so much wrong, and are carousing at his expense. Lord Melbourne and O'Connell represent the lusty sacristan and the burly mendicant friar; while Lord Brougham, with a very grim aspect, personates Athelstane, for the

In answer to "S. G.'s" inquiries relative to the expenses of a passage to India by the overland conveyance, it is as under:—

From London to Falmouth . . .	2	0	0
" Falmouth to Gibraltar . . .	18	0	0
" Gibraltar to Malta . . .	13	0	0
" Malta to Alexandria . . .	12	0	0

This does not include 'Steward's gratuities, which would amount to 30s. more, nor the expenses from Alexandria to Suez, which mainly depend upon the accommodation required, nor the expenses incidental on the trans-shipment of baggage at the different stations. The passage cannot be secured throughout the whole journey, but must be paid for in London as far as Gibraltar, at Gibraltar to Malta, &c.

In reply to "A Militia Officer," we can only repeat what we have stated several times to others, that nothing is decided. Owing to the retirement of Lord Howick, and the appointment of a new Secretary, several plans that were in progress are, for the present, put aside. Mr. Macaulay has to learn his business; he chooses to think for himself, and as regards the Army, we hope he will both think and act liberally.

We shall be happy to see "R. L." on Tuesday.—"A. E. C." is thanked. A packet has been forwarded to "J."—"An Old Campaigner" will find us not unwilling to meet his wishes: we hope to hear from him further.—Good accounts from "+" are anxiously looked for.—We shall be glad of some details from "Aristides."—"An Old Commissioned Officer, R.N." next week.—"An Old Subscriber" will find in the East India Register the information he requires in regard to Assistant-Surgeons in the E. I. Company's service.

We decline the publication of the Lines sent by "A Looker-on," and also the letters of "Tom Bowling" and "G. P." referring to the same affair; our principle is to temper justice with mercy. We have made up our mind not to interfere, either directly or indirectly, in the matter.

The appointment of Commander Hall to Wanderer rests on no better authority than that of Commander Webb, which we contradicted last week. Commander Denman will commission that vessel in a few days.

Our Greenwich correspondent would save us much labour in reference, if he struck from his list all such matters as we have already noticed, and which are copied into other journals from our pages. The appointments to Firefly and Prospero we gave a fortnight ago, and that to Flamer last week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1839.

It is matter of general observation and remark, that, as the cycle of the year arrives at the present month of November, the annual farce of "Naval Decay" is announced for representation, and the public mind excited with apprehensions of the designs of foreign invaders, and the unprotected state of our shores.

It is certainly considerate on the part of the alarmists, that they do not excite apprehension in the summer, when the Russian Fleet is equipped and evolutionizing about the Baltic, and when the Czar might, if so disposed, send it forth to gather fleece. They imagine, doubtless, that such a dose would be too strong for the nerves of John Bull; but no sooner does the fall of the year approach, and the Buckaboo is dismantled, and placed, like Captain Smith of Halifax, 'in winter quarters,' than the Leading Journal puts forth its apprehensions, and Granny, with the smaller fry in her wake, "take up the wondrous tale!"

We have repeatedly shown, that since Peter the Great founded the Russian Navy, it has always been the practice of that state to maintain its Fleet in commission during the summer months, in peace as well as war. Occasionally, they have cruised in the Baltic, the North Sea, and even the English Channel. We see nothing alarming, therefore, in their continuance of the practice, except that, under the watchful eye of the Emperor, the Russian Fleet is in a more effective state, and, should hostile demonstrations be intended, better calculated to perform them than at other periods.

We believe every one will admit, that we have now in commission a very strong naval force. The principal part is employed in the Mediterranean, and our contemporary, the Times, complains that the Admiral is not,—owing to his advanced age,—equal to the duties and responsibilities that devolve upon him with the increase of his Fleet, and that he is unprovided with Rear-Admirals, and more particularly with a Captain of the Fleet, who might share his labours, whilst Sir Edward Codrington, with a smaller squadron, had a Rear-Admiral under him. Upon this point our contemporary is misinformed—and, indeed, on all points connected with naval matters, we should be glad to find a Journal whose advocacy, properly exerted, is capable of such powerful effect, free from the imposition so frequently practised on it. Sir Edward Codrington had neither Rear-Admiral nor Captain of the Fleet in his squadron at Navarino. Neither had Nelson a Second Flag or Captain of the Fleet at the Nile; nor had the latter a Captain of the Fleet at Trafalgar.

If the Mediterranean Fleet was intended to be maintained at its present amount, no doubt the usual number of Flag Officers would be attached to it; but we imagine no Rear-Admiral would be inclined to accept such a post on the contingency of remaining there three or six months, or until the matter which has induced its increase is adjusted, and thus sacrifice some hundreds of pounds for his outfit. We perceive that Captain Parker, universally admitted to be one of the best officers in the service, has been ordered to hoist a broad pendant pro tempore, and that amounts to the same thing, without putting any Officer to inconvenience.

We must protest against the sweeping assertion, that amongst the Captains in commission, many "are better acquainted with election than with maritime manœuvres; it might, we say, puzzle a plain man to discover more than half-a-dozen, perhaps, who know anything of the necessary evolutions relating to the 'order of battle,' or the formation of movements incidental to a fleet at sea."

We always regret to find Military or Naval Officers taking violent part in politics; but all men have their opinions, ardent minds will express them strongly, and surely it is unjust to denounce the professional talent of such men as Captain Napier, because they take a prominent part on the stage where so many are acting. Whatever political opinions Naval Officers may profess, our contemporary may be assured that they will always be found to perform their duty with the same valour, loyalty, and ability, that has served to establish their fame. Meantime, as the first scene of the annual farce has been enacted, and the great leader has struck the key-note by which the instruments are tuned, we presume the other portion will be served up in the usual manner ad interim, until the explanation that annually occurs in Parliament once more dispels the delusion. It is probable, however, that as the piece has run with questionable success for the two last seasons, and indeed was all but damned last year, there will be found some difficulty in exciting attention and procuring an audience.

As regards the distribution of the large naval force in commission, we must presume the authorities to be better judges than our contemporary, or ourselves. The Fleet in the Mediterranean may or may not be "superfluous," whilst ships are wanted on other stations. We do not attach much importance to the complaints of merchants and shipmasters abroad, because they would not be satisfied if a vessel of war were attached to each, for then they would probably require another. If we are to make a hostile demonstration against China, no doubt a sufficient force will be collected and employed.

As regards South America, where the Americans keep a line-of-battle ship, a reference to our last week's distribution will show that we have fifteen pendants on that station. The Americans and French concentrate their force to one point for purpose of display—whilst our ships are scattered about, the police of the sea being in truth committed to the care of British vessels.

We would bring to the remembrance of the Military Commission (from whom much is expected) a class of Officers known as the old Peninsular men, of whom there are still remaining on full-pay and active service (under the rank of Field-Officer) about three hundred and twenty, out of many thousands, who died in the field, or sunk into a premature grave, without a single badge of military distinction.

The above three hundred and twenty Officers, say, average thirty years' service; they served their country, and three kings of England, with great fidelity, honour, and bravery, unexampled in the annals of history; very many of them suffered from wounds repeatedly received in siege and battle; they fought their way for six years, through toil, sickness, and privation, from the lines at Torres-Vedras until the banner of England was planted on the walls of Toulouse;—but what would they not have done under such a leader, who once said, when opposed by an overwhelming force, "If I get into a scrape, thank God! I have an Army that can get me out of it"? We do not say that the Great Captain ever did get into a scrape; but if he had, he was all right in his conjecture—he would have been helped out of it at the hazard of ten thousand lives. There was the old "Steelbacks,"* and "Die-hards," "Dirty Half-hundred," "Surprisers," and "Slashers," with fifty other Corps, ready at a signal to dash through fire and water.

Soult acknowledged, that in the whole course of his long service, he had never before seen so desperate and bloody a conflict as the battle of Albuera. He said, "There is no beating those British troops; I always thought them bad soldiers, and now I am sure of it, for I turned their right, and penetrated their centre; they were completely beaten! the day was mine,—and yet they did not know it, and would not run!" Albuera, no doubt, was one of the most murderous battles we fought in the Peninsula. Major-General Houghton and Sir William Myers fell, leading on their brigades; and out of three thousand men, who advanced to the heights, two thousand men, and sixty officers, including every Field-Officer, were either killed or wounded—the Officers, one and all, declaring they would win the day, or die on the field. Yet those men are long forgotten, nor were the survivors ever rewarded with a bit of ribbon.

We would ask, if the battles of Rolica, Vimeira, Corunna, Talavera, Busaco, Barrosa, Albuera,

* Every Regiment, Brigade, and Division had its sobriquet in those days.

Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Biddasoa, Nivelle, Nive, Bayonne, Orthez, Toulouse, with the sieges of Badajoz, St. Sebastian, Ciudad Rodrigo, and Burgos, and fifty other minor affairs, were not equal to the three days of Waterloo? and if the surviving Officers of this six years' campaign have not the strongest claim for a Medal, even at the eleventh hour, to commemorate those glorious days of victory and achievement never to be forgotten?

All Officers and private soldiers of other nations are rewarded for good service in the field; they are frequently promoted on the very spot where a deed of valour is performed. This was a maxim of Napoleon's, and no General could appreciate the value of a good soldier more than he did; his soldiers would have died a thousand deaths for him. Of this we have good proof. We think it was after the battle of Vittoria, when the surgeons were busy amputating, a French soldier had his arm taken off, which he tossed into the air, crying "Vive Napoleon! Vive l'Empereur!" Another had a ball lodged in his left breast; when the incision was made to extract it, he remarked, "An inch deeper, doctor, and you'll find the Emperor!"

"I ordained," said Timoor, "that the Right of the Warrior should not be injured, and that the Soldier, who had grown in years, should not be deprived of his station or his wages; and that the Actions of the Soldier should not be suppressed; for Men, who sell their Permanent Happiness for Perishable Honour, merit Compensation, and are worthy of Reward and Encouragement." But we assert, that there is little to stimulate the British soldier; there is no reward for him, no military distinction, were he to sacrifice his life over and over. In the Peninsular War, upwards of thirty-seven thousand British troops were slain, and more than seventy thousand wounded. At the siege of Badajoz, sixty British Officers were killed, and two hundred and fifty-one wounded; twenty-four British Officers were killed, and sixty-eight wounded, at Burgos; thirteen British Officers were killed, and eighty-eight wounded (of the 6th Division alone), at Toulouse; yet not one of the survivors, under the rank of a Major, had any reward. At ten o'clock, on the night of the 6th April, Badajoz was stormed, and, says Colonel Napier, "then the soldiers eagerly made themselves ready for a combat, so fiercely fought, so terribly won; so dreadful in all its circumstances, that posterity can scarcely be expected to credit the tale; but many are still alive who know that it is true."

Although Colonel Napier's splendid narrative of the assault of Badajoz must be familiar to many of our readers, we cannot avoid, on the present occasion, again referring to it, and extracting a few passages.

"Great was the confusion, for now the ravelin was quite crowded with men of both divisions, and while some continued to fire, others jumped down and ran towards the breach; many also passed between the ravelin and the counterguard of the Trinidad; the two Divisions got mixed, and the reserves, which should have remained at the quarries, also came pouring in, until the ditch was quite filled, the rear still crowding forward, and all cheering vehemently. The enemy's shouts also were loud and terrible, and the bursting of shells and of grenades, the roaring of the guns from the flanks, answered by the iron howitzers from the battery of the parallel, the heavy roll and horrid explosion of the powder barrels, the whizzing flight of the blazing splinters, the loud exhortations of the officers, and the continual clatter of the muskets, made a maddening din."

"Now a multitude bounded up the great breach, as if driven by a whirlwind; but across the top glittered a range of sword-blades, sharp-pointed, keen-edged on both sides, and firmly fixed in ponderous beams, which were chained together, and set deep in the ruins; and for ten feet in front, the ascent was covered with loose planks, studded with sharp iron points, on which the feet of the foremost being set, the planks moved, and the unhappy soldiers, falling forward on the spikes, rolled down upon the ranks behind. Then the Frenchmen, shouting at the success of their stratagem, and leaping forward, plied their shot with terrible rapidity, for every man had several muskets; and each musket, in addition to its ordinary charge, contained a small cylinder of wood, stuck full of slugs, which scattered like hail when discharged.

"Again the assailants rushed up the breaches, and again the sword-blades, immovable and impassable, stopped their charge; and the hissing shells, and thundering powder barrels, exploded unceasingly. Hundreds of men had fallen, and hundreds more were dropping, but still the heroic officers called aloud for new trials, and sometimes followed by many, sometimes by a few, ascended the ruins; and so furious were the men themselves, that in one of these charges, the rear strove to push the foremost on to the sword-blades, willing even to make a bridge of their writhing bodies; but others frustrated the attempt by dropping down; and men fell so fast from the shot, that it was hard to know who went down voluntarily, who were stricken, and many stooped unhurt that never rose again."

About midnight two thousand brave men had fallen.

"Yet officers of all stations, followed more or less numerously by the men, were seen to start out, as if struck by a sudden madness, and rush into the breach, which, yawning and glittering with steel, seemed like the mouth of some huge dragon belching forth smoke and flame.

"Meanwhile, the fire of the French was deadly; a mine was sprung beneath the soldiers' feet; beams of wood and live shells were rolled over on their heads; showers of grape from the flank swept the ditch, and man after man dropped dead from the ladders.

"Let any man picture to himself this frightful carnage taking place in a space of less than a hundred square yards. Let him consider that the slain died not all suddenly, nor by one manner of death; that some perished by steel, some by shot, some by water; that some were crushed and mangled by heavy weights, some trampled upon, some dashed to atoms by the fiery explosions; that for hours this destruction was endured without shrinking, and that the town was won at last. Let any man consider this, and he must admit that a British Army bears with it an awful power. And false would it be to say that the French were feeble men, for the garrison stood and fought manfully. Shame there was none on any side. Yet who shall do justice to the bravery of the British soldiers? the noble emulation of the officers? Who shall describe the martial fury of that desperate soldier of the 95th, who, in his resolution to win, thrust himself beneath the chained sword-blades, and there suffered the enemy to dash his head to pieces with the ends of their muskets? Who can sufficiently honour the intrepidity and resolution of Ferguson, of the 43d, who, having in former assaults received two deep wounds, was here, with his hurts still open, leading the stormers of his regiment, the third time a volunteer, and the third time wounded! Nor would I be understood to select these as pre-eminent; many and signal were the other examples of unbounded devotion, some known, some that will never be known; for in such a tumult much passed unobserved and often the observers fell themselves ere they could bear testimony to what they saw; but no age, no nation, ever sent forth braver troops to battle than those who stormed Badajoz.

"When the extent of the night's havoc was made known to Lord Wellington, the firmness of his nature gave way for a moment, and the pride of conquest yielded to a passionate burst of grief for the loss of his gallant soldiers."

In the assault at St. Sebastian, 25th July, 1813, the command of the Royal Regiment devolved upon Captain Mpilen, after a loss of sixteen Officers, and three hundred Non-commissioned Officers and men, killed and wounded.

Yet the Peninsular men were not, and are not rewarded! Grateful country!

Under the head of 45th Regiment we have published this week some documents in reference to the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Gray at Newport, and we rejoice to find that the notice we gave in our last has attracted general attention to the claims this Officer has upon the gratitude of the country. We annex one of several letters which our statement has produced.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I am glad to perceive by your valuable Journal that the conduct of Lieut. Basil Gray, 45th Regt., has been "the universal theme of praise at the Horse Guards," and I trust that the promotion so justly due to him may be speedily awarded; but how frequently do we see illustrated the Roman adage—

"Probitas laudatur, et alget."

Individual instances of bravery are rarely rewarded in the present day—so rarely indeed, that instead of wondering at undeclared merit, we are only taken by surprise when a brave action is the only cause of an officer's promotion. I say the only cause, for many of your readers can bear sorrowful testimony, that unless a brave man chances to have friends at the Horse Guards or Admiralty, slight must be his hopes of promotion following in the wake of bravery, no matter what privations he may have endured, what perils he may have encountered, or what courage, moral as well as physical, he may have displayed in meriting promotion. I trust Lieut. Gray may not have said of him some years hence, as was said of Lieut.* Wm. Mackie, 88th, who had lost three forlorn hopes—

"The gallant fellow still remains a sub."

but I shall not be surprised to find such to be the case. News errors. Nothing could excuse the omission of giving a Brevet-Majority to any Lieutenant of the Foot Guards who happened to be on duty at the Royal Palace on the days of the Queen's Accession and Coronation: but as for officers in marching regiments, if they have money, let them purchase promotion; if not, they can do very well without it, it is their duty to serve and be thankful, without grumbling on the account of promotion withheld, or merit unrewarded. Canada was saved by the talent and bravery of Officers of the Line, and yet we have not heard of any distinction or reward having been conferred on Colonel Wetherall;—in fact, I believe that the Brevet-Majorities given to Capts. Geo. Bell, 1st Foot, and Geo. Browne, 32d, were the only rewards given on that occasion in the regiments of the line.—Officers without interest or family connexion with persons in power have now no stimulus to exertion; they cannot hope for promotion, do what they may to deserve it, and, consequently, they may as well be indolent as the reverse. Here is an example. Lieut. Spiller, 94th Regt., was wounded in both thighs at the battle of Vimiera, served at Corunna, in the Expedition to Walcheren, in the Peninsula during 1811 and 1812, and at New Orleans; received two wounds in the right thigh, lost his little finger by a musket-shot in the right hand, was severely wounded in the forehead, neck, and right temple, and was most dreadfully burned from head to foot by a mine which exploded at Ciudad Rodrigo. For all these services he obtained a company without purchase, merely because he happened to be Senior Lieutenant when his Regt. received the augmentation for India; and had he obtained an Ensigncy in Dec. 1827, and his Lieutenancy on the 29th Oct. 1828, he would have got the company without purchase as well; so that I may fairly say, as far as promotion was concerned, his services went for nothing, and I can prove this by the following example.—Lieut. ——†, 3d Light Dragoons, being Senior Lieutenant when his Regt. was gazetted for India, was promoted without purchase to a troop, after a few years of uninterrupted home service, although there were at the time at least twelve old Cavalry Lieutenants on full-pay, any one of whom should, in justice, have got the step to which Lieut. Yerbury succeeded. As a townsman of Lieut. Gray, 45th, I can state that four members of his family have lost their lives in the military service of their country, one of whom, Capt. French Gray, of the 1st Ceylon Regt. (as it was then styled) was Lieut. Gray's father. Lieut. Gray obtained his commission from the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, with the greatest credit and distinction, and was appointed to the 45th Regt. at his own request; and so favourable was the impression left by his diligence and steadiness on the mind of the then Lieut.-Governor, Colonel (now Lieut.-Gen.) James Butler, that he has been frequently known to instance Cadet Gray as one whose example should be followed by the students of the Junior department. G. L. S.

introducing the penny reward be resolved, and such information be obtained as will enable my Lords to adopt with more security, and consequently at an earlier period, the remaining part of the system.

In giving their sanction to the proposed arrangement, my Lords consider it as a temporary measure only, and as a step to the introduction of the uniform penny charge; and their Lordships will continue their anxious efforts to give effect to the whole of the intentions of the Legislature with as little delay as is consistent with the due consideration of the public convenience. Their Lordships are pleased to direct that all letters posted on or

We earnestly hope that the Authorities at the Horse Guards, and in Downing-street, will anticipate this application. It is hardly necessary to refer them to the evidence taken at Newport, showing the attempts to tamper with the soldiers of the 45th Regiment. The Morning Chronicle, the chief organ of the Government, says—

"We have here a confirmation of the opinion expressed by several officers in command of troops in the manufacturing districts, that soldiers cannot safely be entrusted with the preservation of order throughout the country. Small detachments are exposed to the danger of being tampered with."

If there is truth in this assertion, the Government owe it to the country instantly to reward men who have withstood all temptation, and so nobly done their duty.

We take the following from the Times of this morning:—

"The 45th Regiment, which has just rendered such good service in checking the Welsh Rebellion, is a corps of the highest note—bearing upon its banners the several honourable inscriptions of Roleia, Vimeira, Talavera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthez, Toulouse, Peninsula, and Ava. Not many weeks ago, when this noble corps was stationed at Windsor, the advice of her Majesty caused it to be understood that it was the Queen's gracious intention to confer upon it the high honour of presenting it with a new stand of colours. This understanding, whatever gloss may now be put upon it by those advisers, obtained at the time most extensive publicity, without contradiction from any quarter; but, for reasons which have never yet been explained, the people who counsel Her Majesty allowed the regiment to be removed from Windsor without gratifying it with the performance of the Royal wish. The relations subsisting between that body and the Crown have thus been brought into a very uncomfortable state; and if there were any remnant of correct feeling to be found among the Whig advisers of the Queen, the soldierly manner in which the 45th have lately behaved at Newport, in spite of their bad usage, ought not only to smite the Whigs with remorse, but to compel them, as soon as may be, to make the amende honorable. Do what they will, however, they have, with their usual petty intrigues, brought their royal pupil and themselves into a dilemma, which Her Majesty at least ought never to be placed in. The stand of colours must either now be given, or they must continue to be withheld. If Her Majesty be advised under present circumstances to realise her former gracious intentions, Her Majesty is thereby subjected to the humiliation of losing the entire grace that would have attached to their earlier fulfilment. If, on the other hand, the slur which Her Majesty's advisers caused to be put upon the 45th Regiment is not to be wiped off by the bestowal of that promised honour (tardy though it be), for which Lord Normanby's complimentary allusion to them in his letter to the Mayor of Newport affords no adequate substitute, then a deep and vital injury is inflicted, not merely upon these gallant victims of Whig caprice, and through them upon the entire military profession, but even upon the monarchy and nation at large, which at this moment are so peculiarly dependent upon the loyalty and good order of the Army."

Our readers may recollect that, early in the month of February, 1838, accounts reached England of an attack made by five armed boats from Chippewa, upon an U. S. steamer, called the Caroline, moored to the American shore at Schlosser, and that the boarding party, after slaughtering a great portion of the crew and the unarmed passengers, who were roused from sleep, had fired the vessel, towed her out to the middle of the stream, and set her adrift in a position which insured her destruction over the Falls of Niagara.

In common with our contemporaries we expressed our sorrow and indignation that such an act had been committed, and whilst we indulged the hope and belief that the circumstances were greatly exaggerated, we could not help stating our apprehensions, that an attack upon an American vessel, in her own waters, would not only add greatly to the excitement then raging on the borders, but prodigiously increase the difficulties under which the Governments of Great Britain and the United States were [illegible] of the [illegible]

Naval and Military Gazette

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1839.

It is matter of general observation and remark that as the cycle of the year arrives at the [illegible] appeared, that the schooner in question had been engaged by the rebel party then occupying Navy Island, to carry supplies of men and stores, and to keep up a communication between them and the American shore; that Colonel M'Nab, of the Canadian Militia, in command of the troops at Chippewa, had resolved to destroy her, and that two Naval Officers, Commander Andrew Drew and Lieutenant Shephard M'Cormick, settlers in the province, had, with the gallantry and promptitude which distinguish their profession, volunteered to lead the attack.

No wanton, or any other cruelty, appears to have been committed: the vessel was boarded, some fighting occurred, in which two or three lives were lost, and Lieutenant M'Cormick severely wounded; the crew, after a trifling resistance, were driven on shore, the warps which secured the vessel cut, and, fire being set to her, she drifted over the Falls.

There is no doubt but that the Caroline had been for several days engaged in assisting the rebel party, then assembled on Navy Island, with the ostensible design of invading Upper Canada, that province having been entirely divested of regular troops, and left to the protection of its gallant and loyal Militia; and as the American authorities would not, or could not, prevent this vessel from pursuing such conduct, the British Commander was justified in adopting the best means in his power to do so. But the act, although tolerated, could not be avowed without calling for the direct interference of the U. S. Government, and therefore it might have been expected that the Colonial Legislature of Upper Canada, in which Colonel M'Nab held a high office, would have taken some means to reward the officers and others who had so gallantly volunteered and performed the destruction of the schooner, and thereby cut off the supplies the rebels were receiving, and finally induced their defeat.

Upon this point the then Governor of the province, Sir F. Head, seems to have taken a different view. It appears, by an article in the Quarterly Review, of which he is the reputed author, that the destruction of the Caroline was considered by him "the first brilliant naval exploit of Her Majesty's reign," and therefore worthy of the marked approbation of the Sovereign, by promoting the two half-pay Officers, who were, we believe, the only naval men concerned. They were encouraged to memorialise the Government at home, and it appears their claim for promotion was backed by Sir F. Head and the Provincial Legislature.

"Could language, we humbly ask," says the Reviewer, "be stronger than the official recommendation to the Government, which has been submitted to Parliament, from the late Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, for their promotion? Could the petition of the latter officer (who, desperately wounded by five gun-shots, has lost the use of an arm, upon which his family in the backwoods depended,) be more unassumingly and more affectingly worded?"

Surely it might have occurred to the Lt.-Governor, and his Legislature, who harmonised on this point, that they had it in their own power to reward this service, by a grant of land, or of money, or some thing substantial, whilst the recognition of the act—which was undoubtedly, after all, a breach of neutrality, committed, not by rebels or pirates, but by British Officers, acting under the orders of Colonel M'Nab—might be seized upon by the United States as a plea to cover similar aggressions.

We admire the gallant conduct of the two Officers, but not their penetration, in suffering themselves to be deluded by the parties who should have rewarded them, to direct their claims to a quarter where, for the reasons we have stated, they cannot be entertained, either by the present or any other Government.

But, in addition to the charge of neglect, the Reviewer has brought forward a charge of oppression, which he has set forth in the following fashion:—

"When Esau exclaimed, "Hast thou but one blessing, my father? Bless me, even me also, oh my father!"—the parent's benediction followed the appeal; but the curse of the British Government still rests upon Drew, and it certainly cannot be denied, that for Her Majesty's Ministers all of a sudden to promote a man for defending British institutions, would be an act totally inconsistent with the whole course of what they have termed their "liberal policy." Accordingly, no sooner did the Queen's Government lately learn that Captain Sandom, whom they had ungenerously put in command on the Canada Lakes over the head of Captain Drew, had put that gallant officer under arrest, merely for leaving his vessel to pay a short visit to his wife and children in the backwoods—(although, be it stated, Captain Drew solemnly declares that she had previously obtained Captain Sandom's leave to do so)—than the Admiralty, grasping at this opportunity to court favour with the Republican party, ordered Captain Drew, who has been fourteen years a Commander, and gained every step in his profession by actions, to be superseded, and to be placed upon half-pay!! In vain has he solicited to be tried by Court-Martial! In vain has he respectfully remonstrated at being thus punished by the Government of his country, without trial or defence!—but when Parliament meets the hour of retribution will arrive."

We should not have referred to these matters, which are evidently paraded for the usual purpose of political warfare, were it not that we have been questioned on several hands as to the truth of these charges of neglect for gallant services. We find that Commander Drew, and Lieutenant M'Cormick, have, like many other Naval Officers, located themselves on grants of land in Upper Canada, and throughout the late troubles conducted themselves as good and loyal subjects, and with the usual zeal and activity of their profession. We cannot find that their employment in any official capacity has been recognised by the Admiralty at home, for they have always, we believe, been receiving half-pay, and probably colonial pay for their colonial services. Under such circumstances, their claims, (and that of Lieutenant M'Cormick particularly appears great,) rest with the Legislature of the Province. We do not believe that Commander Drew left any vessel he was placed in charge of, to visit his wife and family, or for any other purpose. Such a statement is a libel on the character of a Naval Officer. Neither can we suppose him to be so ignorant of the rules of the service as to consider himself amenable to Court-Martial by order of the Admiralty whilst on half-pay. And, altogether, we look upon the whole affair to be a piece of political humbug, in which the names of two gallant Officers are, for certain purposes, very unnecessarily and somewhat improperly introduced.

It may be well to state, in conclusion, that, considering the few Naval Officers employed on the Lakes, a considerable share of promotion has been assigned to that quarter. It is not long since we announced the promotion of the two Mates who were present in the affair at Prescott, and also of Lieutenant Duffill, a very active and intelligent Officer, to Commander.

Mr. Tufnell, the late Private Secretary to Lord Minto, is succeeded by Lord Melgund, the First Lord's son. This is rather an arduous post for a young nobleman to commence his noviciate in official business. His Lordship cannot do better than follow in the steps of his predecessor. Sir Charles Adam has returned to town and resumed his official duties. The First Lord of the Admiralty is expected from Scotland on Monday.

The Court.

The Queen and her august mother continue in the enjoyment of uninterrupted health. Her Majesty has taken carriage and equestrian exercise, when the weather has been sufficiently favourable.

On Thursday morning Prince Ernest, and Prince Albert of Saxe Coburg, attended by Count Kolowrath, Baron Alvensleben, and Lord Alfred Paget, left Windsor castle for Dover; from thence they proceed to Calais, on their way to Brussels; after paying a visit to the King of the Belgians, they proceed to Germany. The return of the princes to this country is not expected before March next.

The Queen Dowager is now honouring Sir Robert and Lady Peel with a visit at Drayton Manor, where a select party, including Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, have been invited to meet Her Majesty.

On Thursday Prince George of Cambridge landed at the Custom-house, having come over passenger from Rotterdam, in the General Steam Navigation Company's steam-ship Giraffe.

Lady Barham has succeeded the Dowager Lady Lyttelton as the Lady in Waiting. Lady Gardiner has succeeded Lady Caroline Barrington as the Bedchamber Woman in Waiting: and the Marquess of Headfort and Sir William Lumley have relieved Viscount Torrington and the Hon. Major Keppel as the Lord and Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

Newport Riots.—The town presents completely the appearance of a military station, there being 50 of the Royal Horse Artillery, with two guns, under the command of Capt. Bloomfield, a troop of the 10th Hussars, and the whole of the 45th Regt. of Foot, in the town. The Edinburgh Observer very justly says—"The result of this insane attempt to apply physical force to effect political regeneration, ought to convince every Chartist that though a mob may yell, shout, create disturbance, and do a great deal of injury to property, it is as nothing when opposed to even a handful of disciplined troops." The following letter from the Secretary of State has been received by the Mayor:—

"Whitehall, Nov. 9, 1839.

"Sir,—The Queen has been pleased to command me to express Her Majesty's high approval of your conduct, and of the conduct of the magistrates acting with you, on the occasion of the outrage recently committed in the town of Newport. To the resolution and courage of the magistrates, and of the small military force which supported them in withstanding the unexpected and daring attack of numerous bodies of armed men from the mining districts, Her Majesty ascribes, in great measure, the preservation of the lives and property of the inhabitants. Her Majesty is deeply concerned that any one of her faithful and loyal subjects should have suffered personal injury in the discharge of his public duty, and in defence of the peace of the town against lawless aggression. And while Her Majesty cannot but regret that any loss of life should occur, it is a satisfaction to Her Majesty to know that this loss, which, under the circumstances, was unavoidable, has been confined to those who were foremost in making the attack; and that the loss was not greater, or more indiscriminate, Her Majesty attributes to the judgment evinced by the magistrates, and by the officer in command of the troops, and to the exemplary forbearance, steadiness, and good conduct of the soldiers.—I have, &c. NORMANBY.

A special commission, consisting of Sir N. Tindal, Sir James Park, and Sir J. Williams, is to be sent down to Newport, for the trial of the parties concerned in the late outbreak in that neighbourhood. The following prisoners have been committed for High Treason and Sedition—John Frost, Charles Waters, John Partridge, James Aust, Thomas Davis, Richard Benfield, John Rees, John Lovell, Solomon Brittain, George George, William Jones.

On Saturday despatches were sent off from the Colonial-office for the Rt. Hon. Stewart Mackenzie, Governor of Ceylon, and for Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Woodford, K.C.B., the Governor of Gibraltar; others for Gen. Sir H. F. Bouverie, Governor of Malta, and others for Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. Despatches, dated 31st ult., were received on Saturday at the Foreign-department from the British chargé d'affaires at Madrid, and on Monday at the Colonial-office from Sir A. Woodford, Governor of Gibraltar. On Tuesday despatches from Capt. Prescott, Governor of Newfoundland, were received, and despatches were forwarded from the Foreign-department for the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British ambassador at St. Petersburg. On Wednesday H. F. Young, Esq., Colonial Secretary of British Guiana, arrived with despatches from British Guiana. Despatches from the Governor of Jamaica were received also at the Colonial-office. On Thursday despatches dated 20th Oct. were received at the Foreign-department, from Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, and despatches were forwarded for the Marquis of Clanricarde, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburgh. Despatches from Sir J. Franklin, lieutenant-governor of Van Diemen's Land, and also from the Governors of South and West Australia, were received yesterday at the Colonial-office.

Prince Albert's return to England has been arranged to take place in March next, and we state, upon the best authority, that, in the course of the following month, or early in May, the marriage of her Majesty with this "fortunate youth" will take place. Some curious rumours are afloat respecting the cause of the late visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge to her Majesty. Prince George, at one period, as well as their royal highnesses, looked forward to an alliance with the Queen; but those hopes (however sanguine they might have been some two or three years since) are now blighted; for our readers may rest assured, that Prince Albert is "the destined man." Mr. Ross, A.R.A. (who has recently returned from the court of the King of the Belgians), received the royal commands to paint a portrait of Prince Albert. The likeness, which is intended for a locket for her Majesty, and a most admirable resemblance, is just finished.—Morning Herald.

The Earl of Errol is to be Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, in the place of the late Duke of Argyll.

Mr. Poulett Thomson arrived at Quebec on 16th ult.

The Duke of Wellington arrived at Dover on the 8th inst., about half-past ten o'clock (under a salute from the guns at the heights), for the purpose of holding the Harbour Sessions. He was received by Colonel Munro, of the Royal Artillery, the Commanding Officer of the garrison, and a guard of honour of the 90th Regiment. There was very little business, and of no public interest. The vacancy occasioned in the board by the death of the late Sir John Head Brydges was not filled up. The board broke up early, and as the Duke was labouring under a violent cold, he returned immediately to Walmer Castle.

When the health of the ministers was given at the Lord Mayor's banquet, and the ministers present stood up, Lord Melbourne patiently awaited the abatement of the storm of hisses and applause. Not so Lord Normanby; in his excitement he forgot that it was unseemly to applaud himself; and to increase the clatter of applause he seized a spoon and hammered the plate before him to pieces.—Morning Herald.—[Fudge].

A deputation from the meeting lately held at the Merchants'-hall, on the subject of the West India Steam Mail Station, attended by the members of Parliament for this city, have had interviews with the different departments of Her Majesty's Government, and there is good reason for believing that this port will not be excluded from those from which the station is to be selected.—Bristol Journal.

Strangford, Nov. 4.—This town was a scene of great bustle and activity, in consequence of a general illumination in honour of Lt.-Col. the Right Hon. Lord De Ros having arrived to visit his estate. Tar barrels, &c., were blazing in all directions, and I am happy to say all passed off without the slightest accident.

At the Plymouth Guildhall, on the 4th inst., Daniel Capel, a Lieutenant in the 15th regiment, Edward Fellowes, Ensign in the 53d regt., and John R. Barry, Ensign in the 15th regt., were brought before the Justices, charged with a breach of the peace, and having in their possession a carved image of an elephant, the property of Edward Parker, who kept a beer-shop called the Elephant and Friar. The defendants were fined 40*s.* each, and 3*s.* 6*d.* costs. Several individuals were in court, and stated that the knockers had been wrenched from their doors, and their gates and doors attacked.

On Wednesday a serious accident occurred to Colonel Clifton, residing in Brook-st., Grosvenor-sq. He was walking on the foot-pavement, in West Strand, near the general post receiving office, where there were a number of post letter carriers on horseback, and in passing behind one of the horses, the animal suddenly kicked out, and struck the Colonel so tremendous a blow on the cap of the knee, that he fell to the ground in a state of insensibility. He was conveyed to his residence in a coach, enduring excruciating sufferings.

Covent Garden.—On Saturday night a new farce called Don't be Frightened made its first appearance. Without a plot, and without any fixed purpose, the author has endeavoured to excite continual laughter, by a thick succession of practical jokes, which keep the stage in a perpetual bustle. Sheridan Knowles's piece has been shortened, and now acts within the three hours. It draws crowded houses.

Drury Lane.—Rossini's celebrated opera of "Cinderella" was brought out at this theatre on Tuesday night, and introduced a new aspirant to the vocal department of the drama, in the person of Miss Deley, pupil of Rophino Lacy. As a first appearance, we have no recollection of witnessing anything more "successful" than that of this young debutante. Her first air did not lead us to expect so much as the progress of the opera made evident, viz., that the public had gained a prima donna for the boards of old Drury, second to none in the metropolis. Miss Deley's voice is very powerful, and of great compass; and her singing, moreover, has the rare recommendation of being natural. There is no evidence, in her execution, of mechanical drilling for effect merely. Her acting was also exceedingly good. The piece was got up with extraordinary splendour.

Adelphi.—The May Queen has been revived this week, it not having been played for the last eight years. The plot is elaborate; the scenery is wild, tragic, and melancholy.

St. James's.—On Wednesday evening a burletta called A Lord in Pawn was produced. Whether plot, dialogue, or situation be regarded, it was the very perfection of poverty; a perfect anomaly—a nothing, endowed with a visible shape. The audience endured the coarse dialogue with exemplary patience and silence, occasionally on the safety-valve principle, letting off a light whispering hiss, which floated playfully through the air. They had reserved their main fire till the end, and immediately the curtain fell, discharged a short, yet precise and decisive, whiz, which shot the abortive little burletta dead.

REDUCTION IN POSTAGE.

TREASURY MINUTE, DATED THE 15TH NOV. 1839.

My Lords read the act, 2nd and 3rd Victoria, cap. 52, for the further regulation of the duties on postage until the 5th Oct. 1840.

Since the prorogation of Parliament, my Lords have turned their unremitting attention to the measures necessary for carrying into effect the intention of the Legislature.

The powers with which this Board are invested by the act were recommended to Parliament, not only for the purpose of enabling my Lords to adopt such mode of payment as might, on consideration, appear the most advisable, but also to enable my Lords to carry into practical effect this great alteration in the manner which might be least liable to derange the regularity and the despatch of the correspondence of the country, as now executed by the Post-office.

My Lords have always been aware that the contemporaneous adoption of the charging letters by weight, and the reduction of postage to a uniform rate of one penny, would be attended with much practical difficulty. The time occupied now at the large offices and at the forward offices in charging and sorting the letters has been reduced, for the public convenience, to as narrow limits as possible. To alter the mode of charge from that to which the officers of the Post-office have been long accustomed, must of itself, for a time, be accompanied with some inconvenience, and my Lords apprehend it would be imprudent to increase that difficulty by adding at the same moment so large a number of letters as must naturally arise from the immediate reduction to the penny rate. My Lords fear that, for a time at least, great irregularities would prevail, and much public inconvenience result. However satisfactory, therefore, and however desirable in many points of view it might be to carry into execution contemporaneously the complete plan, their Lordships, upon a full consideration, have come to the conclusion that by adopting some intermediate measure, and bringing into operation the mode of charging the letters by weight, previous to the entire reduction of the rate of postage, their Lordships will not only avoid the risk to which the other course is liable, but materially facilitate the introduction of the remaining parts of the plan.

With these opinions their Lordships have, in communication with the authorities of the Post-office, turned their attention to the framing such regulations as may introduce, with as little delay as possible, the charge by weight.

Their Lordships propose to accompany this arrangement with such reduction of postage as will be a material relief to the public, and not interfere with the proper discharge of the duties of the officers of the Post-office as at present arranged.

By the regulations which, in conjunction with the Post-office, have been matured, and which this board propose to sanction, my Lords apprehend material advantages will be secured. A considerable relief will be given to the public as regards the charge of letters. One of the great departmental difficulties in introducing the penny rate will be removed, and such information be obtained as will enable my Lords to adopt with more security, and consequently at an earlier period, the remaining part of the system.

In giving their sanction to the proposed arrangement, my Lords consider it as a temporary measure only, and as a step to the introduction of the uniform penny charge; and their Lordships will continue their anxious efforts to give effect to the whole of the intentions of the Legislature with as little delay as is consistent with the due consideration of the public convenience. Their Lordships are pleased to direct that all letters posted on or after the 5th December next shall be subject to the following regulations:—

General post letters shall be charged by weight, as follows:—

1. Letters not exceeding ½ ounce, one postage.
   Do. 1 ounce, two postages.
   Do. 2 ounces, four postages.
   Do. 3 ounces, six postages.

and so on, adding two postages for every ounce up to 16 ounces, beyond which no packet is subject to postage shall be received.

2. All single postage rates between places within the United Kingdom, which now exceed 4*d.*, shall be reduced to that sum; inferior rates to remain undisturbed, but the letters to be charged by weight. Additional charges to which general post letters are now liable if posted or delivered beyond the limits of the general post free delivery, as also the additional halfpenny on Scotch letters, and the additional penny for passing the Menai and Conway bridges, to cease.

3. All letters and packets exceeding the weight of one ounce to be pre-paid and delivered in at the window—if not so pre-paid and delivered, to be charged double postage.

Foreign letters and packet letters will be charged according to the preceding scale of weights.

Letters to and from the British West Indies to be charged 1*s.* per single rate; the same charge to attach to letters from and to Gibraltar, Malta, and the Ionian Isles, conveyed by packet, and not transmitted through France.

My Lords reserve for future consideration the whole question of the rates on foreign letters, as their Lordships consider that it will be a proper subject for communication with foreign powers, in the hope that such foreign powers may be induced to make a corresponding reduction in their charges on letters to and from this country.

All ship letters between parts of the United Kingdom, including the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, to be charged by weight and according to the rates chargeable on inland letters. Other ship letters to be charged by weight, according to the foregoing scale, the single sea postage remaining as at present, and the inland rate being regulated as for inland letters.

London District Post, including 2*d.* and 3*d.* delivery.—

1. All letters not exceeding 2*oz.*, provided the postage be prepaid, to be charged one penny.

2. The two-penny charge on general post letters delivered in the London district to cease.

3. No further alteration to be made in the charges leviable in the London district post. My Lords have no intention, by the present arrangement, to make any alteration with respect to newspapers, franked letters, or Parliamentary papers, which will still continue to enjoy the same privileges, and be subject to the same charges, as at present.

Transmit copy of this minute officially to the Postmaster-General, and desire his Lordship will give the necessary instructions to his officers to carry the directions of my Lords into effect.

Desire also that he will direct the solicitor of the Post office to prepare a draft of a warrant in conformity with the provisions of the postage acts, to be signed by my Lords, and inserted in the Gazette.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburgh, Nov. 2.—The Emperor has had to-day a grand review, which usually takes place every spring and autumn. The whole of the guards, infantry, cavalry, and artillery, in all 40,000 men, were assembled here some days previously. Immediately after the review, those regiments which are not cantoned in the capital returned to their usual winter quarters in the environs.

TURKEY.—Prince Esterhazy (Austrian Ambassador in London) arrived in Paris on Saturday night. His Excellency had been secretly recalled to Vienna by Prince Metternich, "who," says Le Temps, "was anxious to obtain from him an explanation of the mysterious policy of England with regard to the Eastern question." The Prince, who observed the strictest incog, was to have an interview with King Louis Philippe, and to leave Paris for Vienna on Wednesday or Thursday.

ST. VINCENT.—The troops in this island appear to have suffered much from the effects of the prevailing fever.

JAMAICA.—Sir Lionel Smith, the late Governor, took his departure on the 1st Oct. in H. M. brig Serpent for Havannah and New York. Sir Charles Metcalfe, the new Governor, arrived out on 22d Sept., and was well received. The accounts respecting the labourers are upon the whole more favourable.

GIBRALTAR.—Two yachts, the Merlin, Capt. Lyons, and the Antelope, Capt. Bentinck, arrived on the 23d in the bay, with the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry and their suite. The Governor, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Alexander Woodford, attended at the New Mole to receive them, and his carriages conducted them to the apartments that were engaged. The following day there was a superb review of the garrison, a very numerous military dinner, and a grand reception at the Governor's.

THE HOUSEHOLD TROOPS IN 1788 *.

Of the Foot Guards, which then, as now, consisted of three regiments, with two battalions to each, I need say no more than that they were clothed, accoutred, and armed, pretty much as they had been since the days of the Duke of Cumberland. We wore long-tailed coats, which, slanting off like those of livery-servants in front, exposed to view a considerable portion of our lapelled and capacious pocketed white waistcoats. Our breeches of white cloth were made to fit so tight that how we contrived to get them on and off without tearing has been to me a source of frequent wonderment; while our long white gaiters, composed of glazed linen, reached just above the bend of the knee, and were tied round the upper part of the calf of the leg with bands of black leather. As to our hats, they resembled in form the head-dresses which are still worn in Chelsea Hospital; and to distinguish us, I presume, from regiments of the line, they were bound round the edges with silver lace. Our arms, again, were the musket and bayonet, not very different from those still in use; our accoutrements were of a class peculiar to times gone by. Instead of gathering up the load of ammunition so as to throw the strain as far as may be on the part of the body which is best able to endure it, the guardians of the soldier's comforts then seemed to regard such considerations as unworthy of their notice. Our belts were long and loose: the pouch came down to the skirts of our coats, and the bayonet, suspended at the left side, swung like a sword as the man moved. Neither must I forget to describe both the hairy knapsacks into which our kits were stowed, and the strange machine, which was given to us as a convenient place of stowage for our field ammunition. The pouch contained in those days a wooden frame, which was bored, both above and below, for thirty cartridges, and you were expected in the heat of battle, so soon as the upper tier was exhausted, to turn the block round, and so reach the tier below. I need scarcely add, that the very first time we got under fire, the inconvenience of this arrangement made itself felt; and that the woods, as they were called, being taken out, the men carried their cartridges thenceforth loose in their pouches.

If such was the style in which the King's Government equipped and clothed the King's Foot Guards, what shall I say of the sort of exercise to which we were trained? In handling the musket there were not fewer than 52 movements, the whole of which went on so soon as a single word of command was spoken. "Poise arms!" was that word, on the utterance of which a fugleman began to caper, and the entire line, watching his movements, tossed and brandished their arms into all manner of grotesque figures. When we stood with arms shouldered we were made to keep the butt of the firelock on the hip, and to stick out the elbow of the arm, so that there should be between it and the side an interval of three inches. When we fixed bayonets it was by a motion similar to that which the swordsman makes when he draws,—and then our shoulder—it took, if I recollect right, three inches to get the implement into its place. And, finally, our manœuvres: they were complicated, unwieldy, performed always at slow time, and seemed to throw us into every imaginable shape, which could avail nothing in the hour of peril. One really cannot look back upon the military arrangements that prevailed at that time without a smile.

There were no light companies attached to the regiments of Foot Guards then; though the first had in each of its battalions two companies of grenadiers. The companies, likewise, were much weaker than they afterwards became. They mustered respectively not more than 46 rank and file; and, as nine companies made up a battalion, it will be seen that the battalions themselves were by no means too efficient, for the London duty, though not quite so hard as it is now, was in 1788 severe enough; and Kew, and even Windsor, came under the general head of outposts for the metropolis. Moreover, the force of Cavalry kept in London was at once feeble in point of numbers, and, from its composition, very little effective. The Horse Grenadiers and old Life Guards were then in existence; and a strange anomaly, or rather a curious relic of barbarous times, they presented. These Household troops, like the ancient Garde du Corps of France, were composed exclusively of gentlemen, who purchasing the nominations as men now purchase commissions, suffered little from the restraints of Military discipline while they served, and retired after a given number of years on handsome annuities. They were not liable to be called beyond the precincts of the court, except in cases of great emergency. They did the duty of the palace, and mounted guard, it is true; but negligence on such occasions was punishable only by fine among themselves, and as to their horses and equipments—of these, they took no further charge than might be implied in the act of paying their grooms and body servants, should either horse or furniture seem to be out of order when the tour of duty came round. For they were allowed one groom for every ten horses, and one servant for every ten troopers, who, being paid and tattooed at the public expense, were expected to perform all menial offices for the gentlemen of the body-guard, both in the stable and the harness-room.

Of these soldiers of fortune, in a sense different from what is generally applied to the term, there were six troops, of which two were rated as Horse Grenadiers, two as gentlemen of the Life Guards. Of the rank which the individuals thus designated were presumed to hold, some idea may be formed when I state that the cymbal beater, belonging to the band of the first mentioned corps, was treated as his equal by a Captain of Infantry, with whom he fought a duel soon after my arrival in London, and by whom he was severely wounded. But, though it may sound mighty fine to talk of the King of England's body-guard as consisting of gentlemen, every person conversant, even slightly, with the nature of a soldier's duties, knows that, of all the regiments that ever took the field, a regiment of gentlemen must be the most inefficient. To such a height, indeed, had the inconveniences attending the system risen, that about the period to which this stage of my narrative refers, these privileged troops were disbanded, and the country obtained in their room those magnificent corps which did so much excellent service at Waterloo, and are ready to do as much excellent service again whenever their country may require it.

FULL TENTAGE.—The Court of Directors have instructed the Bengal Government to grant to officers of European Infantry Corps, occupying public quarters in the Bengal Presidency, the privilege of drawing the full tentage of their regimental rank from the 19th of the present month.—Calcutta Courier, Aug. 22.

SIR Henry Fane has now received Lord Hill's formal permission to resign the command of the Indian army. His Excellency adheres to his intention of proceeding homeward in Nov. or Dec. next.—Englishman, Aug. 22.

Extract of a letter from the 1st division of the Army, dated 4th July, 1839.—"It now indisputably appears that Sir John Keane has sadly marred Lord Auckland's plans. His instructions it is no longer concealed, at Simla, were to take Hyderabad and occupy Scinde. Thus his bringing on the Bombay troops with him to Candahar, has not only led to great miseries, losses, and privations to the combined army, but has thrown the Governor into a state of perplexity.—Madras Spectator, Aug 31.

Sir James Carnac intends making a tour of the territories subordinate to the Bombay Presidency during the ensuing cold weather.—Bombay Times, Aug. 26.

Ens. Leith, 64th N.I., who had been on board the Peterel gun-boat for change of air, died on the morning of the 16th inst., on his way from Khyouk Phyoo. His remains reached the station in the afternoon of the same day, and were interred the following morning. This young officer is another victim to the noxious climate of the Arracan coast.—Englishman, July 31.

The following are the Civil Servants to whom the six vacant pensions of the current year have fallen:—Messrs. Turnbull, Braddon, F. C. Smith, W. Cracroft, and H. T. Prinsep.—Hurkaru, Aug. 1.

The Jhaloun Auxiliaries are to be increased to 1500 men, horse and foot, and to be styled in future the Bundlecund Legion; it is also expected to have some more officers, and may soon be expected, under Capt. Beatson's management, to be fit for any duty.—Bombay Times, Aug. 28.

Secunderabad.—We are sorry to find that the sickness in the 41st N.I. continues unabated, and that both H.M. 55th and the Foot Artillery at Secunderabad have a good many fever cases at present. Col. Schoedde, one of the best officers in H. M.'s service in India, is compelled by ill health to quit the country. It was lately our painful duty to record the decease of Lieut. Alfred Beadnell, Adjutant of the First Battalion Art.—a very promising officer, and one so much beloved by the men of his corps, that they have come forward with a subscription for the erection of a monument to his memory.—United Service Gazette, Aug. 23.

Burmah.—By the H. C. steamer Enterprise, which arrived yesterday from Calcutta and Rangoon, we hear that Capt. M'Leod has withdrawn the Residency from Amarapoora to Rangoon, where he arrived on the 31st ult. We understand he was received with much civility and attention by the Woon-douk of Rangoon, and that much excitement was caused in the place by the idea of our being about to declare war. We understand that the water had risen above the floors of the Residency buildings before Capt. M'Leod left them, and that this was the sole cause of his withdrawal.—Maulmein Chronicle, Aug. 7.

A very melancholy accident occurred on the 8th Aug. on the ramparts of the Fort at Madras. A committee of officers, composed of Maj. Montgomerie, C.B., Captain O'Connell, and Lieut. Orr, was constituted for the purpose of reporting upon the state of the gun-carriages at present in use on the ramparts of the Fort. On the morning in question, a 24-pounder was loaded with the usual charge of powder, shotted and fired, but, on the second round, the gun burst at the breach, carrying off the cascabel quite clean, and blowing out three large masses of the gun metal—one piece weighing 6 cwt. fell on the terraced roof of the Arsenal, and fairly drove itself through into the room beneath. The unfortunate artilleryman, an European, who fired the gun, was killed on the spot, the upper portion of his skull completely carried away. The man who served the vent was severely, though not dangerously wounded, and three store Lascars were injured. Lieut. Orr was struck on the breast, but miraculously escaped, and Capt. O'Connell had the telescope he was holding in his hand carried away. No cause for this dreadful occurrence can be found. A committee, composed of Brig. Burton and two other officers, sat the next morning, but they could discover no flaw in the metal, nor any fault in the loading of the gun.—Madras Spectator, Aug. 10.

Besides leaving one of the Queen's regiments and a body of Bengal troops at the disposal of Schah Soojah, Sir John Keane has granted permission that a number of British officers should assist in the formation and the disciplining of the army of the Schah. Sir John will himself lead the Bengal troops through the Kyber-pass and the Punjaul into Upper India, after proceeding to visit Lord Auckland, at Simla, preparatory to his return to Europe in December. The Bombay force under Maj.-Gen. Willshire, return by way of Candahar, Shawl, and the Bolan-pass, into Upper Scinde.

No apprehensions are entertained for the pacific issue of the affairs of Joudpore or Kernaul.

The following answer has been sent by the Treasury to the claimants for indemnification for losses sustained in consequence of the delivery of opium to the Chinese Government:—

"Gentlemen,—Having laid before the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury your letter, in which you apply for a settlement of certain claims for opium delivered to the Chinese Government, and transmit certificates signed by Captain C. Elliot; I have received their Lordships' commands to acquaint you that Parliament has placed at the disposal of this Board no funds out of which any compensation could be made, and that the sanction of Parliament would be required before any such claim could be recognised and paid.

"To prevent any misconstruction of the intentions of this Board, my Lords have felt it necessary to direct me further to state that the subject has been under the attentive consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and to add, that Her Majesty's Government do not propose to submit to Parliament a vote for the payment of such claims. (Signed) R. GORDON."

"Treasury Chambers, Nov. 11, 1839."

The order for officering the new European Regiment has been received from the Government of India, so we may expect its publication here by the 15th proximo. Officers are to be posted according to army rank. It is strongly believed in military circles, that a further increase of one company will be added to each regiment of Native Infantry.—Madras U. S. G., Sept. 27.

The friends of Lieut.-Col. Alves will be happy to learn that there is every probability of that excellent officer succeeding to the situation of Judge Advocate General of the army. We regret to announce the sudden death at Trichinopoly of Captain Thompson, of the 5th Native Infantry: an officer very much and deserved lamented.—Ib.

SECRET DEPARTMENT. Camp, Delhi, Feb. 18th, 1839.

SIR,—I am directed by the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India to acknowledge the receipt of your two despatches, Nos. 305 and 306, dated the 9th inst., and, in reply, to state that the prompt and effectual measures taken for reducing Kurachee, appear to have been conducted in a manner such as to ensure their success.

2. The forbearance, both before and after the exertion of force, evinced by his Excellency the Admiral and Colonel Valiant, will not, his Lordship is convinced, have a less valuable moral effect, as regards our influence in the country, than will the exhibition of the power and resources of the English, in so quickly reducing the place, in discouraging vain opposition and a useless resort to arms.

3. The Governor-General has had much gratification in the perusal of the despatches enclosed by you. I have, &c.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor

L'OLYMPIA—FRENCH GASCONADE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I send you an extract from an old French paper for insertion in your Journal, accompanied by a few observations of mine, should you deem them worthy of a place:—

"Boulogne.—L. P. J. Delpierre obtained, at the age of 24, the command of a privateer, called Le Rancunier. In this vessel, and with a small crew (peu nombreux), he dared to attack, on the 2d of March, 1811, the English cutter L'Olympia, of fourteen guns and 75 men, which he carried by boarding, after a sanguinary conflict."

Now, Sir, as one zealous for the name and fame of the British sailor, I fain would know whether we had such a cutter on our Navy List at that period, (I have not an old Steele's List, but should think that we had not,) and if not, whether any of your numerous correspondents remember to have heard of a cutter of that force having been taken, as stated by Johnny Crapaud. The eulogy on M. Delpierre fails to state the force in guns and number of the small crew of Le Rancunier, perhaps upon the principle that "comparisons are odious." Perhaps it arose from Mons. D.'s modesty—a truly brave man "puffeth not himself up." If it spring from the latter cause, I admire the silence of the man; but if his vessel were the smaller force in every way, it would throw a brighter halo of glory round his name, and he need not have done more than state the bare facts; if the larger, a brave man like him should do justice to the brave men who held with him a "sanguinary contest" in support of their country's flag. Care has been taken to enumerate his opponent's force. The privateer may have mounted 18 or 20 guns, with a crew of 100 men, which would have been a small crew for a French, or even an English vessel of that force, but a great superiority over a cutter whose guns and number of men I think much exaggerated by Monsieur. Be the case as it may, it is a peg for me to hang a thought or two upon, or, more properly speaking, to contrast the conduct of the French Government and our own. The first, ever prompt to reward the shadow of merit or valour in their subjects, sent to offer M. Delpierre the Cross of the Legion of Honour. What! a cross and a bit of ribbon to the Captain of a privateer? Ay, 'tis true. How is it with Capt. Drew on the Lakes of Canada just now, after his services against rebels, pirates, and sympathisers? Delpierre preferred the liberation of his father (a noble trait in him, and a lasting good), then in prison for participation in the plot of General Moreau. The same French Government to this day pay a Serjeant a pension, who put forth claims (and has had them acknowledged too) to the high honour of having shot our gallant and ever-lamented Nelson. It is well that he thinks he did the deed, and still better for him that the Government cry, "E vero, vero." He, too, was from Boulogne, the proud town that boasts a song (noticed in its Histoire) upon Nelson's defeat—"Devant Boulogne." What a cradle of heroes! Oh, rare Boulogne! when shall thy glory be eclipsed?—But I have not done yet, one more jewel remains to grace the Naval crown. There lives within its walls an old Admiral, who was to have commanded the French fleet, but did not, in lieu of Villeneuve; and if he had been there, he would have made a kettle for fish of every one of the wooden walls of old England. You didn't mean that, did you, my old boy, surely! What luck Nelson—poor Nelson—had that Villeneuve was there on that day when every man did his duty, and what luck the old Admiral had that he was not!

Mais revenons à nos moutons. These "Frenchmen may boast of their fighting, and talk of the deeds they have (n't) done;" but this story of Delpierre (hero though he be, even to his valet de sham, as Sam Veller would say, smacks a little of gasconade, like the story of the Vengeur and the "La garde meurt, elle ne se rende pas" of General Cambron, cum multis aliis. Not that they are not a gallant set of fellows, but that John Bull hath it thus—

"Two to one right sure am I,
If we can't beat them, still we'll try
To make Old England's colours fly.
Haul away, ye ho, boys."

To conclude my yarn, I shall only add that the old Admiral may rejoice that he is now on the shelf in Boulogne, rather than an embodied crab or lobster in the land of soles and shell-fish, "five fathom deep" within Trafalgar's Bay. I am, Sir, with many apologies for this long, ill-twisted yarn,

AN OLD SUNSCHEMER,
And a Luff of the War, oftimes "devant Boulogne."

Nov. 1, 1839.

[The vessel to which our correspondent alludes is the Olympia, built at Bermuda in 1806, originally a schooner mounting 14 guns, and in that character was under the command of Lieutenant Henry Taylor, employed on the Cape of Good Hope Station. The account of her capture is rendered as follows by James:—"Olympia cutter, 10 guns, captured March 2d by several French privateers off Dieppe."—ED.]

BREVET FIELD-OFFICERS IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Allow me to express a hope, that the East India Company will at last concede a measure of tardy justice, which has often been recommended by you in your valuable publication. I allude to the Brevet Field-Officers, who in India alone, of all our foreign possessions, receive no extra allowance, the 2*s. per diem* granted to the Queen's being deducted from their batta, in order to place them on the same footing with those in the Company's service, who get nothing extra. The late brilliant achievement of the Army of the Indus might offer a fitting opportunity for conceding this point to a class of old and generally deserving officers, and I do hope it will have your powerful advocacy. That illustrious man the Marquis Wellesley advocated these claims in 1799. It is true there is not a long list of killed and wounded, but Sir John Keane has sufficiently recorded the spirit and gallantry by which the troops were actuated; and from the well-known gallantry of Sir Willoughby Cotton, Brigadier Sale, &c. &c., there can be no question that there would have been no lack of casualties had the enemy stood out.

FAIR PLAY.

[We have repeatedly advocated this measure, and we believe the matter has been or is under consideration of the Directors of the Hon. E. I. Company.—ED.]

RETAINING RANK ON RETIRING FROM THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In the Naval and Military Gazette of the 17th August last, you stated it as your opinion, that Lord Hill intended to grant to officers, who have sold out of the service, the honour of retaining their rank. Can you inform an old Peninsular Captain, who, after having been upwards of twenty-six years in the service, and purchased every commission but his Lieutenancy, was at last compelled (having been allowed by Lord Hill, by way of an indulgence, to do so) to sell out, if such is his Lordship's intention?

It is the only (inexpensive enough, God knows!) reward which many an old soldier would aspire to, to distinguish him from the ci devant of the day. It would be like money from his Lordship, which "blesseth him that gives and him that receives." It could do no harm to him, and would be some trifling gratification to us, for the many vexations, the disappointments, and the cruel deaf ear which has so often been turned to our well-founded complaints at the Horse Guards. (I do not speak of the Duke of York's time, for then right was might.)

Many youths of family, fortune, and Parliamentary interest (that certain accompaniment to promotion) in our regiments of Light Cavalry, which the Army List will convince us of, have been allowed to vault into the saddles of their troops without having seen a single day's service, and been only four or five years in it. The promotion has been infinitely more rapid in many of the Cavalry Regiments than it was (look only at the List) during the most active part of the War, while many an old veteran, for the sake of bringing forward such youths, has been graciously placed on full-pay, with a promise to sell out in their favour, for the convenience of promoting them, obtaining Parliamentary support, and getting rid of him. After all his vexations, his campaigns, and his cares (and it is no uncommon case) he is allowed to sell out at the Regulation, and again to return into the world from whence he came (with the loss of his rank), plain Mr. Smith, Brown, Jones, or Robinson, just as he left it at the aspiring age of eighteen. This is true, and it is too bad! too bad!

To such men (for it is to an old soldier painful to forget what he once was) the retaining of their rank might be some slight and just acknowledgment from their country. It is only what they deserve, and no more. Such disappointments, however, are not without their use. A king may lose a throne, but if the loss make him submit with resignation to the Divine dispensation, he will gain what is better than a throne,—he will make God his friend.—I am yours,

"MILES."

One of the Old Tenth Legion. See Napier's Preface.

P.S.—Let it not be supposed for one moment there is the slightest reflection in this, meant to be cast upon our noble, our beloved Duke. God bless his upright, noble mind! No; I have fought by his side many a day, and am only one (though a bitterly disappointed one) out of hundreds who would lay down my life for him to-morrow. Long may he live here, and be blessed with a brighter crown of glory hereafter, which fadeth not away, is the fervent prayer of one of his most devoted followers.

Junior United Service Club, Nov. 8, 1839.

[We reprint the article to which our Correspondent refers:—"We have reason to believe that the General Commanding-in-Chief intends to extend the indulgence to all Officers of good reputation, of retaining their Army rank when they shall retire from the service; and that their names will be borne on the Army List. At present many old and deserving Officers are compelled to retire, in order to make a provision for their families, and they cease to hold military rank, their names being struck out of the Army List. This deprivation of rank is, in many respects, personally injurious, and it is at all times mortifying to a soldier. Lord Hill, therefore, may, by a simple act of justice, and without cost to the public, confer a most gratifying boon on many who have deserved well of their country."—N. & M. G., 17th Aug. 1839.—We are always particularly cautious not to advance opinions without foundation. The boon may be included in the recommendations of the Military Commission. At all events, we pledge ourselves that it has been recommended from a high quarter, and we believe that the principal members of the Commission give it their support, although some may have chosen to consider it of trifling import.—ED.]

WELLINGTON TESTIMONIAL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—But for a moment that must not be lost; and, perceiving your great press of matter, I should continue to refrain from encroaching on your pages, although having (I vainly think) important suggestions in furtherance of the service in readiness; and feeling as anxious, with my thanks to several kind well-wishers, to offer some observations regarding several and rather too flattering articles, which they so forcibly and repeatedly have issued through your obliging pages, in furtherance of my being appointed, and otherwise supported, by the heads of departments, to introduce the new military exercises, and others also, as beneficial pastimes and recreations, the latter not for the Army and Navy only, but throughout the country, as important alike to the present and to succeeding generations. My present and differing purpose is, to draw attention to a hint I cannot delay, since the handsome opening towards the park's from Clevelandrow may be made to lead towards a spot, which, having long pointed out, I flatter myself is the most suitable for the Wellington Testimonial. If your readers will place their backs towards the extremity of the northern wing of the Palace, they will notice a row of young trees within the Green Park, leading towards the Mall in St. James's Park, and planted as if intended for a road to cut off from the Green Park a nearly triangular piece. If the Testimonial was placed in its centre, and fronting towards the Palace, it would become a beautiful feature from several fashionable, and I might say national points. The excavated stuff for the admission of concrete, by way of foundation, would raise an elegant little eminence for its reception, &c., and to the triangle the roads towards the Palace would tastefully converge, and afford particular convenience as carriage approaches, and on Court occasions especially. I have the honour to remain, Sir, your most obedient and obliged servant, DR BERENGER.

THE COAST-GUARD.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Living as I do in the "far west," remote from man, &c., your Paper, containing some rather sarcastic lines on that useful body of men the Coast-Guard, has only just reached me; and, justly indignant at the attacks upon their drill, I snatched up my pen to open the trenches against Y. Z. on their behalf, and submit the following lines for insertion in your impartial and fearless journal, at all times and seasons the advocate and friend of the oppressed or neglected sailor. X. Y. Z.

Oh, come to the drill, Sir, oh, come there with me,
'Tis a grand muster day of C. O.'s and C. G.*
Amphibious supporters of si-lar and throne;
Sea dogs of the war time, and christened King's Own.†
I'll back them, I'll match them, 'gainst soldiers the best,
And you'll own when you see them I don't speak in jest.
The Life Guards may boast their parades and reviews,
But ours are more rare with our Blue Jacket crews;
White trousers, cloth caps, with a "C. G." in front,
And leather chin-gaskets to keep up the bunt.
Then come to the drill, Sir,—the Life Guards-man talks
Of his housings, his harness,—we beat him by chalks!
The Lancers may prate of their dazzling array,
Their horse-tails, and pennons, and trappings so gay;
How fiercely they charge with their lances at rest,—
Give me sailors' charges on ocean's broad breast.
Then come to the drill, where, although there's no show,
Moll has made her Jack's trousers to rival the snow.
The Hussars are fine chaps, with fine feathers and lace,
And Cossack moustachios that hide half the face,
Furred pelisses that flutter aloft in the air
In a charge, and you ask what the plague 'tis they wear;
'Tis all mighty fine, like the gay-plumed jack-daws,
But give me for the fight the rough sailor's huzzas.
Foot-soldiers in battle-field are a grand sight,
When their "sacried ranks" charge in their terrible might,
But if driven back may drop Brown Bess and run,
While sailors must stand, fight, and fall by their gun;
No back doors have they when by enemies prest,—
Though soldiers are brave chaps, oh, I love sailors best.
Having spoken of soldiers in rhymes rather plain,
(Save Marines, Engineers, and Artillery train,)
What though in rough sailors I take most delight,
In true love and friendship may all arms unite,
And nought but a brave British spirit be seen,
When they go forth to fight for their country and Queen;
Then say who'll surpass the Militia Marine! X. Y. Z.

* Comptroller General.

THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I again take up my pen to address you on the subject of the "Coast-Guard," with respect to the pay about to be given to the Mates of the Royal Navy, should they be appointed to the service. In your paper of the 2d inst. you say, "it is obvious that whilst engaged upon the same duty, and in a civil service, the remuneration to the Lieutenant and Mate should be equal; the injustice of any measure, depriving the latter of an equal rate of pay, would be too apparent." Now, Sir, I readily agree with you, that officers performing the same duty ought to be paid alike, whether Lieutenant or Mate; but if the Mate receives 9*s.* per day for the duty performed as chief officer, he would get five shillings per diem more than the Lieutenant, for his Coast-Guard pay is only four shillings a day, out of which he has to pay 3*d.* per mensum for receipts, and 2*l.* 5*s.* a quarter for a thing called a cottage, which perhaps his father's servants would scarcely accept as a gift.

I should hope, if the Mates are to receive the sum specified, the Lieutenant's pay would be increased. By so doing, the Admiralty would find many very deserving gentlemanly officers glad to accept the appointment, which is indeed anything but a pleasant one at the best of times. I am an old smuggler, have made my fortune by it, and, for aught I know, may lose it; but I cannot help dabbling in the "fair trade." An officer joins the service, to get a few shillings a day added to his income, to support his wife and family in an honourable way; but I would strongly recommend all the Lieutenants employed in it to go "hand-in-hand," and resign their appointments, if such an unjust measure is carried. They must stick together, and they will soon see their pay will be increased. If there is so much difficulty in raising the "tin," I would suggest, that instead of granting 25 shares to the Lieutenant, on a seizure being made, give him 20, or say 15 shares, and add to the day pay. His duty is hard enough, to say nothing of beach walking. Look at the anxiety he has. Suppose two or three "runs" take place on his station, what is the consequence? Why, he is removed to another station, "at his own expense." Fie on it; fie on it! Pay him better, and you will find many glad to take the appointment; and keep your Mates for the Naval service.

One word to the Lieutenants of the Coast-Guard, Mr. Editor. Strike, Luffs; strike, if they will not raise your pay, and you will always find "an Old Smuggler" advocate your cause; but if you are too moody-hearted so to do, I hope your stations may never be clear of "runs."—By inserting this, Mr. Editor, you will oblige, yours faithfully,

W. C., of smuggling notoriety.

Weymouth, Nov. 11, 1839.

THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your leading remarks of the 2nd Nov. you mentioned that the Mates of the Royal Navy being appointed chief officers of the Coast-Guard might be attributed to the difficulty felt in finding Lieutenants who are eligible for or desirous of filling these situations, as well as to the impracticability of appointing civilians to discharge duties with the nature of which they must be wholly unacquainted. Now, Sir, in the Coast-Guard service there are a class of men called chief boatmen, who have been selected for their good conduct, efficiency, &c.—men that have spent their best days in the arduous duties of the service, and who are exposed to the inclemencies of the weather six times as much as the chief officers, and on whom the chief officers' duties are continually devolving. If these men are able to carry on the duties of the chief officers in their absence (which in some places is very frequent, and not so arduous as is puffed about), it is expected there might be some selected efficient to fill up the vacancies alluded to. In the Army, a private can rise to be a General. In the Navy, a seaman can rise to be an Admiral. In the Coast-Guard, a man can be promoted to be a chief boatman, with the enormous rise of salary of five pounds per annum. The Coast-Guard must be considered a very inefficient service if, out of five thousand men, a few could not be selected fit to have charge of half-a-dozen men, many of them having entered the service when the situation was open to them, and who, as a matter of right, expect it. The civilian Coast-Guards have no advocates to plead their cause; but, degraded by all, they neither belonging wholly to the Treasury, Admiralty, nor Customs. When the Mounted Guard were reorganised, they received an advance of pay, and for every step of promotion sixpence per diem; the sergeants of the Mounted Guard, who are subordinate to the chief boatmen, receiving five shillings per diem, whilst a chief boatman receives only three shillings per diem, and ten pounds per annum salary. The Mounted Guard are not allowed to be out more than six hours, a chief boatman from dark till daylight. If, Sir, you will favour that class of men by pleading their cause in your valuable journal, the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury may take their case into their consideration, and if they cannot comply with it, in promoting them to be chief officers, I humbly hope they will give them an increase of pay, or select such as are eligible to fill superior situations in the Custom-house department. ONE OF THEM.

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having overhauled what was glorified by Mr. Cooper, relative to the victory gained by the American ship-sloop Wasp (the first) over the British brig-sloop Frolic, gale-crippled previous to the action, I will quote his chapter on "the moral effect of that combat," and then overhaul the fight between the Constitution and Java.

Page 213, vol. ii.—"As this was the first combat of the war between vessels of a force so nearly equal as to render cavilling difficult, the result occasioned much exultation in America, and greatly increased the confidence of the public, in supposing an American ship had quite as much claim to conduct, courage, and skill as their enemies. Persons of reflection attached but little importance, it is true, to the mere fact that a few cruisers of the enemy had been taken in single combat; but the idea of British invincibility on the ocean was destroyed, and the vast moral results were distinctly foreseen. Men part with their prejudices slowly, and with reluctance; and the warfare on the ocean produced one on the land, in which the contending parties, by pretending to analyse the three combats that had now occurred, displayed on both sides more ignorance than logic, and much intemperance of language and prevarication." Why prevaricatest thou, Massa Cooper?

"They who understood the power of ships, and examined details with a desire to learn the real truth, discovered enough to see that a new era had occurred in Naval warfare. While these critics perceived and admitted the superiority of the American frigates in the two actions that had occurred, they could not but see that it was disproportioned to the execution they had done; and in the combat between the two little vessels that has just been recorded, the important fact was not overlooked, that the enemy's brig had suffered as severe a loss in men as it was usual for the heaviest vessels to sustain in general actions. Hitherto English ships had been compelled to seek close contests with their foes, but now they had only to back their topsails to be certain of being engaged at the muzzles of their guns. There was no falling off in British spirits; no vessel was unworthily given up, for the case of the Alert may be taken as a surprise; and it was necessary to search for the cause of this sudden and great change in the character of the new adversary. The most cavilling detractors of the rising reputation of the American marine were reluctantly obliged to admit that Naval combats were no longer what they had been, and the discreet among the enemy saw the necessity of greater caution, more laboured preparations, and of renewed efforts."

Perhaps the truth is here pourtrayed very fairly, for the idea of British invincibility on the ocean "having sunk in Yankee notions," lost America all her boast and pride in the spirited contest between the Chesapeake and Shannon, two 38-gun frigates, which proved that there was, indeed, "no falling off in British spirit," and, besides, created once more in the United States, a guess that them Britishers reckon to be invincible both on the ocean and on our waters. It is also true that our partial reverses on the seas in the American war, made our officers open their eyes "to the necessity of greater caution, more laboured preparations, and of renewed efforts."

I calculate that scorpion Java gave our Constitution a bit of a stinging.—Did she, Mr. Cooper? then let us hear the truth of the matter. Page 220, vol. ii. (Oct. 29th, 1812.)—"The enemy had now hauled down his ensign, though he kept a jack flying, and Com. Bainbridge ordered a shot to be fired a-head of him, to induce him to show his colours anew. This order brought on a general fire, and the battle commenced at two P.M. on both sides, with a furious cannonade. As the enemy sailed the best in the light wind that prevailed, he soon forged a-head, and kept away with a view to cross the Constitution's bow, but was foiled by the latter ship's wearing, which brought the heads of the two combatants once more to the westward. In performing these evolutions, as the enemy steered free and the Constitution luffed, the vessels got within pistol shot, when the first repeated the same attempt; the ships' wearing together bringing their heads once more to the eastward. The English ship fore-reaching again, now endeavoured to tack to preserve the weather gauge, but failing, she was obliged to wear; a manœuvre that the Constitution had executed before her to avoid being raked, for the wheel of the latter ship had been shot away, and it was difficult to watch the vessel with the helm so closely as was desirable. The Constitution, notwithstanding, was the first in coming to the wind on the other tack, and she got an efficient raking fire at her opponent.

"Both vessels now ran off free, with the wind on the quarter, the English ship still to windward, when the latter, being greatly injured, made an attempt to close, at 55 minutes past two, by running down on the Constitution's quarter. Her jib boom ran into the Constitution's rigging, in which situation she suffered severely, without being able to effect her purpose. The head of her bowsprit was soon shot away, and in a few minutes after her foremast came by the board. The Constitution shot a-head, keeping away to avoid being raked, and in separating, the stump of the enemy's bowsprit passed over the American frigate's taffrail." TRISTRAM.

ARMY AND NAVY CLUB.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The majority of the members of the Army and Navy Club cannot but feel obliged to a correspondent, in a late number of the Naval and Military Gazette, asking the question, "Whether the Army and Navy was henceforth to be considered merely an Irish Club?" The question requires to be repeated, since the abuse which led to it still remains, and apparently is intended to do so, thus leading to a supposition that this Club is to merge into a mere Irish affair. I do not mean to sneer at anything belonging to that brave people; but surely the Scotch and English members of the Club have a right to repeat the question, when of only five provincial newspapers taken by the Club, three are Irish, without a single English university or midland-county print!

At an early period of the Club, some judicious observations, by a correspondent in your useful Paper, led to the alteration of some very objectionable rules regarding the treasurer. There are other matters which require publicity to correct, besides the one which is the subject of this letter. Thus "the librarian" of "a new institution" in Bond-street, is allowed to make the most absurd subterfuges, in order to evade supplying the most common books required by the members—books so common that they are to be found in almost any village library in England. A large class of officers are interested in the welfare of the Army and Navy Club; but, to secure success, these kind of irregularities must be prevented: in other words, it is expedient as well as just to consult the interest and convenience of the members generally. Let the Committee do this, and the Army and Navy Club will become deservedly one of the best clubs of the kind in London; but if the irregularities in question are allowed to remain, the result may easily be predicted—and it will be the more to be regretted, as these improprieties might so easily be remedied.

Chatham, Nov. 11, 1839. VIATOR.

UNJUST TAX ON THE LETTERS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am a very old Subaltern, and have the best means of knowing the necessities and feelings of officers of my class, which induces me to assure you that your exertions to have the obnoxious imposition of a penny on officers' letters removed, have met with the warmest thanks of many an old soldier.

As the New Post-office regulations are so soon to come into operation, surely the Commander-in-Chief or Secretary at War will relieve officers from an imposition which can never be less than twenty-five per cent. on the postage, and often will be no less than cent. per cent.

This tax, to which no civilian, however rich, is subjected, has always been an odious one, because a petty and perpetual imposition on the officer's communication with his friends. If it be necessary to pay extra on the letters of officers, on account of the service requiring of them such incessant change of residence, why, let the Drum-Major be paid by the service. At all events, there is nothing analagous in any other public department to this paltry tax on an officer's comfort.

NESTOR.

Woolwich, Nov. 13, 1839.

LOOK ALOFT.

[The following beautiful lines were suggested by a thrilling incident which occurred on board a ship. A child, five or six years of age, by his sprightly and fearless disposition, had become a universal favourite among the crew. At a time when she lay becalmed, in one of his venturesome mood she had climbed to the utmost height of a tall mast, unobserved by any one on board, till the moment he was almost at the point of falling, when he was discovered at this dizzy height by his agonised father, who with an agonised voice bid him "LOOK ALOFT," which doubtless saved his life. With his eye upon the blue firmament, he safely descended to his father's arms, who till this moment had retained his self-possession, but, overcome with the momentous excitement, he at that moment fell fainting upon the deck.]

In the tempest of life, when the wave and the gale
Are around and above, if thy footsteps should fail,
If thine eye should grow dim, and the caution depart,
"Look aloft," and be firm, and be fearless of heart.

If the friend who embraced in prosperity's glow,
With a smile for each joy, and a tear for each woe,
Should betray thee when sorrows like clouds are array'd,
"Look aloft" to the friendship which never shall fade.

Should the visions which hope spreads in light to thine eye,
Like the tint of the rainbow but brighten to fly,
Then turn, and through tears of repentant regret,
"Look aloft" to the sun which is never to set.

Shall they who are dearest—the love of thy heart,
The friend of thy bosom—in sorrow depart,
"Look aloft" from the darkness and dust of the tomb,
To that soil "where affection is ever in bloom."

And, oh! when death comes in wild terrors to cast
His fears on the future, his pall on the past,
In that moment of darkness, with hope in thy heart,
And a smile in thine eye, "look aloft" and depart.

COURT-MARTIAL.

At a General Court-Martial, held at Cannanore 5th July, 1839, Capt. W. C. Chinnery, 4th N.I., was arraigned upon a charge, which, on account of its odious and disgusting nature, the Commander-in-Chief is most unwilling to publish in orders, and upon which charge the Court have come to the following Finding —

Finding on the first instance.—That the prisoner is not guilty of this instance of charge.

Finding on the second instance.—That the prisoner is not guilty of this instance of charge.

Finding on the third instance.—That the prisoner is not guilty of this instance of charge.

And the Court does most fully and honourably acquit the prisoner of all and every part thereof. Approved and Confirmed

J. NICOLLS, Lieut.-Gen. Commanding-in-Chief.

The character, even the life of Captain Chinnery, having depended upon the issue of this trial, I feel it justly due to that officer to declare, thus formally, my full concurrence in the verdict of the Court.

(Signed) J. NICOLLS, Lieut.-Gen. Commanding-in-Chief.

The late King.—Having published, in anticipation of the London Gazette, an official despatch, which had been given me by a friend at the Admiralty, I was desired to wait upon the Lord High Admiral, that eccentric but amiable man having resolved upon a personal examination of the culprit. It is an old saying, that if you wish to obtain a favour from a great man, you should never wait upon him until he has dined, for food and drink are said to be marvellous sedatives of the anger of man. I did not, therefore, expect a very kind reception, as the time fixed upon for my visit was one o'clock in the day, when the effect of the breakfast must have gone off, and the stomach must be in that state of exhaustion and irritation which results from a redundancy of the gastric juice, with nothing to act upon but the stomach itself. I was little prepared, however, for the storm I had to encounter. The Lord High Admiral began with a Sir as cold as the glacial pole, and as violent as if the four winds and the 32 points were all puffing upon it at the same time. "Sir," said the Lord High Admiral, "how dare you be guilty of such conduct?" Seeing that it was useless to raise my own little voice in such a mighty storm, until I could profit by what sailors call a lull, I allowed royalty to rave on, believing that contradiction would but increase anger; and I was right, for in less than five minutes the tone of his Royal Highness changed, and, with a manner almost as kind as it had been violent, he invited me to take a chair, and resorted to remonstrance, as if ashamed of having tried abuse. In another five minutes I had apologised and made my peace, and no longer saw before me the tyrant sailor stamping the deck, but the polished gentleman doing the honours of his saloon. Before I quitted "the presence," I had not only obtained my pardon, but also a gracious assurance that, on any other occasion when I might be in want of news, I might, instead of being indebted to underlings for it, apply to himself.—Fraser's Magazine.

To Epsom, Newmarket and Ascot, 80, Hatton-Garden.

GENTLEMEN,—I take the liberty of addressing my thanks to you for the great benefit I have received from your truly valuable Macassar Oil. Having had the misfortune to lose almost all my hair at the age of twenty five, in consequence of a fever, which is very prevalent in this part of the country, I was lately induced, at the instance of a friend, to make a trial of your excellent specific. I can only say the effects are most surprising; for in a very short space of time my head (which was before perfectly bald) was covered with thick and strong hair. I am now fifty years of age, and would scarcely have expected that, after having worn a wig for twenty-five years of my life, I should ever be able to throw it entirely aside. I think it but justice to yourselves and the public to add my testimony to the virtues of your truly inestimable Oil. You have my full permission to make this letter public, or refer any one to me for proofs of the merits of this invaluable discovery. I am, Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient servant, WM. CHARLES PRIDMAUX.

A NEW AND SINGULARLY IMPORTANT INVENTION.

JONES'S PHOTOLYPON; or, SELF-ACTING CANDLE EXTINGUISHER.

"This is one of the most simple, ingenious, and at the same time one of the most valuable of modern inventions,—inasmuch as it may oftentimes prevent the loss of human life. It is so constructed that, without soiling the fingers, it can be readily placed over a candle, and so adjusted as to cause the light to be extinguished at any precise moment of time. No invalid, mother, nurse, or book-worm, should be without it: it is, indeed, an indispensable adjunct for every establishment. The low price of this little article of luxury and convenience places it within the reach of the humblest individual, and we thank the Patentee for his courtesy in letting us be the first to introduce it to the notice of the public.—The Inventors' Advocate, No. 12.

"An ingenious little instrument, called 'Jones's Patent Photolypon, or self-acting Candle Extinguisher,' has just come under our notice. It is intended to be fixed upon a candle requiring to be kept lighted only for a given period, and at the time desired it effectually extinguishes the light with perfect safety. As a companion to the chamber its utility is too obvious to be pointed out, and will no doubt obtain for it extensive patronage."—Court Journal.

THE PHOTOLYPON.—"Under this title a patent self-extinguisher has been brought out. It is a clever invention, and ladies who wish for a light till they sleep may, by placing the Photolypon on the body of their candle, ensure its perfect extinction at the desired moment, without requiring any one to attend to it."—Court Gazette.

To be had at the Manufactory, 201, Strand, and all respectable Wax and Tallow Chandlers and Ironmongers.

BABINGTON'S ELIXIR of RHUBARB.

Those who suffer from Indigestion, Bilious and Nervous Headaches, Diarrhœa, Flatulency, Constipation, Gout, and Rheumatism, will find a pleasant remedy in this medicine; instead of forcing it against nature, by enabling the stomach to perform its own functions, and most supersede the baneful use of strong purgatives. Sold in Bottles, 4*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.*, by J. King, Proprietor, 72, Queen-street, Cheapside; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Clarke, Compton-street, Brunswick-square; and all respectable Chemists.

J. DELCROIX AND CO.,
Perfumers to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, &c. &c.,
158, NEW BOND-STREET, (opposite Stevens's Hotel.)

THE great superiority of J. DELCROIX and CO.'S PERFUMERY has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.:—

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume prepared specially for Her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY'S (GEORGE IV.'S) PERFUME ROYAL QUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the Skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the Hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, and PATE AU MIEL, so justly esteemed for their healing and softening qualities.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hair.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR, and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, J. D. and Co. can with every confidence recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

MECCA CAMPHOR, and other FANCY SOAPS.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the best description.

†‡† J. DELCROIX and Co. respectfully request that particular attention be paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, NEW BOND-STREET, none others being genuine; and they beg to suggest that the Nobility and Gentry will do well to return the articles foisted upon them by other perfumers as the genuine productions of their long established and highly-celebrated Perfumery Warehouse, 158, NEW BOND-STREET.

Advantages of this Association.

An ample subscribed capital.

Assurers admitted to the same rights as the Shareholders.

Four-fifths of the profits divided every five years.

Advances made to the assured, on giving security for future premiums and interest.

An important and peculiar feature in this Association is, that the assurers may reside in any part of the globe either by paying an extra premium, (or at their option,) by an arrangement for a stipulated deduction from the sum assured in case of death abroad, but for EUROPE, AUSTRALIA, the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, or the BRITISH POSSESSIONS in NORTH AMERICA, no extra premium or deduction is incurred.

Premiums may be paid quarterly, half-yearly, or annually.

Policies may be made payable on the assured attaining any given age, such as 55, 60, or 65, or on death previously.

ANNUITY BRANCH.

In addition to the following advantageous Scale of Rates, four-fifths of the profits are divided among the annuitants every three years by way of bonus.

CABINET, UPHOLSTERY, AND

BEDDING, at the Cabinet Makers' Trading Society, 71, Leadenhall-street, enrolled agreeably to Act of Parliament.—Being the Manufacturers, in all its branches, the system upon which this Establishment is conducted precludes the possibility of competition for cheapness, quality, and durability, as no house in London can manufacture at their prices. The Society wish it to be thoroughly understood that they do not receive hawked goods for sale, like the Bazaars and Haberdashers, but they make every article themselves, which enables them confidently to warrant their goods of the best materials, and if any fault appear it will be made good, free of charge, after twelve months. A trial is earnestly solicited of those about to furnish, as the only criterion by which the merits and decided advantages of purchasing at this Establishment can be estimated. The funds of this Society provide for its members in sickness, old age, and burial: they therefore sincerely hope that their humble endeavours will meet with public patronage. Estimates given, and orders punctually attended to, and lists of prices may be had, from which the following is an extract:—Mahogany lounging chairs, covered with leather, with spring seats, 45*s.* each; mahogany chairs, in horse-hair seating, 18*s.* 9*d.*; Trafalgar, ditto, 17*s.* 6*d.*; ditto mahogany sofas, 19*s.*; mahogany Pembroke tables, 21*s.*; mahogany four-post bedsteads, 60*s.*; tent ditto, 20*s.*; furniture for ditto, 20*s.*; japanned chairs, 2*s.* each; cane seat ditto, 3*s.* 6*d.*; japanned stands and dressing-tables, 6*s.* each; japanned drawers, 34*s.* each; mahogany ditto, 44*s.*; feather-beds and mattresses, warranted free from dust and smell, or the money returned; solid rosewood chairs, stuffed with horse-hair, from 25*s.* each; ditto couches, 6*l.* 10*s.*; ditto loo-tables, from 4*l.* 10*s.*; mahogany ditto, 70*s.*; fancy chairs, 7*s.* 6*d.* each. THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1838, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket: Burgess and Son, Strand:—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

45th—The following letter has been sent to the magistrates by Capt. (Bt.-Maj.) Stack, on behalf of the Military, in answer to the vote of thanks presented to them last week:—

"Newport, Nov. 23.

"Gentlemen,—I beg to offer you my acknowledgments for the honour you have done me in awarding to myself, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of my company, your thanks for our exertions on the occasion of the recent tumult in this town. Painful as it must always be to a British soldier to find himself arrayed by necessity against his fellow subjects and countrymen, it affords me the highest gratification to know that the arduous duty which thus devolves upon us has been discharged in a manner to merit your approval and commendation. I shall ever regard it as a fortunate event in my Military career, that my services have been considered beneficial to yourselves and the inhabitants of the town of Newport, of whose good feelings and kindness I must ever retain a grateful remembrance. I shall make a point of communicating to the non-commissioned officers and men of my company the gratifying testimonial which you have been pleased to transmit to me. I have, &c. R. Stack, Capt., 45th Regt.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I have seen with pleasure the promotion of Lieutenant Gray, of the 45th Regiment; but may I ask why the Ensign has not got his Lieutenancy? for no one would question the fact of his having done his duty with equal bravery, decision, and judgment, as the Lieutenant. But this is not all: I would ask what has been done for the wounded Serjeant and private soldier? I sincerely hope they are not to go unrewarded, for, in truth, they did the work! It is true a meeting has been called, and a high compliment has been passed upon the bravery of the handful of gallant troops who (under Providence) saved the town, and, for aught I know, the lives and property of thousands! I would, therefore, hope that the influential portion of the town of Newport will not suffer the private soldier to be passed over with mere compliments; but that the townspeople of Newport immediately enter into a subscription, for the express purpose of presenting to each soldier of the 45th, actually engaged in that memorable conflict at least five pounds! If we wish men to be loyal and true, we ought in cases like this to let them see they are not forgotten: the fact is, the Military (especially the working part of it) are not adequately paid. Knowing your readiness at all times to benefit the service, whether it be the private soldier or the officer, may I beg these remarks to appear in your highly useful and influential columns? A Civilian.

The Gazette of last night notifies the appointment of Capt. (late Lieut.) Gray of this corps to a company in the 75th Foot. We rejoice most heartily in this reward to a most gallant Officer, as well as in the promotion of Capt. Stack to Brevet Major.

46th—Bt.-Major Martin has arrived from Gibraltar. This officer has been 35 years in the service, 31 of which on full-pay. He was eight years in the field in Sicily; served the campaign of 1807 in Egypt; was at the taking of Genoa in 1814; in two campaigns in the United States of North America, including the taking of Costeen and its dependencies on the river Penobscot.

49th—Lieut. O'Callaghan received two years' leave, to proceed to England on medical certificate.

52d Depot—Lieut. Campbell, Ens. Corbett, Cuming, and Purvis, accompany the draft for the West Indies. Lieut. Cavendish is on leave.

53d—will return home from the Mediterranean in the spring.

53d Depot—Maj. Hill and Ens. Atkins are on leave.

54th—June 22, Lieut. J. B. Dodd to have rank of Captain by brevet, in East Indies only, from 23rd May, 1839.

54th Depot—Ens. Skurray has joined from leave.

55th Depot—Assist.-Surg. Smith, M.D., has leave to the end of January, when he will embark for the serv. cos.

56th Depot—The comp. from Roscrea to Dublin, for embarkation for Belfast; 2 cos. and head-qrs. from Nenagh to do. for do.; the comp. from Thurles to do. for do., Dec. 5 to 10. Assist.-Surg. Campbell, M.D., is on sick leave to March, 1840.

57th—Lieuts. Smyth and Jones have two years' leave to England on medical certificate from date of embarkation.

59th—E. B. Napier, Esq., lately appointed to a Lieutenancy in the North Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry, retired a short time since from this regt.

59th Depot—The draft from Tralee to Ballincollig, instead of Cork, until embarkation, Nov. 29.

60th, 1st Batt.—will return home from the Mediterranean in the spring.

60th, 1st Batt. (Depot)—The detachment from Fermoy to Birr, to rejoin the Depot, Dec. 2. 2 officers, 50 r. and f., of the detachment at Fermoy, en route to Thurles, to relieve the 56th, on Dec. 6.

60th, 2d Batt. (Depot)—Maj. Slyfield, K.B., commands the draft for the service cos. This officer has 26 years' full-pay service. He embarked with the 84th, and joined the Army near San Sebastian, 10th Sept., 1813: was present at the crossing of the Bidassoa, battles of Nivelle and Nive (from 9th to 13th December), and sortie from Bayonne.

64th Depot—The freight-ship Carshalton Park, 441 tons, has been taken up for the conveyance of the draft to the service companies.

69th—One company being too crowded at Youghal, to be stationed at Dungarvon Barracks, Dec. 2.

70th Depot—Capt. Whyte, Lieuts. Colston, Brereton and Edwards, Ensigns Pilling, and Braddell, proceed with the detachment for the service companies.

73d Depot—Captain Widdrington is on leave to Feb. 14, 1840, and Lieut. D'Arcy to 30th of this month.

74th—Lieut. Obins has been appointed Resident Assistant Engineer in Tobago, in the room of Lieut. Reily, appointed Fort Adjutant in Dominica.

74th Depot—Maj. Crabbe, K.H., Lieut. Hancock, and Ens. Willington, proceed with the drafts for the service companies.

75th Depot—Ens. Gore is on leave.

79th—Paymaster Mountsteven is on leave. This officer has 25 years' full-pay service. He was severely wounded at Waterloo.

81st—The service cos. embarked at Gibraltar for Barbadoes on 21st Nov.

84th—Lieut. Coape from Newtownbarry has joined headquarters at Kilkenny. It is not intended to fill up the Lieutenancy vacant by the death of Lieut. Hawker, recently appointed from the 70th, as the Adjutancy is held by an Ensign, who will, on becoming senior of his rank, obtain a Lieutenancy without purchase. An Ensign from half-pay will be brought in to fill, and a civilian will be appointed in his place by purchase.

86th—This corps, one of the finest in the service, is the first for duty in Ireland.

87th Depot—The Ethelfred freight-ship has been taken up for the conveyance to the Mauritius of the draft for the service corps. Capt. Campbell, Sec. Lieut. Rich and Rush, and Assist.-Surg. Lawson, are the officers nominated to embark with the draft.

88th—A correspondent, G. L. S., sends us a list of the services of Lieut. Farr Kingsmill, an officer who was for many years in the Connaught Rangers, and on half-pay of which corps he now is:—Gibraltar, defence of Cadiz, siege and capture of Ciudad Rodrigo, storming of La Picurina; two sieges and storming of Badajos, battle of Salamanca (severely wounded), capture of Madrid and Retiro, battle of Vittoria, blockade of Pampeluna, the engagements in the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Vic Bigorre, Tarbes, Orthes, Toulouse, and El Bodon; the affairs at La Barbe Asperrein, and others. Served the campaign of 1814 in Canada, and the campaign of 1815 in France and the Netherlands. For all these services he is still unrewarded, by pension or otherwise. At the termination of the war he was placed on half-pay. Ainsi va le monde.

90th—This reg., by the indefatigable exertions of Major Slade, is now complete—viz. 800 r. and f.

90th Depot—furnished the guard of honour on the landing of the Hanoverian Ambassador at Dover on 2d inst., who was pleased to express his admiration of their appearance and soldier-like bearing. The depot recruited 16 fine young fellows at Dover fair. Capt. Cuming has rejoined from leave. Ens. Bigby is on leave to 30th Dec.

94th—Capt. Randolph is appointed to act as Paymaster on the responsibility of a new Committee of Paymastership, from the date on which Major Milner succeeded to the command of the corps.

96th Depot—At a General Court-Martial held at Manchester, Colour-Serjeant Pierse was found guilty of an offence against the regulations of the Army, and he now awaits the confirmation of his sentence. By the Articles of War, his life is forfeited. A memorial to the Commander-in-Chief, for a commutation of his sentence, has been signed by the members for the borough, the borough magistrates, and other respectable persons, including many of the Society of Friends.

98th—See our Leading Remarks.

99th—The comp. from Longford to Athlone, Nov. 28 and 29 (withdrawn). The comp. from Mullingar to Athlone, Nov. 29 and 30 (withdrawn).

Rifle Brigade, 1st Batt.—Lieut. and Adj. Carr and Surg. Ranken are on leave.

Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt.—Private Charles Jones, tried at Woolwich by General Court-Martial on 12th Sept. last, for desertion, and sentenced to be transported as a felon for 7 years, was marched on Monday last from the Rl. Artillery guard-room and embarked on board the Justitia hulk.

Royal African Corps—Capt. Taylor, recently appointed, is on leave to July, 1840.

Royal Artillery—The recruiting party at Warrington has been withdrawn, and Capt. Piercy Bean has three months' leave of absence. The experimental party is expected to leave Deal on Tuesday, the 10th inst., and to arrive at Woolwich on Friday, the 13th. Second Lieut. Inglefield embarked on Thursday on board the Peninsula Steam Company's ship, for Gibraltar, en route to join Lieut.-Col. Chesney's company at Malta. The Master-General has been pleased to appoint Second Captain F. Holcombe to the Royal Horse Artillery, in the room of Bridges, promoted. In consequence of the promotion of Col. Gardiner, Lieut.-Col. H. W. Gordon is posted to the 2d Battalion as Lieut.-Colonel's pay, and Lieut.-Colonel Wylde to the 3d Battalion on Major's pay; Second Capt. W. M. Smith to the 9th Battalion, vice Holcombe. The official report of the death of Lieut.-Col. W. D. Nicolls, late in command at Jamaica, was received on Thursday. He left Jamaica on the 28th of October, and joined the packet at Cape Haytí on the 3d of November, and died at sea on the 19th of November. His death promotes Brevet-Major C. E. Gordon to Lieut.-Colonel; Second Capt. Hunt, Adjt., 6th Batt., to Captain; First Lieut. Shone to Second Captain; and Second Lieut. M. Smith to be First Lieutenant. Second Captain Skinner is named for the Adjutancy of the 6th Battalion. The remains of the late Colonel Gamble, who commanded in the Western district, were interred at Devonport on the 29th. The funeral was private, the deceased having frequently expressed a wish that the usual Military honours should be dispensed with. He was followed to his grave by Major-General Pilkee, Rear-Adm. Warren, the officers of his corps, and several other friends. Major Louis, on leave, is on a visit to the Earl of Clare.

G. O., Woolwich, 1st Dec. 1839.—The Master-General has been pleased to appoint Capt. Alexander Tulloh, of the Royal Artillery, to be Assistant Inspector of the Gunpowder Manufactory at Waltham Abbey. A. Dickson, D.A. Gen.

Royal Engineers—On Saturday, Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. W. Mulcaster, K.C.H., made the half-yearly inspection of the corps. Lieut. J. B. Collinson has joined at Woolwich, and is posted to Captain Wulff's company. Lieut. W. Robinson has closed his survey as connected with the triangulation of Scotland, and the men will return to winter-quarters.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Bart, K. C. B., the new Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, took his departure for Bombay last Sunday morning, with the intention of travelling through France, so as to arrive at Marseilles in time to proceed by the conveyance which carries the mail to Alexandria, which left here 4th inst.

Maj.-Gen. Wright, Rl. Engineers, has arrived in Paris, from a professional tour in the United States and Canada. This officer has crossed the Atlantic Ocean twice in a period of about thirty-three days, having gone out to New York in the Liverpool steamer in about seventeen days, and returned to Havre in sixteen days in the American packet Burgundy.

On Monday, in obedience to the orders of Col. Considine, K.H., Commander of the Forces in South Wales, a district Court-Martial assembled at the office of the Brigade-Major, Maj. Cook, for the purpose of trying such offenders as should be brought before the Court. The Court was composed of—President, Maj. P. Sandilands, R.H.A. Members, Capt. G. L. L. Kaye, 10th Hussars; Capt. Stack, 45th Regt.; Capt. W. H. Butler, 45th Regt.; Lieut. Poulden, R.H.A.; Lieuts. H. J. Shaw and E. L. Tickell, 45th Regt. Two privates of the 45th Regt. were tried for desertion.

Medical Staff.—Assist.-Surg. Dice will take medical charge of the detachment of 95th, which embarks in the Tanjore for Ceylon. Assist.-Surg. Hare, M.D., is ordered for embarkation in the Carshalton Park for Jamaica.

On Wednesday the troops at Newport under the command of Colonel Considine, K. H., treated the inhabitants of the surrounding neighbourhood to another display of military tactics. At 11 o'clock they marched for Tredegar-park, an advanced guard of the 10th Royal Hussars leading the van, followed by another division of Hussars; the infantry consisting of several companies of the 45th Foot, the Royal Horse Artillery, with the guns, ammunition, &c., a division and rear-guard of Hussars closing the column. Upon reaching Sir Charles Morgan's they marched up to the mansion, with the band playing and colours flying, and piled arms close to the front entrance. It was their intention to have had a field-day, but the state of the ground prevented this. The country people flocked in crowds to see "the soldiers," and such displays of military power will no doubt have a wholesome effect on the men of the hills.

A lithographic view has been published of the Westgate and Stow-hill, with the dead bodies in the positions in which they lay, and the point whence the military made their defensive attack upon the mob, with a ground plan of the Westgate, its various passages, &c. drawn by Lieutenant Taylor, Royal Horse Artillery.

The 56th and 67th, from Jamaica and Barbadoes, relieve the 15th and 66th in Canada; the 81st and 82d, from Gibraltar, replacing the first two regiments.

We much regret to state, that the death of Major Mackie, Governor of Gambia, formerly a distinguished Subaltern in the 88th, is confirmed.

The Magistrates of Carlisle, in a case brought before them by a Recruiting Serjeant, have decided that enlistment on Sunday is not legal.

Capt. Gleeson, late Chief Constable of Police in Ireland, from which establishment he was dismissed, is appointed to the Barrack-mastership of St. Lucia! and Mr. Long, of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, is appointed Superior Barrack Sergeant of Cork Barracks.

8000 recruits for the Army were raised in Ireland within the last ten months.

Gibraltar, Nov. 15.—The fortifications here are suffered to go into decay: the wall between the New Mole and Rugged Staff is literally tumbling down in large pieces, no steps being taken to repair it, for the want, it is said, of hands here for that purpose. If a few hundred convicts were here, they might be most advantageously employed on this work, which must be regarded as one of much importance. The garrison at present is very weak; 200 mount guard every day; the men, therefore, never get two nights in bed.

Appointments Cancelled.—Lieut. Cross, 4th F. Lieut Montagu, 6th F. Lieut. Farren, 94th F. Ens. Walker, 1st F. Ens. Orme, 96th F.

GENERAL ORDERS ISSUED BY SIR JOHN COLBORNE PREVIOUSLY TO HIS LEAVING CANADA.

"Head quarters, Montreal, Oct. 12, 1839.

"G. O., No. 1.—The Commander of the troops, being about to return to England, cannot quit this country, in which Her Majesty's troops have, during the last two years, been employed on most harassing and painful service, without expressing his thanks to the General Officers, Officers, and the corps which he has had the honour to command, and without adverting to the circumstances which have imposed upon them duties and trials which the British soldier has happily, hitherto, but rarely been compelled to encounter.

"In the sudden rebellious movements of 1837, produced by the intrigues and wicked ambition of a few interested men, the troops were called on to protect, with numbers inadequate to the emergency, the loyal subjects of Her Majesty, simultaneously attacked and driven from their homes at remote points.

"In the execution of this duty several weeks elapsed, and during that interval the proceedings of the insurgents were stained by murder, by plunder, and by destruction of property.

"It, therefore, became almost impossible, in the dispersion of the rebels, to prevent acts of retaliation on the part of the loyal settlers, who had been treacherously and cruelly outraged.

"In the ensuing winter, the leaders of 1837, having conspired with the most worthless adventurers of the adjoining states, again instigated the disaffected of the district of Montreal to open rebellion.

"This revolt, by the vigilance and activity of the volunteers, and the presence of Her Majesty's troops, was speedily suppressed; but, between the 3rd and 9th of November, the enormities committed by the rebels of the preceding year were repeated by them, wherever they were in force. The loyal and peaceable inhabitants, unprotected by troops and unprepared for defence, were again exposed to the outrages of 1837. In the village of Napierville 4,000 or 5,000 insurgents had been suddenly collected, and from that vicinity more than 70 loyal families were compelled to fly to the woods for refuge, and abandon their homes and property to be plundered by a body of lawless men.

"That the sufferers by excesses such as these should have resented and retaliated on being restored to their farms was, at that period of confusion, as certain, as it was impracticable to control their feelings. But the Commander of the Forces has the satisfaction to record that Her Majesty's troops were always actively, and often successfully, employed in protecting private property, and that upon all occasions the inhabitants of the country, of all parties, returned to their homes upon their appearance, and found in their presence effectual protection. Under circumstances of difficulty and disadvantage peculiar to this trying period, harassed by continual alarms and by sudden and laborious marches, dispersed in insufficient quarters, and unavoidably separated from their officers, exposed to great privations and discomfort at the most inclement seasons, the instances of irregularity have been few, and in all cases promptly repressed by the vigilance of officers commanding corps, while their exertions in protecting the people of these provinces from a banditti, whose preparations for robbery and murder have been made at points along an extended frontier of 1,000 miles, have been marked by a steadiness and perseverance, and a cheerful activity, which have rendered their services at this extraordinary crisis most honourable to their character and conduct as British soldiers.

"The Commander of the Forces avails himself of this opportunity to allude to the arrangements to which he had on a former occasion considered it necessary to draw the attention of Commanding Officers, in regard to the prospects of advantage to the deserving soldier who wished to obtain his discharge in these provinces.

"The proposed scheme is still under consideration, and with reference to the benefits which the soldier may ultimately derive from it, he requests that Commanding Officers will impress upon the men under their command, who may be desirous to settle in this country, how much their future welfare depends on their sobriety and prudence; and he now calls upon every man to recollect the many instances in Canada where the soldiers, who have obtained their discharge, being provided with means to cultivate their land, have by their industry and sobriety raised themselves to a condition of perfect independence.

"The Commander of the Forces has observed with great satisfaction the exertions of Major-Generals Sir James M'Donnell and Clitherow, and the high state of discipline of the corps under their command; and he thinks it incumbent on him to assure Major-Gen. Sir G. Arthur that he feels much indebted to his Excellency for his able arrangements and vigilance in protecting the frontier of Upper Canada, and counteracting the designs of the vicious population of the adjoining states.

"His Excellency cannot sufficiently thank the heads of the departments, and Officers of the Staff and Military Departments generally, for the able assistance and support they have invariably afforded him."

No. 2.—"The Governor-General and Commander of the Forces cannot leave these provinces without requesting the officers commanding volunteer corps, to convey his thanks to the officers and men of their respective districts, for the important services they have performed in defending the country and the institutions under which they live from the combined attack of desperate rebels and marauders from the United States.

"Deeply sensible of the arduous nature of those services, of the hardship and personal suffering consequent on them, and but too well acquainted with the misery inflicted on the inhabitants of the frontier, who have been necessarily exposed to predatory and incendiary incursions from the states of New York, Vermont, and other frontier states, during two successive winters, his Excellency avails himself of this opportunity of recording his opinion that the forbearance which, under circumstances of unprecedented provocation has marked the conduct of the volunteers, and which he is confident will be continued, does them honour as soldiers, and ensures them respect from every civilised nation: and that the fearless zeal with which a peaceful and industrious population, imperfectly armed and equipped, came forward to crush the first attempts at rebellion, must be ever gratefully remembered by the empire which they represent, and by the government which they have upheld."

No. 3.—"Lieut.-Col. Williams will take the command of the troops at Prescott and Brockville, and reside at the former station until further orders. Col. Carmichael will resume his former command at Coteau du Lac.

(Signed) "JOHN EDEN, D.A.G."

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 6.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Revenge sailed on Sunday afternoon to join Rear-Adm. Sir J. Ommanney in the Tagus: she took out about twenty second-class boys for his squadron; and it is said that she had orders for the Blenheim to return here, it being intended that she shall go to China with three or four frigates, and small vessels, to augment Rear-Adm. Sir F. Maitland's force, and thus bring the Chinese to their proper senses. Raven cutter came up with some men taken out of a piratical vessel, which, through want of sufficient proof, has been released: these men being natives of Portugal, have been sent to Lisbon by the Revenge: the cutter is in the harbour refitting. Pique has been in dock and out again: her copper shaft was slightly rubbed, and one or two sheets near the anchor; these have been replaced. She requires partial caulking. Her new foremast will be put in to-morrow; and in the course of the week she will be ready for sea, having a few men to make up for those discharged, having been three years in here: she is supposed to be one of the frigates going to China. Blonde is getting on very fast, and will soon be ready. She victuals nearly 200 people, and the shortness of the days is the only hindrance she meets with. She is also supposed to be going to the East. Fantome is expected from Chatham in a week or so, and will try her powers with the new yacht (Anonyma) belonging to Col. Greville, believed to be a very fine vessel, and built at Gosport. The Madagascar is out of dock, and will be masted next week. The Queen is to have her principal magazine fitted amidships; this is conceived to be not the most desirable place—time and a trial will, however, show: she is a most noble ship, and it will be a very great pity if anything should go wrong about her. Admiral Fleeming and his family have quitted the port for Greenwich. Sir Edward Codrington is, as usual, most active and zealous, and will be deservedly popular in the port; he attended on board the Excellent yesterday to witness the great gun, small-arm, and sword-exercise, and was delighted with the manner in which all was executed: he was occupied there about three hours. Nimrod is ordered to be commissioned at Plymouth, and the Harrier at this port, so soon as the dock-yard people have got them ready. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pique, Blonde, Emerald yacht, Raven, Messenger, in harbour.

PLYMOUTH, 6th Dec.—(From our own Correspondent.—Nov. 29, Arrived Etna, 6, Lieut.-Com. J. Wilson, from Sheerness, with the Marines lately paid off from the Hercules, 72; she sailed on her return on 1st Dec., but the wind being against her, she returned to her anchorage, and has since come into Barnpool, where she is taking on board ordnance stores for Woolwich. The Persian, 16, lately launched at Pembroke, was masted this day, and is expected to be commissioned in about ten days. Sailed the Hamoaze tender, with stores for Pembroke dockyard.—30th, Sailed the Goodwill tender, for Sheerness and Chatham, with stores.—Dec. 2, Arrived the Firefly, st. vessel, Lt.-Com. W. Winniett, from Portsmouth, having on board Lt.-Gen. Maister, the Governor of Barbadoes, and sailed again for that island the 4th.—4th, Sailed Devon tender, for Falmouth, with stores for the packet service.—6th, The Imogene, 28, Capt. Henry W. Bruce, will be paid off this day, and it is expected the Nimrod, 20, will be commissioned by Lieut. Jas. Fox, for Com. Chas. A. Barlow.—In Harbour—Impregnable, San Josef, Carron st. vessel, in Barnpool, Etna.

MILFORD-HAVEN, Dec. 4.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Capt. Superintendent Jackson has returned to duty, and resumed the command of the port. This week the gallant Captain mustered the packets on the station, and the Royal Yacht, and last week the workmen belonging to the Dock Yard.—The Meteor steamer, Lieut. D. Pritchard, Commander, put in here on Monday for coals, on passage from Scotland, and proceeded yesterday afternoon for Falmouth, Plymouth, &c.—One of the Royal Marines, while going to relieve a sentinel at two o'clock A.M. on Wednesday last, suddenly dropped down dead just as he was taking charge of the post. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict returned of "Died from apoplexy."—One of the seamen belonging to Her Majesty's steam-packet Prospero fell off the bowsprit the last trip but one, and was drowned. Every exertion was made to save him, but it is supposed he must have been struck by the paddles, as no vestige could be discovered of him but his hat. He has left a wife and two children.—Arrived to-day the Tortoise lighter from Plymouth, with stores for the Arsenal.

DEPTFORD, 4th Dec., 1839.—Sailed the Bentonger, Bomonge, Lieut. Crawford, Agent, for the Cape of Good Hope. Remain, the Numa transport, Lieut. Howe, for Bermuda; Boyne for the Mauritius, and Asia for Gibraltar and Malta. Adm. Fleeming has assumed the duties as Governor of Greenwich Hospital, and is residing (pro tempore) at the Trafalgar Hotel, Greenwich.

At the quarterly dinner of the Portsmouth Naval Club on 27th ult., the late Commander-in-Chief, the Hon. Adm. Fleeming, and his successor, Adm. Sir E. Codrington, were present, as well as the Lieut.-Governor, Maj.-Gen. the Hon. Sir H. Pakenham, and the Commandants of Engineers and Artillery, Colonels Arnold and Forbes, who were specially invited on the occasion. The company, consisting of 56, sat down to a sumptuous entertainment; Capt. Sir T. Hastings in the chair. The toasts were, "The Queen—may Her Majesty's recent communication to her Privy Council, of her intended marriage, ensure Her Most Gracious Majesty's future happiness, and be conducive to the country's weal,"—drunk with enthusiasm.—"The Queen Dowager and the rest of the Royal Family."—"Lord Hill and the Army."—"Lord Minto and the Navy."—"Admiral Fleeming."—"Admiral Sir E. Codrington."—"Major-Gen. Hon. Sir H. Pakenham and the Garrison."—"Col. Jones and the Royal Marines." The health of the Duke of Wellington was proposed by Sir Edward Codrington, in a neat speech, in which he expatiated on the abilities in the field of this renowned hero. If, said Sir Edward, he wished to impress any one with a sense of his Grace's abilities, he would say, read his despatches—if he wished to explain his greatness in the field, he would judge of it by his deeds. The toast was received with the loudest applause.

On the 1st Dec., Sheerness Dock-yard commenced lighting with oil, in consequence of the Admiralty declining to submit to an increase of charge made by the proprietors of the Sheerness Gas Works Company. The Fantome is undocked at Chatham and nearly ready for sea; the Owen Glendower taken into dock for repairs, &c.

We understand that a vessel is building at North Yarmouth for the Transport Service, the Master and crew of which are to be placed in by the Admiralty, and, we of course consider, will also be victualled by them. Various alterations also have recently been made in the interior fittings of Transports: the Agent's sleeping cabin is, by such, one of the foremost, under the poop, enabling him to have a full view of the sails and working of the vessels.

The following vessels are now ready for commission, and it is reported in Naval circles that they will be commanded by the undermentioned officers:—Belvidera, the Hon. F. Grey; Vesuvius, W. Burnett; Magicienne, G. Smith; Pearl, H. W. Crawfurd; Pylades, E. Colgrave; Stromboli, not known. We cannot vouch for the truth of this, but such is the report.

The Hecla is now ready for commission.—Commander J. Cammilleri we have heard talked of to command her.

The Montreal Schooner has been purchased by Captain Sandom on Lake Ontario, and added to the list of the Navy.

An expedition, under the orders of Capt. Trotter, R.N., in which three iron steamers are to be engaged, is, we understand, about to be fitted out, to proceed up the Niger. The precise object of this expedition we have not learnt; but we presume it is to explore further. Capt. Trotter had an interview with the Colonial Secretary on Thursday.—Hampshire Telegraph.

It is reported that Capt. Scott, of the President, and Capt. Broughton, of the Samarang, (both in South America,) have exchanged ships.

The armament for the Cyclops has been shipped at Woolwich. She is to carry two 10-inch guns, and four 8-feet 42-cwt. 32-pounders on the upper deck. She is constructed to carry in addition to the above, sixteen 32-pounders on her gun-deck. We understand that the fitting of her engines is completed, and that she will very shortly be at Woolwich.

A Soldier of the Last Century.—A distinguished Highland Regiment was commanded some five-and-forty years ago by the Laird of Kilbuckie, and his honour liked a dram, "a way they had in the Army" in those times. On the expedition to Egypt, under the immortal Abercromby, the Regiment put into a bay of Asia Minor in the transports in which it was embarked. The Laird went on shore, and when he came off to the ship in the evening he was so drunk that he lay in the bottom of the boat, and was hoisted on board by a tackle, and lowered into his berth, "happy and helpless." Some time after this a man was tied up to be flogged for some misdemeanour committed when he was under the influence of liquor, or "a little hearty," as Scotch soldiers term it. Turning from the halberds to the Colonel, he said, "Cornel, Cornel! ye maun let me aff; there's nae herm in me—I'm just a puir drunken body like yersel!"

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

H.M.'S SERVICE IN INDIA.—No. 10. MAJOR-GENERALS WILLSHIRE AND NOTT.

Sir,—The "Nott and Willshire question," as the hirelings of the press in India have styled it, has done more to expose that system which has been silently working for several years, and to which I have frequently called the attention of your Military readers—to raise the Company's Military Service in India, and also in Europe, at the expense of, and by degrading H.M.'s service, than any circumstance which has occurred for many years. The facts are as follows:—Major-General Willshire, H.M.S., and Lieut.-Colonel of 1815, goes on service in the same force with Major-General Nott, a Lieut.-Colonel of 1824 in Hon. E.I.C.S. Major-General Nott claims seniority because his rank is, as the most unfoundedly states, local, whereas Major-General Willshire, being a Major-General made by Sir Henry Fane on H.M.'s authority only, has (according to this Major-General Nott and his liberal companions) local rank only. Now, Sir, I assert that the very contrary is fact, and that Major-General Willshire is a full Colonel in every part of the world, and his local rank, by Her Majesty's positive commands, senior to that of Major-General Nott, who has nothing but LOCAL rank, and becomes simply Mr. Nott the moment he comes westward of the Cape of Good Hope. As I feel perfectly satisfied that the Horse Guards and H.M.'s Army do not clearly comprehend the nature of the system of promotion which has been sanctioned in India, I beg particular attention to this explanation. For instance, Lieut.-Colonel Jones (we call him), of the Cavalry, has attained his rank as Senior Lieut.-Colonel very quickly (he was a Captain in 1834) by purchasing officers out; and in consequence of the death of one of the Colonels Commandant, in 1839, he becomes a full Colonel! The consequence is, that every Lieut.-Colonel in India who was senior to Lieut.-Col. Jones, must, by the present regulations, be promoted to full Colonels, and by this means become Major-Generals very many years before they could possibly have reached that rank, and, as they themselves have given out, become eligible for the higher honours of the Bath!! Hence nearly two hundred Company's officers were made Major-Generals in the last two Brevets, and there are scarcely any Lieut.-Colonels in India. H.M.'s officers are also made Major-Generals and Colonels; but to them the rank is not permanent, and that rank which H.M.'s officers do gain (the local rank when serving in India), these junior officers are making every exertion to deprive them of, and abusing the Commander-in-Chief because he refuses to listen to this gross injustice. Why, Sir, the senior Lieut.-Colonel (Owen) of the Royal Marines is of 1837; and if when he, or the Lieut.-Colonels of Artillery, Engineers, Life Guards, and Foot Guards are promoted, every Lieut.-Colonel senior to them must be likewise promoted, we should have the whole Army Colonels. What brilliant services have the Company's officers performed, to entitle them to this wonderful advantage over the far more distinguished officers of the Royal Army?

The press in India has lately taken a violent part in the dispute about Major-General Nott, and calling upon the Company's officers "to remember they can no longer serve as SECONDARIES"*. What these scribblers may mean by this it is impossible to guess, as I have already shown in my letters that the Company's officers possess everything in India, to the utter exclusion of H.M.'s officers, and that they are fast hastening to more than an equality with them in Europe. Only lately if the Rodney, of 92 guns, and Wolverine, of 16, sailed on a cruise together, and returned to port with their prize, a ship of 90 guns, and that the officers of the Wolverine claimed the entire prize as their right—what, I ask, would be the loathing and contempt of the public in such a case? Lord Hill, in his letter to the Court of Directors upon the case of Colonel Thomas, C.B., who refused most properly to serve under his junior Brigadier-General Gilbert, Hon. Company's service, states most distinctly "that to H.M.'s forces the greater part of the conquests in India are justly due;" and this assertion, notwithstanding the falsehoods of the Bengal Hurkaru newspaper, is strictly fact. From the year 1757, up to the storming of Ghuznee in 1839, "in every war in which the existence or supremacy of the British power in India was in any degree endangered, Her Majesty's troops gained everything." (See my former letters.) Yet, from all the advantages thus gained, H.M.'s service in most rigorously excluded; and many of the persons most violent in their opposition to any participation in "the loaves and fishes" of India being granted to H.M.'s officers, are persons who have spent a life of ease and enjoyment at the capitals (Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay), at the expense of the exertions of others; or, to use the language of a celebrated writer, "sit down infamous and contented." As to the cry of incapacity which has been raised against H.M.'s officers, as an excuse for their unjust exclusion, I may state, once for all, that is a disgraceful calumny and falsehood. The late exhibition of ignorance in the public journals by an East India Director, who had conducted the political affairs in Persia many years, and the incompetence and neglect of duty—as stated in Sir John Keane's despatch from Ghuznee—displayed by the two authorities who were chosen to pilot the Army of the Indus to Cabool, and both of which gentlemen have had rank and honours conferred upon them, will, I trust, teach the Company's servants that an humble silence on the question of incapacity will become them best in future, or various other instances may also be found.

Nor is it alone the total exclusion from all offices in India, which tend to stimulate exertion or honourable zeal, that H.M.'s officers have to complain of; but it is also the fact, which no effrontery can deny, that all the slavish drudgery and duties of every camp and cantonment in which they are associated with the Hon. Company's officers, are thrown upon Her Majesty's officers, in consequence of the numerous officers of the Native regiments employed on Staff duties. Hence, Her Majesty's officers are not only deprived of those advantages which their service had the greatest share of the danger and merit in acquiring, but, by an additional degrading consequence they are compelled to perform all the slavish duties which this unjust exclusion brings upon them!! The Lord who was permitted to frame the bill for the charter 1833-34, was perhaps the most incompetent man in Great Britain to legislate on that subject, not more from his overweening sense of his own importance, than from his entire contempt for the feelings of Military men, whom he regarded as beneath consideration; and hence the infamous system towards Her Majesty's troops in India was not only continued, but actually increased, in opposition to the frequent appeals which have been made, and in defiance of the clear and disinterested evidence afforded by the Military Minute of Sir John Malcolm addressed to Lord W. Bentinck in November, 1830, and of which copious extracts were published (by me) in your Journal last year*. I beg it may be distinctly borne in mind by your readers, that some of the noblest characters of the present times, amongst whom it will be sufficient to name the Duke of Wellington, Sir Henry Hardinge, and Sir Hussey Vivian, have stated their firm conviction in the Parliament of this country, that there is no instance of any Army, in ancient or modern days, having been so neglected and ill used by the country it has served so nobly as the Army of Great Britain; and yet—hear it, ye people of England!—a mercantile body, whose distinguishing characteristic has ever been the lust of gain, is permitted to treat one-fourth of that same Army in such an outrageous manner, as to make the other three fourths feel themselves blessed and fortunate when they can escape, by any sacrifice or interest, the deep degradation and misery of serving in the East Indies!!! This, Sir, is no declamation, as it can be proved at the bar of either House of Parliament.

The Indian newspapers are exulting, I perceive, at report, that two distinguished servants of the Company to be employed in high offices by Her Majesty's Ministers, but yet these same journals join in the outcry against a participation by H.M.'s officers in appointments in India. As to the honours of the Bath, from which so many celebrated officers amongst the Colonels, Lieutenant-Colonels, and Majors of our own Army, are excluded, whilst they are lavished on unworthy members—even by their own evidence—of another service; it will be sufficient to put a case. Take the son of an East India Director, a Lieutenant of Cavalry, and place him in one petty skirmish where he gets a thump on the head. As soon as he gets his Captaincy, he is made a Brevet-Major, a C.B., and finally knighted! Take three gallant officers of H.M.'s service, for instance, Major H. Moore, Royal Artillery; Captain Richardson, 31st Foot; and Captain Ellis, 62d Foot; and place them in every action of celebrity in the Peninsula, and (see Hart's Army List) "twelve other affairs with the enemy;" and the former officer is made a Brevet-Major after nearly thirty years' service in the dull routine of his distinguished corps, and the other two get—nothing! The late brilliant affair at Ghuznee speaks volumes for the correctness of all I have written, as the European troops only, of which three-fourths were of H.M.'s service, could be trusted in storming that fort; and yet I dare say we shall see honours lavished for that very action on the Honourable Company's officers, who have already been selected to fill all the situations caused by the campaign, to the entire exclusion of H.M.'s officers, although it is far without the territories of the Honourable Company, and although many of the Company's officers selected are young men of four, five, and six years' service, without one solitary acquirement or recommendation, except a parrot-like knowledge of one or two languages! What folly and absurdity it is, then, to preach cordiality between these services, the most distinguished of which is so offensively and palpably degraded in order to heap benefits on the other perfectly mischievous, and to such a degree, as to render numbers of regiments inefficient simply for want of officers! Let the Honourable Company's officers in Europe be excluded from every society having the most remote pretensions to a Military community; and let them be taught to feel keenly, that the rank which they vaunted so much in India, and those offices from which they laboured to exclude the officers of that service (Her Majesty's) to whom they were mainly indebted for the possession of them, are gone for ever from them. To be called General this, or Colonel that, and wear a red garment, is a cheap and wholesome luxury which no compassionate man would wish to deny them; particularly as it is one in which every Polish refugee in England, and travelling American shopkeeper on the Continent, equally indulges. H.M.'s service in India also suffers to a great degree, and particularly the prospects of junior and innocent officers, from the description of men who are permitted often to remain in command of regiments;—gentlemen who would not be tolerated one hour under the searching eye of the Horse Guards;—men cunning in the management of canteens, and deeply gifted with that knowledge which enables them to calculate nicely the profits of the Quartermaster and Canteen-Serjeants;—men who always employ the same contractor for supplies required for the soldiers under their charge, unless under the belief that this individual gives the best and cheapest, but who do manage, nevertheless, to profit considerably by such transactions themselves;—men who know of no means for managing the troops who are unhappily placed under their command, but by spies, terror, harassing drills, and constant punishments; and who, at the same time that they are thus indulging their own base, foul, and vindictive passions, are doing more to destroy that portion of H.M.'s Army confided to their care than the most insubordinate acts of their juniors could by any possibility effect. The officers I have thus attempted to describe often terminate a career of malevolent folly and profound ignorance of their duties, carried on in direct opposition to, and violation of, those gentlemanly principles and feelings which H.M.'s regulations so peremptorily directs shall be the system of her service, by retiring in disgrace from the Army, but not until they have caused the death of hundreds by their malevolence and folly, and probably destroyed the prospects of all the junior officers, by bringing the regiment into bad odour, and even stopping the promotion. Why are such men tolerated in the service, when there are plenty of talented and gentlemanly officers ever ready to purchase promotion, and anxious to be employed?

There is another grievance of which European regiments, and particularly those of H.M.'s, may most reasonably complain—to wit, that of being placed under the command of a General of Division, or Brigadier, who has been all his previous life Superintendent of Tailors at the Presidency, or in charge of a Police Corps, or Pay Office, or Irregular Cavalry, and yet presumes he knows more of the interior economy of a European corps than men of much greater rank who can only acquire that knowledge after a life of serious attention and experience, which every officer knows the subject demands. Many of these gentlemen openly assert, that they recognise no distinction in India between Europeans and Natives; and would doubtless insist, if they knew how to carry their plan into execution, that the ostrich and tea-plant should be forthwith introduced into Baffin's Bay. In India twice the duties and exertion are required from every officer and soldier of Her Majesty's service that he is called upon to perform in the British Isles, and yet it will hardly be disputed that his energies and powers are not equal to half the exertion he can make in his native country. The nature of the very general medical report lately called for by the Horse Guards from the Surgeons of regiments, has placed the most complete extinguisher to all these wicked follies in the hands of the medical officers of the British Army; and if they will only do their duty, without fearing vulgar and virulent abuse, which is often lavished upon them, I am aware, but which, coming from such people, they must consider a very harmless affair, they (the Surgeons) will very soon put an end to a system which has brought despair, ruin, and death to many thousands, and demands the abhorrence of every humane and honest man. The medical officers must also meet with the favourable countenance and support of the different Commanders-in-Chief, and the Horse Guards.

In conclusion, I beg leave to state, that I do not claim implicit credit for anything I have written on the subject of H.M.'s service in India, more than my facts are found to deserve, on rigid inquiry and scrutiny, from officers of H.M.'s service "who have had the misfortune to serve in India." I have neither time nor inclination to reply to the "rounds," flimsy declamation, and suppositions of your Indian correspondents, who are in the habit of indulging largely in a very inaccurate position by forming arguments, at times, for the pleasure of refuting them; or, as it is familiarly called, "putting up men of straw to knock them

* Your "ancient" correspondent, he "of other days," had the impudence to hold me up to public derision, as often quoting from this Minute, but which, he insinuated, I could not produce; and yet, since that has been done, he has not had the gentlemanly feeling or candour to acknowledge it. Still this worthy expects me to reply to the folly and ignorance he writes in his "Rounds," and other rambling and incoherent harangues!

down again." I beg to add, for the information of your "supposing correspondent," as I call him, that the Lieut.-Colonels, Majors, and Captains, whom I mentioned as receiving such large sums to retire from the Company's service, in addition to their full-pay, were not on the Staff; and therefore he may throw his suppositions "to the winds, along with what he facetiously calls my "ill-nature."

I have, &c. ONE OF 1200 H.M.'s OFFICERS.

Note.—It was a very common sight, within two or three years, in India, when a corps was on the line of march, to see palanquins containing the wife of the Commanding and Staff Officers, escorted by several European soldiers with arms and accoutrements, and who were obliged to run for 14 or 15 miles!!

Note.—Every situation is sold in India (in the present days). A pompous gentleman, one of the Major-Generals who refused to serve under Major-General Wilkshire, although greatly his junior, as a Lieut.-Colonel, has lately been bribed "to make an arrangement," as it is modestly called, and hold his command of a division in the Bombay Presidency for many thousand rupees. Yet these are the gentlemen who accused me of "mercenary" motives when I first commenced these letters. Only fancy any of our gallant Generals selling their distant commands! I recommend your more sagacious Indian correspondents to remember in future the excellent advice given by some learned authors to gentlemen "who live in glass houses." Such maxims are often useful to men (like them) even of profound talents.

[With all respect for the talents of our correspondent, we object most decidedly to the acrimonious passages in his letter.—ED.]

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF COOPER'S AMERICAN NAVAL HISTORY.—Continued from p. 774.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Who can respect that author, who, to screen his countrymen's misrepresentations, errors in judgment, or preconceived theories, violates with fallacy, unfairness, or prevarication, the historical page of truth and honour? This marked violation discredits Mr. Cooper's work. It is a serious charge against a gentleman of his celebrity, which I am bound to substantiate, or otherwise I shall deservedly incur the just censure of my brother writers. First, as to his unfairness in not recording the number killed on both sides. He distinctly states, in the Guerriere's action, that the Constitution had seven killed and seven wounded; but the Guerriere's killed and wounded are counted, indiscriminately, at 79. This is ungenerous and unfair, as it is impossible for the reader to ascertain the number killed of the 79—whether a half, a quarter, or a fifth. The historian cannot plead any excuse for this omission of the number killed of the British, as Commodore Hull sent to his Government the Guerriere's list of killed and wounded, viz.—15 killed and 53 wounded, of whom 17 dangerously, 19 severely, and 18 slightly. He could select from Captain Dacre's official letter the number of shot-holes in the Guerriere below the copper, but not the number killed, 15. Not in any instance has he published the fact, that the British only report the slightly wounded to obtain smart money—the Americans none but are wounded and incapable of duty. To avoid this in future, the British list also should contain none but the names of those hors de combat, those of the cataplasmed and sticking-plastered for slight hurts and cuts to be inserted in the smart-tickets only.

In the Macedonian's loss, he correctly states the number killed, 36; but, as usual, adds together the severely with the slightly wounded. He had the British Commander's letter for reference, and should have enumerated the wounded as therein described. "I find," says Captain Carden, "by this day's muster, 36 killed, three of whom lingered a short time after the battle, 36 severely wounded, many of whom cannot recover, and 32 slightly wounded, who may all do well." In the above two instances I substantiate my charge of unfairness against him. In the third instance, in the Java's loss of men, I make another charge, but more serious both against himself and his American Commodore. The Java's list of killed and wounded is signed by the surviving Commanding Officer, First Lieutenant H. D. Chads, and Mr. T. C. Jones, the Surgeon. The killed are, total 22; the wounded dangerously, total seven; wounded severely, total 52; and the wounded slightly, total 43—which give a grand total of killed and wounded, 124. Mr. Cooper says, that "the Java's loss of men, according to the British published accounts, was 22 killed and 102 wounded,—though there is good reason for supposing it was considerably greater." Why, then unnecessary, partial pervertor of truth, demonstration, and turnspit?, Receive, in my page 229, I admit, Tristram, "there may have been some discrepancy in these statements, in consequence of the great number of supernumeraries on board the Java, which is said to have had more than 400 men in her when taken, or near 100 more than her regular complement." Also, page 223, "the British accounts state the crew of the Java at 377 men, including supernumeraries. Com. Bainbridge supposes that he furloughed 261 officers, seamen, marines, and boys, exclusive of eight passengers and nine Portuguese seamen, making 378 souls. If to these be added the 22 allowed to be killed by the enemy, a total of just 400 is obtained. But it is said that a muster-list, made five days after the Java sailed, contained just 446 names."

This paragraph just serves my purpose to prove you, Mr. Cooper, your honour, and Commander Bainbridge, wilful misrepresenters of the fact.

Force of the two ships, as given in Court by Lieutenant Chads, R.N.;—

Java.	Constitution.
29 long 18-pounders.	32 long 24 pounders.
16 carronades, 32-pounders.	22 carronades, 32 pounders.
2 long 9 pounders.	1 carronade, 18-pounder.
47 guns (launch carronade *) Total, 47.	55 guns (American account, 54 †).
Ship's company and supernumeraries, 377.	Crew, 480.

* An 18-pounder carronade, belonging to the launch, was certainly on board the Java, and should have been mentioned, or the cause for its not being used publicly explained.

† Finding the Java's boat's carronade excluded, the American Officers excluded the Constitution's.

Com. Bainbridge reports to the American Secretary of the Navy, 49 guns; and Mr. Cooper, to colour this slasher, says, in page 225, marginal note, "the Java is said to have mounted 49 guns." The secret of this misrepresentation of the British force is simply this—the 46 guns of the Java spitted more death-fire than the 49 of the Guerriere, or Macedonian.

Lead the Commodore and the historian both to the bar of the British Naval and Military Gazette, to answer their friend Tristram, the impartial overlooker of American and English Naval merit or demerit, true glory or vain glory, why the Commodore reported to his Government that 60 men were killed on board the Java, in the face of the official list of killed and wounded signed by two British Officers of rank and consideration. "'Cause, Tristram, it is beneath an American's reckoning (as Hajji Baba says of a Persian's) to kill by twos, by tens, or by hundreds; so that to uphold American renown and skill in battle-slaughter, if only twos are killed, we must report to Congress TENS; if tens, HUNDREDS: thus 22 were killed on board the Java; so I multiplied 20 by 3, which gives 60 killed, 'certainly'—American generosity disdaining to calculate the odd two Britishers." Candour itself, Commodore. But how did it happen that 49 guns were reported to Congress to have been on board the Java, instead of 46 and a boat-gun? "There's no manner of reason for telling the natural truth to Congress; 'sides, the Macedonian was riding in our waters with 49 guns on board." Frankness itself; truly thou art an upright man! Another question or two, Commodore, and then we part company. By what manner of treason or reckoning did you report that the Java had in the action upwards of 400 men, when the Hornet captured the Java's prize the same afternoon with a Master's Mate and 19 men of the Java on board? "They were all the Java's men, nobody can deny; and 'tis not our country's custom to be over-particular nice in battle matters." But why not have mentioned the Java's prize? "Tarnation! that would have whipped the secret into Congress, that the Java had 20 men less than 400." Why not have reported the exact number of prisoners received from the Java herself? "'Cause that would (deducting the man who died of his wounds before the British Doctor made out his list of the slain and limbed) just have proved that the Java had 377 hands on board when we began the battle. One answer for all your crossings of our talk, writings, and printings, I will give you, and that's the 'tarnal fact Tristram. 'Tis not in the nature of an American Officer to stick out the whole almighty truth, when battling on the waters 'yond our shore-going brother Jonathan's spy-glass." American honour itself, Commodore, which may prompt you to explain the mystery of that phantom letter which you thus talked about to the Secretary of your Navy in your official letter: The enemy had 60 killed and 100 wounded, CERTAINLY!!! * * * * But by the one stolen letter written on board this ship (by one of the Officers of the Java), and accidentally found, it is evident that the enemy's wounded must have been much greater than as above stated, and who must have died of their wounds previously to their being removed. THE LISTS of STATES 60 KILLED AND 170 WOUNDED. "As to the matter of that cursed ghost of a letter, that has haunted my imagination ever since, I reckon it must have been much better if it had not been ACCIDENTALLY FOUND; and as for the infernal hand what wrote it, pity 'twere not first crossed 'TICULAR deep with a tomahawk." Leaving the curse ghost of a letter (written with blood, 60 KILLED!!!

Wi' mair o' horrible and awfu',
Which even to name is not unlawfu';

for the bloody Seattle states, 170 wounded!!!), to indite the high reputation of American veracity, I bid adieu to Commodore Bainbridge.

Let the American Naval Historian now step forth to the British Naval and Military bar of justice. Hast thou not, friend Cooper, published in page 200, that "the great inferiority of the Guerriere certainly was in her men"? Captain Dacres, whose authority on this point there is no reason to question, says, that "he mustered but 263 souls, apparently, in consequence of the absence of the Lieutenant, two Midshipmen, and a part of his people in prizes." He also admits the important fact, that "there were several Americans among his crew who refused to fight, and, much to his credit, he permitted them to go below." I have, hast thou, disputed the authority of Capt. Carden, as to the Macedonian's calibre and complement, or his list of killed and wounded? I HAVE NOT. Prithee, friend Cooper, continue to respond thus certainly. Why hast thou unfairly equivocated with the words, "It is said," three times repeated, when it became thy duty, as an impartial Naval historian, to record the particular facts in official documents, attested by the surviving Commanding Officer of the Java, Lieut. Chads, as to that ship's calibre, complement, and list of killed and wounded? Had I published the traditionary not historical facts, that the Java had but 47 guns, including the boat's useless carronade, and not 49;—that she had but 22 killed, and not 60; and that she had 20 (out of her complement, 397) in her prize-ship, the William, leaving 377 souls of all descriptions, the number certainly on board the Java in the action;—I should have subjected myself to the Lynch-law of my countrymen for disproving the authority, and thereby dishonouring the probity of an American Commodore. Then, by not publishing the facts (in the three cases mentioned) in Great Britain and in America, thou hast most wantonly caused the sacred testimony of two British Officers to be not only suspected, but disputed by every reader of thy work!!! Jonathan Fenimore Cooper, Esquire, get thee down, and read in this category the implied sentence upon thy unpardonable fallacies, and the British Navy's contempt of thy American Naval History.

COLUMBIA! where is the TEMPLE OF TRUTH in thy boasted land of "SAILORS' RIGHTS!" TRISTRAM.

DEFICIENCY OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In the Circular Memorandum from the Horse Guards, dated 20th Nov. 1839, a pointed reference is made to page 173 of the General Regulations, where we find that 1 serjeant and 1 corporal is to be considered a sufficient proportion to 19 privates. Now, let the following axioms be granted—1st, That every duty, whether under arms or of fatigue, should be superintended by a Non-commissioned Officer; 2nd, That Non-commissioned Officers should not be more hardly worked than privates; and then let us see whether this proportion will bear the test of practice. Take any Garrison you please, and you will find that the detail will require—

	Serjeant.	Corporal.	Privates
For Guard	1	1 to every 9, or
For Escort (chiefly deserters)	1		3
For Fatigues (one with the other)	1		6
Total		6

or, about one Non-commissioned Officer to every five privates.

Besides this, there must be—
A Regimental Orderly Serjeant and Corporal daily.
For each Company an Orderly Serjeant and Corporal daily.
For the Canteen an Orderly Serjeant and Corporal daily.
For the Barrack-Gate an Orderly Serjeant and Corporal daily.
And for the Punishment Drill one Non-Commiss. Officer daily.

Moreover, the time of Non-Commissioned Officers is much employed in their having charge of rooms, and being expected to appear very clean, and to set an example to the privates.

It is most clear, therefore, that this deficiency of Non-commissioned Officers must be relieved by lance promotions—which means, making corporals into serjeants, without pay, to enable them to mess with their fellows, or to dress like them; and making privates into corporals, obliging them to forego the companionship of their former comrades and friends, without any equivalent but the privilege of being hard worked, and made responsible for the delinquencies of others as well as for their own. This is surely not right. A probation of 3, or even 6 months, to ascertain the worth of the individuals, would be fair enough; but in no case is it more true that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick" than in promotion long delayed, as it generally is now.

I have left out of the question the deficiency caused by serjeants employed recruiting, and in drilling the awkward squads; and also the increased wants of a Regiment when broken into detachments, each of which becomes, in measure, a distinct head-quarters, requiring a separate Staff. Ask Lieut.-Col. Boys, whose Regiment (the 45th,) now scattered in the disturbed districts, which he would prefer, an augmentation of 200 privates, or of 25 good Non-commissioned Officers. I would propose, then, 25 an addition of 1 serjeant and 3 corporals to each company (beyond those which were given to us the other day), and I think that our Regiments would then be more effective both on parade and on service, than an increase of three times the number of privates could ever make them, at a very trifling expense to the country.

Nov. 29, 1839. A DEPOT ADJUTANT.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We have a host of pamphlets on Steam Communication with India. Each writer has his predilections, but, in one word, the difficulty of Egypt as a regular and constant mode of transit is insuperable; either till we cut a canal three miles wide from Peluzium to Suez, or have a right of way secured, of some five or six miles in width, across that peninsula, by treaty, with our own Military posts thereon. Still Egypt is far better than Syria and the Euphrates.

"G. L. S." is mistaken in regard to the "112" at "Villers en Couche:" they were Austrian Hussars. He must not rely on the "Military Chronicle," published some years since, for correct data.—An unfinished letter has reached us bearing the post-mark Mullingar; but as it is without signature or address, the writer's request cannot be complied with.—We will meet the wishes of Dr. B.—Has not "T." received a packet addressed to him on 23d ult?

We are aware of the untoward events that have occurred in the Pacific, but we do not think the publication of them would conduce to the benefit of the Naval service.

The Limerick Chronicle is correct in stating that a Colonial Allowance is now granted at Jamaica. Within a very few years the officers stationed in the West India and Ionian Islands enjoyed the profits arising from the Barrack Canteens, which, although not divided in money went largely in aid of the expenses of their mess. It might, therefore, justly be regarded in the right of Colonial or Local Allowances.

With regard to Jamaica, it is well known that some five or six years ago the Legislative body, in consequence of some misunderstanding with the authorities at home discontinued the issue of rations and other allowances to the troops stationed in that island. Very recently, however, upon representations made by the officers, the Assembly have again consented to issue certain allowances in a modified shape.

At the Cape of Good Hope, the allowances were very lately discontinued; but representations are at present, it is understood, under discussion, with a view to granting some equivalent.

A correspondent who inquires what has become of a Paymaster of a regiment of Dragoon Guards, is informed that the officer lately retired on the half-pay of Captain.

We have postponed some of our leading remarks in order to make room for the most pressing communications of correspondents, but, nevertheless, are obliged to disappoint several friends whose letters remain in type.

Our Portsmouth correspondent's letter was above weight: his attention to this point in future is requested.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 183[illegible]

WHILST discussing the prospect of affa[illegible] India on the 27th April last, and speculating o[illegible] results to be anticipated from the wise and vi[illegible] ous policy of the Governor-General, we expre[illegible] our firm conviction that the expedition under Sir John Keane would be found equal to execute in the field what had been so ably planned in the council. It was with no small gratification that we found our expectations realised.

Many of our influential contemporaries were of a different belief, and, echoing the statements of the disaffected Anglo-Indian press, earnestly engaged in magnifying the difficulties to be encountered, in moving an army so far beyond the frontier, through a mountainous sterile [illegible] inhabited by warlike tribes, devoted to a life reported as the most able and inveterately hostile that our troops had ever encountered in that hemisphere.

The complete success of the expedition, so wisely planned and skilfully executed, appears to have produced anything but a grateful effect upon these journalists. Such as do not "damn with faint praise" are altogether silent upon the subject. These have thought it sufficient to publish Sir John Keane's despatch with little or no comment, leaving it to right-judging people of the present day, and the future historian, to discover the merit which, with all their political inveteracy, they think it discreditable to deny; whilst those of ultra principles, who can see no merit in any act that does not redound to the interest of their own party, have now discovered that the march was attended with few difficulties, the fierce Affghans a feeble race of cowards, and the terrible Dost Mohamed himself but a cur!

The fortress and citadel of Ghuznee, hitherto reputed impregnable and always considered as one of the strongest holds in India, and which Sir John Keane describes in his despatch as much stronger in reality than he had been led to suppose, is now represented in the light of an Ashantee village, and the storming and capture of the place, which the veteran General describes as "one of the most brilliant acts it had ever been his lot to witness during a service of forty-five years in the four quarters of the globe," is worthy of little more than a passing comment.

It was well observed by a morning contempo[illegible] days since, that the importa[illegible] of this [illegible] her we consider its present [illegible], is worthy of a more com[illegible] on than has yet been bestow[illegible] are its effects apparent in [illegible] with a[illegible], with the Courts of Nepa[illegible] which, presuming upon our failure, had assu[illegible] a hostile attitude; but, above all, upon the policy of Russia, by confounding the politics and frustrating the knavish tricks of that insidious and intriguing power.

Whatever influence this event may have upon the prospects of parties at home, we care nothing; whether it shall exalt the prospects of the one or depress the prospects of the other, is a matter of total indifference to us, compared to the apprehension that for this, or any purpose, the due meed of public applause and congratulation—of fame and reward—should be withheld from the soldiers who so gallantly executed, in defiance of all obstructions, the intention that had been so wisely planned; and it is, therefore, with no small pleasure we perceive it announced that rewards [illegible] titles are intended to mark the approbation of Sovereign and the country for this brilliant important service.

Our neighbours, particularly the French, are obnoxious to the charge of vaunting the deeds of their fleets and armies somewhat extravagantly. This may be a national reflection, or a fault; it is a venial one; and, indeed, the time [illegible] very distant, when the exploit of Sir John Ke[illegible] would have been applauded by every portion [illegible] the English press in terms which could not fail to uphold the national spirit, and excite emulation in our aspiring youth to attain the like renown. If the French run into one extreme, our party predilections appear to have produced another, and [illegible]ether blinded us to the merit of acts the [illegible]ess of which redound to the credit of our political rivals. This is a bad and un-English state of feeling, and we trust, for the honour of our common country, that it may soon pass away, or at all events cease to be manifested in the manner it has been displayed of late, and particularly upon the occasion of the late brilliant exploit performed by troops of the British and Native Army in India.

WE have seen a copy of the Admiralty Regulations with respect to the appointments of Mates of the Royal Navy to the situation of Chief Officers of the Coast Guard, and the following is an extract:—

"All Mates of 5 years' actual service, either in the Royal Navy or Revenue Service, will be eligible to be Chief Officers of the Coast-Guard, provided they have been employed within 3 years.

"Their promotion will be on precisely the same footing as other officers now employed in the Coast-Guard Service.

"They will be allowed to return to the Naval Service with the sanction of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, provided they be found in all respects fit and desirable for active duty.

"Such Mates are to be classed with the Mates of Revenue Cruizers in the annual recommendation for promotion.

WE sincerely regret to announce the dismissal by Court-Martial of Paymaster Dunlevie, of the 98th Foot. Last week we alluded to the case in our Notes to Correspondents, and expressed a hope that Mr. Dunlevie would be allowed the benefit of the sale of his commission; but nothing of the kind is held out in the order communicated to the Major-General commanding the Northern District. Paymaster Dunlevie has nearly completed twenty-seven years' service, of which twenty-six years have been on full-pay. As [illegible]sign he served the campaign of 1814 in Ho[illegible]d, including the attack on the village of [illegible]sem, bombardment of Antwerp and storm[illegible]f Bergen-op-Zoom, where he was severely [illegible]nded through the left arm and left side; and he was present on the 16th, 17th, and 18th June, 1815, at Waterloo. The irregularity in his accounts, we believe, do not affect his personal honour and character as a gentleman, and we therefore hope his long services will be favourably considered by the authorities. To us he is a perfect stranger, but it is our province to plead the cause of the Military veteran.

The result of the Court-Martial on Assistant-Surgeon Faulis, 20th Foot, is, as we have all along anticipated, an admonition.

SEVERAL communications have reached us with reference to our recent notices of the very inadequate remuneration under the head of contingent allowance, and which presses more particularly upon Officers of the junior ranks. The express object for which this allowance is made not being distinctly understood, seems to be the basis upon which the grievance rests,—if, for the keeping in repair the arms, which we believe to have been the original intention, the allowance, which varies from [illegible] to two shillings per diem, per company, would [illegible]o means be inadequate; but, unfortunately [illegible]y, from the name it bears—"contingent,"—[illegible]st everything is construed as having a legitimate claim upon this allowance—stationery to wit, and the heavy burden of all debts arising from soldiers dying or deserting when in debt to the Crown, besides sundry other trifling things which the Commanding Officer may say, in the plenitude of his power,—"Oh, let that go against the contingent." Indeed, so indistinctly are the items which have a just claim upon this allowance pointed out, that the Commanding Officer would be justified in bringing almost anything against it,—vide page 132 of Her Majesty's Regulations: "In the absence of the Captain, the Subaltern Officer, appointed to command the troop or company, is entitled to the contingent allowance for the time being, and the same is to be appropriated accordingly under the authority of the Officer commanding the regiment." It is here that the word accordingly wants so much to be defined;—according to what? Now, when it is acknowledged what some of these demands are that are made upon this allowance—the number of desertions that take place in some of our colonies and the deaths in others, it must be very evident that the Officer, out of his scanty pittance, annually refunds a portion of it, through this indirect means, back to the Government. This is not right; and if an allowance is to be made, a just average ought to be taken, and the objects having legitimately a claim upon such allowance distinctly laid down, or do away with it altogether, and have a debtor and creditor account kept with the Paymaster of the regiment of the contingencies of the company, and the balance either paid by him to the Officer, or by the Officer to him, to be credited to the Government annually. This debtor and creditor account could be squared and handed over from one Officer to another on taking charge of the company. Were this plan adopted, we much suspect the Government would find they would have little to receive at the end of the year, and the Officer would be safe, he being secured from all loss; but, at present, for an Officer to pay out of his private means any sum that a soldier may die indebted to the country presses hard upon him; while, on the other hand, should the soldier die, leaving any property, without willing away the same, or having next of kin, it is immediately credited to the Government, even if it were but the fractional part of a penny.

To grant an allowance of 1*s.* 6*d.* or 2*s.* per diem to meet all the demands at present brought against the contingent is absurd, inasmuch as it is by no means adequate, and is unjust and hard upon the Officer, and may therefore well come under the head of "Military Grievance."

In fact, the present contingent allowance is a mercantile transaction—a bargain forced upon the Officer, evidently to his disadvantage, and therefore a grievance that requires to be remedied.

Accredited agents from the French Government are now in England, with full authority to contract for steam-engines of from 300 to 500-horse power, regardless of expense, so that the manufacture is of first-rate excellence. We understand contracts have already been entered into with the celebrated firms of Messrs. Fawcett, of Liverpool, and Miller and Ravenhill, of London.

In the Naval and Military Gazette of 28th September, we called attention to the new edition of a very valuable little Military brochure on Courts-Martial &c., by the Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland, Colonel D'Aguilar. We were, however, compelled at that time to limit our extracts from the work to the observations on the practice and constitution of Courts of Enquiry; and we now, therefore, return to it with the view of giving the opinions of that very experienced officer, with reference to the Good-Conduct Warrant of the 9th May last—opinions that deserve the mature consideration of every Commanding Officer, who, as Lord Hill observes in his Circular of the 12th June, incurs a heavy responsibility under this Warrant, in estimating offences, and disposing thereof. On the one hand, he is bound to take heed lest he deprive the soldier, who looks to him for protection, of a permanent and substantial boon, by recording against him in the Regimental Defaulter Book any of those several errors or faults which even men of general good character may sometimes commit; and which, although necessarily subjecting him to some punishment, should not deprive him of the advantages he would otherwise derive from his general good conduct. Cases of this kind are wisely provided for in the fifth paragraph below:—

"The Author is aware that, in giving full and practical effect to the foregoing instructions, it is not easy to lay down precise rules for the observance of Commanding Officers upon points that are manifestly left to a certain extent to their discretion. It seems obvious, however, that a principle of general uniformity should exist in the distribution of regimental offences, as well as in the monthly returns of them that are transmitted to General Officers commanding Districts.

"With this view, the Author is of opinion that the whole of the offences committed during the month should be included in those returns, and that separate columns should be given for such of them as have been entered in the Troop or Company Defaulter Book, and such as have been entered in the Regimental Defaulter Book.

"The principle which governs these entries must be left, to a certain extent, to the discretion of Commanding Officers, care being taken that the name of every soldier who, in consequence of any misconduct, shall have been subjected to any punishment beyond six days' drill, or seven days' confinement to barracks, shall be invariably inserted in the latter—that is, in the Regimental Defaulter Book.

"With regard to Drunkenness, it will be remembered that it is not now considered imperative to bring a soldier to trial for "habitual drunkenness," on the commission of the precise number of acts of drunkenness specified in the 81st Article of War. It is left open to Commanding Officers to decide when an example shall be deemed necessary.

"It appears, therefore, that circumstances may exist where an act of accidental inebriety off duty, unattended by other irregularity of any kind, is so far outweighed in the old soldier, by long previous good conduct—and in the young recruit by total inexperience—as to justify a Commanding Officer in dealing with it as a minor offence in the first instance, and confining its insertion to the Troop or Company Defaulter Book, care being taken that the ground for such exception is duly recorded.

"In all trials for 'habitual drunkenness,' the Author is of opinion that the Regimental Defaulter Book, (or where it cannot be produced without inconvenience to the service, a verified extract therefrom) can alone be considered the best evidence, and it is doubly incumbent, therefore, that the insertion in that book of each offence which is destined to operate upon the most important interests of the soldier, should be made with the utmost circumspection and deliberation.

"It seems also to the Author a general and a reasonable principle, that the entry of each offence—whether in the Troop or Company, or in the Regimental Defaulter Book, should be made to correspond with the character of the punishment inflicted."

As, according to the New Establishment, regiments are now to be 880 strong (rank and file), we will beg to draw the particular attention of the authorities at the Horse Guards to the multifarious and onerous duties of the Depot Adjutants.

In the first place, this officer has to superintend the raising and drilling of recruits for the entire regiment: he will probably never have less than 60 or 70 recruits (to say nothing of two or three young officers) at drill at one time, and the greater part of the drill instructors he must create and instruct himself. He has to keep the records and documents of the entire regiment, and to prepare the same returns precisely as if they were at home; and, in fact, he has to perform every duty which is ever required of a regimental Adjutant. In addition, he has to conduct a somewhat extensive correspondence with the Service Companies on matters connected with them, which are always referred by the Horse Guards through the depot. He has to furnish the Service Companies with copies of all returns, &c.; to transmit with each draft, sent abroad, copies of their services, Courts-Martial, defaulters, records, &c.; and his returns are also much embarrassed by the constant transfer of men sent home and drafts sent abroad, which make them not a little complicated. Further, a great proportion of the non-commissioned officers of a depot are absent, either recruiting or abroad (as all promotions take place with the Service Companies, and delays then occur in sending the promoted men home), and half the Subalterns of a depot are recruits at drill.

Now, we believe it will be conceded, that the duties of a regimental Adjutant of a corps at home are quite sufficient to engage the best energies of the most competent officer; it might, therefore, be imagined, that a Depot Adjutant would have the best assistance, and would be a most carefully-selected officer, who would enjoy adequate advantages. Let us draw a comparison.

The Regimental Adjutant has the pick of the regiment for his Serjeant-Major and Orderly-room Clerk, and the latter is entitled (after a probation) to reckon service as a Serjeant, and the Adjutant is assisted by having the best men that can be found as Pay-Serjeants of companies and in the different Staff situations.

The Depot Adjutant has for his Staff an untried Serjeant-Major and Quartermaster-Serjeant,—the Pay-Serjeants are, for the most part, made out of any invalids that are too old and stupid for foreign service; his Orderly-room Clerk can reckon no service as a Serjeant; his drill instructors he must create himself out of his own recruits; and, to crown all, he only holds his situation for two years, a period quite insufficient to enable him to obtain even an insight into his duties, and the expense of his outfit in horse and appointments about doubles any emolument that he could possibly derive from his appointment in that time.

These things require no comment!

The Court.

The Queen, we are happy to say, has recovered from her recent indisposition. Her Majesty will hold a Privy Council on Monday afternoon. The members will afterwards have the honour of dining with Her Majesty.

The Queen Dowager, attended by her suite, returned to Marlborough House on Saturday, from a visiting tour [illegible]

The Queen has been pleased to grant the dignity of a Baron to Lieut.-General Sir John Colborne, G.C.B., by the title of Baron Seaton, of Seaton, in the county of Devon.

Despatches, dated 12th ult., were received on Monday at the Foreign Department from Lord Howard de Walden, the British Ambassador at Lisbon; and from the British Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid: also at the Colonial Department, from Mr. Thomson, the Governor of Canada; from the Right Hon. S. Mackenzie, Governor of Ceylon; from Sir H. Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands; from Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada; and from Colonel Reid, Governor of Bermuda. On Wednesday despatches were received from Sir Charles Metcalfe, Governor of Jamaica, and the other Governors of the West India Colonies. On Thursday, despatches were forwarded for the British Ambassadors at Vienna, Berlin, Hanover, Naples, Switzerland, Greece, and Rome.

The meeting of Parliament is fixed for Tuesday, 14th January.

Several Cabinet Councils have been held during the week, and have been attended by all the members at present in town.

The Queen and Prince Albert.—It became necessary for Her Majesty to indicate her preference for Prince Albert sufficiently to make him acquainted with the Royal partiality, and so put affairs in train for the arrangements which we now officially know are in progress. This was a delicate task, but the Queen acquitted herself of it with equal delicacy and tact. At one of the palace balls she took occasion to present Prince Albert with her bouquet, and the hint was not lost on the gallant German. His close uniform, buttoned up to the throat, did not admit of his placing the Persian Rose gift where it would be most honoured; and he immediately drew his penknife and ripped a slit in his dress nearest his heart, where he gracefully deposited the happy omen. Again, to announce the projected union to the Privy Council was an easy duty to that of intimating it to the principal party concerned; and we understand that here also our Sovereign Lady displayed unusual presence of mind and female ingenuity. The Prince was expressing the grateful sense he entertained of his reception in England, and the delight he had experienced from the kind attentions shown to him during his stay, when the Queen naturally put the question upon which their future lives so much depended—"If your Highness is pleased with the country, would you wish to remain in it?" Who can doubt the reply?—Literary Gazette.

We have much pleasure in stating that the health of the Duke of Wellington has been improving ever since his arrival at Strathfieldsaye.

The Marquess and Marchioness of Douro have given up their intention of visiting the Continent for the present. The Marquess, Viscount Ossulston, and Lord Tullamore, are now on a shooting excursion in Scotland.

The Earl of Minto will leave the Admiralty the week after next, for Minto-house, Roxburghshire, to join the Countess and family. The noble Earl will return to town on the meeting of Parliament, when the parties at the Admiralty will commence.

The Marquess of Breadalbane is the new Lord Lieutenant of Argyllshire.

The Earl of Cardigan has very handsomely caused two fine stags to be brought to Canterbury from his splendid domain in Northamptonshire, to afford the East Kent gentry the recreation of stag-hunting during the present season.

Lord Brougham's only daughter died at Brighton on Saturday evening. She had been in bad health for a long time.

The Special Commission at Monmouth will be opened on the 10th inst.

A deputation from the merchants of London, connected with the Canadas, waited on Sir John Colborne last Saturday, to congratulate him on his safe arrival, and to present their most cordial thanks for the eminent services performed by him in Canada, to which they were mainly indebted for the preservation of the colony to the Crown of Great Britain, and to acknowledge also his uniform kindness to the poor emigrants as they reached his province.—Brighton Gazette.

Death of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry.—This event, which has been for some time anticipated from the evident breaking-up of the Bishop's constitution, will occasion deep and extensive regret. His Lordship expired on Wednesday at the Episcopal Palace, Lichfield.

A madman of the name of Stockledge, from Manchester, was apprehended [illegible] attempting to enter Windsor Castle.

Viscount [illegible] more remarkable for gallantry than wit, [illegible] visit his friends in Wiltshire. The friend has a fit of the gout. The Viscount pursues the sports of the field alone, or rather accompanied only by quadrupeds. In his wanderings, he stumbles upon an adventure which almost paralyses him; he meets a lady pursuing, like himself, the amusement of knocking down partridges. She is beautiful as an angel. Our Viscount makes the acquaintance of the modern Diana, as he thinks. She is the daughter of a neighbouring squire; the old manor-house in sight is the paternal mansion; an only daughter; rich, surpassing rich, the senior! The Viscount is poor, and a wife with wealth would serve to repair his shattered fortune, if not his constitution! Again and again the enamoured lord meets his fair enslaver; he tells his name, his rank, and begs to be permitted to throw himself at the feet of his adored one's sire, and offer himself as a son-in-law. This the lady of the gun refuses to allow. Her parent is singular—odd—would not allow a stranger to enter his doors. Alas! they might meet in happier times, and the fair one vanishes; the lord pursues, but in vain, for he is fifty! He mentions to his gouty friend his adventure with Miss Wright! no such name is known to him; had never heard of such a person. It is very singular! The Viscount describes the house, but his friend is still at a loss—the Viscount is a bad describer. So passed the third day's dinner. In the evening, the gout being better, the pair proceeded to the little town of B——, where a company of travelling comedians are then performing, and enter the theatre. The Viscount looks round; he sees his enslaver; he points her out to his friend, who rouses the theatre with his hearty laugh. The Viscount inquires; his friend replies. O romance! O adventure! where are ye now? The manor-house is the depot of the —nd; the lady holds Brevet rank as wife to the gallant Commander. This story got wind, and the Viscount is now ruralising in the Isle of Wight.—Court Journal.

Sir J. M. Doyle.—At the London Tavern on Thursday night, a public entertainment was given to Maj.-Gen. Sir J. M. Doyle, K.C.B., by the civil, naval, and military claimants on Portugal, arising out of the war for the recovery of Donna Maria da Gloria's throne. The chair was taken by Col. Bristow. The usual loyal toasts were given from the chair, and very warmly responded to.

Daniel O'Connell.—To-morrow, 8th Dec., a simultaneous collection will be made throughout Ireland for the annual tribute to O'Connell. Great exertions are being made to render it successful, for it is stated on authority that he is heavily embarrassed. O'Connell demands, through his secretary and agent, the specific sum of 25,000*l.*; and, hinting at the extreme moderation of the demand, intimates that double that amount would go nearer to satisfy his wants: "Ie. each had from 1,000,000 of persons would achieve 50,000*l.*; and be it remembered, the liberals of Ireland exceed 7,000,000."

Morgan O'Connell, M.P. (second son of Daniel), succeeds to the office of Register of Deeds, void by Mr. Kildahl's death. Mr. O'Connell will, of course, leave a vacancy for the representation of Meath.

On Monday, in the Court of Common Pleas, Mr. Currie, Army Clothier, Regent-street, recovered damages (200*l.*) in an action against Mr. Almond, accoutrement-maker, Bond-street, for assault and imprisonment, in taking him before the Magistrates at Marlborough-street Office, on a disputed bill transaction.

Hereditary Luck.—The prize of a lac of rupees in the Calcutta lottery has fallen conjointly to Richard Willis, Esq., son of General Willis, commanding the Northern Division of the Army, and Captain Stuart, who is the General's son-in-law. It is a singular instance of good fortune that Gen. Willis should himself have drawn the lac in a Bombay lottery some years ago.—Bombay Paper.

Died, on Monday evening last, at Breybury, the seat of Viscount Beresford, Henry Phillip Hope, Esq., a gentleman of not less exquisite taste in the fine arts than of illimitable extent of amiable and charitable feelings. His habits were shy to excess; but from the poor and the needy he never turned that countenance which was the index of his incomparable heart. His charities knew no bounds, and his wealth was amply subservient to his wishes. A few years before his death he became possessed of a large fortune by the death of an uncle in Holland, and he nobly distributed it, in thirds, between his two nephews and himself. In later life he lived within a large mansion in Connaught-place. He died a bachelor, in his 61st year. His private worth overflowed with incessant demonstration of affectionate solicitude and support.

SPAIN.—Cabrera is resolved to continue the struggle from which Don Carlos has withdrawn. He has under his orders 30,000 well-armed and disciplined soldiers, with eighty-seven pieces of artillery, and abundance of provisions and ammunition. The bad season paralyses the operations of his adversary.

ALGIERS.—Abd-El-Kader, alarmed by the Duke of Orleans' recent excursion through the interior, and probably considering this armed expedition as a breach of the treaty of the Tafna, which placed certain limits to French occupation east and south of Algiers, has proclaimed a holy war against the infidels. In a letter to Maréchal Valée, dated 18th ult., he announced that peace was at an end, and that he was prepared for war. Partial attacks immediately commenced, and the Arabs of the Emir passed the river Chiffa, the boundary of the French province of Algiers on the west. On the 20th, two detachments, of thirty men each, left the camp of Bouffarick for two neighbouring posts with cars and provisions. One was completely cut off and killed, the cars and mules taken; the other escaped with the loss of its Commander only. On the 21st, 1500 Arab horse passed the Chiffa, when the Commandant of the post of the river Lalley marched with 200 soldiers to attack them. The Arabs did not shun the combat, and being too many for their foes, the French endeavoured to form a square, but in vain. They were routed and cut to pieces, leaving their Commander and 105 officers and men dead. Similar attacks were made on other points of the French fortified frontier. Late letters from Algiers represent all the French farms of the plain of the Metidja as ravaged and burned by about 4000 mounted Arabs, who have decapitated about 800 French. Col. Lamoricière had already taken revenge on the Hadjouts, whom he has beaten near Bouffarick, taking 100 horse.

UNITED STATES.—The last three years' war with England, the most powerful nation in the world, cost the United States about 90,000,000 dollars. The three years' war in Florida, with a remnant tribe of Seminole Indians and a few runaway negroes, has cost us 40,000,000 dollars, or nearly half the whole expense of our war with England. In the war with England, our Navy and Army, after covering themselves with glory, achieved an honourable peace. The war against the miserable Indians and negroes was wickedly commenced, has been ingloriously conducted, and threatens to be interminable. There is not in the history of wars among civilised nations, a parallel for the wantonness, imbecility, and corruption, which distinguish this humiliating, dishonourable, infamous crusade.—New York paper.

Literary Notices.

Henry of Guise; or, the States of Blois. By G. P. R. James, Esq., author of "The Robber," "The Gentleman of the Old School," &c. 3 vols. Longman.

A VEIL of impenetrable mystery has hitherto shaded, and must for ever shade, the motives of much that was strange in the conduct of Henry of Guise, the great leader of the "League" formed by his brother the Cardinal, and the determined champion of the Roman Catholic religion in France. Conjecture, therefore, and imagination, have ample scope for exertion; and thus the character of the Duke of Guise affords, throughout his turbulent, ambitious, and extraordinary career, a fine subject for the writer of historic romance. And it could not have fallen into abler hands than those of Mr. James, whose extensive conversancy with French history pre-eminently qualified him for the task. Henry of Guise forms an admirable nucleus, around which to form, from the material of the time—from the persons and events of a most stirring period—an intensely interesting plot, with strange and striking developments of character. Mr. James has rendered ample justice to his theme. With King Henry III., the Queen Catherine de Medici, the Duke and Cardinal de Guise, Villequier the minister, Epernon the favourite, and other real personages of the time, he has achieved all that could be desired; and then, to give increased effect to the narrative, as a work of fiction, he has called in the aid of ideal characters—beings of his own creation. For instance, Marie de Clairvaut, a niece and ward of the Duke—the Brothers Gaspar, and Charles de Montsoreau, rival lovers of the lady—the Abbé de Boisguerin, tutor of the brothers, and also having designs upon Marie de Clairvaut—Gondrin, a huntsman, devoted to the Duke of Guise—Iguati, an Italian, the Duke's page—Orbi, an Italian bravo, &c. From the commencement to the close, incidents arise and follow each other in rapid succession, and the story teems with unflagging interest.

Speaking generally, we doubt the propriety of encouraging the manufacture of what are strictly styled historical romances; understanding thereby tales of which [illegible] or many of the principal incidents and characters are such as have actually occurred and existed, as is the case in Sir Walter Scott's Quentin Durward, &c., and not those in which, though connected and influenced by actual events, as in the same great writer's Redgauntlet, most of the personages, and their sayings and doings, are understood to be altogether imaginary. Our reasons for this doubt, in which we are by no means singular, may be readily imagined to arise from the proneness of authors to sacrifice time, place, and character, sometimes in recklessness, sometimes in ignorance, to their own immediate convenience,—thereby confounding in the minds of those who read many of such productions the truth of history with fiction; and this the rather as we believe there are not a few who scarce read history in any other shape, which is the less to be wondered at, as the backneying of its most attractive passages, by constantly weaving them into "Tales," deprives its drier intervals of the full benefit of their natural relief. We do not, indeed, forget that Scott himself, in one of his prefaces, has combated such objections with considerable force; but although we would admit of some exceptions, and, above all, should be grieved to have missed his own extraordinary efforts of genius in this peculiar line of composition, abounding as some of them do with anachronisms and other errors as to fact—fully aware, moreover, that an interesting work of this kind will incite many to rub up their previous historical recollections, or to acquire knowledge which they may have neglected,—we still opine that, in the general, these productions not only tend to the confused recollection of historical events and characters, but rather detract from than add to the force and effect of many a romantic event of years gone by, more wonderful than aught that the most teeming brain has yet invented, by stripping them of the sometimes eloquent, and often simply forcible, style of the original narrators, to dress them in the flimsy and frequently meretricious ornaments with which the current language of modern fictitious literature abounds, frequently, to our thinking (if the illustration be not too far fetched), producing something of the same effect upon the mind, which the quadrille composers, who, by mutilation and torture, popularise the finest works of the best composers (however unfitted) to their own saltatory purposes, inflict upon the ear of those acquainted with the original airs.

Still, whatever may be our objection to this branch of literature, we infinitely prefer the historical romance to the Newgate Calendar tales, now so popular—(although this, as in the case of Jack Sheppard, may respect real personages, entitled, like that worthy, to be described as they really were, and which in his case has not been done)—or to the mere inanity and nothingness of the generality of what are called fashionable novels; and, in Parliamentary phrase, we must protest against being understood, in our former remarks, to have uttered aught of personality against Mr. James, who is well known as, if not absolutely the first, certainly one of the first, of our living authors of this class, and as we think the present work will certainly not detract from his fame, he may pass as one of the exceptions which we have admitted ourselves disposed to allow.

Excursions in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, &c. By Robert Bremner. 2 vols. Henry Colburn.

MR. BREMNER'S excellent work on Russia must be so fresh in the recollection of our readers, and his many rare and valuable qualifications as a traveller so justly appreciated, that our task in noticing his new volumes is as easy as it is agreeable; especially as the "Excursions in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden" in fact formed an integral part of the same extensive tour which gave occasion for the work on Russia; the latter portion being published first, on account of the excitement which at that time existed about everything connected with the internal state of the Russian empire.

The present volumes form the commencement of the tour, and carry us over about sixteen hundred miles of some of the most interesting and important countries in the world, making us acquainted not only with everything of note which presents itself to the bodily senses, but with much connected with the manners, habits, and political and social condition of the people, which could only have been obtained by very shrewd observation, aided by other advantages of introduction, &c., which few travellers possess.

As there is no particular topic which is allowed to take a decided lead in these volumes, and as every one is treated with that candour and good sense which are the characteristics of Mr. Bremner as a traveller, it may readily be supposed that the work is as entertaining as it is useful. From the highest political interests of the countries treated of, down to the simplest minutiæ of their agricultural and other industrial pursuits, all are touched upon with a rapid but a keen glance, and all are treated with that fearless honesty and open good faith, in the absence of which books of travel are but works of fiction under another and more dangerous form. Moreover, the various and solid information conveyed in these volumes is by far the most recent that can now be obtained; a very important point, at a period when change is so rife in every country, and in the northern countries of Europe more than in any others.

The first volume of these "Excursions" occupies itself with Holstein, Denmark, and the West Coast of Sweden,—including a steam-boat trip among the Danish Islands, and a residence in the capital of Denmark and the chief towns, of sufficient length to allow of all their noticeable features being visited and described. In this volume the personal details respecting the celebrated Danish sculptor Thorwaldsen, and also those respecting our extraordinary countryman Mr. Lloyd, the author of "Field Sports of the North of Europe," are full of interest and curiosity.

The second volume comprises Excursions in Norway and along the East Coast of Sweden, with a lengthened residence in the capital of Bernadotte, and a large body of highly interesting and valuable information, as well as amusing anecdote, relating to that extraordinary man and truly excellent and enlightened monarch. The most attractive portions of this volume will undoubtedly be found to consist of those which relate to Charles John and his family.

The work concludes with two chapters of a supplementary nature, but of much interest, one of them giving the details of a visit to the Laplanders, and the other of a sportsman's notes on his tours in Norway and Sweden, with advice to his brother sportsmen on the sporting capabilities of those countries.

These volumes are printed uniform with the author's "Excursions in Russia;" and, in fact, the four volumes may now be looked upon as one complete work, offering a body of information indispensable to every one who desires to possess clear and just notions of the existing condition of Northern Europe.

Western India in 1838. By Mrs. Postans, author of "Cutch." 2 Vols. Saunders and Otley.

Mrs. Postans justly remarks—

"Of the great and varied beauties of the natural scenery of India some vague ideas may have been formed; but of its social condition, of its agricultural capabilities, of its vegetable productions, of its geological formations, of its necessities as an empire, or of its value as a colony, little indeed is generally understood; and as it is by recorded facts alone, that opinions can be formed, and good arise, it is, I think, to be regretted that so few among us chronicle our experiences of Indian life. Every individual who visits India, whether his sojourn is for a brief or a lengthened period, whether he possess the pen of an accomplished writer, or a more humble talent, that of careful observation, may yet afford some valuable information if he but faithfully describe all that may have interested or attracted his attention; and this, without any reference to the degree of literary ability which he may possess, inasmuch as facts remarkable gems, which, although improved by a graceful setting, are yet recognised as jewels of intrinsic worth, even when surrounded by the rude rough and unpolished metal.

"India (she adds) is making very rapid advances in general improvement; and although the mass of the people yet unhappily remain sunk in the deepest barbarism, a change is taking place among the gentry, which will produce results of the highest interest. In the present work, I have endeavoured to sketch the commencement of this change, and to represent some portions of Western India as I have seen them; leaving it to the pens of others, more capable for the task, to follow up the work, and by tracing the causes and effects of such a change, to afford a valuable addition to our present knowledge of India, and of the means by which her condition may be efficiently improved."

Mrs. Postans is a woman possessing too much good sense to think of publishing aught that is worthless, or without interest; but we cannot abstain from the remark, that we have sought in vain, throughout these volumes, for the originality of thought, the perspicacity of observation, the accuracy and purity of diction, the simple elegance and grace of style, by which her work on "Cutch" was pre-eminently distinguished. It seems, indeed, as though the presiding spirit of taste which had hovered around her, and directed her pen during the composition of that charming performance, had deserted her on the present occasion. Success, deserved as it was, should not have rendered her regardless of the agrémens of art in subsequent efforts. However, there is considerable information, and much to be gleaned even in the volumes before us. The following remarks on the native soldiery are well suited to our columns:—

"The Horse-guard regulations uphold the system of arraying all our foreign troops after the English model: still it would seem impossible to see the finely-made sepoy of a native regiment in the simple but exquisitely graceful dress of his country, without lamenting the etiquette or toilette he is constrained to observe in conformance with our military mandate. The regiments of Western India are principally supplied from the Deckan, and the Mahrattis are consequently handsome and powerful men. In speaking of mere costume, however, that of a Hindostan sepoy is most particularly distinguished for its actual and picturesque effect. The complexion of these men is unusually fair for Asiatics; and their figures seem cast in the most symmetrical of nature's moulds. The easy grace with which the tasteful attire of the Indian soldier is worn, is combined with an inexpressible dignity of manner, indicative of high caste, and produced by a train of conducive satisfactions, and well-recognised distinctions, influencing the native mind. When, however, the silken sash, with its pendant sleeves, the well-draped dopatta, and the graceful turban are laid aside for the uniform of a mercenary in the British service, the character of the sepoy appears to undergo a change, and his general aspect becomes that of a very secondary description, inviting in a state of passive indifference to all that concerns his family, his country, and himself. A comparison will readily suggest the idea, that the full equipment of our English military dress must prove a severe infliction of discomfort to the native soldier, being equally ill suited to his habits, his physical structure, and the climate in which he serves. Not the least inconvenience to the sepoy, however, is that of being compelled, in conjunction with red coats, stocks, and belts, to adopt our heavy shoes, in exchange for the light, easy, Egyptian-looking sandal. The thick heels and strong leather that and encumber their feet, and fatally destroy the graceful bearing and confirmed step, for which natives of good caste are eminently remarkable.

"When the thermometer rises to 110 deg., the red coat is, by a merciful dispensation, exchanged for one of a similar form, made of white long cloth; but the belt, the stock, and the cap remain; and the poor fellows can scarcely rejoice in the intended benefit, from the labour it costs to keep their snowy vesture unstained, or to restore its original purity. The sepoy is his own washerman; and as the wells, or probably a river, may be situated at some distance from the regimental lines, the ablutory process forms both a troublesome and fatiguing accession of daily duty.

* * * * *

"The sepoys are well drilled, and at a review, or on parade, do not suffer much by a comparison with our British troops. I remember to have particularly remarked this at Poonah, on occasion of the presentation of colours to the European regiment, when the 4th Dragoons and several regiments of Artillery were also present. The native troops looked well, marched well, and played their part in the military spectacle with admirable precision; while the hundred city of the Peishwah in the distance, and the gilded domes of Parbuttee, served to recall vivid recollections of the gallant and intrepid manner in which the sepoys defended our power in the Deckan, and made good our possessions, even against the princes of their own people. In those times, the value of the native troops was well understood; and Sir Arthur Wellesley has yielded a just and well-earned tribute to their bravery, fidelity, and good discipline. The good conduct of the sepoys has not only proved eminently valuable when opposed to their own countrymen, but it will be remembered that we have never hesitated to bring them into the field against foreign enemies, even against the French tacticians, and their well-drilled army, whom, on one occasion, the native troops succeeded in wresting, after our other soldiery had been repeatedly driven back.

"These remarks are not by any means intended as an attempted examination of the military capacity or physical power of British and Indian troops; but simply to prove, that, considering his duties, his position, and the possessions he defends, the sepoy is most valuable, and deserves the highest encouragement and consideration which a liberal government can possibly award him. Too much indeed, cannot, I think, be said in support of the interests of our native troops, who, however apathetic they may appear in the monotonous discharge of mere garrison duty, have, on occasions of urgent necessity, behaved with a bravery, fidelity, and unmurmuring endurance of hunger and fatigue, worthy our best opinions; but which, it is to be regretted, is seldom justly lauded, unless when such emergencies arise. * *

"It has been objected to by some, that the differences of religious opinion between European officers and the native tends to create a barrier between them, and prohibits the tie of attachment and respect which should always exist in minds of the soldier towards his immediate commander. Inclined to believe this opinion to have been interred, rather knowledge of the differences which exist in the social cust. of Europeans and Asiatics, than from personal observation, the acquaintance with native peculiarities. The knowledge the sepoys of a regiment acquire, concerning the character of their British officers, is remarkable for its accuracy and justness. An amiable, respectable man, is universally esteemed in proof of which, they request his assistance in difficulties, make him their referee in cases of dispute among themselves, invite him to their festivals, and treat him on all occasions with that sort of confiding respect, which is, perhaps, of all others, the most becoming feeling they can possibly display towards the representatives of a power acknowledged as the native soldier's best protection.

"An instance of personal attachment from a company of sepoys, to an officer of their corps, came under my observation only a short time since, and is worth relating, as its sincerity was proved, by overcoming one of the most powerful prejudices connected with the Brahminical code. It is well known that none but outcaste Hindus, with who are compelled to live outside the cities, and whose very shadow is held as pollution by one of the priestly order, will come in contact with a corpse, or prepare it for interment. An officer of the 16th N.I., a remarkably amiable and religious man, whose character was well known and justly appreciated, died of fever soon after his return to the regiment, after an absence of two years on sick certificate. On his death being known, the sepoys of the 16th, men of high caste, went to his house, entreating permission to see him; their request complied with, several remained with the corpse, prepared it for interment, and finally bore the coffin, first to the church, and afterwards to the grave."

We are glad to find the opinions of Mrs. Postans of the qualities of the Hindu characters, with reference to intellect, temper, disposition, &c., extremely favourable.

In the second volume, the description of "the mount of Girnar, with the rock of the ancient inscriptions," is graphically and vividly interesting. So, also, is the ample account of the court of His Highness the Nawaub, at Junagarh; and, more especially, the writer's description of her presented visits to the harem, and of her very delightful intercourse with its inmates. From the former we select a few descriptive paragraphs:—

"On arriving at the city of Junagarh,* about a week after leaving Joonah, the cloud-capped summit of Girnar towered above us, rising, like the records of an ancient people, of times dedicated to the worship known in India, and of the demonstrated relics of the classical period of our Indian literature." * * *

"The mount of Girnar is of granite formation, situated on an extensive plain, at an elevation of about two thousand five hundred feet above the level of the sea. The summit, a bare scarp rock, begins gradually wooded towards the base, blending with a deep ravine, clothed with fine trees, and intersected by rivers, swollen by the monsoon torrents. From either side of the Girnar, spurs extend, forming a lower range of hills, their ridges fringed with the feathery leaves of the bamboo, and their sides studded with various jungle plants; upon which, shelter, huge blocks of granite lie out in the most fantastic forms. On a small table land, near the summit, are the walls of a fort,

* Junagarh is a large Mohammedan town, about forty miles south-west from Joonah, and situated at the foot of the Girnar Mount. It is the residence of His Highness the Nawaub, and capital of Soorashtra."

enclosing the group of Jain temples, which give to this spot its colour of peculiar sanctity."

* * * * *

"The hill of Girnar is known as one of the five mounts sacred to the Jain sect; its pagodas, carved and ancient temples, incline to the belief of its owing its origin to the early days of Buddism, and confirmation of this curious seems likely to have been afforded by the discovery of the history attached to the graven tablets of the Girnar rock.

"The history of religious sectarianism in India proves, that the followers of Budda were grievously persecuted by the Brahmins, and that the Hindoo princes inflicted on them every description of merciless torture, regarding them as infidels, and their religion as an unpardonable heresy.

"About the year 846 B.C., arose a reformer, in the person of the virtuous ascetic Sakia, who endeavoured to found regulations and laws among the Buddists, which should exalt the character of their magistrates and priests, and render them somewhat independent of oppression. In 319 B.C., a celebrated king, called Asoka, reigned at Palibothra,* and became a convert to the tenets of Buddism. This prince, who after his consecration was styled Riyadasi, was inspired with the strongest zeal for proselytism, and, in furtherance of his designs, assigned convocations to be held, missionaries to be entertained, and every method adopted as could tend to render general those opinions which the now considered to form the only true faith." * *

"In the rocks of Girnar, and of Dhauli in Cuttack, on the pillars of Delhi and Allahabad, the king caused to be graven, containing the leading maxims of Buddism, and thus published them to the people in that characteristic mode, and in the most opposite parts of his great empire of India. The edicts appear to have been, in subsequent ages, multiplied, and bearing various dates evidencing to the assertions of Buddism." * *

"Generation after generation has passed away—the power of Buddism has fallen before the overwhelming ascendancy of the heterodox Jains, the original Sanscrit, as the written language of Girnar, has been superseded by the modern Pali; the Egyptian and Greek dynasties are unknown to the present annals of Surashtra history; yet, despite the great power of change, the rock of the sacred edicts stands fresh as from the chisel of the graver." * *

"Without the large temple of the Neemnath, are the beautiful columns of an unroofed sacred building; and the eye, travelling between them, rests upon one of the most remarkable features of this magnificent scene. From a perpendicular scarp, which rises from the plain to the very summit of Girnar, juts a single block of granite, slightly inclining towards the precipice. At the Mata Jhapt, or "hall of death," this is the chosen spot from which zealous devotees cast themselves, in the assured hope of the doctrine of transmigration, that they will enter their next state of being in the enviable rank of powerful Rajahs.

"The ascent to this fatal point is made from the back of the rock; but its steepness rendering it apparently inaccessible. The poor devotee, however, determined upon self-destruction, climbs from point to point of the slippery granite, grasping every irregularity to assist his progress; when, having gained the summit, places a cocoa nut (unstable support!) with unstrung bow, and standing on it for an instant with outstretched arms reaps joyfully his doom. But a few days before our visit a devotee had cast himself from this spot into the ravine, whose body was found, nearly devoured by eagles and beasts of prey.

"Fearful is the height and position of the Jhap, considered as the spot marked for self-sacrifice! But magnificent is its view and clearly distinguished outline, as it appears in bold relief against a calm blue sky, or is crowned with a cloud and growling thunder-storm, whose wild torrents rush down from the mountains, and the roar of falling waters mingle with the wild screams of circumscribing eagles. As if to contrast with the rugged and defined outline of the "leap," two small and fairy-like temples drown the height immediately behind, surrounded with gaily-streaming flags. Below it is a well, celebrated for the purity of the water, called the Hasti Pat, or Elephant's Foot. This name is derived from an octagonal stone in the centre, bearing some faint resemblance to this substantial member. A few plantain trees are planted near it, and flourish well amidst the blocks of granite."

The views and coloured plates of costume, and also the engravings on wood, in these volumes, are very neatly executed.

Fallacies of the Faculty; being the Spirit of the Chrono-Thermal System. In a Series of Lectures. By Samuel Dickson, M.D., formerly a Medical Officer on the Staff. H. Baillière.

Some three or four months since, we noticed, at considerable length, an important volume of Dr. Dickson's, entitled "The Unity of Disease"—a work which we deemed could not "be too extensively read, either by the profession or the public." In the tract before us, announced as the first of a series of lectures, the phenomena of death and sleep, of disease and its assumed type, intermittent fever, are discussed. This lecture is in the same spirit and in the self-same principle as "The Unity of Disease." Dr. Dickson thus enumerates the remedies which he considers most influential in the general treatment of disease, of which, as we have said, he assumes intermittent fever to be the type:—bark, or its better substitute, quinine; arsenic and opium; hydrocyanic acid, iron, silver, copper, strychnia, musk, valerian, colchicum, or veratria, &c. He then says:—

"These medicines, from the relation which their influence bears to time of period, and temperature of body, I term chronothermals; and I have placed them in the order of succession which they appear to me to warrant."

"We shall commence our next lecture," he adds,—"with a consideration of the [illegible], and show you its relation to Sydenham's [illegible]ley,—to Pulay, Curved Spine, Squint, and [illegible] we shall prove are merely [illegible] course,—analytically, by [illegible], by cases of each cured on [illegible]."

The Rock; Illustrated with Various Legends and Original Songs and Music, descriptive of Gibraltar. By Major Peat, 21st Regt. Saunders and Otley.

A very pleasing and handsomely got-up quarto volume of stories and songs (several set to music), with illustrations, which afford an accurate idea of the chief prospects of Gibraltar and its neighbourhood. The Rotation System will give to most Officers some years' residence at the "Rock," and Major Hort's picturesque book should therefore be on the shelves of every regimental library. The views, from clever drawings by Lieut. Lacy of the 46th, are very skilfully and boldly sketched on stone.

The Poetical Works of Thomas Campbell. Moxon.—We lately noticed the elegant and cheap edition of Rogers' Poems, and here we have a fit companion, "The Pleasures of Hope," and all the other beautiful poems of Campbell, handsomely printed in octavo, and at a price that will render them very generally attainable.

Heads of the People and Portraits of the English. R. Tyas.—This is the first number of a new series of a work that we have repeatedly commended. To the talent engaged on the former parts, a very valuable addition has been made. The present number opens with a clever paper, the "Debutante" and her "Chaperon," by Mrs. Gore, who is almost unrivalled in this species of literature. The "Money Lender," by Douglas Jerrold, and the "Old Squire," by William Howitt, are faithfully and forcibly sketched.

Views in the Vicinity of the City of Kingston, Jamaica. T. M'Lean.—Six very clever and spirited pictures by Capt. J. S. Whitty. They consist of a panoramic view of Kingston-harbour from the Apostle's Battery; Kingston Harbour and adjacent country, from Charlottenberg, (St. Andrew's Mountains); Waterfall near the Windward Road; Mount Moses (Coffee Property); St. Andrew's Mountains, from near Up-Park Camp; and a view in the St. Andrew's Mountains, near Content Gap. They are drawn on stone by J. B. Pyne and P. Gauci, to whom great credit is due for the highly-finished manner in which they have preserved the character of the original drawings. Many Military men who have been stationed in Jamaica will highly value these sketches of the bold and mountainous scenery of the island.

Gulliver's Travels. Part 3. Hayward and Moore.—The progress of this work is highly satisfactory: it well maintains its character as a "Standard Edition." Grandville's illustrations are more than worth the price at which each number is published.

The English Bijou Almanack for 1840.—The "Bijou Volume," as it is called, which for some years we have been accustomed to welcome under the auspices of L.E.L., is now confided to Samuel Lover, the popular author of "Rory O'More." It contains portraits of the Duchess of Sutherland, Mrs. Hall, Madame Persiani, Sir M. A. Shee, the poet Moore, and Macready. Besides a complete calendar, it has a variety of useful information, and some very sweet poetry. It is really multum in parvo, and in every respect unique and tasteful. We must add, that a miniature portrait of Prince Albert is presented with each copy of the almanack.

East India Intelligence.

Sir John Keane and Major-General Nott.—The Agra Ukhbar states, that Sir John Keane has declared his determination to send a circular letter to all the officers with the "Army of the Indus," calling upon them individually to state whether they were or were not the authors of certain letters which have appeared in the public journals. Another journal announces that Sir John has made a public call upon Gen. Nott, to know whether he had published, or caused to be published, the merits of the question of his supersession, which appeared in the public prints, and that Gen. Nott disclaims all knowledge of such publication.

Lieut. C. Douglas, recently attached to the Artillery at Agra, and now in progress to Joudpore, had occasion to enter a village on the line of march, when he was assaulted by the Zumeendar sword in hand, and wounded. The Lieutenant returned the attack by passing his sword through the body of his outrageous assailant, and killing him on the spot.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 12.

An express has been despatched after the 12th and 15th Regts. which left Barrackpore several weeks ago, ordering them to return forthwith to the cantonments. One of the corps, it is said, will be sent to strengthen Chittagong.—Calcutta Observer, Sept. 14.

Beat of Division Army!—Amongst the letters from the Army of the Indus, which (from the Bengal portion especially) abound with severe animadversions upon the bearing of Sir John Keane, one, dated "Camp, Candubar, 15th June," contains a copy of the following letter, said to have been written by Sir John to Major-Gen. T.—, commanding the cavalry division:—"My dear General,—Riding through the city yesterday evening, with Brigadier Arnold, I saw a person exhibiting a strange unmilitary appearance, and on inquiry found it to be Lieut.-Col. Smyth, commanding a regiment under your orders. I know of no authority sanctioning such a display of bad taste in the regular Army of the Indus as that officer makes. Mustachios have been adopted in the Army of the Indus, and I feel no desire to forbid their being worn; but beards resembling Jews are totally inadmissible, and I have to desire that my sentiments on the subject may be made known to Lieut.-Col. Smyth, and that he will please to appear like a British officer in future." The writer adds: "Lieut.-Col. S. was dressed in every respect regimentally, although merely taking an evening ride in the city, but he was accompanied by several of his old corps, the 4th Local Horse, which, it is more than probable, created a little jealousy. Brigadier A— too, it seems, was by the side of the chief to put in a good word, and point out that Col. S. had lately joined from the irregular branch of the Army. Lieut.-Col. S. called on Sir H. F—— with his beard, and also attended a full-dress foot-parade at Bhawalpoor, and stood close alongside Sir H. F—— with his beard on, but he was not called a Jew, nor did he receive any orders to clip it. Beards are no more against orders than mustachios, and and if one is allowed, the other ought to be; indeed many other officers still wear beards, and nothing is said to them; some wear Jemmies, and some Charlies. Sir W. C—— has a large long Charley, which covers half his chin.

Honorary Distinction to Corps.—G.G.O.—In consideration of the readiness always evinced by the 9th Madras N. I. to proceed on Foreign service, from the earliest period at which the Native troops of this Presidency were required to embark on shipboard, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to permit that regiment to bear on its colours and appointments, in addition to the word "Ava," a galley with the motto "Khooshkee wu Turec."—The 29th Bengal N. I. is also allowed to have the word "Delhi" borne on the regimental colours, and other articles of equipment, in addition to any other honorary distinction already acquired by that corps.

Bourbon Prize Money.—Fort St. George, Aug. 16, 1839.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to notify that, under authority from the Supreme Government, the General Prize Committee have been directed to adjust the second and final distribution of Bourbon Prize money to the Madras troops employed at the capture of that Island, in the year 1810, viz:—

THE LATE MAJOR-GENERAL SIR ROBERT STEVENSON, K.C.B.

Major-General Sir Robert Stevenson, of the Bengal Division of the Indian Army, Colonel of the 1st Regt. Bengal Native Infantry, died at sea, in the ship Moira, the 30th July last. Few officers of his rank have seen more extensive service, or filled such various and important offices, requiring talent, temper, and peculiar information. While yet a regimental Lieutenant, he commanded the 1st Battalion 12th Native Infantry, at the battle of Laswarree, under Lord Lake, in 1803, and participated in the glories and sanguinary struggles of that daring and chivalrous Commander. After the termination of the Mahratta war, 1803, 4, and 5, he was appointed cavalry agent for the supply of horses to the army, the grand establishment being then in its infancy, and the Bengal Cavalry supplied from Affghanistan and the borders of Persia. In the Nepaul war, in 1814, and 15, Sir David Ochterlony obtained the services of his old comrade, Major Stevenson, in whose energy and judgment, in every exigency, Sir David placed implicit confidence. In the Mahratta war of 1817, and 18, Lieut.-Colonel Stevenson was at the head of the Commissariat in the grand army, under the personal command of the Marquess of Hastings. In 1826, as Quartermaster-General of the army, under Lord Combermere, he was instrumental in the fall of Bhurtpore, against whose walls he had fought unsuccessfully 22 years before; and when, in the third storm, the 2nd battalion of his old regiment, the 12th, planted their colours three times on the assaulted bastion, and one of its gallant officers, Lieut. Peter Louis Grant, stood heroically on the breach with the colours, inviting our countrymen to follow and support the noble Sepoys. In 1833, Col. Stevenson resigned the office of Quartermaster General, and was appointed, with the rank of Brigadier General, to command, at Cawnpore, the principal division of the Bengal Army. In 1834, Brigadier-General Stevenson was appointed to the command of the force against the Jeypoor state of Rajpootana and the Shekhawatee tribes; which duty having been successfully accomplished, in humbling both, he returned to the command of his division. In 1838 and 39, Major-General Stevenson was compelled by ill health to relinquish all Military duty, and, in the vain hope of its restoration, he embarked on his return to England, after an absence of 36 years, and died on the passage. He retained the Colonelcy of his old corps, the 2nd battalion 12th, under the altered number of the 1st Regt. Bengal Native Infantry, to his death. Promoted to Colonel of a regiment, to fill a death vacancy, in May, 1824, he was, by a harsh and grievous regulation from England, denied the corresponding commission, until the officers of his own standing in the line of the Queen's service, should obtain the same rank: thus rendering a separate and distinct army, constantly on active duty, dependant for promotion, on the rare occurrence of a regimental vacancy, on the promotion of the army in England, reduced to, and its promotion necessarily governed by, its peace establishment; and also injuriously interfering with an army rising by seniority among themselves, and stopping its promotion to actual vacancies, to prevent a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Indian Army superseding a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Queen's, while, at the very same moment, the supersession was constantly occurring in the royal service, in which Lieutenant-Colonels of the Artillery and Engineers, which are seniority corps, like the Indian Army, actually were, and still are, promoted to Colonel, to fill each occurring vacancy, thus superseding necessarily their own Lieutenant-Colonels of the Cavalry and Infantry. Among the grievous results of this regulation to the officers of the Indian Army, was the fact of officers of the rank of Major or Lieutenant-Colonel, in the royal regiments, commanding and sharing in prize, as full Colonels, in virtue of their brevet of Colonel; while the officers of the Indian Army, like Colonel Stevenson, actually Colonels of regiments and battalions of several years' standing, commanded in the same force, and shared from the same prize fund, only as Lieutenant Colonels*.

Sir Robert Stevenson entered the Indian Army in Bengal as a Cadet, 1788; promoted to Ensign, April, 1788; Lieutenant, Oct. 1793; Captain, Sept. 1804; Major, Sept. 1810; Lieut.-Colonel, June, 1815; Colonel of a regiment, but denied the commission, thus losing five years' rank, May, 1824; Colonel, June, 1829; Major-General, Jan. 1837; died, July 30th, 1839.—Correspondent in Asiatic Journal.

* On the reduction of the Indian Army in his early career, Sir R. Stevenson was on half-pay for five or six years; but the remaining half century passed in one unremitting course of arduous and honourable public service.

REORGANISATION OF THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—From the various hints which have appeared in your Paper as to the supposed recommendations of the Naval and Military Commission, it occurs to me that they have scarcely dealt with the more prominent defects of organisation or institution in each service. The very different measure dealt out to both, proves that both cannot be right, —that something is wrong. Take the promotion, for instance. In the Navy, the only system that obtains, or can indeed obtain, with our ideas, in time of peace, is favour or patronage. In the Army, money, money, money is the one thing needful. Now, this contrast alone proves an erroneous system in our military policy, for what is really or intrinsically good in one branch of our military force, cannot, ought not, to be bad in the other; yet here are two opposite levers or movements to regulate promotion in the sister services of the profession of arms. But, to crown the whole, and form the climax of contradiction and absurdity, we have the Rl. Artillery, the Rl. Engineers, the Rl. Marines,—three corps d'élite,—whose services are special and unparalleled, and whose promotion is regulated by seniority only!

In the Navy, I find Lieutenants of 1835 already Commanders, and Lieutenants of 1778 and 1781 still Lieutenants; Commanders of 1834 already Captains, while others of 1794 still are Commanders; and this in a time of profound peace!

In the Army, I see Lieutenants of 1837 already Captains, Ensigns of 1838 now Lieutenants (a short apprenticeship!)—while, again, I see Lieutenants of 1807-8, et infra, still Lieutenants—Captains of 1826, Majors;

while we see others so old as to have the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel still Captains. To argue on such palpable facts as these would be a mere waste of time, especially when we contrast such results with the Artillery, Engineers and Marines, corps in which, if promotion be slow (and can it, or ought it, to be otherwise in time of peace?) it is at least sure, and every officer holds his relative and proper position with respect to his senior or his junior.

An erroneous impression prevails too generally, respecting our real force in officers, from our seeing the whole lumped up in one general Naval or Military List, without any distinction as to those who are really unfit for further service from those who are fit, and are perhaps only waiting a favourable opportunity, to be called into active service. In justice, therefore, to the Service itself, and to the State which pays all, the first step taken should be to separate the Half-pay Lists, both NAVAL and MILITARY, into two distinct classes or lists. 1. Of all officers, of whatever rank, in either service, who are unfit, by reason of age or infirmity, or who, having colonised abroad or accepted other employ, cannot be placed in activity, or who, by length of active service, are so entitled, and desire to be placed on the permanent or "Retired Half-pay List," Naval or Military. 2. Of all the remaining Officers, of whatever rank, not coming under these designations, who are capable of, or desirous of further service, when called upon, to be placed on the "Temporary Half-pay List," Naval or Military.

We should thus clear away the ground, and understand our real position. The promotion of all the Officers in the first or Retired List would, of course, cease ostensibly, as it already has virtually. The services of those on the second, or Temporary Half-pay Lists, should be made available to fill all death vacancies, where the first for promotion was not a very old officer, in the proportion of two for every three casualties; and to supply all augmentations or calls beyond the regular establishment, till the list was exhausted. If justice and equity presided in framing these lists, the Temporary Half-pay List would not perhaps be very large. "Retired full-pay" should be granted in both Services under certain conditions, as to length of service, age, services, wounds, &c., easily framed.

This operation once completed, the work of reformation would be easy. Frame a Peace Establishment for both services, Naval and Military—say 20 Admirals, 30 Vice-Admirals, 50 Rear-Admirals, 200 Captains, 400 Commanders, 1200 Lieutenants, &c., all effectives. Promotion to be compounded (as in the French service)—of length of service (two-thirds) and selection (one-third), or two-thirds of the vacancies in the superior ranks, down to Commander inclusive, to be filled up by gradation, the other third by selection.—(See Dr. Bowring's Report on the Mil. Establishments of France.)

In the Army we should recast the whole edifice, as too full of abuses, introduced by the system of purchase, to be maintained. I would adopt, with some few alterations, the plan laid down editorially in your Paper No. 129, of 18th July, 1835, page 457, of which I will give the following summary, with my own modifications en passant:—

1. All the Cavalry, including the Life Guards, to be formed on one uniform scale, of 4 squadrons, 8 troops, each of a Captain, a Lieutenant, and a Sub-Lieutenant; to each regiment a Staff of an effective Colonel, a Lieutenant-Colonel, a Major, a Paymaster, an Adjutant, a Quartermaster, a Riding-Master, a Surgeon, an Assistant, a Veterinary, and 4 Cornets or Guidons (one for each squadron)—being 14 Staff-Officers to each regiment. The Cornets to be taken from deserving Sergeants.

2. The Cavalry of the Line to be formed into 8 regiments of Dragoons, 12 of Lancers, Hussars, and Light Dragoons. Disband the 6th and 7th Dragoon Guards, and the 17th Light Dragoons, the youngest of each class, and which have no decorations, drafting both officers and men to the other regiments augmented to four squadrons. We should thus have a larger force and an increase of officers at a lesser expense to the State. The 1st, 2d, and 6th, or Inniskilling Dragoons, all decorated regiments, would thus become the 6th, 7th, and 8th Dragoons, the term Dragoon Guards being abolished as an absurd anomaly, a misnomer.

3. The Foot Guards to be reduced to one uniform scale, of two battalions or 16 companies each regiment, with a Captain, a Lieutenant, and a Sub-Lieutenant per company—an effective Colonel, a Lieutenant-Colonel, a Major, 2 Commandants, a Paymaster, 2 Adjutants, a Quartermaster, a Surgeon, 2 Assistants, and 2 Ensigns (or colour-bearers), per regiment: total Staff, 14 officers.

4. The Infantry of the Line to be also formed in regiments of two battalions or sixteen companies each; each company to be composed of a Captain, a Lieutenant, and a Sub-Lieutenant (the non-commissioned and privates of ten companies being continued in the eight), without any exception or distinctions. The Staff of a regiment, 1 effective Colonel, 1 Lieutenant-Colonel, 1 Major, 2 Commandants (or 2 Lieutenant-Colonels and 2 Majors), 1 Paymaster, 2 Adjutants, 1 Quartermaster, 1 Surgeon, 2 Assistants, and 2 Ensigns or Colour-bearers—7 for each battalion—being a total of 14 or 15 Staff for a regiment of 2 battalions. The 60th taken out of the Line, and to form the 1st Regiment of the Rifle Brigade; the Rifle Corps, the 2d Regiment. This would give an augmentation of a battalion to the Line, or 104 battalions instead of 103, forming 52 regiments.

5. Every regiment of Cavalry or of Infantry ordered on foreign service to go complete, forming an extra depot troop or company per regiment, with a Captain, a Lieutenant, and a Sub-Lieutenant. The numerous inconveniences of our present depot system will thus be obviated or swept away at once, and we shall be able to relieve the regiments abroad regularly—punctually in future. For as the 16 companies of a regiment will comprise the same force, as to non-commissioned officers and men, as 20 companies under the present system, it is perfectly clear, that for every three corps we now have abroad, excepting India, being only of six companies each, a single regiment of two battalions, under the plan proposed, will give a greater force numerically, and by an organisation combining far greater efficiency with simplicity, as well as economy; for, in truth, neither the six companies abroad, nor the four companies at home, under the present absurd depot system, can even be considered a battalion or a Lieutenant-Colonel's command, though these ten companies, thus foolishly divided, must have a double Staff, 2 Adjutants, 2 Paymasters, 2 Quartermasters, 2 Assistant-Surgeons, &c., for 1 single battalion.

Instead of		We should require

Thus, by breaking up our present depot system, with its want of unity, uniformity, discipline, or comfort, we should have within an ace of double the number of corps at home disposable for reliefs; beside the 31 depot companies at Chatham, and four depot troops at Maidstone, of the regiments serving abroad—simplicity, order and economy, the result. We should have 42 battalions at home instead of 22.

6. To effect all this is easy. Then for subsidiary measures. Having already proposed, under the Navy head, the formation in both services of a permanent or retired half-pay list, composed of officers unfit or unable to serve any longer—and of a temporary half-pay list, composed of those who are both fit, able, and inclined, it only remains to apply the same rule of promotion to the Army. To abolish the sale and purchase of commissions in future, except to the State. That all officers who have bona fide purchased their commissions, shall, when they desire it, receive the regulated price from the State, the vacancy being invariably filled up from the temporary half-pay list (while it lasts), as well as all dismissals. Death vacancies to be supplied on the French plan, and as proposed for the Navy, two-thirds to seniority—one-third to choice, or vice versâ.

7. The command of regiments by General Officers being prospectively abolished, with all allowances for off-reckonings—the soldier to be well and comfortably clothed by the State. General Officers to be limited to a fixed peace establishment, after their retired list is framed, of men beyond a certain age—say 140 Generals of all ranks effective (the number in employ is only about 50)—Generals, say 20; Lieut.-Generals, 40; Major-Generals, 80; all effective and fit for service;—their half-pay to be fixed on the same scale as the corresponding ranks in the Navy, viz.—2*l.*, 1*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, and 1*l.* 5*s.* per diem. To all Generals actually Colonels of regiments as sinecurists, their vested interest would be secured by receiving their actual Colonel's pay and an allowance of 600*l.* per annum, in lieu of off-reckonings, to terminate at their death. Vacancies in this, the effective list, to be filled up as they occur, in just or equal proportions, by seniority and selection. General Brevets should be abolished, both in the Army and Navy; so that ultimately no officer will hold rank superior to his regimental commission. Indeed in the Navy it does not operate as a Brevet, for it confers both rank and pay. But the establishment being fixed, wholesale promotions by hundreds would cease, both in the Army and Navy.

8. The pay of Officers in the Life and Horse Guards to be assimilated in all ranks, taking the lower or the higher rate as the standard. All the pay-tables to be equitably revised, rounding off the fractions.

9. The Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and Royal Marines, to be divided, like the Infantry, into five, three, and six regiments respectively, with the proper proportion of officers and Staff, abolishing prospectively the rank of Colonel-Commandant in all. Each regiment to have an effective Colonel. The Rl. Artillery and Engineers to have a separate Staff List of General Officers, Colonels, and Lieut.-Colonels, for their numerous duties not regimental. The head-quarters of each regiment of Marines to be at Woolwich, Chatham, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke, and Cork.

* North America and the East Indies have drawn off some corps temporarily from other stations; but as the general result is the same, 61 battalions abroad to 22 at home, I have set them down as they now stand, and would stand, (the same necessity existing) in both cases.

The effect of this arrangement in the Cavalry branch would be an augmentation in officers and men, viz.—

	Colonels.	Lt.-Cols.	Majors.	Captains.	Lieuts.	Sub-Lts.	Total.
26 Regs., old	0	26	26	176	219	144	[illegible]
25 Regs., new	25	25	27	166	220	188
More . . .	25	0	0	12	0	44	79
Less . . .	0	1	2	0	28	0	39

In the Infantry the results would be—

103 Bns., old .	0	123	206	1030	1422	845	3626
52 Regs., new .	52	104	156	832	1248	663	3056
More . . .	52	0	0	0	0	18	70
Less . . .	0	19	50	167	401	0	637

(N.B.—Not including Staff or Adjutants in either case.)

The Colonelcies of regiments, both Horse and Foot, to be given to the Lieut.-Colonels now holding the brevet of Colonel on half or full-pay, or the seniors fit for command.

The additional troops of Cavalry to all the Senior Lieutenants, which will include all Lieutenants down to 1825, inclusive.

The thirteen vacant Majorities of Dragoons to be given to the Captains holding brevets of Major and Lieut.-Colonel, or the Seniors on half or full-pay, fit for service.

The supernumerary Captains and Lieutenants of Foot to be disposed of by placing all the Captains who hold superior Army rank on half-pay in that rank, or on the retired full-pay of their regimental rank, according to length of service, and the nature of each case. The Lieutenants down to 1825, inclusive, to be placed on retired or temporary half or full-pay as Captains or Lieutenants, according to the nature of each case, services, &c. &c.: to be optional, of course.

Any Captains or Lieutenants remaining in excess after this operation (there would be very few of the former), to be equally divided to each regiment, or to succeed to the first vacancies, as Supernumeraries.

By my estimate, there are about 120 Captains holding superior Army rank in the Foot, 10 in the Dragoons; and of Lieutenants down to 1825, inclusive, there seem to be 10 in the Dragoons, and about 100 in the Infantry. There are 35 Lieut.-Cols. of Foot on full-pay, with the brevet of Colonel—only 7 of Dragoons; therefore, the half-pay lists of both services may be applied to, to furnish the Colonelcies of regiments from the oldest and most deserving officers who are fit for service, or take the senior Lieut.-Colonels.

The reduction of the 1st Foot Guards to 16 companies, and of the whole of the Foot Guards to a Captain, a Lieutenant and Sub-Lieutenant per company (as indispensable to order and economy), and wings of 10 Lieut.-Colonels for the Line, to fill vacancies. The 1st Foot Guards will have 38 Lieutenants and 24 Ensigns to 26 companies. The 2d has 29 Lieutenants and 17 Ensigns to 16 companies. The 3d has 25 Lieutenants and 16 Ensigns to the same. Thus there are 20 Supernumerary Lieutenants in the Foot Guards, allowing 7 for Adjutants. There seems to be neither rule nor limit in this branch. The whole Army, without favour or distinction, should be reduced to the same level; a Captain, a Lieutenant, and a Sub-Lieutenant, per company or troop, giving one Ensign or a Guidon to each battalion or squadron for the colours and standards from our best Colour-Sergeants, by which the officers will be left to their proper duties, with their troops or companies, on all occasions. The superior Army rank to the officers of the Foot Guards should be prospectively abolished.

The Regimental Major in all corps to have the same duties as in the French service, i. e., chef de comptabilité. He is the Inspector and Comptroller of the books and accounts of the Paymaster, Quartermasters, (and Capitaine d'habillement)—reports periodically to the Colonel as to the state of the whole—is charged with the estates and effects of all deceased officers and men—and corresponds with the War Minister on all subjects connected with the finance or matériel of the regiment. He might also (as junior Major) perform the duty of Regimental Adjutant, and issue all the Colonel's orders to the Commandants or Adjutants of battalions, who should be under his orders, and attend him daily at orderly hour, to take the regimental [illegible].

Such is the general outline of the [illegible] I propose for our Military force, [illegible] elaborate paper I have already referred to in [illegible] No. 129, together with some valuable [illegible] published in the Supplement to the Spectator of the [illegible] September, 1832, on Military expenditure (p. [illegible] particularly at pages 16 and 20, regarding promotion. [illegible] also in Nos. 500 and 504 of the Spectator, a [illegible] analysis, showing by figures the actual results of the proposed re-organization of the Cavalry and Infantry of the [illegible] which appears to me to combine perfect efficiency with economy. The comparative pay-tables there exhibited, with the notes upon them, "sufficiently proclaim the necessity of a revision," allowing for typographical and other minute errors to be found in them. The Spectator's views of Military economy are large, comprehensive, but perhaps too extensive and impracticable for use, he himself not being a Military man; but it is impossible to deny that, in his Supplement of 18th Nov., 1837, he has hit the most crying abuses of the service in the right place, or that his correspondents have furnished useful and practical remedies. A. B.

CASE OF COLONEL THOMAS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I have viewed with equal surprise and regret the silence of the Military Journals in regard to the shameful, atrocious, and unjust aspersions cast upon Colonel Thomas by a portion of the daily press, for having "in his capacity of a Member of Parliament" attended a political dinner at Ashton-under-Line, at which dinner a speech is reported to have been made by some half-drunken and (by probable consequence) stammering and unintelligible enthusiast or quack, containing expressions insulting and offensive to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. Now, taking the words referred to, as reported even in the leading journal of the defamatory press, to have been seriously uttered,—of which, by the bye, I have strong and well-grounded doubts,—there is but one paragraph which by possibility can be applied either directly or indirectly to any act of Her Majesty, and that is as follows:—

"'A Lady Flora Hastings was dismissed with scorn and nay, whilst a Melbourne and a Headfort basked in the sup of Royal favour."

Of the fact itself, lamentable as it is, there cannot a slightest doubt; and as it must be admitted that the ex nation of that most worthy and single-minded man, James Clarke, triumphantly acquits Her Majesty of even shadow of obloquy, even by the most captious or factious individual upon earth, I hold the subject to be still fairly open for the expression of either public or private opinion, and that either the one or the other may be expressed in the presence of a Military man, without him being called upon to enter into an elaborate defence of Her Majesty, as if that illustrious individual, in point of fact, had been the "sole dealer of the death-blow" to the amiable and innocent daughter of one of the most gallant and accomplished soldiers that ever wore a British uniform. The remainder of this intemperate and foolish tirade appears to me to apply exclusively, however unjustly, to individuals who have free and unreserved access to Her Majesty, and who have the distinguished honour of enjoying Her Majesty's confidence and society; and rich as they are in such prerogatives, joined to the possession of full as much virtue and infinitely more of the graces than could be found in any equal number of their less fortunate political adversaries, can afford the wear and tear of an occasional and ought not to feel too sore if it should be even a goodly extraordinary ebullition of spleen [illegible] It is neither fair nor manly to Majesty (a simple, artless, amiable, and inexperienced female,) in contact with every ribald fool who, exhausted sloe-juice and brandy, flings his half-dozen sentences of Billingsgate at their heads; and it is certainly not by the acting that they can get rid of the charge of "skulking behind embroidered petticoats."

Colonel Thomas has declined—and knowing him I believe it as firmly as if I had myself been present occasion alluded to—that no expression was uttered by gentleman in his presence that conveyed to his mind the slightest disrespect, much less insult to Her Majesty the Queen; and his statement is confirmed by every other Military man who was present upon that occasion. Upon what grounds the counter-statement rests, I cannot pretend to know; but I think I am justified in asserting that they, ought to have been strong ones indeed, before a charge of virtual disloyalty had been fulminated against a man, who both as an officer and a gentleman, is second to none in Her Majesty's service, whose honour and character are as unimpeachable and unblemished as those of any subject in Her Majesty's dominions; whose life has been devoted to the service of Her Majesty's illustrious predecessors, and who at any moment would have readily and gladly risked or resigned it in defence of Her Majesty's throne and person; and this too for doing what fifty other Military men have done with perfect impunity,—nay, even with praise and approbation.

It has been heretofore supposed that a man did not forfeit his Civil privileges by putting on a red coat, but we liberty to exercise them as freely as any other inhabitant the realm. Here, however, we have a direct proof contrary:—a gentleman in blue or black is supposed have made a speech which is deemed highly disrespect, and even insulting to Her Majesty, without pain or penalty—whilst another gentleman who happened to be clothed in scarlet is reprobated, defamed, and severely punished upon the mere supposition alone that he had listened to it. Could any civil individual in England, of any other class or condition whatever, I ask, have been thus arraigned,—thus unjustly, illiberally, and shamefully let down, disparaged, and insulted? If the Army in England is to be governed exclusively by Military law, or the acts of the Adjutant-general under authority; if the soldier is to forfeit his rights and privileges as a subject, and to become a mere myrmidon of the Government of a day,—why is it not openly and officially promulgated to the Army, and avowed to the nation, in order that both one and the other may understand their relative positions, and shape their course accordingly? Under present circumstances, no Military man knows when he is safe,—when he may not be called to account in his own person for the ravings of a political dinner, or the twaddle of a barrack breakfast.

Colonel Thomas has been both unjustly and unwisely dealt by. If guilty even to half the extent he is charged with, he has not been half punished; if innocent, he is raised rather than depressed either by illogical reasoning, or vituperative invective. Such measures, in a case like this, is like an attempt to lower the sun's temperature "by fanning in his face with a peacock's feather." If there are proofs, I will not say of disloyalty, but of his having manifested the slightest disrespectful feeling towards his Sovereign, it is due to the most loyal Army in the world that he should cease to contaminate its ranks; but if there are no such proofs, (and that there are not, what unprejudiced man in his senses can doubt?) it is an insult to the Army at large, to make one of its most gallant and distinguished members the mere scape-goat of a party squabble, and to visit upon his head the supposed delinquencies that they dare not notice in the actual perpetrator. If this is the British service, what gentlemen will continue to serve in it? Happily, however, for Col. Thomas, he is too well known, too highly respected by his associates in arms, to be seriously injured either by party malice or professional persecution: no individual in Her Majesty's service can, as he nobly and feelingly asserts, "stand upon his character as a soldier, and his birthright as a gentleman," defying malice, and courting the strictest scrutiny into every action of his private and professional life, Colonel Thomas is that man, and I almost rejoice at the occasion, unpleasant as it must doubtless be to his feelings, that enables me, through the medium of your highly impartial and eminently useful publication, to render him this act of justice, to raise one weak and humble voice in his defence, that will nevertheless, I am persuaded, find an echo in the breast of every soldier in Her Majesty's dominions.

Lyme Regis, Dec. 2. D. O'Halloran, Capt.

CONDUCT OF MASTERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As an Old Commissioned Officer in the Royal Navy has thought proper to contradict your assertions relative to the conduct of masters of merchant vessels, I beg to offer you the testimony of a Young Commissioned Officer, in support of your assertion, that, in nine cases out of ten where crews of merchant vessels are discontented, it is occasioned by the conduct of those in authority over them.

For the last fifteen years I have been nearly constantly employed principally on stations where the English trade is carried on in vessels of from 150 to 300 tons burthen,—a class of vessels comprising the largest portion of our merchant shipping. I have been present at the investigation of serious complaints made both by officers and men, and heard the result of many other inquiries made by other officers,—and I have no hesitation in saying in nine cases out of ten, the origin of the dispute rests with the officers; many of the masters of these vessels are part owners, and it is their interest to save expense both by sailing their vessels with few hands, and starving the few they have. The following instance of this occurred under my own observation:—

A brig of about 260 tons arrived at Lima after a very short passage of 94 days from Liverpool. Her crew consisted, besides the master and two mates, of three seamen, and six little boys, several of the latter being on trial, but their names appeared on the muster-book, to make up for the deficiency of seamen. The master (who was half owner) made a bet before starting that he would make the voyage in a certain time, and in consequence he carried a heavy press of sail; and it took all three men to set and take in every sail, and in bad weather they were repeatedly on deck the whole night. In this way she rounded the Horn in the dead of winter, the cold rendering the boys perfectly useless; and the men, though worked so hard, were not allowed sufficient food, even for light work and fine weather,—one basket of bread holding about six pounds per weekly allowance for three men, and other things in the same proportion. And when one of the men took an allowance of bread aft to show the master and remonstrate with him, he was struck and driven forward again. When abreast of Valparaiso, the water, which had been very short for some time, was nearly out; but he refused to put in there, and went on to Lima with scarcely water sufficient to keep them alive. Directly they arrived at Lima, one of the men came on board the ship to which I belonged, to enter; and on my being sent back with the man to get his clothes, the two other men begged me to take them also, at the same time giving me the above account as a reason for their wishing to leave the vessel. The master was on shore, but the mates were present, and they confessed the man's statement was true, and they were quite right to leave her. They also told me that a passenger who came out in her, had taken one of the boys out of the vessel, in consequence of the master's ill treatment of him, and as he (the passenger) was a friend of the boy's father, he would not allow him to return in her, but would send him home in another vessel. I took the three men back with me, and two of them proved good, steady seamen.

A short time before this, a brig of nearly 300 tons burthen arrived at Valparaiso from England with only two seamen in her, and they were treated in much the same manner; they both joined H. M. S. Samarang and proved excellent men. These vessels should have had at least eight or ten men, and would then have been weakly manned. I believe it is conduct of this kind that causes so many disturbances between master and men in merchant vessels. The men in many cases certainly behave very ill, but they are generally driven to it; and can it be wondered at, when men like the mate who was lately tried for causing the death of a man by the most inhuman treatment, and who would most assuredly have now been on his road to Sydney passage free, if the principal evidence against him, who was bound over to appear, had come forward at the trial, are placed in command? Yet this very mate, on his acquittal, is by the same owners immediately given command of a new ship. Among the men who command the numerous class of merchant vessels, there are of course very many who are above conduct of this kind, and many of the vessels trading to both sides of South America are very superior men, but in their vessels you never hear of the crew in a body behaving ill, or making complaints against their master.

That your statement regarding the accommodation for seamen in merchant vessels, and their health and comfort being made secondary to a few hogsheads of sugar, (or whatever the cargo may be,) is not exaggerated, will, I think, be admitted by every unprejudiced reader,—and one has only to read parts of the evidence before the committee of the House of Commons on the subject, and other statements published in the Nautical Magazine and elsewhere, to see that even the lives of seamen are of much less consequence in some owners' eyes than the detention of their vessel in port for one or two days. But of course this is owing to the system of insurance, or they would never force their vessels to sail against a fierce gale and the remonstrance of the master, at the risk of being lost outside with all hands, which has occurred before now.

Before I close, I must draw your attention to a statement which has lately appeared in the Times, amongst others equally true. It is, that the Admiral on the Pacific station was obliged to employ merchant vessels for Her Majesty's service, not having men of war sufficient. This statement was founded on a letter from Lima, but, luckily, the letter itself was inserted, and the statement in it was, that in consequence of the scarcity of ships of war, the merchants were obliged to send their money in merchant vessels; and this, to serve their own purposes, is turned into "the Admiral employing merchant vessels for the protection of British property, in consequence of his not having men of war to do it." The humbug about another Flag Officer and Captain of the fleet in the Mediterranean has been so well answered, that it is useless to say any more on the subject, and I am sure you will think that you have had quite sufficient from Amigo.

[We must observe, that we are now satisfied with the genuineness of the "Old Commissioned Officer," who has obliged us with his name and address. Our opinions, however, on the conduct of many Masters of merchant vessels remain unaltered. In fact, they are confirmed by numerous communications from all quarters.—Ed.]

MERCHANT SERVICE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your correspondent, who signs himself An Old Commissioned Officer, R.N., and who espouses the cause of his brother Captains of the Merchant service with so much animation, has evidently undertaken the case of the élite of his corps—men who, like himself, no doubt, spurn the idea of acting with unnecessary severity towards those placed under them;—and there are, unquestionably, several such in the civil service. As, however, the Old Officer has long been in the Mercantile Marine, he cannot but know that uncalled-for severity—nay, downright oppression—is by no means an uncommon resort of Merchant Captains over their victims; for such the seamen too often are, under men possessing more ill-defined power than well-regulated temper—sometimes, I grant, excited by disrespectful, if not mutinous conduct on the part of the men; whilst at other times it emanates from the mere wantonness of exemplifying that power which weak-minded men are apt to imagine they really do possess. But these are worse motives which have actuated Merchant Commanders to adopt an oppressive line of conduct towards the seamen; not that I mean to apply the motive to all, but I will venture to put one question alone, as showing the actual state of the case, viz. Has it not been a customary practice of Merchant Captains, just prior to, and after arrival in their destined foreign (that is to say, distant) port, to harass their seamen under the premeditated intention of compelling them to desert, paradoxical as it may appear? The fact being, that as gangs of negroes, or natives, were employed to discharge the cargo, the mates were sufficient to superintend; and that, by getting rid of the crew, provisions and wages were saved. And as such was (I know nothing of the present practice) the common procedure, each Captain trusted to the almost certainty of procuring other seamen when about to depart, from among the fresh gangs of deserters from recently-arrived vessels, acting on the same principle. It is true the order of things is sometimes reversed; but the example was furnished to the seamen, and they now retaliate by deserting, with a view of getting higher wages. Both ought to be checked. These facts I merely state to show that your strictures, which excited the Old Officer, were well founded; but that there are faults on both sides, even in the present day, cannot be denied, and which call loudly for a well-digested system of regulations, defining the privileges and restrictions of each, and giving to Magistrates at home, and to Consuls abroad, summary powers of interference, and adjustment of complaints on the part of either; and though I am no advocate for Naval interference (Military, I mean), on board Merchant vessels, yet Captains of Her Majesty's vessels might be empowered to act, in order to obviate any difficulty arising out of the absence of either of the two first authorities. DISCIPLINE.

INDIA-HOUSE PATRONAGE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—What can be expected from the justice and liberality of the Honourable the Court of Directors of the East India Company, when the son of the late Colonel Hough—of whom the head of the Government at Bombay published the accompanying high eulogium on the occasion of his death—has failed in obtaining from them even an Infantry cadetship? For three years the widow and relatives of the deceased made several applications to his personal and intimate friends and others in the Direction in behalf of his youngest son, but the invariable reply was an expression of regret that "it was not in their power to comply with their wishes." Surely the sons of their old and faithful servants, whose merits have been thus publicly and honourably acknowledged, ought to be provided for in preference to those of tradesmen, saddlers, hosiers, outfitters, &c. &c., upon whom appointments in their Military and Civil services have been most liberally bestowed.

28*th November*, 1839. AN EAST INDIAN.

Orders by Government.—The Hon. the Governor in Council has received, with the sincerest feelings of regret, the intelligence of the death of Colonel R. H. Hough, Military Auditor-General of this Presidency, which took place on the 14th inst. Col. Hough's long service of 30 years was wholly passed in the discharge of the delicate, responsible, and arduous duties of the Audit Department, to the head of which he rose in February, 1824. He was distinguished for an extraordinarily clear, sound, and discriminating judgment, and an impartial and independent mind: he applied these eminent qualities with zeal to the execution of his official duties, and the striking ability and success with which these were performed are amply manifested by the uniform confidence so justly reposed, by his superiors, in the decisions and advice of this talented and lamented officer, of whose valuable and faithful services the deepest sense is entertained by the Governor in Council.

By Order of the Hon. the Governor in Council, (Signed) CHAS. NORRIS, Chief Secretary.
Bombay Castle, 17th Dec. 1839.

RETAINING RANK ON RETIRING FROM THE ARMY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having, from my first entering the Army, in the year 1778, been accustomed to hear all Captains and Field Officers given their respective appellations (as the case might be), though they had retired from the service, not only by the public generally, but also in both Houses of Parliament, I certainly have arrogated that distinction to myself since I left the service; nay, I have gone further, for having been appointed Colonel Commandant of the Militia in the colony of the Bahamas during the late war, I have assumed such rank, without, I assure you, intending to assume more than what I deemed myself justified in. But as I now learn from your two zealous correspondents Miles and A Retired Field Officer's letters (and, as it would appear, corroborated by yourself), as published in your two last numbers, that I have no such right, I shall of course make the only amende honorable in my power, that of affixing, in future, Mr., instead of that which I have hitherto been in the habit of using, though not exactly considering the subject in the same light as my former brother officers seem to view it under. Trusting to your kindness for giving this insertion in your highly meritorious journal, when you can do so without inconvenience, I am, Sir, with esteem, &c. A. MURRAY.

Bromley, Bagshot, Nov. 25th, 1839.

The Corporal.—During the American revolution, an officer, not habited in his military costume, was passing by where a small company of soldiers were at work, making some repairs upon a small redoubt. The commander of the little squad was giving orders to those who were under him, relative to a stick of timber, which they were endeavouring to raise to the top of the works. The timber went up hard; on this account the voice of the little great man was often heard in his regular vociferations of "Heave away! There she goes! Heave ho!" etc.—The officer before spoken of stopped his horse when arrived at the place, and seeing the timber sometimes heavily move, asked the commander why he did not take hold and render a little aid. The latter, appearing to be somewhat astonished, turning to the officer with the pomp of an Emperor, said, "Sir, I am a corporal!" "You are not though, are you!" said the officer; "I was not aware of it." And taking off his hat and bowing, "I ask your pardon, Mr. Corporal." Upon this he dismounted his elegant steed, flung the bridle over a post, and lifted till the sweat stood in drops upon his forehead. When the timber was elevated to its proper station, turning to the man clothed in brief authority, "Mr. Corporal Commander," said he, "when you have another such job, and have not enough, send to your Commander in Chief, and I will come and help you a second time." The corporal was thunderstruck. It was Washington!

To Messrs. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton-Garden.

GENTLEMEN,—I take the liberty of addressing my thanks to you for the great benefit I have received from your truly valuable Macassar Oil. Having had the misfortune to lose almost all my hair at the age of twenty-five, in consequence of a fever, which is very prevalent in this part of the country, I was lately induced, at the instance of a friend, to make a trial of your excellent specific. I can only say the effects are most surprising; for in a very short space of time my head (which was before perfectly bald) was covered with thick and strong hair. I am now fifty years of age, and would scarcely have expected that, after having worn sewig for twenty-five years of my life, I should ever be able to throw it entirely aside. I think it but justice to yourselves and the public to add my testimony to the virtues of your truly inestimable Oil. You have my full permission to make this letter public, or refer any one to me for proofs of the merits of this invaluable discovery. I am, Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient servant, WM. CHARLES PRINSAUX.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling fetid and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences. Five drops of which are equal in power to half an Ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop, 63, Oxford-street; but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 1*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.*, and 4*s.* each.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

THE Efficacy of this INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 14, 1838."

From Bransby B. Cooper, Esq., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba, in Gonorrhœa, which [illegible] Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in [illegible] cases, with perfect success.

"New-street, April 13, 1838."

And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for all Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 29, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each.

CAUTION.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

J. DELCROIX AND CO.,

Perfumers to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, &c. &c.,

168, NEW BOND-STREET, (opposite Steven's Hotel.)

THE great superiority of J. DELCROIX and CO.'S PERFUMERY has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.:—

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared specially for Her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY'S (GEORGE IV.'S) PERFUME BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the Skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the Hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE à LA REINE, and PATE AU MIEL, so justly esteemed for their healing and softening qualities.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hair.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR, and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, J. D. and Co., can with every confidence recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

MECCA, CAMPHOR, and other FANCY SOAPS.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the best description.

†,† J. DELCROIX and Co. respectfully request that particular attention be paid to the address upon their labels, No. 168, NEW BOND-STREET, none others being genuine; and they beg to suggest that the Nobility and Gentry will do well to return the articles foisted upon them by other perfumers as the genuine productions of their long-established and highly-celebrated Perfumery Warehouse, 168, NEW BOND-STEET.

MARSALA.—Woodhouse's Marsala, the finest imported, 24s. per doz.; Masdeu, old and crusted, 28s.; Port, four years in bottle, 28s. to 36s.; Ports of the highest class, old in bottle, 42s.; dinner Sherry, 21s. to 30s.; superior Sherry, pale or brown, 36s.; Sherries of very high character, 42s.

NOBLE and Co., Foreign Wine Merchants, 7, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

PATENT PERRYIAN FILTER INKSTAND.—This novel and useful invention insures an instantaneous supply of CLEAR FILTERED INK in the cup of the filter, which can be returned to the Inkstand at any moment, where it is secured from injury, and not affected by the atmosphere. The Ink, thus protected, never thickens or moulds, and remains good for any length of time in any climate. The process of filtration causes the colouring matter to be held in suspension; hence the trouble and inconvenience occasioned by unsuitable Ink, generally found in ordinary Inkstands, are completely obviated by the use of the FILTER INKSTAND. One of moderate size will contain sufficient Ink for six or twelve months' writing.

THE RAVEN BLACK PEN, One Shilling per Card.

The PATENT PERRYIAN RAVEN BLACK PEN is not liable to corrosion, and will be found excellent for the use of the Counting-House, and for general purposes.

Manufactured by JAMES PERRY and CO., Patentees, 37, Red Lion-square, London; and sold by all Stationers and other dealers in such articles.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain and inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"Sheffield, Oct. 11, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I wrote last to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-st., Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, Sir, yours truly, "T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischevious; it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. SHARWOOD is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 58, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

Printed by WILLIAM THOMAS, No. 13, Gloucester Terrace, Old Brompton, in the County of Middlesex, Printer, at the Office of Messrs. BRADBURY and EVANS, Lombard-street, Fleet-street, in the Precinct of Whitefriars, in the City of London, and Published by him at the OFFICE, 10, CATHERINE-STREET, STRAND, in the same County, where all Advertisements and Communications for the Editor are to be addressed.—Saturday, December 7, 1839.

MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, WRITERS, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, MIDSHIPMEN, &c. &c., Fitted Out to all parts of the World at W. H. ABLETT and CO'S., 37, Cornhill, London, with all kinds of Wearing Apparel and Cabin Furniture, &c. &c., full 20 per cent. lower than any other House. Cabins arranged so as to combine Economy and Comfort for the Voyage, and Passages secured at their Establishment. Lists of Prices sent to all parts of the Kingdom, on application, or by letter Post Paid.

OUTFITTING ESTABLISHMENT for CADETS, WRITERS, &c. to INDIA, SYDNEY, &c., under the management of ALEXANDER & CO., 6, Leadenhall-street. The scale of Outfit at this Establishment is the lowest of any house in London; and from Mr. A.'s long residence in India nothing is provided but what will be actually necessary and useful in India. Lists of prices may be had; but, if preferred, a moderate per centage on the actual first cost will only be charged, a plan (compared with the prices of the Agents and Outfitters,) calculated to effect an immense saving.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.
ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's-lane,
Begs to call the attention of the Officers of the Navy and Army, &c., to his Old Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c., &c.
Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing-Rooms supplied with every article required.

MILITARY, NAVAL, and GENERAL EQUIPMENT ESTABLISHMENT for FOREIGN and HOME SERVICE, 203, Regent-street, corner of Conduit-street.
T. HUGHES and CO. beg to announce that the Shirt and Outfitting business, lately carried on at their Branch Department, 45 A, Regent-street, corner of the Quadrant, under the name of THOMAS and Co., is removed to 203, Regent-street (the lease having expired), where all future orders are respectfully solicited. Shirts, hosiery, under clothing, gloves, choice India bandanas, stocks, scarfs, and dressing-gowns, &c.
In Tailoring Department—Tropical clothing, and every requisite in the best style for home use.
N.B.—Ladies Wedding and Colonial Outfits, Morning and Dressing-gowns, &c.,—with a separate entrance to their Department, and exclusive female superintendence.
Sea-Bedding and Cabin Furniture.

EAST INDIA ARMY AGENCY.—CALCUTTA and LONDON.—J. H. STOCQUELER and Co. beg to announce to their Friends that, in consequence of the rapid extension of their business, and the increase of their Subscription List to upwards of 1,200 names, they have deemed it right to consult the convenience and accommodation of their supporters by REMOVING their West-end Office from No. 9, Craig's court, to a spacious Suite of Rooms in FALL-MALL EAST (entrance No. 26, Suffolk-street). The Reading-room and principal Office at No. 65, King William-street, City, will remain as before.

MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS are respectfully informed that they will effect a saving of 20 per cent. upon Uniforms, and 30 per cent. upon articles of Plain Dress, by giving their orders at J. ALBERT'S, Tailor, &c., 32, King William-street, London Bridge, where every article that is new in Gentlemen's dress for the approaching season is made in the most approved style of fashion, at the above reduced prices for Cash.—32, King William-street, City.

OUTFITS to INDIA and the COLONIES.—Ladies and Gentlemen proceeding to the East or West Indies, or any of the Colonies, Naval and Military Officers, Writers, Cadets, Assistant-Surgeons, &c., may be completely fitted out in the most suitable manner, with the utmost despatch, and on very moderate terms, by CHRISTIAN and CO., 11, WIGMORE STREET.
Lists of necessaries, with samples and prices, and every information with respect to shipping, passages, &c., may be obtained as above.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.—Military and Naval Officers, Writers, Cadets, Assistant Surgeons, and Passengers, proceeding to India and the Colonies, are strongly recommended (previous to encumbering themselves with the old-fashioned Cabin Sofas, Iron Bedsteads, &c., advertised as "Patents," and which they will find are quite useless to them after the voyage) to inspect the NEW PATENT METALLIC FOLDING-HINGED BEDSTEADS, COUCHES, COTS, &c., which will answer the threefold purpose of a Cabin Sofa, Swing Cot, and Bed, when on shore, and for a warm climate, possess the inestimable advantage of requiring neither mattress nor bolster.
These Bedsteads, Couches, &c., so well known as "Merriman's Patent," can be obtained only of E. JOHNSON, Patentee, 155, Leadenhall-street, sole manufacturer. And where may also be had good solid Mahogany Portable Drawers, brass bound, at Five Guineas. Wash-hand Tables, with fittings complete, from 30s. to 150s.; together with every description of camp or Cabin Furniture, at equally reasonable prices. All made on the premises, and warranted of the best seasoned materials.
Address, post paid, to E. Johnson, late Merriman, 155, Leadenhall-street.

RAPER'S PATENT WATERPROOF.—Patronised by the Queen, the Nobility, and several public establishments.—Messrs RAPER and CO. beg respectfully to inform the public, that they are now carrying out Mr. Raper's newly invented PROCESS of WATERPROOFING of all sorts of FABRICS used in CLOTHING as well as leather, with increased and extensive machinery. Receiving Houses—6, Bridge-street, Blackfriars; 12, Marshall-street, Golden-square; and 68, Basinghall street. Messrs Raper and Co. beg unequivocally to state, that they have no connexion whatever with any public company, and that theirs is the only Patent Waterproof.

DRESS COATS, cut in the first style of fashion 30s.; superfine, 40s to 50s., frock coats, silk facing, 38s. to 47s.; superfine, silk velvet collar and silk facing, 50s.; milled cloth great coats, 40s. to 60s.; trousers, 6s. 6d. to 12s.; fashionable doeskin and kerseymere, 15s. to 25s.; waistcoats 5s. 6d. to 12s. 6d.; Petersham great coats, 25s. and 30s.; pilot coats, 16s., 21s., and 30s.; cloth cloaks, 30s. to 63s.; shooting jackets, 18s.; dressing gowns, 16s. 6d.; boys' and youths' clothing, cloth tunic dresses, 30s. to 42s.; a suit of clothes, 3l. 17s.; superfine black, 3l. 5s.—At FISHER and CO.'s, Tailors, 13, King William-street, City, ten doors from London Bridge.

VICTORIA WATERPROOF CLOTH.—This new and elegant CLOTH, being waterproof, yet not confining the perspiration, but possessing great warmth, flexibility, and beauty, is admirably adapted for the new Taglioni Coat, Great Coats, and Frocks and is to be obtained at H. and G. FLETCHER'S, 128, New Bond-street, where also can be procured first-rate articles of Apparel, from 30 to 40 per cent. under the usual credit prices for cash. H. and G. F. being determined that those gentlemen who do pay shall no longer be made to pay for those who never pay. List of Prices: Coloured Dress Coats, 3l. 5s. Blue or Black Dress Coats, 3l. 16s. 6d. Coloured Frocks, 4l. 4s. Blue or Black Frocks, 4l. 18s. Vests, from 15s. 6d. Trousers, from 21s. Every other article in proportion. Copy the Address.

THE PATENT COMPENDIUM PORTMANTEAU affords greater convenience for Travellers in Packing than any hitherto in use;—it combines the advantages of a BAG and PORTMANTEAU, is extremely light and portable, and well adapted to serve as BULLOCK TRUNKS FOR INDIA.—To be seen at PRATT'S MILITARY EQUIPMENT WAREHOUSES, 139, New Bond-street, and 19, Cockspur-street. Officers joining their Regiments, or going to Foreign Stations, can select their Outfits from an extensive assortment of the improved Patent Portable Iron and Iron Bedsteads, Easy Chairs, Military Drawers, Canteens, and every travelling requisite. The PAVILIONS, TENTS, and PORTABLE BEDSTEADS used at the late TOURNAMENT to be sold at very reduced prices.

IMPORTANT TO THE ARMY.
T. SHOTTER, 108, JERMYN-STREET, LONDON,
ARMY CLOTHIER, CAP and ACCOUTREMENT MAKER, GOLD LACEMAN, &c. &c.
Continues to supply Officers of the Army with their Clothing and Appointments upon such terms as cannot fail to ensure the future patronage and recommendation of those who may favour him with a trial.
T. S. respectfully solicits an inspection, where will be found always on view DRESS CAPS, FORAGE CAPS, EPAULETTES, SASHES, BELTS, SWORDS, &c. &c.
The WHOLE of the FIRST STYLE and QUALITY.
N.B.—Officers exchanging from one Regiment to another, their old Appointments taken in Exchange.
EAST INDIA CADETS COMPLETELY EQUIPPED.
Printed Lists of Prices may be had on application.
Orders by post promptly executed.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 27.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The weather has been so wet and tempestuous, that little or nothing has been done during the week in the way of equipping the ships. The Blenheim is alongside the Dock-yard jetty; a great part of her tanks have been landed, and some alteration is making in the stowage of her hold; she did sail admirably once, and it is therefore strange that she is now so dull; two 68-pounder shell-guns, and a large supply of shells and rockets are to be put on board her for the Wellesley; if the weather continues bad, she will not be able to quit the harbour for another month. The Pique and Blonde are fitting in the harbour. Andromache is in dock; some of her tanks have been brought on shore; she will be ready in three weeks or so. Boadicea transport has landed all the stores brought from Bermuda, and has taken in a large supply of bread from the Clarence-yard for conveyance to Deptford. Raven and Cracker cutters are refitting in the harbour. Victor is to have her masts put in next week, and will then be ready for commission. It is understood that the Madagascar and Magicienne will not be commissioned until the Pembroke arrives in England to be paid off. Ships in Port — Britannia, Victory, Blenheim, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pique, Blonde, Andromache, Raven, Cracker, Boadicea transport, Messenger steamers, Emerald yacht.

MILFORD HAVEN, Dec. 25.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Our Quarantine Establishment, under the superintendance of J. M'Millan, M.D., has had less business lately than it has for many years. The Skiflatk revenue cutter returned to port this week from a cruize.—Commander Watkins, the inspector of the district, resides up at Pembroke, being the most central place of his district.—The Prospero, her Majesty's mail steam-packet on this station, Lieut. Reid commander, was taken into dock at Pembroke dock-yard this week, to have her engines repaired, and her paddle-wheels strengthened. It is likely she will remain in the hands of the mechanics for three weeks. There was much inconvenience experienced in docking her, from the fact that there is no means of pumping out the dock, owing to the fitting up of the new steam-engine for that purpose not being yet completed.—The Medusa and Merlin steam-packets, from the Liverpool station, are expected at this port, to have false keels supplied them.

DEPTFORD, Dec. 27, 1839.—The Prince George is fitting for a transport. Remain—Boyne for the Cape and Mauritius, Asia for Gibraltar and Malta; Isabella, female convict-ship, and Adventure, Naval transport, for Portsmouth.

By the upsetting of the cutter belonging to H. M.'s brig Curlew, in the river Bonny (coast of Africa), on 21st August, Mr. A. M'Carthy, R.N., aged 25, of that vessel, was unfortunately drowned. This lamented young officer was proceeding, with fourteen men under his command, to settle some disputes between the natives and some of the merchant vessels there, (Lieut. Rose, the commander, being very indisposed at the time,) when the boat got amongst the breakers and capsized, and only four of the crew were rescued. The untimely fate of this brave and deserving officer (who thus perished in the execution of his duty) has plunged an amiable family in the deepest affliction.

The Greenlaw, Mr. Driver master, which ship the French papers have exalted into a man-of-war, is daily expected in the River, when we trust to have a genuine version of the affair at Port Louis, mentioned in our last.

The Nimrod, 20, Com. Barlow, is fast manning at Plymouth.

The Crescent, which has been some time fitting at Chatham to serve as a receiving ship at Rio de Janeiro for redeemed slaves, is now ready. Lieuts. N. S. Nott and N. H. Pipon take a passage in her to that station.

It is reported that Vice-Adm. Sir H. Digby will succeed to the Sheerness command next February, vice Sir Robert Otway; Capt. Sir H. S. Baker will be Captain, and W. H. Brown, Esq. (Purser) Secretary.

The Directors of the Trinity-House intend to place another row of lamps in the Dungeness light-house, as an addition to the present ones. The present proprietors have much improved the light-house.

MATES, R.N.—The following is the circular referred to in our last:—

Admiralty, Dec. 16, 1839.—Their Lordships will consider such Mates as remain out of the service more than one year, without applying for an appointment, as having relinquished the Naval service, and that their names will be removed from the efficient register of Mates and Midshipmen, unless their Lordships shall be satisfied that the omission proceeded from unavoidable causes.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR WILLIAM HARGOOD.—The mortal remains of this gallant veteran were this day consigned to the tomb within the precincts of the Abbey Church. The following Admirals attended as pall-bearers, viz.:—Adm. Lord J. O'Bryen, Adm. Sir H. Bayntun, Adm. Sir W. Hotham, Adm. Sir R. Fitzgerald, Adm. Sykes, and Adm. Bullen.—Bath Herald.

Vice-Adm. Sir Thomas Harvey was at Bermuda on 20th Nov. in the Winchester frigate, with the Cleopatra, 26, Capt. Lushington. The crews of the squadron were free from fever, and dispersed on various points. The Seringapatam, 46, senior officer's ship at the Leeward Islands, was at Antigua, on her return to the island of Barbadoes, expecting to be relieved in the early part of the new year.

The Seagull packet, Lieut. Parsons, arrived from Rio de Janeiro, with the Brazil mails, from whence she sailed on 16th Nov.; she has about 32,000*l.* on freight. In consequence of the recent movements by the belligerent powers, the French Admiral had stationed his fleet at Monte Video, with the exception of one ship, which remained in the River Plate, and the blockade there was very insufficiently maintained, by which circumstance several merchant vessels had succeeded in getting into Buenos Ayres, but others were unsuccessful, and three Brazilian vessels had been taken, condemned, and sold as prizes.

The Cyclops steamer is fitting at Sheerness; she is worked by engines of 320-horse power, and is nearly complete with her crew; she bears a Captain, three Lieutenants, and Marine Officer, with the other usual officers, 160 men and boys, two 84-pounders, and six 32-pounder guns. Her destination is supposed to be the East Indies.

A boatman named W. Ruck, belonging to the Coast Guard Station, at the No. 2 Battery in the Deal District, has been committed to Maidstone Jail, to take his trial at the next assizes on the following charge:—"For having discharged a loaded pistol at Lieut. Domford, his Chief Officer, with intent to commit the crime of murder, and by the discharge of the said pistol wounding Peter Vallack, the Chief Boatman." Ruck had not returned to duty to his time, and upon being spoken to by his officer, Lieut. Domford, and ordered on duty, he threatened to shoot him, at the same time drawing his pistols. Lieut. Domford immediately seized him, but not until he had fired. The ball grazed the upper part of the thigh of Peter Vallack, but has fortunately not inflicted a very serious hurt.

Sheerness Dock-yard, in consequence of arrangements between the Admiralty and gas-works contractors, is re-lighted with gas.

Three new revenue cutters are nearly ready for launching at Cowes.

It is reported that Sir C. Dashwood will succeed Rear-Admiral Ross in the command of the South American Fleet. —[Admiral Ross's time of service will not expire till the close of 1840, and there is as yet no talk of his successor.—ED.]

H. M.'s S. Tribune, with official letters from the British Consul at Tarragona, give hopes of the probable righting or recovery of this vessel. It appears that in the late terrific storm at Tarragona (mouth of the Ebro) having broken three enormous cables, and left without an anchor, signals of distress were fired from her. Seeing all other resources useless, she was admirably worked, and with full sails was run upon shore, where she now lies in fifteen feet of sand.

The Water Witch's last prize got to Sierra Leone on the 23rd Oct. She was in charge of Mr. Wilcox, Mate of the Water Witch, and eight of her crew, who arrived with her at that settlement in about three weeks after her capture, without any mishap. She had 427 slaves on board, and a large supply of provisions and stores. She is described as a fine vessel, only 2 years old, copper fastened and copper bottomed, and was formerly known as the celebrated Mary Cushing of Baltimore, where she was built. The Water Witch has captured vessels containing 1130 slaves in the short space of five months; very gratifying to both Officers and men. When Mr. Wilcox parted company with the Water Witch in the Bights of Benin, a suspicious-looking vessel was in sight, and L. Matson in the brig, went down to her. There was no sickness at Sierra Leone on the 3rd Oct.

FRENCH NAVY.—The Journal du Havre of the 23d announces that the Minister of Marine had ordered a general levy of seamen throughout the fifth maritime district. In this levy were to be included all the seamen employed in land and in the arsenals. Those embarked in merchant-vessels, who had not yet been employed in ships of war, or those who had so served for upwards of a year, were to be landed and sent to "the division of the crews of the line," whence they would be directed on Toulon, to be employed in the men-of-war armed or fitting for sea. This measure was intended to complete the personnel of the squadron of reserve, of which the minister ordered the preparation with all possible expedition.

Our attention has been called to a paragraph respecting certain fixed principles in ship-building, discovered by the late Rear-Admiral Hayes. The deceased officer, whose talents we respect, built six vessels of as many classes. We subjoin the relative dimensions of each, and leave it to the reader to discover the fixed principles. Independent of the wide difference in the dimensions of vessels of nearly the same tonnage, we cannot discover the slightest family feature in the midship section which would make good a claim for a relationship; in fact, not only do they all differ materially, but we remember that the dimensions of the masts and sails were repeatedly altered:—

The Lords of the Admiralty have directed that copies of the papers containing the subjects on which the Mates at the Naval College were examined at Christmas, shall be distributed in ships having Naval Instructors.

Le Temps of Tuesday published a long and, no doubt, exaggerated statement of an occurrence at Guiana in Sept. last, in which "Captain Crawford, of her Britannic Majesty's corvette Racehorse," was made to appear as guilty of a gross outrage towards the French inhabitants of the borders of the Oyapuck. The Moniteur contains the following:—

"A journal alludes, in its number of this day, to the conduct of the captain of the British corvette Racehorse, in his communications and intercourse with the inhabitants of one of our establishments in Guiana, which he visited in Sept. last. Complaints on the subject have reached the Minister of War, who lost no time in attending to their object."

It is understood that Her Majesty's Government have approved of the Report of the Commissioners of Survey appointed by the Admiralty to examine the coast, for the purpose of forming "Harbours of Refuge" for Her Majesty's steamers and other vessels; and that Margate and Rye have been definitively resolved upon. The works are to be commenced early in the ensuing spring. It is highly honourable to our present Ministers, and to the Lords of the Admiralty, that so humane and desirable an act is to be no longer delayed. Both these places are capable of affording harbours of the first rate description, and which must be attended with the greatest advantage to our coasting trade in particular, and the salvation of numerous valuable lives. It is but within these three weeks that one hundred and thirty-five sail of vessels were riding in a heavy gale off Margate, which would have been most thankful for such shelter as a "harbour of refuge." Many years ago, the late celebrated engineer, Mr John Rennie, declared that "Margate" afforded the finest capabilities (having a natural back water) for a "safety harbour;" and that he could construct one there, for the trifling sum of 200,000*l.*, to admit ships of 600 tons burden. Several plans have been suggested, drawn, and forwarded to the Admiralty. That by Mr. Edmonds, Civil Engineer and Surveyor, in some respects is excellent, and the estimate only 276,000*l.*; but there does not appear any back water—a circumstance that surprises most people. Government, however, will most probably have their own plans, and scientific officers and artificers of every description; and, in an object of such national importance, it is hoped that a few thousand pounds more or less will not be deemed any consideration. That it will restore the drooping and impoverished town of Margate to activity and consideration, and find work for hundreds of poor men, and prove of other infinite and invaluable service, there can be no manner of doubt. —Morning Chronicle.

Died, at his house at Barton-upon-Humber, on 18th inst., in his 78th year, Mr. John Maloney, a Greenwich out-pensioner. He was a native of the city of Cork, and went to sea when a youth in the merchant service, but was soon impressed, and sent on board the fleet under the command of Sir George Rodney, bound to the West Indies, where, on 9th April, 1782, and three following days, after a hard fought battle, victory declared in favour of the British, and the Count de Grasse surrendered. The deceased was with Lord Howe on the memorable 1st June, 1794, where the French fought with desperate valour, but the gallant Howe gained a decisive victory. Our departed veteran was again with Lord Duncan at Camperdown in 1797, where the Dutch, after a tremendous struggle, were fairly beaten, and with the immortal Nelson at the battle of the Nile in 1801, where British valour again prevailed; with Admiral Sir J. B. Warren in North America, in 1813 and 1813, where he partially lost his sight from intense cold: and again with Lord Exmouth, in 1816, against Algiers, the last expedition of this hoary veteran. On the return of Exmouth's first expedition, our hero volunteered with the second, and at the age of fifty-four nobly fought the battles of his country. He obtained his discharge in 1818, and passed the Board as an out-pensioner of Greenwich Hospital on the miserable pittance of a shilling a-day for his long and faithful services. Being of industrious habits, he has been a stone-sawyer at Barton for the last twenty-three years, at which place he married in 1819, and his widow has to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband. He was a man possessed of good sense, of refined manners, and the most obliging disposition. He was fond of his glass, and took great interest in all the great political movements of late years, and was strongly attached to the reform interest. In all his campaigns this noble veteran only received a musket-shot in the knee.

Coast Guard.—Lieut. W. Seccole, R.N., chief officer at Millisle, has been appointed to the station at Carrickfergus; and Lieut. G. Colman, R.N., was nominated to succeed him.

Military Intelligence.

FROM TUESDAY'S GAZETTE.

Royal East Middlesex Reg. of Militia—George John Stone, Esq. to be Captain.

2d Reg. of Bucks Yeomanry Cavalry—Robert C. Wilford, Gent., to be Cornet.

CAVALRY.

R1. Horse Guards—G. S. Buck, Esq., appointed recently to the North Devon Yeomanry Cavalry, served for some time in the Royal Horse Guards.

1st Dr. Guards (Depot)—Lieut. S. F. Grover is on leave.

4th Dr. Guards—Capt. E. C. Hodge and Lieut. G. H. Eliot have leave to March, 1840.

16th Lancers—Capts. T. H. Pearson and W. V. Jillard have leave to Feb., 1840.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Guards, 2d Batt.—Capt. Seymour is on leave to Feb., and Lieut. H. P. De Bathe to June next.

1st Foot, 1st Batt.—The Athol, whose arrival at Gibraltar we announced in our last, landed the left wing, under Maj. Charles Deane, on the 30th ult.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—Major Bell is now in town under the care of a physician (Doctor Addison, Spring-gardens), from the effects of the late winter campaigns in Canada.

7th Depot—Lieut. Maclaine, who has been so long the object of persecution, and who had nearly fallen a victim to a gang of London sharpers, arrived in this town on Tuesday, in the enjoyment of excellent health, having obtained, through the verdict of an enlightened jury, a signal triumph over his heartless enemies. On next day he proceeded to Cork, to join the Regimental depot, and we need not add, without a stain on his character either as an officer or a gentleman. We feel assured that his intelligence will be gratifying to every high-minded man in the community, as from our personal knowledge of Lieut. Maclaine, there were few men belonging to any profession more entitled to sympathy and respect, being in every sense of the term a man of the strictest integrity. The parties engaged in the late prosecution against Mr. M. are held to bail, and will be tried at the Kilkenny assizes. One of them was recently captured in England.—Carlow Sentinel.

8th Depot—Capt. J. T. Liston and Lieut. S. Browne are on leave.

11th Depot—Capt. John Fordyce is on leave.

12th Depot—Capt. Graham and company have received a public vote of thanks from the inhabitants of Clickhowel, for their vigilant conduct there, while threatened with a Chartist outbreak.

13th—Capt. Fothergill, whose death was recorded in our last, was buried at Cahul with the usual Military honours, on the morning of the 6th Sept.

19th—Ensign Stoney has twelve months' sick leave.

21st—First Lieut. H. W. Bace has joined in India.

25th—The service companies embarked in Plymouth Sound on Saturday, 21st inst., on board the Lord Lynedoch and Pestongie Bomongie transports, for the Cape of Good Hope. Lieut. and Adjutant Priestley was prevented from accompanying them by illness. The last division of the 25th, consisting of 130 men and four Officers, will embark in the Lloyd's freight-ship the second week in Jan.:—Capt. Hamilton (commanding), Adjutant Priestley, Ensigns Cust and Priestley. The Lloyd's will also convey drafts of the 27th, 75th, and 91st Regts. Ensign Cust is on leave.

26th—Assist.-Surgeon W. G. Bace, M.D., has joined in India.

27th Depot—Capt. J. F. Lonsdale has joined. Capt. C. Verseker has arrived at Dresden.

28th—As we anticipated (N. & M. G., Nov. 9th), Captain W. D. Russell has been appointed to a full-pay company in this distinguished corps. The vacancy occasioned by Captain Crummer's promotion was reserved by Lord Hill for Captain Russell, at the express request of Sir M. C. O'Connell, commanding the troops in New South Wales, where the 28th is stationed, and where Capt. R. intends to settle.

A Commission of Lunacy held its sittings on the 20th inst., in Dublin, to inquire into the state of mind of Capt. Eason, h.p., late of this corps, and brother to Capt. F. Eason, 61st. The jury decided that he was of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his own affairs. The lunatic holds the appointment (as appeared in evidence) of Captain in the Royal Hospital. His present health is very bad, in consequence of wounds received during the Peninsular war, and his conduct latterly was so violent as to render personal restraint necessary.—Dublin Monitor.

29th—An inquest was held at Deptford, on Friday se'nnight, on the body of John Weir, a private soldier of this regiment, which caused considerable interest, in consequence of it having been reported that the deceased had committed suicide under the dread of receiving corporal punishment. The evidence adduced proved that the deceased's character was very indifferent; also that one of his brothers had attempted to cut his throat, who was in the same company, and another had drowned himself in Scotland. Major Sharlock, commanding the detachment at Deptford, spoke to the deceased being at all times a strange character, and in continual scrapes from intemperate habits. He had been flogged, but not recently. The jury found a verdict of "Temporary derangement."

33d Depot—Ens. C. Mill is on leave to March, 1840.

34th Depot—Brev.-Maj. Brabazon on leave to 5th Jan.

38th—The second division (3 companies) arrived at Dublin on the morning of 18th Dec., in the Royal Adelaide steam-vessel, from Belfast, and the remaining division (4 companies) on 19th Dec., on board the Britannia steam-vessel, from the same place, and have been disembarked. 1 comp., 40 f. and f., from Dublin to Cappawhite, Dec. 20 to 31. 1 comp., 2 Officers, 50 f. and f., from Dublin to Tipperary, Dec. 19 to 31. Feb., 2 Off., 40 r. and f., from Dublin to Baaska, Dec. 20. 2 cos. from Dublin to Templemore, Dec. 23 to 30. 2 cos. and hd.-qrs. from Dublin to Templemore, Dec. 24 to 31.

Private Wm. Page was brought into the yard of the Royal Barracks, Dublin, on Thursday, to hear the sentence of a Court Martial, before whom he had been tried on a charge of attempting to shoot Serj. Mich. Dolan. The usual formalities previous to the execution of a prisoner were observed on this occasion. The culprit walked in the centre of the firing party, with the Provost-Marshal and the Chaplain, who had previously administered to him the consolations of religion. The band played the Dead March in "Saul." The prisoner's every limb appeared to quiver, and the firing party were pale as death. The troops being formed in a hollow square, the finding of the Court Martial, by which the prisoner was pronounced guilty and sentenced to "be shot to death," was read by the Town-Major, who then paused; and the prisoner attempted to come forward, but was prevented by the Chaplain. The Town-Major proceeded to read a communication from Lord Hill to Lt.-Gen. Sir Edward Blakeney, commanding in Ireland—"I have to acquaint you that her Majesty was pleased to approve and confirm the finding and sentence of the Court." But "Her Majesty was further pleased, under all the circumstances, to extend her most gracious pardon to the prisoner; and instead of causing the said sentence to be carried into execution, to order that he, the said private William Page, of the 38th Regt., be transported as a felon to New South Wales, for the period of his natural life."

47th Depot—A private deserted from Newry, with 11*l.* and a suit of clothes belonging to Ens. Torrens.

53d—Capt. W. O'Brien has leave to April, 1840.

54th Depot—Ens. Miller on leave to 14th Feb.

56th Depot—embarked at Dublin on the 16th inst. on board the Britannia steam-vessel, and sailed in the evening for Belfast.

59th Depot—Lieut. J. M. Isaac has leave to 31st March.

60th, 1st Batt. (Depot)—The company from Thurles to Birr, Dec. 23 to 25.

60th, 2d Batt. (Depot)—The comp. from Cashel to Clonmel, Dec. 24.

64th—Lieut. A. B. Parker has leave to June, 1840.

64th Depot—The Carshalton Park freight-ship, having to take in some cargo at Cork, it is expected she will not be ready to receive the draft on board till 3d or 4th Jan.

70th—Ens. W. H. Barton has proceeded to join on appointment. Lieut. Colston settles from the service. Ens. Pilling and Braddell embark for the service cos.

74th—It appeared in our Paper of the 14th inst. (from a correspondent), that Lieut. Hawker was "coming home from the West Indies, on sick leave;" but his friends have received a letter from him, dated Tobago, the 5th of November, when he was in perfectly good health, as were nearly all the detachment there quartered, under the command of Capt. the Hon. Thomas O'Grady.

Sir Phineas Riall has received a medal and one clasp for Martinique and Guadaloupe. Served in America in 1813, and was severely wounded at the battle of Chippewa.—Col. Mein served in the East Indies from Nov., 1799, to Feb., 1800, and was engaged at Ahmednaghur, Assaye, Argaum, Gawelghur, Shandore, and Gahah. Served also in the Peninsula at different periods from Jan., 1813, to Oct., 1813, including the battle of Busaco, and siege of Badajoz in March, 1812.—Major Crabbe served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1810, to the 21st Dec., 1812, and again from June, 1813, to the end of the war, including the whole of the retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras, battle of Busaco, the advance into the lines to Guarda, first siege of Badajoz, siege and storm of Ciudad Rodrigo, siege and storm of Badajoz, battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid and subsequent retreat through Spain, battles of Nivelle, Nive, Vic, Tarbes, Orthes, and Toulouse, and the whole of the various minor affairs during that period. Wounded March 18, 1811, at Foz d'Arouce, when commanding a party which drove a French picquet from the said village. Wounded again at Toulouse when attacking the Tete du Pont.—Major Mannin served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1810, to Feb., 1813, and again from Oct., 1813, to the end of the war, including the retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras and battle of Busaco, first siege of Badajoz, siege and capture of Ciudad Rodrigo, second siege of Badajoz. Retreat to Portugal after raising the siege of Burgos, battles of Nivelle, Nive, Vic, Tarbes, and Toulouse.—Major Crawley served the Nepaul campaigns of 1814 and 15, and in the Pindaree war in 1816 and 17.—Major Harold's services:—Campaign and battle of Corunna, expedition to Walcheren, and siege of Flushing.—Capt. Alves served the whole of the campaigns of 1810, 11, 12, 13, and 14, with the 74th Reg., in the 3d division, without having ever been absent from it for a single day, including the battles of Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, siege and storming of Ciudad Rodrigo, siege and storming of Badajoz, battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid, battle of Vittoria, Blockade of Pampeluna, the battles in the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, besides various affairs of outposts.—Capt. Yates served the campaigns of 1813 and 14, including the battle of Vittoria; was Volunteer in the 74th Regiment, which corps he left when in the front of Pampeluna in Nov., 1813. Paymaster Davies served in the Peninsula from Sept., 1811, to the end of the war, including the captures of Fort Picarlin and Badajoz; battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Tarbes, Orthes, and Toulouse.—Dr. Cumming served at New Orleans in 1814 and 15, and in the Burmese war in 1826.—New Army List.

74th Depot—Ens. C. A. Coates and J. Duff are to join the service cos. Capt. S. F. De Saumarez proceeded on leave on the 19th inst. Lieut. Hemphill, recently appointed to this reg. from the 29th, is son to the late Lieutenant Hemphill, 1st Foot, who was killed while gallantly fighting at Lundy's Lane, in 1814.

Sir Joseph Fuller served in Flanders in 1793 and 94, and was present at the sieges of Valenciennes and Dunkirk, and in all the actions of that campaign. In 1799 he served in the expedition to the Helder, and was present in the principal actions. Sir Joseph was at the Passage of the Douro, 12th May, 1809, and has received a medal for Talavera.—Col. Gubbins served at the siege of Tarragona.—Capt. Bolton served the Nepaulese campaigns of 1814 and 15, and was present at the sieges of Rhyehur.—Lieut. Carruthers served the campaigns of 1813 and 14 in the Peninsula with the 43d Light Infantry, in the Light division.—Quartermaster Berry served at Malta, Sicily, Spain, and North America, from Feb., 1805, to the 29th May, 1815, including the capture of Ischia and Procida, siege and capture of Tarragona, siege of Barcelona in 1813 and 14, battle of Bladensburgh and capture of Washington, actions before Baltimore and New Orleans, siege and capture of Fort Bowyer.—Dr. Graham served in the Peninsula from Jan., 1810, to the end of the war, including the battles of Busaco, Albuhera, Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Nivelle. Dr. Graham was on board the ordnance-store ship Kent, which was burnt in the Bay of Biscay, 1st March, 1825.—New Army List.

76th—Capt. T. S. Pottle has leave to March, 1840.

79th—Mr. Wm. Lambell, late Colour-Serjeant in this corps, died in Dublin, on 9th inst. He served in Egypt in 1801; at Copenhagen, 1807; Portugal and Spain, 1808; and the following sieges, &c.:—Egypt, Coruuna, 1809; Flushing, 1809; Busaco, 1810; Fuentes de Roez, 1811; Fuentes d'Onor, 1811; Salamanca, Burgos, and Pampeluna, 28th and 30th July, 1813; Nive and Nivelle; Toulouse and Waterloo; in which last-named engagement he was very severely wounded.

82d—Capt. T. W. Hornby has a month's leave.

84th—Lieut. Hon. H. Blackwood exchanges into the 17th Lancers. Lieut. H. is son to the late, and brother to the present Lord Dufferin, late Hon. P. Blackwood, Captain R.N. A company from head quarters, Kilkenny, to Kilbeaule, on 26th Dec. Officers—Capt. Kelly and Ensign Lightfoot.

89th—Capt. J. Q. Wall is on leave until his retirement from the Army, in which he has been 27 years. He served in the Peninsular war, in the expedition to New Orleans, and was at Waterloo.

91st Depot—Ens. F. F. Sickes, Bayly and J. G. Hacket are ordered to join the service cos.

95th Dep.—A detachment embarked at Gravesend on the 21st, in the Tanjore, to join the service companies in Ceylon.

97th—One strong company, about 70 r. and f., from Newbridge to Drogheda, Dec. 26 to 30.

99th—The Field-Officer and 2 comps. from Drogheda to Athlone, from Dec. 30, to Jan. 4, 1840.

Ceylon Rifles—Second Lieuts. Hopson and Lucas embarked with the detachment of the 95th, in the Tanjore. The embarkation of Lieut. Joyce is postponed.

Rl. Artillery—The detachment under the command of Lieut.-Col. A. F. Crawford, for the Mauritius, will embark on the 1st of January; and the detachment for the West Indies, under the command of Capt. Deshrisay, on Monday next. The detachment at Pembroke was relieved yesterday. The Carshalton Park freight-ship arrived at Cove on the 19th inst., having on board a detachment consisting of three Officers, twenty-nine men, and one Staff Assistant-Surgeon.

G. O., 23d Dec., 1839.—The family of First Lieut. Thomas Wilkins, Rl. Art., having obtained Her Majesty's license to use their original surname of De Winton, as appears by the London Gazette of 12th July, 1839, the Master-General approves of Lieut Wilkins's name being changed to Thomas De Winton in the records of the regiment accordingly.

A. Dickson, D. A. General.

G. O., 23d Dec., 1839.—Second Lieut. Travers is transferred from Major Chalmer's company, 5th Battalion, to Major Crutchender's company, 8th Battalion, by order of the Master-General. J. E. Jones, Lt. Col., A. A. General.

Morning Garrison Order, 23d Dec., 1839.—Lord Bloomfield having obtained leave of absence, the command of the Garrison devolves upon Colonel Parker, C.B., Rl. Horse Artillery, commencing this day.—Colonel Patterson will assume the command of the Royal Artillery.

Rl. Engineers.—Maj. Barry has been appointed to the command of the department at Birmingham, in succession to Capt. Jebb; and Lieut. Renwick has replaced Capt. Servante at Kilkenny, the latter officer being ordered on foreign service.

Yeomanry—On the 19th inst. the Gloucester Yeomanry Cavalry was reviewed before Colonel Greenwood, 2d Life Guards, at Badminton Park, the seat of their Colonel, the Duke of Beaufort. Although they had undergone scarcely any previous drilling, they went through their evolutions with great skill and precision, and their general conduct and soldierlike appearance elicited the strong commendation of the Inspecting Officer. After the review the regiment separated, and the officers and men returned to their homes. The muster upon the occasion was more than 300 strong.

The General Court-Martial assembled on the 4th ult. at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, Lieut.-Col. Cobbe, Rl. Horse Artillery, President, is dissolved.

The whole of the troops in Dublin Garrison assembled on the morning of the 19th inst. in the Royal Barracks at guard-mounting, to witness the sentence of a Court-Martial read to private W. Page, 58th Regt., convicted of an attempt to shoot Colour-Serjeant Dolan, of the same corps. The sentence of the Court was death, which was commuted by the Queen's pardon to transportation for life. The General and District Staff attended, and appeared in red.

Captain Gleason has refused the Barrackmastership of St. Lucia, offered to him by the Government.

Soldiers' Neckbands.—On Monday at the Croydon Petty Sessions, John Clifford, the keeper of the canteen at the Croydon barracks, attended before the Bench to answer an information laid against him under the Mutiny Act, for having purchased part of the regimental necessaries of one of the privates of the Fusilier Guards, whereby he had rendered himself liable to the penalty of 20*l*. The case was clearly made out, and the magistrates inflicted a fine of 5*l*, three times the value of the boots, and the costs, amounting together to 6*l*. 1*s*. 6*d*.

Promotions in the Army.—The Gazette of last Friday contains a list of Officers in the British and East India Company's service, who have been rewarded with different classes of the Order of the Bath for their recent services in India. The same honours were likewise conferred last year upon those Officers who were engaged in suppressing the insurrection in Canada. Now, Sir, the Officers who served during the last war in the Peninsula and at Waterloo are far from grudging to their brother-soldiers the honours that have thus been bestowed upon them; but they cannot but remark that whilst these distinctions have been gained with comparatively little loss of blood, every victory and every siege in the last war was accompanied by an enormous loss of killed and wounded. By referring to Lieut. Hart's "Army List" for August last, I find that there are now serving (including General Officers with Regiments) five hundred and eighty-one officers who served as officers in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, and that out of these 226 have been wounded, several of them more than once. This is a large proportion, especially when we take into calculation the number of Officers who have been since the war driven from the Army by wounds, infirmities, age, and neglect. Surely the Duke of Wellington's ingratitude whilst in office to these ill-used veterans ought not perpetually to exclude them from sharing in the honours of their profession under a Liberal Government. The Queen's approaching marriage presents a fit occasion to repair the injustice.—Correspondent, Morning Chronicle.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

INSULTS TO THE BRITISH FLAG.

"Discretion is the better part of valour."

Sir,—The following anecdote is well known as fact in one of our large Irish counties, viz. Sir John C——, a celebrated Hibernian bully and duellist, who never neglected an opportunity of fixing a quarrel on gentlemen of worth and consequence by barefaced insult, with a view to establish a name for himself, with his usual effrontery, in a ball-room at M——, planted his foot firmly on the shoe of a leading member of the county then present, and was retaining it there with as much apathy as though the leg to which it belonged was of wood and useless of its position, when the gallant member, whose courage no one questioned, knowing the intention of such intrusion, politely bowed, saying "Sir John, I am afraid my toe has got under your heel; I beg your pardon."—The conduct of Great Britain and France evince a strong semblance to this Irish demonstration and polite forbearance;—insult after insult is wantonly proffered by France, and England politely apologises for having unfortunately placed herself "in the way." But, Sir, I think it can scarcely be denied, that French impudence has arrived at its climax, when the officers of that nation presume to board us in our own ports, and cover the governors with ridicule. In the island of Mauritius, so late as September last, it appears that a most degrading insult has been practised on the British flag—that flag which has braved the battle, and made nations quail, for ages past—and which was wont, in times now it appears gone by, to resent even the shadow of disrespect! Sir, it has ever been considered as an established mark of thorough contempt, when decorating ships with colours, to place the national flag of the country designated at the bottom of the ensigns displayed from the mast-head, as indicative of compelling them to do the work of scavengers; and yet a French vessel of war, under Commissioned Naval Officers, claiming the rights of hospitality when in a state of distress, and which are accorded to them, takes the first opportunity of a public demonstration to place the British flag in this degrading position, in that very port where she is receiving help, and to be gazed on by Englishmen! The numerous insults wantonly offered by French Officers to this country are too recent to need recapitulation; but gross as they have been, none equal this last act of the French brig Lancier and her consort, both repairing damages in the island of Mauritius. Has all British feeling fled from the nation! Will this insult, like that of forcibly abstracting a pilot from the Express—(report says her Commander's prudence is to be rewarded at the forthcoming promotion)—be likewise passed over without marked expression of national feeling—that is, if any be left? Our flag wantonly insulted abroad—our commerce impeded by French blockade—and for want of a market, as the consequence, our manufacturers starving at home! But, thank Heaven! an attempt was made to resent the proffered insult. Captain Driver, a ci-devant Master R.N., indignant at the unblushing effrontery, retaliated upon the Frenchman; and what, Britons, was the result? Why, truly, the Frenchman not only perpetrated this premeditated contempt towards the British nation, but with the most consummate assurance demands "ample satisfaction" for the retaliatory measures adopted by an old naval veteran, a man who still remembers with pride the days in which the ships of every nation submissively lowered their sails on passing a British man-of-war! And will Britons believe the fact, that this said specimen of England's glory, this Master, was made by the Governor to apologise for having presumed to vindicate the honour of that flag which was the pride of his youth, and the dignity of which it still cheers his heart to uphold! If, however, this old warrior (whom it is the fashion to decry) was compelled to apologise, that same man by whom he was thus humiliated in order that Frenchmen should not feel affronted met with utter contempt himself from the self-same propitiated Frenchman. The grandiloquent display of successive protocols under demonstrations from the battery, most appropriately called Fanfaron, with soldiers under arms, parks of artillery bristling on the beach, and the black pennant of the steamer threatening vengeance, ended like a 48 hours' hurricane—exhausted! And thus must the British ensign float under the quarter-gallery of French ships of war, and be treated like waste paper. Verily, it is a dangerous experiment to surrender even a little of dignity. When British ships of war compelled the observances of humiliation, and the acknowledgment of Britain's superiority as Mistress of the Seas, we continued to be respected; but in our magnanimity and conceited liberality (the boast and fashion of the times) we must needs "dispense with observances which only administer to our pride." True, it was our pride, and of a nature, too, to swell the heart of every British sailor, and nerve him to the determination of supporting the dignity of his country, as represented in her Union-Jack, under all circumstances of personal peril, either in single combat or general action. How are the mighty fallen! Nations which presumed not to pass the British flag without due obeisance in lowering their lofty sails, as bowing with respect, now treat that flag with a contempt the most degrading, as conventionally established as the usages of Navies, viz., treating it as a rag fit only to sweep the foam of the sea, or the dust from the deck. But the Governor was right; had he chastised the Frenchman, he would doubtless have been speedily removed from his post, and left by the nation to the penalty of incurring his own responsibility, in presuming to uphold their dignity without express orders from Government. These are no times to employ the disciples of the old school: I would have hammered every plank out of her.

Since writing the above, I find that a similar and nearly simultaneous act of accidental aggression has been perpetrated on H.M.B. Spider (in the R. Plate), which was fired into by the guard-boat of a French ship-of-war, and a man wounded. Captain Herbert, of H.M.S. Calliope, on being told that the said boat was without an officer, in answer to his demand of an explanation, next required of the French Admiral, there present, that inquiry should be instituted into the conduct of the Captain of the vessel to whom the boat belonged, for allowing her to be sent on such service without an officer. The answer was, that "the Admiral would send to France for instructions from his Government upon the subject, but that he could not comply himself." It is surprising how strong a resemblance all those singular accidents bear towards each other, and that French Admirals have no power to bring subordinate Officers to a Court of Inquiry, let alone a Court Martial, but must refer the case to the Ministry. The Prince de Joinville's case was very like the above Captain's in this respect.

An Old Sailor.

THE BRITISH AS A MILITARY NATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In reading lately a very entertaining and instructive work by the Reverend Mr. Gleig, entitled "Germany, Bohemia, and Hungary, visited in 1837," I was rather amused at the opinions expressed to the author by some Officers of the Austrian Cavalry, of the British as a Military nation.

The following is the passage to which I allude:—

"I do not think that our good friends are disposed to rate us very high as a Military nation. Of our Navy they always speak in terms of unqualified admiration; but they doubt our aptitude for war by land, and especially hold our Cavalry cheap."

I am quite ready to admit that the English as a nation are, for the most part, not only profoundly ignorant of all matters connected with their soldiery, but are apathetic and indifferent to an incredible degree as to their glories and renown. I beg leave, however, to differ in opinion very widely from those Austrian Officers as to the inaptitude of our Army for war; and I shall be able to prove, with a very moderate expenditure of ink and paper, how extremely crude and erroneous are their notions on this head. If those young Officers, most of whom probably were not born at a period when the British Army was daily gathering unfading laurels from the best of the Continental troops, had taken the trouble to inform themselves of the momentous events of those days, and the prominent part taken therein by our troops, they would surely have paused ere they ventured to express a doubt as to their aptitude for war.

I should not have troubled you with any comments on the opinions of those young foreigners; Military men of practical experience will take those opinions for what they are worth, and for no more; but Mr. Gleig's book is likely to be perused by a large portion of our countrymen, the mass of whom perhaps will, without giving themselves the smallest trouble to reflect on their soundness or unsoundness, give implicit credence to those assertions. As, however, your valuable Paper is very widely circulated, and reed by civilians as well as by Naval and Military men, I am induced to request you will do me the favour to insert in the Naval and Military Gazette the following problem, which I am rather curious should be solved, confessing myself puzzled as to the mode by which a satisfactory explanation is to be got at on the subject:—

How came it to pass that the French troops under Napoleon, who gained victory upon victory over the Austrians in Italy, and finally expelled them from that country, and at a subsequent period entered Vienna in triumph, from whence the French leader dictated such terms to the vanquished as he thought fit; how came it to pass, I ask, that those very Frenchmen were beaten on every occasion from the glorious battle of Alexandria, in 1801, up to that of Waterloo, in 1815, which period includes battles without end in the Peninsula, and that also of Maida? And by whom were those conquerors of Italy and of Austria so constantly defeated? Why, by those soldiers who are pronounced as having "no aptitude for war!" How are those stubborn facts to be reconciled with the opinions of the young Austrian Cuirassiers? Methinks the avowal of such opinions comes marvellously out of place from that quarter above all others.

Their opinion of our Navy admits of no comment. It has long been unrivalled, and no effusion of my pen could exalt it one atom higher. Its supremacy will I trust, long, long be maintained, and its flag wave triumphant as heretofore. As to the estimation in which the Austrians hold our Cavalry, it is more than probable that an encounter with them might totally undeceive them; but this is an event by no means likely to occur.

I have seen in the field the Cavalry of Russia, Prussia, Austria, France, Spain, Portugal, Saxony, Denmark, and of Hanover, and have no hesitation in saying that the horses of the British Cavalry are superior to any of them. I need scarcely add that the troopers must necessarily be as brave individually as our unrivalled Infantry. If then our Cavalry is not superior to that of Austria, the fault must not be ascribed either to the horses or to their riders.

INDIA ROTATION SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As a proof of the extreme irregularity of the Roster for foreign service, I have, during my service, seen the 17th Foot twice in India, first from 1804 to 1823, in Bengal, and next they are now, since 1836, at Bombay. The 78th Foot was in India, at Bombay, Bengal, and Java, from 1798 to 1816; and again they were sent to Ceylon so early as 1826, whence they returned in 1838. There may be several other instances. On the other hand, so far as my memory serves, the following corps of Her Majesty's Army have never been in India at all, though others have served there twice in the space of forty years, viz.—the 5th, 7th, 8th, 11th, 15th, (18th just gone,) 23d, 25th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 32d, 35th, 37th, 42d, 43d, 50th, 51st, 58th, 60th, (two battalions), 61st, 64th, 68th, 70th, 79th, 81st, 85th, 90th, 91st, 92d, 93d, (94th old Scotch Brigade was there, and the new 94th is just gone,) 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, and Rifle Corps (two battalions), with one battalion of the 1st Foot. Thus, thirty-nine battalions, if I am correct, have never served on the Continent of India since we had an Army there, while others have worked double tides in the space of forty years only. Of these thirty-nine corps, the 28th and 50th, being now in New South Wales, are probably going on to India, for the first time, with the 80th, which I believe has already had a spell in those regions, leaving thirty-seven corps never sent there, while four at least will have had a double allowance.

Thus much I have premised on your own view of the case, that the service in India is a real hardship on both officers and men. But do those who are most concerned really view it in that light, i. e., the said officers and men? I apprehend not, and that from a very long experience on the spot. On the contrary, I have had the lot to see many corps embarking for England, and have generally found the greatest reluctance evinced by both the officers and men—I mean by the great majority—to return to England: and this is but natural, if you will reflect on the matter. A twenty years' spell there entirely forms them to the service and the country. They get strongly attached to both, and unwilling to leave. The officers of the regiments which go to India are chiefly composed of that class which, for want of a better name, I shall call soldiers of fortune; men who enter the Army as an honourable profession for life, and not as a pastime for a few years, and then to quit it. In proof of this, see the changes that occur amongst the officers when a regiment is ordered to the Continent of India: the young men of fortune or of fashion exchange out instantly; the others take their places. No man hardly who has a fortune will go to India, where he must be debarred all the fashionable amusements and the gaiety of high life, which fortune everywhere else almost places at his disposal. The officer is essentially a soldier in India, and nothing else. The life is purely Military. The society, except at the capitals of the three Presidencies, is almost exclusively Military. He is almost always in camp; for even the cantonments are nothing but straw and bamboo cottages. His regiment is always kept together, probably in large bodies with other troops. He marches 1,200 miles perhaps at a stretch, merely at a change of quarters. Whether in cantonments, marching, in a peaceful camp, or on service, he feels that he is a soldier and a soldier only; that a great and powerful empire is entrusted to him. These things have their charms for the real soldier, which the heat and other discomforts cannot diminish. But further than this, which of all our foreign possessions offers such a constant field as India, for calling forth the pride and animating the zeal and the hopes of the officer or soldier? None. Independent almost of European politics, every regiment in India is kept in constant readiness for war, which is so frequent, that it may almost be called its ordinary state—peace being the exception. What a field, then, does India present to every man, who, while profound peace reigns almost everywhere else, finds his only element, the only hope of advancement, honours, or professional reward, in India! Look at the numbers of officers and men, who, since the peace of 1815 particularly, have acquired a rich harvest of laurels, decorations—rank and fortune I may add, by their gallant and meritorious services in India! Where else could they have been acquired? With the single exception of the civil outbreak in Canada, which gave the Cross to five or six Lieutenant-Colonels and promoted a couple of Captains, I know of none. But India presents a perpetual and a most inviting field—for peace in Europe is not necessarily peace in India; while war in Europe is only attended with an extended field of war in India on a grander scale.

Exclusive of this, both officers and soldiers are well taken care of. The regiments are almost always kept united (the greatest comfort to all soldiers); they are only hard worked when the necessity is obvious to all—and then their fatigues, privations, loss of life by climate and the sword, are amply compensated to the survivors by the invariable results of success. The arrangements for the soldier in camp are the best and most perfect in the world; while the barracks and hospitals, on account of the climate, are generally vast, airy, and splendid.

So much for the condition or prospects of the troops serving in India. The reasons which prescribe a periodical relief are purely political, I apprehend, in order to prevent their acquiring too strong a relish for Indian life and service, or so as to unfit them for service anywhere else, from the odd notions prevailing in England regarding the luxuries of the East. I spent many years there, and I can honestly declare, the greatest luxuries I ever enjoyed or heard of, and the most difficult and expensive of attainment, were a glass of cold water, and a cool refreshing sleep at night. None under a General or a Field-Officer can expect or command the first; and as for the second, during many months in the year it is unattainable. But as far as the service of the State is concerned, or the efficiency of the troops, a corps which has served ten or twenty years in India is worth two, corps at least newly arrived to the government of that country. The latter are always insufficient for some years after their arrival, and are wholly crippled by the least exposure. This fact is well known to the Governments and Staff in India. The most efficient English regiments they have are always the corps longest in the country; the others suffer cruelly for some years after their arrival; and, what is still more remarkable, the mortality amongst these Recruits newly arriving from Europe is, I understand, always less in those who join the Regiments of long service in the East, than with those joining the newly-arrived Regiments. I have heard the oldest Military and Medical Officers explain this very clearly. The Corps longest in India, say for instance the Regiments of Artillery and of European Infantry belonging to the Company at the three Presidencies, have constituted their messes, manner of living, and all their internal arrangements, specially with a practical view to the climate and the country in which they are serving. They know from long experience, from a constant residence, what precautions are necessary in the mode of living, to secure the health of the Soldier. Rice, vegetables, and bread, enter more largely into their daily food, with the various condiments used by the natives of the country, than Regiments fresh from Europe will condescend to use, from their ignorance of the necessity of the change, habit, or prejudice.—Even in the article of dress, the Regiments newly arrived lose numbers of men from their perseverance in old habits. A Commanding Officer thinks it disgraceful to change H.M. uniform, for the white linen jacket worn by all the old Regiments in the hot season, and were they not restricted by law, would, as I have often seen, parade their Regiments daily in a vertical sun. One of the finest Regiments I ever saw in H.M. service was, even in a healthy cantonment, and just landed, utterly ruined, decimated, in less than six months, by the joint operation of these causes with drunkenness. Hence the greater mortality, not only in H.M. Regiments newly arrived, but in the Recruits joining them afterwards, over the old Regiments and their Recruits. The latter class join Regiments of old stagers, thoroughly formed to the climate, and whose arrangements being the result of long experience, the Recruit falls into them at once, and has at least a greater chance of escape from the destructive effects of climate. In time every Officer of course comes to the old plan, but, alas! too late to save those lives which have been sacrificed. So far therefore from calling out for more frequent reliefs, and repeating the cry of hardship and inhumanity, &c., because the reliefs are not shortened from 20 to 10 years in India, I humbly submit that the best and most humane plan would be to form a permanent establishment of English Regiments for India; that we should thereby not sacrifice one half the valuable lives that are now lost in seasoning a Regiment, in order to withdraw them when seasoned and most efficient; that the officers and men devoted to this service would be far better pleased by remaining till age or convenience prompted a total retirement from the service; that our expenses would be greatly reduced by discontinuing the practice of removing whole Regiments to and fro, while the Regiments thus allotted to permanent service in India would be twice as efficient and valuable to the Indian Government as they ever can be under the system of reliefs: finally, that no case of individual hardship can ever occur to Officer or Soldier—for the former wishing to leave India, can never want an exchange;—while the latter, if not specially recruited for the purpose, can always quit at the expiration of his time, as they now in effect do. But there are always so many openings in India for good Soldiers,—as Staff Sergeants to Native Regiments in every department—Ordnance, Barracks, Commissariat—as Riding Masters, Conductors and Sub-Conductors of Ordnance, of the Commissariat, and of the Roads, Bridges, and Public Works,—that few who have any zeal or talent will ever return till they retire finally. Although debarred from commissions in the service, these various employs as Warrant Officers contribute to make their fortunes, and provide honestly for a family, which is more than can be said for the Commissioned Officers in general; and then, by way of finish, they are entitled to very handsome pensions when retired or invalided. Of this very numerous class in India, more than half probably have come from the ranks of H.M.'s Regiments—always the most steady and deserving men; and I know many of them, long since in a state of comparative affluence, retired on pensions varying from 60*l.* to 300*l.* per annum. Besides—the plan has also this further advantage, that in case of the adoption of a permanent English Establishment for India, the Officers (as well as soldiers) may, under the same regulations as those now in operation with the Indian Army, become entitled to all the advantages of a full and half-pay retirement after certain service in India, as well as to a fair participation in the Staff there, which is now denied them, precisely because they are not permanently allotted to that service.

I have but one observation more, before I conclude this long intrusion on your space. While the Relief or Rotation System is in operation, the few memoranda at the head of my letter prove that it is not equally or fairly carried out in practice, as it ought to be;—that many Regiments have never been in India, while others have been sent there twice within forty years. All this is true. But my opinion, founded on no trifling experience, is entirely against the relief of English Regiments in India, and I trust I have shown some few reasons why the establishment should be a permanent one—still bearing in mind, that in cases of emergency, Regiments not on the permanent Indian establishment can always be sent there, till the emergency has ceased.—I am, &c.

AN OLD SOLDIER.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your last impression I purposely gave both the British and the American Naval historians' account of the action between the Constitution, and the Cyane and the Levant, that your readers and correspondents may impartially judge of it themselves, before my overhaul is submitted to their frank consideration. In page 531, Mr. Cooper observes, "For a night action, the execution on both sides was unusual, the enemy firing much better than common. The Constitution was hulled oftener in this engagement than in her previous battles, though she suffered less in her crew than in the combat with the Java. She had not an Officer hurt."

"The manner in which Capt. Stewart handled his ship on this occasion, excited much admiration among nautical men, it being an unusual thing for a single vessel to engage two enemies and escape being raked. So far from this occurring to the Constitution however, she actually raked both her opponents, and in the manner in which she backed and filled in the smoke, forcing her antagonists down to leeward, when they were endeavouring to cross her stern or fore-foot, is among the most brilliant manœuvring in Naval annals." With these observations I fully agree. The Constitution was worked, as usual, in the most seamanlike manner, and used every caution in her approach to the contest. British tarmen jeered the Americans for imitating the French in firing at long-balls.—"Damn 'em, why don't they come slap alongside, and let us have fair play for it?" It is the bounden duty of every warrior going into battle, not to trust his victory to chance, although he may command an overwhelming superiority and the most advantageous position. The stratagems of war have often been successful over incautious forces of war. The main object of the British ships was to disable the Constitution, as an active cruiser against our mercantile convoys; which they thought could be more easily effected by manœuvring in the dark: that of the American, to capture her enemy, without disabling herself in European waters, far from resources of refitment. The American Captain knew that the British 20 or 24-gun ship and the sloop-of-war were armed with 32-pound carronades, and 6's, 9's, or 12's, for chasers, so that had he gone slap alongside his enemy, he would have been opposed to heavier metal than his own broadside; he therefore "scotched the snake" with the long bow, beyond the reach of its deadly power, before he closed to kill it. Keeping the main object in view, viz., the crippling of the enemy, we must now consider, whether the snake did its utmost to get the giant within its folds. The Levant and Cyane formed a close line on starboard tack, to wait the Constitution's pleasure to close, and select her first point of attack, the weather quarter of the British, where there was not a long gun for defence. The nautical question then is, whether the British should not have tacked together, and saluted with their bow-chasers the Constitution coming down to them, thus still keeping the Cyane, the larger vessel, to be the first in, and to stand the brunt of the action, and giving the Levant a greater chance of choosing the point of impunity for crippling the Constitution. In approaching the British, Mr. Cooper says, "about half-past four, the spar proving defective, the main royal mast was carried away, and the chase gained." Here we see the Constitution's superiority of sailing lost, from the want of one light sail, Mr. Cooper also attributes the loss of the Chesapeake, in the first instance, to two or three running ropes being carried away. While passing the Shannon's bow-side, the Chesapeake had her fore-topsail tie and jib sheet shot away. Her spanker brails were loosened, and the sail blew out. These accidents occurring nearly at the same instant, they brought the ship up into the wind, when, taking aback, she got stern way, and fell on board the enemy with her mizen rigging foul of the Shannon's fore chains."

The Levant and Cyane's heads being from the American's, prolonged the time for closing; but had they turned their heads when within reach of the American long-24's, they must have been sooner in action, and with their bow-chasers might have cut away a spanker brail jib sheet or topsail tie, and prevented their enemy's quick working, tacking and filling, and forced the Constitution to see all for wearing; for an American ship-of-war is as careful of her bust as a vain belle, whose heart is never broken until the beauty of her features is scarred. "Then," says Jack, "all this 'ere laid up into our hugs, go for to signify, that we must fight the Yankee, as Jeffries served the cat, or as the Belvidera served out the President, and made her turn tail, with what Commodore Rogers called a "smasher over the head-piece." Friend Jack, with all my heart I thank thee. An honest word or sea-spun saying of thine, conveys more meaning than a page of rounded periods. May thy stave of thy yarn ever be cheered with the baccabox and the flowing can!

Whether it had been preferable, in the onset, to give fight with the long 9's, on board of the Levant and Cyane, which would have reached, and probably damaged their enemy's rigging, rather than showing fight with carronades that fell short of the object full one-third of mile distant, is but a question. I am, however, most reluctant to reduce to a mere question, or matter of opinion, the Levant's bearing up out of that line of battle formed with the Cyane for mutual attack and defence, for the purpose of reeving running rigging, and leaving her consort, during its performance, to certain destruction. James says, "The Cyane, in her station, turned the hands up to reft the rigging." The Levant, for the same purpose, quitted her station, and ran off to leeward. From the historical accounts of this leeway-manœuvre, or, in diplomatic parlance, "untoward circumstance", it evidently appears, that the Cyane thought she was indeed abandoned in an unmanageable state, and consequently judged it useless to contend single-handed with her powerful enemy." And the Levant having bore up to repair damages since 6. 40, and being two (miles to leeward, still bearing away, she (the Cyane) fired a lee-gun and hoisted a light as a signal of submission.

Although history records the lee course, steered from the true course of battle, yet as the Officers and crews of the British were honourably acquitted by the deliberate sentence of a Court Martial, it would be highly improper to insinuate that every trick which the Levant played for and lost was not strictly according to Hoyle; still the jars who played the war-game by the good old rules of Howe, Jervis, Duncan, Collingwood, and Nelson, must agree that to bear up out of the line of battle to reeve running rigging, was playing a losing game to herself and partner. Jack's stave in the pigtail-days of olden times, reminds us, when

> "With rigging cut in every strand,
> We fought till not a stick would stand,
> On board of the Arethusa."

MASTERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your paper of the 7th inst., I observe a letter signed Amigo, the writer of which undertakes to corroborate your assertion in a former number, viz. "That in nine cases out of ten where the crews of Merchant-ships behave ill, such conduct is caused by the brutal treatment of the seamen by the Master." And in proof thereof he adduces some most extraordinary facts,—to extraordinary indeed, as to create a doubt either of the tenacity of his memory, or of the sanity of both Masters and crews. That a man in his senses should make a bet about the time in which he will perform the voyage from Liverpool to Lima, appears doubtful; but, that he should be able to persuade men to proceed on such a voyage, under the circumstances related by Amigo, to me appears marvellous; as I have often known men refuse to proceed to sea under the plea of the crew being insufficient in consequence of the desertion of one or two men from a crew of 34. Your correspondent does certainly show these South American traders to be clever rogues indeed. He also informs your readers, that in the numerous instances of this sort of litigation of which he has been cognizant, he does not hesitate to affirm that your assertion is borne out. Perhaps a little hesitation on his part would have been advisable; at all events, it appears that his experience of 15 years has only afforded him an opportunity of judging from a very indifferent sample. Were I to give to the public one half of the instances I am acquainted with, in which the insubordination and brutality of the seaman has been wholly unprovoked by the conduct of the Officer, your weekly columns would not contain them.

Had Amigo served during the early part of the last war, he might have witnessed uncalled-for severity and brutal treatment on the part of many in our own service, whose birth and education warranted better conduct; yet, no one has had the audacity to vilify the conduct of nine-tenths of the Officers of the Navy in consequence. Your correspondent has only seen the British sailor under the wholesome restraint of an improved discipline; let him gain experience by the mode which you have recommended to me, but I would not send him quite so far—). Let him make a voyage across the Atlantic only, in a merchant-ship, and I am confident he would see much to exercise his patience, even as a passenger, and perhaps enough to make him judge less harshly the character of a ship-master. I can very well recollect when my idea of these persons was (in common with that of the Navy in general) anything but flattering, but I have lived long enough to see my error and acknowledge my injustice: time has also brought about improvement among this class, as it has elsewhere.

That numerous complaints should come before the public, emanating from so large a body as the merchant seamen of the realm, is not to be wondered at, especially when we consider the ill-defined relations between master and servant, and the concentrated misdoings of long voyages: my only surprise is, the very small proportion they bear to those from an equal number of the other classes.

It appears extraordinary, that in this country, where there is much sympathy shown for the sailor—so much indeed as to make all their faults (however gross) appear venial in the eyes of the public, and to cause the conduct of their commanders to be held up to scorn and reprobation by the press, the Government does not interfere by getting an Act passed regulating the number and quality of the crew, and the allowance and quality of the provisions; such a regulation would, I am convinced, remove many of the difficulties at present surrounding the commanders of trading vessels: as things are at present, it is next to guesswork in laying in provision for a voyage.

To your correspondent Discipline, the fraternity of shipmasters is greatly indebted, inasmuch as he has admitted that several of them (out of some thousands) are decent people. I must inform that gentleman, that although I have been so long in the Mercantile Marine, I cannot bring to mind that any act of uncalled-for severity or downright oppression has taken place within the scope of my observation; yet I do not aver that such things have never happened: the accused are men, (and if you will) "dressed in a little brief authority," and therefore, as the poet hath it, "apt to play fantastic tricks:" but, as I before said, they are men, and not angels; but I cannot allow that they are devils, to whom the broad assertions of yourself and correspondents would assimilate them. Discipline has put a question respecting the harassing conduct of Masters towards their people, for the express purpose of forcing them to desert. I will answer it in a manner which will make the assertion appear even more paradoxical than he supposes, at least as regards the West India trade.

It is a most serious misfortune to lose any part of the crew in the West Indies, because negroes must be employed to do the work at exactly double the wages of the seamen, and with the same carte blanche upon the bread-cask and bread-bag. Now, any one acquainted with the calibre of the negro stomach may easily guess the result; besides, it most generally happens, that what with the half-pay to his family, and the advance he may have from time procured from the master, the sailor contrives to leave the ship with very little due to him, and hands must be shipped for the voyage home at double wages. This may be demanded by the law, and a very bad law it is, as it gives a bonus upon desertion by tacitly encouraging them to make such demand, and it is no doubt the principal cause of it. It is true, no doubt, that a Master may be punished by a heavy fine for receiving deserters from another ship; but what is to be done? the crime must be winked at, as all Masters are obnoxious to the law at one time or other.

In conclusion, I must still insist, however hopeless may be the task of convincing you and your correspondent, that the strictures which, according to Discipline, have excited the Old Officer, are not founded in justice. I am sorry to encroach so largely upon your space, but I am of opinion that by lending your columns to such discussions, you will render benefit ultimately to both master and seaman. With a vale at mio Amigo, and also to Discipline, I remain, &c.,

December 11. AN OLD COMMISSIONED OFFICER, R.N.

"UNATTACHED" PROMOTION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I shall feel indebted to any of your readers who can inform me whether any regulation exists in the army to the following effect:—That where an officer obtains an unattached company by purchase, not being at the time senior lieutenant for purchase in his regiment, he cannot obtain a full-pay company in that regiment until all the lieutenants shall have obtained their companies who were senior for purchase to him at the time of his appointment to the company on unattached half-pay.

I am inclined to believe that this regulation does or did exist, not only because it is a fair one, but because I have seen captains remaining on half-pay until their turn for re-appointment should arrive. Exempli gratia, Lieut. Lord Arthur Lennox, 71st Lt. Infantry, in 1826 (being junior to Lieut. Denny) purchased an unattached company. Lt. Denny's turn for purchase did not arrive until Sept. 1833, and then (and not until then) was Lord A. Lennox brought on full pay of the regiment as Captain. I have seen many examples of this, but the foregoing will suffice as warranting my conclusion that this regulation existed so recently as 1833.

Supposing then the existence of this regulation, can you or any of your military readers explain the following occurrence

In July, 1835, Capt. Considine, 52d, retired on half-pay to join the British Auxiliary Legion to the command of a regiment in which he was appointed. Lt. H. S. Davis, who was at that time fourth for purchase in the list of Lieuts. in the 52d, obtained an unattached company, and was immediately (August 11th, 1835) brought on full pay as Captain in the 52d, and of course became senior to the three officers who had been senior for purchase to him, and who have all purchased their companies since (which almost proves their purchase-money to have been lodged at the time he was put over their heads). Mark the consequence: he as junior captain became entitled to remain at the depot, while they as senior Lieutenants embarked with the service companies; and, owing to the rapid promotion which has occurred in the 52d within the last twelve months, he became senior Captain, and has just purchased his majority.

I conceive Major Davis to be a most fortunate officer, and the three Captains to be just the reverse. He was of course quite right to "take the good the gods provided!" but I cannot believe such promotions to be conducive to that brotherly love and unity of sentiment which ought to exist among brother officers, and should rather see every man promoted (by purchase or otherwise) according to his seniority, and according to the length of his half-pay services.

This was the case "in the days when we went soldiering a long time ago," and they were better times than the present. Wishing you, Mr. Editor, and all your readers, a happy Christmas and a merry new year, I shall terminate this epistle, and send it to you, in the words of my esteemed and revered friend, Thomas Hood, "as a Christmas present for the present Christmas."

Dec. 24, 1839. DEMETRIUS RIGHARDOVICH.

CASE OF COLONEL THOMAS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I shall feel obliged by your publishing a few questions on the subject of Lord Hill's letter, respecting Members of Parliament (being Officers in the Army) attending public dinners composed of gentlemen holding the same political opinions as those who returned them to Parliament.

1st. Is it not likely to prevent or greatly to oppose any Officer for the future being returned in opposition to the other candidate not being in the service, as it is reasonable for his opponents to say he dare not attend any public meeting even in the town or county he stands for? And if not not to be done, what must be expected from his votes and exertions, when the political interests of his constituents would have to give way to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief?

2d. Which is the first in consequence, the House of Commons or the Horse Guards? The latter has taken the lead and assumed it, having dictated to a Member of Parliament (being an Officer), that if he attended any more Conservative dinners, it would in all probability end in the loss of commission, although it be stated that he attended in virtue of being a Member of Parliament.

3d. If absolute devotion to the Sovereign is the object of the Commander-in-Chief, what may be the effects should anything happen to our most gracious Queen, and a new constitution be given us as in Hanover, amidst the Military vivas of El rey absoluto?

4th. Is an Officer doing in public or at a public dinner answerable for all the speeches and words in the heat of argument that may be used, even if he does not hear them, or for what the reporter may transmit or publisher print?

5th. If Lord Hill's letter is carried out, will it not be necessary for every independent and upright member, being an Officer, to dispose of his commission, if justice is to be done to his constituents? It may be said that Lord Hill has decided the impropriety of Military men becoming Members of Parliament, as he can prevent the wishes and inclinations of constituents being carried into effect, except with loss of commission. No good can accrue to the Army from his Lordship's letter: its only hope was from Parliament; and now subserviency or obedience in Military members seems almost necessary. I think that all Officers, not members, are better absent from political meetings—yet it should be given in advice, not in threats; but it appears to me to be the duty of a Member of Parliament to attend to the interests of his constituents, whether he be a Military man or not. What has fallen on a Tory may come with double weight on a Whig. The letter applies to the hereditary as well as the elective members of the legislature. I deprecate the sacrifice of a gallant and faithful Officer as a terror to others or to popular cry. Lord Hill has decided, that when the two duties come together, as garrison and regimental, Parliamentary must give way to Military, or King before Court. Every one must allow Members of Parliament have very great duties to perform—to have Military men: the former duties are of a political nature, and for ever will be so; how then, by his Lordship's letter, can a Military man be a fit representative in Parliament? I wish for no argument on these questions; they are worth the consideration of such Military men as take a lead in county meetings. I suppose any Lord Lieutenant could issue a similar letter to the Yeomanry and Militia of his county.

A MILITARY LANDOWNER.

AVA PRIZE-MONEY AND THE H. E. I. COMPANY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The unfortunate claimants in Europe and other parts of the world who, notwithstanding the distribution of the Ava prize-money, commenced in Calcutta in January, 1837, remain still unpaid, owe a debt of gratitude to you for so often noticing the subject in your valuable Journal. As another Session of Parliament is approaching, I crave the insertion of these few lines, as they may draw the attention of some member, and induce him to ask Sir John Hobhouse "a question" when the House of Commons is again assembled. The East India Company have had the use of the principal, unburthened with any interest upon it, since January, 1837, a period of three years. It is obviously, therefore, against their interest to use any exertions in expediting payment of the numerous claimants at home; for though, as Sir John Hobhouse truly remarked when last questioned on the subject, the shares to individuals will be very trifling, yet the aggregate sum in the Company's hands is considerable, and the saving of three years' interest upon it by no means contemptible. It is my thorough conviction, that unless Parliament interferes to enforce payment of this long-withheld prize-money, it will not be forthcoming within any reasonable period. The Supreme Government of India completed the payment of H.M.'s and the Honourable Company's Troops serving in Bengal in six months, closed the account in Calcutta, and forwarded it to Madras. I think, therefore, I am warranted in surmising that there has been no particular anxiety manifested in Leadenhall-street to expedite payment in Europe, or two and a half years from the commencement of the payments in Madras (August, 1837) would not have been suffered to elapse without something being done in London.

The East India Company, although most liberal generally speaking, are proverbially mean in trifling matters. Witness their perseverance in withholding the 2*s.* a-day from Brevet Field-Officers serving in India, the payment of which would amount to an inconsiderable item in their extensive disbursements, and might easily, by some arrangement with the Horse Guards, be prevented from being attached, by limiting the total number of Brevet Field-Officers in H.M.'s Army serving in India to be paid by the Company.

C. S.

THE BAND FUND.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—A proportion of the pay of Officers is deducted monthly for the purpose of keeping up the Bands of Regiments, and is cheerfully submitted to by them; but in imposing this tax on the Officers, it never could be the intention of Lord Hill that its outlay should be solely at the disposal of Commanding Officers, without reference to the wishes of the subscribers. I can assure you, that this is assumed by many, and is the cause of much discontent. The least Officers might expect, is some deference to their wishes relative to the ornamental parts of the Band's dress, the choice of Band Masters, &c., or any other outlay from that fund.—Many Regiments regulate such things by a Committee, which is the most unobjectionable mode of procedure, and should be enforced by an order from the Horse Guards to have it generally adopted.—It is a question if the subscription is not too large, and an extravagant expenditure the consequence. I certainly think that from twelve to fifteen shillings a day, exclusive of Captain's lodging-money, &c., now given to Band Masters, borders on the prodigal, and renders the situation of such persons superior in point of emolument to a Field Officer. I should like to have your opinion on this subject, and the attention of the proper authorities called to it, by a statement of the whole sum drawn annually from the Army for this purpose.

A. B.

THE COAST-GUARD.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Air,—"Blue Bonnets over the Border."

Write, write, make haste and write, my boys;
Why the h—ll don't ye write volumes in order?
Write, write, write for more money, boys;
All the Coast-Guard men are thrown in disorder.
Mates are appointed, boys;
They will disjoint ye, boys;
These are the chaps "wot likes" gin in good order:
None o' ye'r nonsense, then,
Up with ye'r quill'd'r pen;
The whole of the Coast-Guard is quite in disorder.
Write, write, make haste, &c.

Think of the time when on ship-board ye were afloat,
Think of those days when sailing in order;
Think, (but ye won't,) then think of your petticoat;
Ye all like the Coast-Guard although in disorder:
Many's the desk that's spread,
With paper white and red,
Many's the goose-quill that won't be in order;
Write for more money, then,
"Destitute Refuge" men;
The profits of gin-tubs are quite out of order.
Write, write, make haste, &c.

Go to your cottages where peace and comfort reigns,
Build up your pig-sties, and do it in order;
Cultivate geese and ducks, they will pay for your pains—
The whole of the system is quite out of order;
Sharp-shots are scouring,
Gin Bowls abounding;
Stick to your scribbling, boys, do it in order;
"Willey" shall many a day
Tell of his losing pay,
When the Coast-Guard men were thrown in disorder.
Write, write, make haste, &c.

"Mr. Chief-Boatman! you know I am No. 1;"
"Why yes, Sir, I none of I am I out of order!" (thumb;
"Take care what you're at, sir, because you are under Such 'C. B.'s' as you, throw us all in disorder."
Tiles are very good,
That is quite understood,
"Humane Society's" medals in order,
Three groans for Billy B.,
That's the chap, don't ye see?
He's "Aid" to the Queen, besides his own "Order."
Write, write, make haste, &c.

As to the pay of Mates, till me pray what o'—hat—
So much the better, 'tis good for their order;
They've long enough been in the back-ground or "lower flat,"
Nine shillings a day will put them in right order.
Pipes are surrounding,
"Baccie"-smoke bounding;
Smoke away, jolly boys, smoke in good order;
Tap the keg "S.S.B."
Wash'd up from the sea.
A health to S Sharp shott, who has made an "Order."
Write, write, make haste, &c.

Now, Mates, let me say just one word to two't'ye:
Do mind your bits, hit off in good order;
Ye must flatter and succumb, 'twill be opportune t'ye;
Unless ye do that, ye'll be thrown in disorder;
Letters will then be sent Unto the Government,
Ye'll then find the quarter-deck disorder out of order.
Think well upon it, boys,
Ere that ye make a noise,
In pounding bench-piddles in play-f— not disorder.
Quarter-deck, quarter-deck, stick to it, jolly boys,
Don't throw your years away in such disorder;
Go for the fresh beef, or in the "hat," jolly boys,
Ye'll be d—d if ye don't with the Coast-Guard disorder.

Lord Minto won't force ye into such a service, boys;
Ye're not "cutter's blacks," but far brighter ornaments:
If once ye are jamm'd in that Auburn House service," boys,
Ye'll sure rue the day, and will curse "the disorder;"
Truth, boys, will then come out,
In and out, round about;
Read the "Gazette," boys, and read it in order;
Holy-stone decks, my boys,
Sand to your scrubs, my boys;
Ye'll natfill then be ready to fight in good order.
Holy-stone, holy-stone, holy-stone, mind the thing in hand,
Holy-stone, jolly boys, "Avast belay" in order;
"All hands wash lower decks," up to your knees in sand)
To be fill with the Coast-Guard, and Gin Bowls! "disorder."

Gosport, 31st Dec. 1839. BRANDY BOTTLE.

MILITARY EQUITATION.

THE new system, which from its appearance has been unaccountably unpopular, appears doomed to retain its unpopularity even with those of the rising generation, who have never known any other, unless, indeed, the Press lend its powerful aid towards effecting a reconciliation to its merits. Prior to its appearance in its present revised form, in 1839, the "shoulder in" and the slow canter chiefly gave offence: the former was objected to, both as being useless and as tending to render the horses vicious from the too frequent application of the spur, which was at first generally resorted to in the practice of it; and the latter, on account of the little exertion it called forth from the rider, as being ill calculated to make a horseman. And now that the "shoulder in" has been mastered, and the aids required in the practice of it are so well understood as to render the use of the spur in it rarely necessary, and that its utility, when practised with a sufficient degree of animation, in collecting the horse, tempering his mouth, suppling his limbs, and developing and strengthening the muscles of his shoulders and haunches, is seen and appreciated, while the system admits of every variety of pace, from the walk to speed, the GALLOP, the absence of which from the system was at first so much found fault with, is with many the chief objection to it, so that it is but reasonable to infer, from this circumstance, that, were the old system restored, it would be as little likely to please as the new. The revised system, in fact, comprises all that was useful in the old Riding Lesson, with as much of the science of the Civil manège as is requisite in forming the horse for Military purposes, and exercising the rider in the most distinct and effectual application of the aids; these are elicited from him in the collection, animation, lateral movement, and turnings of his horse in the "shoulder in" and "passage," when properly performed. In the turns and circles of the lesson, the trained horse is guided as much by the inclination of the rider's body as by the aids of the hand and legs; some even anticipate their riders, and turn by themselves at the first sound of the command; but in the "shoulder in" the inclination of the rider's body has no effect on the horse, nothing but the distinct aids of the hand and effectual application of the legs will do; the further utility of this lesson to man and horse is seen in the facility with which it enables the former to close in with, or avoid his opponent in independent practice.

The authorised paces of the Manège under the revised system, are the walk; the collected trot of 7 miles an hour; the extended trot of 8½, the collected canter rate, not specified, but which is found to be about 7 miles an hour; and the gallop of manœuvre, 11 miles an hour: speed is authorised on open ground, at which pace the recruit is expected to be able to use his sword in the attack and defence, before being pronounced fit for the ranks: the principle of instruction which the system comprises being clearly that of gradually increased exertion, regulated according to the acquired powers of the recruit, till he becomes master of the full powers of his horse, when, with a competent degree of skill in the use of his arms, he may be said to be fit for the ranks, but not before. Until he attains this stage of proficiency, he he cannot be void of apprehension that the action of his horse may at any time exceed his abilities, and he cannot consequently be a confident horseman; but, having attained it, his fears vanish—what was before a terror, is now a delight. And here I would ask, is this confidence a quality in a horseman to be repressed? But some of your readers may ask, is it attainable? I answer—yes, in the space of six months, with four or five lessons a week, any recruit of ordinary aptitude will infallibly attain it, proceeding, as said above, on the principle of gradually increased exertion on the part of the rider, according to his acquirements, which must be carefully watched, and the practice which they demand supplied; but never by letting him go on in neglect, as regards increased exertion, and making his advancement and final dismissal a piece of éclat-work. A further period may be necessary to perfect the recruit in the use of his arms on horseback, and to mature his method into habit. To perfect the recruit in horsemanship, the practice of the paces and of most of the movements prescribed by regulation for his instruction is indispensably necessary: the parts that could best be dispensed with, are those of the double ride, which appear devised, not so much for the instruction of the recruit, as to put his acquirements to the test. Every one, however, is not of this opinion. Some affirm that none but the collected paces should ever be practised in the manège, even in the instruction of the recruit; that the practice of the gallop of 11 miles an hour in the manège renders the horses unsteady for working in squadron; that a man who can ride at a collected canter will, when required, be able to ride at speed, as this pace is only used in the momentary effort of the charge on the exercise ground.

It would be needless for me to enlarge on the impossibility of a recruit collecting his horse till taught: till he has attained a firm seat and steady elastic hand, and knows something of keeping his horse up to his hand by the pressure of his legs, as any one who has ever seen a recruit commence his riding lessons must know that the recruit must let his horse go freely in the trot and canter, or his stiff hand will cause him to drop into a walk, or to halt altogether, the most he can do is to slacken his pace. The same remark, as regards freedom of movement, is applicable to the young horse till his mouth is in some measure formed.

With respect to the gallop of manœuvre as practised in the manège neglecting the horses unsteady for working in squadron, I have no hesitation in saying, that it cannot possibly have any such tendency, for the horses moving only in single file, with a distance of twelve feet between each other, they are free from the excitement attendant on moving abreast, and are consequently as exclusively attentive to the indications of the will of their respective riders as horses can be desired to be. It has, in fact, as is evidently the intention, quite the contrary effect, for each man being regulated to keep the prescribed distance from the file in front of him, and to increase and decrease his pace on command, he acquires from the practice such a control over his horse, and his horse such a habit of ready obedience to his hand, as cannot fail to be of the first utility when moving either in squadron or singly; while, on the contrary, confining recruits and young horses to the collected paces, as far as practicable, on the supposition that what they have never learned they will be the less likely to attempt, and that they consequently go all the steadier for it, leads to an infinitely worse kind of unsteadiness than can ever be reasonably apprehended to result from complete horsemen and well-trained horses; namely, the unsteadiness consequent on bad riding and insufficient training.—G. —Madras United Service Gazette.

Amply provided for.—Two sailors were one day sitting on the gunwale of their ship, drinking grog, when one said to the other, "This is meat and drink, Jack?" he happened at that moment to fall overboard, when his facetious companion coolly said, "And now you've got washing and lodging, Tom."

To Readers and Correspondents.

A correspondent, "Scientia," writes, with reference to a recent order issued by the Admiralty regarding candidates for commissions in the Royal Marine Corps, that "the course laid down by their Lordships is nothing more than what every gentleman's son is taught at public schools; and if those who are candidates for commissions cannot be placed at such schools, and go through the course laid down, they are not the proper persons for commissions in the Royal Marines, or any other corps." We must add to the required attainments mentioned in our last (page 818) "Writing English from dictation." Such officers as are desirous of serving in the Marine Artillery Companies, will, in future, undergo an examination in the following branches of Mathematics:—Geometry, planes and solids; Algebra, to quadratic equations (inclusive); Mensuration; Rules for Plane and Spherical Trigonometry, with application to heights and distances; Practical Rules in Gunnery; Use of Sextant and Azimuth Compass.

Some copies of the Newcastle Journal of the 14th inst. have been sent to our office, with the view, we suppose, of drawing attention to a correspondence between Mr. Urquhart and the Military Authorities, in which the former complains of the promotion of Lieut.-Colonel Du Plat. Without giving any opinion on the differences between the Lieut.-Colonel and Mr. Urquhart, we will merely observe that the former has only the Local rank of Lieut.-Colonel, and solely for the purpose of holding his proper station with the Spanish troops, in which Army the rank of Major is unknown except for Tambouni-Major and Serjeanti-Major. We believe that great inconvenience was experienced by Major Alderson, R.E., (also employed with the Spaniards), who, when he first went out, held the rank of Major only. But even if the promotion had been Army Rank instead of Local, there would be no just ground for complaint, as the service of Lieut.-Col. Du Plat is much beyond that which many distinguished officers of the day had performed, before they obtained the rank of Lieut.-General.

"Prime and Load," in approving of the observations on the dress of the infantry by "T." and "A Depot Adjutant," observes, that "the chief defects lie in the 'chaco' of the men, and the 'trousers' and 'sash' of the officers. As regards the cavalry, they are well enough, but they must have their 'moustachios' again; and the Guards, Fusilier Regiments, and all Grenadier Companies, should be allowed to grow 'moustachios,'" which he thinks "would add greatly to their appearance."

The annual promotion of three of the Coast-Guard Officers, a Commander, Lieutenant, and Mate, has been decided on, and the commissions will be signed on the 1st January. It would be premature in us to make public the names this week.

"M. D." is informed that we do not publish letters when we know that copies have been sent to other papers.

The matter referred to by "Andromache" would have been inquired into had his communication been differently couched.

We will look into the matter referred to by a correspondent at Donaghadee.—Our best acknowledgments to "P;" he shall have attention.—We have met the wishes of a correspondent at Southampton.—"An Old Veteran Officer" is under consideration.—Thanks to "G. L. S.," but the party is scarcely worthy of the exposé.

We shall feel obliged if correspondents who submit their letters for publication will write on one side of the paper only, and on no occasion cross and recross their epistles, so as to occasion us unnecessary trouble, and frequently waste of time in the attempt to decipher them.

The only answer we can give to "A Commander, R.N." is, that we have frequently pointed out the injustice and impolicy of the regulations affecting officers of his rank in the cases referred to.

We hope to hear further from "A Veteran."

An extra half-sheet will be given gratis with the next Number, containing the Title-page and Index to this year's volume. The Title-page and Index for 1838 may also be had at the Office in Catherine-street.

Owing to the mismanagement under the new regulations of the Post-office, only one of our port letters had arrived on going to press.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1839.

THE auspicious (and we hope ever-memorable) year 1840 is coming upon us, and whilst the old soldiers of the war see their more fortunate brethren in arms reaping the just and due reward of their services in the East, we will again earnestly appeal to the Military Commission and to the Authorities to recommend to Her Majesty the institution of some Military Order to commemorate the long and faithful services of the Peninsular War: a decoration or a special Brevet would cost the country little, and place the old weather-beaten veteran on some sort of footing with brave men who have seen less service.

It appears that his Majesty Shooja-ool-Moolk, King of Affghanistan, has granted a medal to every Officer and Private Soldier who was present in the late northern campaign in India at the taking of Ghuznee; and we believe the Officers and Men in the Hon. East India Company's Service had medals for Ava. To this we are far from objecting: they well merit all their rewards;—but why, we ask, are the invincible troops of Her Majesty's Service always left in the back-ground?

The campaigns of the Peninsula exalted the fame of the British troops to a degree of eminence it had never attained, even when Marlborough led them to victory. The proud feeling thus excited will long animate the British Soldier in the hour of battle, and lead the Army to new victories, when those who achieved its triumphs in the Peninsula are consigned to the tomb.

A reference to the New Army List will prove that the number of the Peninsular Officers has dwindled down to a few, and of these a large proportion have already attained the rank of Field Officer, either Regimentally or by Brevet. This circumstance cannot have escaped the notice of the Military Commission, consisting principally of Officers who reaped largely of the honours won by the Peninsular Army, and to whom therefore its long-neglected survivors look for some honour or recompense for past services. Few of them have less than twenty-five years' full-pay services, and a Brevet to the very few now left of those "stirring times" would neither embarrass the finances of the British Empire, nor excite the envy of the Army. It would be regarded by all classes, both Civil and Military, only as a tardy act of justice.

If the approaching opportunity passes by, we need hardly again revive the subject.

A WRITER so well-informed and intelligent as the author of the annexed letter cannot but be sensible of the difficulties which encompass the complex case he discerts on; for although the feeling of this country has been very generally expressed on the subject of the Slave Trade, and the Government have taken the most stringent measures they can possibly adopt, short of actual war, with a view to its suppression, it is very doubtful whether we are yet nearer the object desired than before.

The crime of slave-trading has been made felony by Great Britain, the United States of America, and some other nations, and entirely suppressed under their respective flags; but, no doubt, many of the subjects of these countries are, and will continue to be, engaged in the traffic, so long as it affords such inducements as our Correspondent mentions in the shape of gain. It can only be suppressed, as we have frequently declared, by a general determination to treat every vessel engaged in it as a pirate, and inflict capital punishment on all persons detected in the act; and this we trust our officers on the coast will be instructed to do, so far as the law of last Session will enable them to effect it, particularly against the flag of Portugal, so shamefully degraded in this traffic.

So long as slave-dealing is looked upon in the light of smuggling, the certainty of eventual profit will induce the hazard; but under the terror of capital punishment, none but the most desperate would attempt it. Our readers will recollect the difficulty with which the power to compel the treaty so long and so unjustly withheld by Portugal was obtained from the Lords last session; and as therefore, after such an expression of feeling, it is useless to suppose that measures necessary to induce or enforce a general combination of nations would pass through Parliament, we would revert to the old state of things, and legalise the trade once more, rather than witness its extension under the present horrible circumstances, and have continually to record the loss of valuable lives, in a pestilent climate, in the vain attempt to suppress it.

The above observations were in type last week, but postponed from want of space. In the interim, accounts have been received giving the Portuguese version of an affair which shows that our Officers are exerting themselves most strenuously under the additional powers they have acquired by the statute alluded to, confirming the Orders in Council which the Government may think fit to promulgate with a view of obliging Portugal to fulfil her part of the treaty which has been so long in abeyance. We do not attach any importance to the ex-parte statements which will be found under our Lisbon intelligence, and therefore shall make no comments upon them until we are in possession of the British Officers' statement of the affair. The preposterous outcry which the Lisbon slave-merchants make about the honour of their flag is ridiculous, after desecrating it to the infamous purpose of covering the abominable traffic in which they have not even a justifiable excuse for being engaged in, seeing that Portugal has no slave colonies, and only carries on the trade in human flesh for the purpose of supplying the Brazilians and others who have—in fact, for gain. A few more such spirited affairs as the one reported to have occurred will show them that we are no longer to be trifled with, and we trust the Commanders of our cruisers may be instructed to serve every vessel in the same manner that Commander Elliot of the Columbine is stated to have done, wherever they may be met, in the manifest prosecution of the slave trade. No flag covering a slaver is entitled to the respect it might otherwise obtain.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I venture to trespass on your columns for the purpose of making a few remarks on the system this country is pursuing in order to suppress the slave trade; a system which however laudable in its design, is yet in its results not only perfectly inefficacious, but a dreadful source of loss of valuable lives to our Naval service. I am induced to trouble you with these observations, as I understand it is the intention of Government to increase the number of vessels already employed on the coast of Africa. It has been a subject of great surprise to me, that among the many eloquent advocates the Negro has at all times found in this country, whether in the Legislature or in private assemblies, not one has yet stood up to place in contrast the sufferings that our countrymen endure and sink under, in endeavouring to carry their laudable resolutions into effect. As a Naval officer I have served on the coast of Africa, and from what I have observed, it is my certain conviction that so long as there is a demand for slaves, and open markets for them are allowed to exist in the Spanish and Portuguese colonies,—in the Brazils and other American states,—so long will the slave trade be carried on in all its horrors; horrors much aggravated by our fruitless efforts to suppress it, and fruitless they would be even though we had treble the number of cruisers on the coast we now have. The price of a slave in the markets varies from forty to sixty pounds,—they can be procured on the coast of Africa for 5*l.* each, or perhaps in exchange for articles of merchandise not worth ten shillings. What an inducement is this enormous profit to carry on the traffic! We cannot prevent smuggling in our own country, though the whole extent of our shores is guarded at every few miles' interval by the stations and cruisers of the Coast Guard:—then how can we possibly expect to guard effectually the whole coasts of a distant continent, occupying so many thousand miles? Have we succeeded hitherto in diminishing the number of slaves exported from Africa? Certainly not in the least: in fact, strange as may appear the assertion, the number is greatly increased. This will be explained when we consider that for every cargo of slaves we capture, so many more must be torn from their homes and exported, to make up the deficiency, to meet the demand. What becomes of the slaves we capture, and are liberated, as it is termed? Do they return to their native country? very rarely—but few of them know where to look for it, and so deplorable is their barbarism that they care but little. At Sierra Leone, where they are located, their situation differs but little from real slavery,—they are compelled to work for a certain time on the public works as "apprentices," under the charge of black overseers who punish them unmercifully if they commit the slightest fault." I should think three at least out of four slave-vessels that leave the coast, get clear off with their cargoes. The Captain of a Spanish slaver captured about a twelvemonth since, owned to me that he had made nine successive successful voyages, and moreover that if he only succeeded in running clear one out of two cargoes, he would still be a gainer.

I have said enough as to the inutility of our endeavours to stop the slave trade; now as to the positive evil we inflict upon ourselves:—The crews of the vessels employed on the coast of Africa are about 900 men, (not including the Flag-ship at the Cape of Good Hope,) British officers and seamen who are subjected to the effects of the most noxious climate known to Europeans. This is evidenced by the fearful mortality which takes place amongst them;—in the sickly season during the years 1837-8, out of 890 men employed in fourteen vessels, 337 were carried off by the fever, including 53 officers, and this during the space of about fifteen months: great numbers have died since. A small brig, the Brisk, lost half her crew, and nearly all her officers. The last accounts from the coast brought intelligence of the deaths of six promising young officers, the number of men not stated, but doubtless considerable:—great numbers also are sent home as invalids to return to their country broken in health. From the vacuity of mind attendant upon a life spent entirely at sea without recreation of any kind, many become drunkards; during the wet season the rains are incessant, and the heat is at all times most oppressive: this, with the confined decks of a small vessel, renders life almost a misery, so that it is hardly a matter of surprise that many of those who have the means resort to intoxication, to obtain a temporary alleviation of their sufferings. It appears at first glance strange that men should be found to volunteer for ships destined for such a service; but the character of the British sailor is so reckless, that when he enters, he scarcely inquires what station the vessel is bound to; besides, the chance of making a few pounds' prize-money blinds him to its disadvantages. With regard to Officers, in most cases they would be expelled the service if they were to refuse to serve wherever appointed, and they are further induced by the hope of making money, and also of obtaining promotion, should they survive,—a chance at least two to one against them; one set of officers after the other die away and are replaced by others and nothing more is heard or said of them, save among their heartbroken families, widows and orphans, of whom every intelligence from the coast increases the number. We may look at the Scout, 18-gun sloop, lately paid off at Sheerness, in corroboration of this dreadful mortality: out of the 120 men and officers who formed her original complement, only 33 returned in her, and I believe but one officer; doubtless a few came home previously as invalids, but the great majority left their bones at the White-man's Grave. I may be asked, are we to allow the slave trade to go on as heretofore, without an effort to check it? If I were allowed to offer an opinion, I would say that England sufficiently performs her duty in the cause of humanity by showing a good example to other nations in suppressing slavery throughout our own colonies; by showing more sympathy for the slaves, than for the starving millions of her own people. But some persons think we ought to do more, and compel other nations to follow our good example; if so, let us do it boldly by forcing them to emancipate their slaves; even an open war for that purpose could be scarcely more destructive than the ineffective means we are at present using. If these are to be still continued, let us at least moderate the evil by transferring our cruisers or the greater part of them from the coast of Africa to, that of South America, a healthy station, and where they would be of equal service: the liberated slaves too might with great advantage be imported as free labourers into our colonies of Guiana or the West Indies, where labour is so much needed; under the same discipline they are in at Sierra Leone, they would soon become useful. I have made these remarks longer than I intended: I trust they may not be entirely thrown away, but induce others to follow in the same path till the eyes of the public and those in power are opened to the true bearings of the case of "Englishmen versus African negroes."

H. E.

Some weeks since we advocated the propriety of sending the 23d, 43d, 71st, and 85th Regiments to the West Indies after three years' service in their present station (Canada); and to our great surprise, a paragraph has appeared within the last ten days, in which it is stated that the first-named of these Regiments—the 23d Fusiliers, of which the Quartermaster-General is himself Colonel—is to be sent from Nova Scotia, not to the West, but to the East Indies.

We confess ourselves utterly at a loss to understand the rationale of this proceeding, or indeed to assign any other reason for it than that as it was necessary to send the 23d to a bad station, the emoluments would prove greater to the Colonel were the corps to be sent to Madras or Bengal than if sent to Barbadoes or Jamaica.

We remember that a just outcry was raised in 1838 against sending the 23d and 71st to America instead of to India, for which station they had been previously told off, as reliefs for the 16th and 44th, ordered home. Now, however, the case is vastly different—these Regiments are in Canada, and might be sent to relieve the 56th and 67th Regts. on the West India station; but why the 23d or any Regiment should be sent, at an enormous expense, from America to India, when we have Regiments in Ceylon, the Cape, and the Isle of France, who might without injustice be sent thither, is a riddle, which, not being skilled in the Eleusinian or Coptic mysteries, we cannot solve; but it is allowable to hazard a conjecture, that it may be the result of some favouritism in petto at the Horse Guards, by which the 42d, 88th, or Rifle Brigade, may be allowed to escape being sent to India by being despatched to relieve the 23d in Nova Scotia.

We remember that when the 88th were under orders for India in 1825, previous to the augmentation of the Army, which took place in that year, it was discovered by their friend at the Horse Guards that they were entitled to a good station as being the first Regiment which completed its number according to the augmented strength of each Corps, and to the Mediterranean they were accordingly sent. We do not say that this was a manœuvre to procure a good station for the Regiment; but bearing in mind the fact that the Lieut.-Colonel who was appointed to the Regiment at that time had very great interest with George IV., we think the conjecture not an unfair one. The next foreign destination of the 88th will show one of two things,—either that we were right on this point, or that the system of favouritism and partiality is at an end. If the latter be happily the case, we can only regret, for the sake of the 17th Foot, that it did not occur ten years sooner, as it would in that case have saved that Regiment the fate of serving forty out of forty-five years in the East Indies, while the 7th Fusiliers have not had a bad foreign station for the last thirty years. We shall not lose sight of this matter.

It is to be hoped that the approaching Brevet will do something for many old full-pay Officers.

Brevet-Major Hollis, thirty-six years' full-pay, a Captain of thirty years' standing, was at the retreat of Corunna, and has served many years in the West Indies.

Brevet-Major Cooke, thirty years' service, was through the whole Peninsular War, in the Light Division, and was highly distinguished at several engagements.

When we see Lieutenant-Colonels of fourteen years' standing, this does not say much for the reward of merit in the English Army.

With reference to Brevet Rank, the annexed letter deserves attention:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In a number of your valuable and imperial periodical, published in May or June last, you directed the attention of your Military readers to a list of Regimental Captains whose individual services varied from thirty to thirty-four years, and yet (although uninterrupted) without attaining the rank of Brevet-Major. Permit me now to offer you one of a more fortunate class of Officers, who have recently returned to the service from the Half-pay List, and obtained that rank denied by the existing regulations to the former, with services varying from four to thirteen years, as follows:—

Far be it from me to attach any blame or reflect upon those Officers for seeking and obtaining a rank which the existing regulations (certainly not their services) entitle them to; the fault is not with them, but with the system—a system palpably unjust as holding out a premium to the "feather-bed soldier," while to the dredging and hard-working Company Officer it is but "hope deferred," "vanity and vexation."

Can anything more clearly show to the "Commission" the necessity of revising the regulations on this head; nay, striking them out "root and branch," as injurious to the service, and prospectively entailing great additional expense upon the country, by thus adding uselessly to the list of General Officers on all occasions of Brevet?

An "Old Lingsman."

We beg leave to inform "An Occasional Correspondent" and "Skirmisher," whose letters we annex, that their complaints about the reduction of tentage in the garrisons of Fort St. George, Bombay, and Fort William, are not peculiar to Her Majesty's Service, but apply equally to the Company's European troops when stationed in those garrisons. It was, by the Regulations of 1796, equally applicable to European troops garrisoned in all fortresses. The reason for it was plain: the English troops in those garrisons not performing any of the numerous detached duties of the Native Regiments,—treasure escorts—with prisoners—with English regiments—with stores, both Ordnance and Commissariat,—were not expected to keep up their camp equipage, which the Officers of the Native Regiments, even in the very same garrisons, were not only expected to do, but were liable to have their tents and carriage-cattle mustered every month or day, as a proof that they were ready to move at an hour's notice. This reason, we apprehend, was very distinct and simple. In Bengal the half-tentage to all European troops in garrisons was not merely confined to the half-batta stations, but, we know from a friend, extended as far as Allahabad, six or seven hundred miles from Calcutta, where no regiment of Her Majesty's service was ever stationed, and, consequently, could only have applied to the Company's troops!

We deeply regret that our correspondents should [*] Captain Higgs' f.-p. services, 56th Regiment, 23 years; Captain Harris's ditto, 4, 84th do., 23 years. Total full-pay services of two Captains now serving, 56 years.

have attempted to give an invidious character to a regulation which was applicable to all European troops, and not to Her Majesty's Regiments alone, and which was framed in concert with Lord Cornwallis himself. The Officer of a Native Regiment must, from the very nature of the service, be constantly prepared to move, for his duties are perpetual, and the numbers so few that his tour of duty is frequent. The Native Regiments march much oftener also, and to far greater distances. The expense attending the removal of an English Regiment is so great in the East, that beside their non-liability to detachment duties, which harass and exhaust the resources of the Officers of Native corps, they are removed no oftener than is indispensable, and then always with timely notice. But, in truth, the first reason alone was sufficient. A regiment not in receipt of full-tentage was not expected to keep up its camp equipage, which all other regiments were. Skirmisher gives us a table too, by which he proves that at Bellary, Secunderabad, Cannanore, &c., the Lieutenants of both services get equally 256 rupees per month; at Bangalore, Trinchinopoly, &c, 226; the only difference being at Fort St. George, Arnee, &c., where he says the Lieutenants of Her Majesty's service get only 200 rupees, while those of the Company's service get 226. If for Officers of Her Majesty's service, we read all officers of European troops in those garrisons and occupying quarters, who are not required or expected to keep up their camp equipage or marching establishments, the account will stand correct. But, with singular inconsistency, Skirmisher, in the first lines of his letter, tells us the Bombay European Regiment had not been one month in the garrison of Bombay, before they forwarded a memorial on the subject of the reduction of their tentage; and, at the close of the very same passage, he adds that the half tentage scale "is (luckily for them) unknown to the Company's Officers!"

We have only to add that repeated petitions have been sent home by the Company's Officers, with the recommendation of the Local Governments, against this very grievance of half-tentage, which Skirmisher, after admitting in the case of the Bombay European Regiment, says is "unknown" to them. That the subject of these petitions presses more heavily on Her Majesty's Regiments than the Company's, is only true since 1794, 5, when nine out of twelve of the Company's Regiments of foot were disbanded, to make room for as many King's Regiments under the Charter. Now considering the difference in point of expense in keeping up a tent with carriage, or none at all, we cannot think the allowance of 26 rupees per month was either great or unreasonable. It might in equity have been larger, and more in favour of the Officer, who is perpetually liable to march on duties unknown to the Officers of English Regiments in India. But the discussion is cut short by its non-existence as a grievance; for if our readers will refer to Number 357, of 16th Nov. last, page 740, they will find an article copied from the Calcutta Courier of 22d August, allowing that full tentage is granted in all situations: from which we conclude that Her Majesty's Officers will be expected to hold their camp equipage and carriage in readiness in all situations, and that they will be mustered monthly; in which case we apprehend they will find themselves no gainers by being placed on full tentage.

It would appear that one of our present Correspondents is, by his own account, an extremely young Officer—in fact, an Ensign just joined from Europe. We do think he would better devote his youth, and the leisure of a Garrison, to the study of the history of the country he is now serving in, —to the pages of Dow, of Scott, of Orme, of Dirom, and hundreds of other writers on the Military History of the East, than to the querulous search after imaginary grievances.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The treatment practised towards Queen's Officers in this country has frequently been noticed in your columns, and I now send you an account of one of the most flagrant of the many acts of injustice committed by the miscalled "Honourable" East India Company in this country. In Fort St. George is stationed a Queen's Regiment and a detachment of Company's Artillery; and at Vepery, two miles distant, two of the Company's Native Regiments are stationed. These troops compose the Garrison of Madras. You doubtless suppose that the Infantry portion of the Garrison are on the same footing with regard to pay and allowances; but such is not the case. When a Regiment of the Queen's Service marches into Fort-George, the Officers are immediately placed on half-tentage, which causes a reduction of 25 rupees a month to a Subaltern, and 50 to a Captain. This deduction is not made from the Officers of the Native Regiments at Vepery. Now, Sir, you would consider it rather hard to be an Ensign of three or four years' standing, most of which time you had been in India, and to see Cadets daily arriving for the Company's Service, and drawing more pay than yourself. "Pray," said an Officer of rank to me one day, "may I ask what pay you receive as an Ensign of Her Majesty's Regiment in the Fort?" About 155 rupees a month, with a deduction of 10½ rupees for my quarters. "That is strange," said he, "for a relative of mine, who landed last week as a Cadet of Infantry, draws 180 rupees." I explained to him, that the British Regiments, when stationed in the centre division of the Madras Presidency, which comprises the stations of Fort St. George, Poonamallee, and Arnee, the first and last of which have usually a Regiment, lose half their tentage, which the Company's Regiments in the same division do not. He could not comprehend the reason for such a regulation, nor was it in my power to give any explanation, except that it was according to the orders of the Court of Directors to give as little as possible to Queen's Officers, or rather to give them nothing. This is a subject, Sir, that your advocacy might be the means of placing on its proper footing; for were you, as I have been, stationed in Fort St. George, you would have found to your cost, that every necessary of life is 100 per cent. dearer in Madras than in any other station in the Presidency.

AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

Madras Presidency, Oct. 1839.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—When the Bombay European Regiment marched into Bombay, in less than one month they had forwarded to the Court of Directors a memorial, showing the grievous loss they sustained by the deduction of their tentage. Have you heard whether the Directors have taken this memorial into their consideration? It will apply equally to Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, and presses most severely on the officers of the Queen's Regiments, more particularly the juniors. You must be in possession of the respective rates of pay drawn by Officers of the Queen's and Company's Service; indeed, I have more than once seen a scale of them in your Gazette; but in case I am in error, I send you the following scale of a full batta, half batta, and half tentage station: this latter is (luckily for them) unknown to the Company's Officers:—

Lieutenant's Pay, H.M.'S Service.—Bellary, Secunderabad, Cannanore, &c., 256 rupees a month; Bangalore, Trichinopoly, &c., 226 rupees a month; Fort St. George, Arnee, &c., 200 rupees a month.

Lieutenant's Pay, Company's Service.—Secunderabad, Bellary, &c., 256 rupees; Bangalore, Trichinopoly, 226 rupees; Fort St. George, Arnee, &c., 226 rupees.

Now, Sir, why should the officer in one service get more pay than one in the other. Is it not most invidious, and does it not add to the bad feeling and excessive jealousy which prevails to so great an extent between the two services? Let the Court of Directors restore to the Officers of the Queen's Service the pay of which they are deprived by serving in the forts of Madras, Calcutta, or Bombay, and they will do a great deal towards restoring the good feeling which should prevail. I have heard many Officers of the Company's Service, of long standing and of experience, lament the injustice of deducting from the Queen's Officer half his tentage, because he happens to be serving in the Presidency Division of the Army. To show you the injustice, I will just mention that a cadet for the Company's Army, who, from the day he lands in the country, draws about 180 rupees a month, is placed on a better footing than the Ensign of the Queen's Regiment serving in the fort, who, though probably in India three or four years, only draws 155 rupees. In addition to this deduction, a Subaltern is obliged to submit to a deduction of 10½ rupees, and a Capt. to 17½ rupees, for the quarters he occupies. Of this, however, we do not complain. What we consider unjust, is, that an Officer in the Company's Army should get his full tentage, and an Officer in the Royal Army only half. The garrison duties of both are the same, though the duties in the field are widely different. What sort of a figure would the Indian Government have made in the last Burmese war without the Queen's Regiments?—Hoping, Sir, that you will advocate our cause, I remain, SKIRMISHER.

THE information to be gleaned from authors who have never seen India or a native regiment must always be taken cum grano salis, or with the usual allowance of "errors excepted." We are led to make this remark, having seen it stated, in a recent work on India,* that "the European officers generally possessing but a slender knowledge of the languages of the men under their command, and the men no knowledge at all of the language of their officers, it is one of the inconveniences of the system, as not affording a common bond of union. This passage seems to point at Bengal, where the men have no knowledge of the language of their officers, for at Madras and Bombay, if we are rightly informed, there is a great deal of that knowledge amongst the men: but in imputing a slender knowledge of the native language to the English officers in Bengal, it can hardly be quite true, for they have no other means of communication with their men. We know hundreds who speak and write Persian, or Arabic, or Hindostanee, in the Nagree character, with a fluency and perfection unknown to any of the men themselves! Every abortive conspiracy in the Army, or attempt at mutiny, has been discovered by that very knowledge which Mr. Thornton pronounces so slender; while a short consideration of the very necessity of the case would argue that, it must be somewhat more extensive, as not a single thing can be done, in a Bengal regiment at least, without it. The Adjutant receives the daily orders from the Colonel in English, but he can only transmit them to the Havildar-Major, and the Orderly Havildars, in Hindostanee. At drill, though the words of command are in English, every explanation, either in the book, or from the officer himself, must be equally in Hindostanee. The officers of companies (and there is hardly ever more than one left for duty with a company) are half the day engaged with their men, settling disputes, hearing complaints, or arranging family correspondence and remittances for their men, in the same language. If there is a family dispute about lands, property, or even on a point of honour at home, the English officer of the company is (in Bengal at least) the universal referee. Mrs. Postans alludes to the same circumstance at Bombay, but in a more limited sense, as she points to "an amiable respectable man" in a regiment as possessing this confidence; whereas in Bengal every soldier goes straight to the officer of his company, as his legal and constituted confidential adviser in all cases. These forms of locution sound odd to a merely English ear, for they are all Oriental—"You are my father and my mother, and I am come to appeal to your honour!" This is the usual exordium. If you ask a man, "Why don't you go to the Subadar, or any other officer of the same caste with yourself, to settle this matter? 'tis entirely a family affair, in which my ignorance of your customs or feelings may mislead me,"—the answer is invariably the same, "I belong to the Ungrézi fouj Bohadoor, (the English Army) and the English officer is the only malek (superior) in whom I have any confidence, for I know he will do me justice, without favour or affection." The fact is, a native, of whatever rank, can never hardly do justice for justice' sake; every reference to them would be attended with some cost to the poor soldier, as is usual in all the Armies of the native powers. Their confidence in the English officer has been unbounded; the most delicate as well as their most ordinary transactions are confided to his honour. But we have heard that this feeling has been much weakened since the Government in India, to serve some temporary purpose, have destroyed all power in the officers. The clerks in the Adjutant-General's Office at each Presidency, we have been told, are now the real Commanders of every regiment, and we shall see the result of this wise system ere long, if it be correct.

But there is another thing that points out still more clearly how an English officer in Bengal is compelled to acquire more than a slender knowledge of the native language. There is hardly one who has not once, or several times, been on what is called "a solitary command; i. e., out on detachment from his regiment, where he is the only Englishman. Hundreds of young men have not only spent months, but years, in this unenviable state; and as the native regiments alone are thus divided and scattered, hundreds must annually pass through the same probation. Pray, in what language are they to converse in Bengal in such a state?

That a more extended and intimate knowledge of the native languages amongst all officers serving in India would be desirable, no one can dispute. Even a critical knowledge and good penmanship are worthy of acquisition. But two questions here arise—1. Whether the Government itself has sufficiently or properly encouraged it? 2. Whether a sufficient knowledge does not already exist, in Bengal at least, for all useful purposes?

The plan framed originally by Lord Wellesley for the Calcutta College was intended to include Military men as well as Civilians; but even here, for the latter alone, it has, under the more contracted views of his successors and the parsimony of the Home Government, proved a complete failure. The officer who now wishes to acquire Persian and Nagree, or Hindostanee, must do so at his own cost and risk, with his regiment, and without the aid of any academic institution whatever. If he succeeds, and passes the examination, he is, we believe, reimbursed the expense of his moonshee; if not, he sits down with the loss of all he has paid on that score.

* Chapters of the Modern History of British India, by Edward Thornton, Esq.,—a work of considerable value, and which we shall, therefore, fully notice next week.

Mr. T. himself says, "Some additional encouragements to their study seem requisite, as the mastering of them so materially tends to promote that harmony and mutual good understanding which it is so important to establish." What this encouragement has been we all know. Lord W. Bentinck gave the coup de grace to Lord Wellesley's college, and now both civilian and soldier may pick up the Oriental tongues as they best can, choosing their own guides. The civilian, to be sure, still has Haileybury to go to, the Cadet has Addiscombe; which as compared with a local college where the language itself is spoken, is as if a person should prefer acquiring French in Galway, or the Mull of Cantire, to studying it at Tours or Paris. But economy is the order of the day in everything that does not diminish the patronage of the Directors themselves. By abolishing the Calcutta College, they only struck at the Governor-General's patronage, and gave the final blow to one of the greatest conceptions of a truly great man. Since Clive we have had but three such—Warren Hastings, the Marquess of Wellesley, and the Marquess of Hastings. The successors of these great men seem to have been sent expressly to undo all that they had done, and verily they seem to have succeeded wonderfully in short space.

But, after all, we never find any want of able and skilful linguists and scholars, critically versed in Arabic, Persian, or Hindostanee, for all the political and superior stations under the Indian Government. There is an officer now alive, we fancy in Bengal, (and who has never quitted his regiment) who is surprisingly gifted as an Arabic and Persian critic, linguist, and penman; another we knew who spoke the dialect of every province of Arabia, as well as of Persia; hundreds may be produced who have a fair knowledge of one or other, but all must possess a knowledge, more or less, of the Hindostanee; for in Bengal, servants as well as soldiers speak nothing else, and the ordinary affairs of every day in the year call it into use.

THE late Runjeet Singh has long occupied a prominent place in the pages of Oriental history: success, splendour, and prosperity, brightened his political and Military life, and will find a place in the annals of fame. His obsequies will also be awfully memorable, and live in the records of horror, whose requiem was the cry of burning anguish from human sacrifices that fed the barbarous funeral pile. Next to the persons of notoriety, those belonging to them, or things appertaining to them, generally become an object of interest, and as it may not be known to many of our readers how Runjeet Singh became master of the celebrated diamond, the "Choi Noor," valued at 2,500,000*l.* sterling, we will give the history as received from a principal person at his Court.

When Shah Soojah, whom the British Government have lately replaced on the throne of Cabool, was compelled to leave his country, he fled to the Court of Runjeet Singh, where he was received with open arms. Not long after, one of the chief conspirators who was instrumental in forcing the King from his throne, invited him, on false promises, to Cashmere: so many blandishments were held out to the King, that he clandestinely left Runjeet's Court, leaving his Queen and family behind him. The former conspirator proved a double traitor, confined his royal master, and used him like a common malefactor. The Queen of Cabool besought Runjeet Singh to send an army and rescue her husband, on the safe restoration of whom she pledged her word to make Runjeet Singh a present of this valuable diamond, the "Choi Noor." The King in due course was restored to his family, but refused to ratify the Queen's promise. Threats were futile; imprisonment, and almost starvation, followed; at length strength of mind and body sunk under extreme severity, and Runjeet Singh became master of the "Choi Noor," at the same time promising to give the King 20,000*l.* as a present, a part of which he gave orders for. Suspicion, however, gaining strong power on the mind of the King as to the sentiments of Runjeet Singh, he secretly sent his family to the British territory, the discovery of which so incensed Runjeet Singh that he ordered the King to be placed in irons and more rigidly guarded, and revoked his promise of the money. An auspicious hour, however, arrived; the King eluded the vigilance of the guards and escaped into the "Himalaeh" mountains, where, after many perils and adventures, he was united to his family in the British provinces, where for more than 20 years prior to his late restoration to his throne he had been residing. By will it appears Runjeet Singh has bequeathed the "Choi Noor" to the disgusting idol of all abomination "Juggernauth," that cruel torturer of body and destroyer of souls, but suggested that it should be returned to Shah Soojah, the original proprietor; and it is to be hoped that this honest feeling may prevail over the desire of depravity, and prevent that leviathan of idolatry from devouring so beautiful and vast a treasure.

WE have frequently commented on the inadequacy of relief which the contributors to the Merchant Seaman's Fund receive at the hands of the several trustees, when necessity compels them to demand it, and given it as our opinion that no satisfactory arrangement will ever be effected until the whole concern shall be taken in hand by the Government, and settled upon some solid and lasting basis. The contribution of 2*s.* per month from the Masters and Mates, and 1*s.* per month from all persons serving in merchant vessels, (for none but the indentured apprentices are exempt from this payment,) forms a noble fund, which would doubtless be augmented by the gifts and bequests of charitable individuals, who have the national honour at heart, and feel a regard for that class of persons who have incurred peril in its defence, or in increasing its wealth and renown by adventuring their lives and limbs in a hazardous profession. But, although every one admits the necessity of this, nothing is done, and we repeat nothing will be done, until the Government is induced to take up the matter.

For many years the contributions of the seamen were paid into Greenwich Hospital, but they received nothing in return. Several years ago the law was altered, and their monthly contributions doubled, and paid to a trust, under the impression that they could demand and obtain relief in times of sickness or distress. It appears that they are little better off, for Mr. Baker, who has taken a great interest in this matter, asserts that some of the annual pensions to the widows and children of seamen are as low as 5*s.*! an insulting mockery, when there is an accumulated fund of nearly 50,000*l.* in reserve.

A petition numerously signed, and founded on these complaints, was placed in the hands of Sir Edward Codrington last session: the gallant Admiral had no favourable opportunity to bring it forward so as to secure the appointment of a committee, and as Sir Edward has now withdrawn from Parliament, the task must be delegated to some other member. We earnestly wish him success, whoever he may be, satisfied that no subject of greater importance than the welfare and protection of our seamen can engage the attention of the Legislature.

United Service Annuity Benevolent Institution.—A Contemporary, remarkable for senility, disregard of truth, and ignorance of professional matters, has the silly effrontery to state that the N. & M. G. allowed a hired agent of an Insurance Company to vilify the proposed Institution. We usually allow the weekly vapourings and malignancy of the editor to pass for just what they are worth; but as this matter might possibly affect a few Widows and Orphans of Officers, we think it right to give an flat denial to the new libel. This paper has no connexion, direct or indirect, with any Insurance parties; and not a line on the subject has ever appeared in our columns, at the instigation of any of them agents. Our objections to the United Service Annuity Benevolent Institution have been fully and fairly stated, and we believe they will lead to the establishment of another on sound principles, for the benefit of the Army and Navy; and which will not require the puffing of its agent in the said Contemporary paper. Who of the original supporters of the United Service Annuity Benevolent Institution now belong to, or recognise it? We should be glad to see their names published. Here probably the matter may drop till the next General Meeting Two MONTHS HENCE!!!

It is, we are informed, now definitely arranged that Her Majesty's marriage will take place on the 16th of February.

The Queen has appointed Lord Kinnaird to be Master of Her Majesty's Buck Hounds.

Portraits of her Majesty and Prince Albert in the lids of gold snuff-boxes, will, we understand, be presented to all the foreign ambassadors on the occasion of the royal nuptials, and the jewellers have already received orders to prepare them.

Despatches were received on Saturday from Sir William Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius; and from Captain Prescott, Governor of Newfoundland. On Monday Despatches were received from Sir Howard Douglas, the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. On Tuesday Despatches were sent off from the Colonial-office, for Sir George Gipps, Governor of New South Wales. On Wednesday Despatches were received from the Right Hon. C. Poulett Thomson, Governor of the Canadas, and from Sir George Arthur, Lieut-Governor of Upper Canada. On Thursday from Sir Charles Metcalfe, Governor of Jamaica; and from Sir George Gipps, Governor of New South Wales.

The Duke of Wellington has issued cards for a grand banquet at Apsley House on the 15th of the ensuing month to his supporters in the House of Lords. The invitations exceed sixty.

Circulars to the Conservative members of the House of Commons, requesting their attendance at the meeting of Parliament, were issued last week.

Circulars from the Duke of Wellington, summoning the Conservative Peers for a meeting at Apsley House on the day preceding that appointed for the meeting of Parliament, were delivered on Friday and Saturday last.

The meeting to concert measures for the erection of a national monument to the Duke of Wellington in Edinburgh, took place in that city on Tuesday. The Lord Provost took the chair, and the resolutions for entering into the necessary subscriptions were moved and eloquently supported by the Earl of Rosebery, Sir G. Clerk, the Lord Advocate, Professor Wilson, the Earl of Dalhousie, Mr. Gibson Craig, Sir G. Sinclair, Sir F. D. Lander, and the Marquis of Tweeddale. The proceedings were marked with but one pervading feeling of respect to the illustrious hero.

General Lord Seaton passed through Exeter on Friday se'nnight, on his return to his residence at Lyneham. An intimation was made to his lordship, to the effect that if it would be agreeable to his feelings, an address of congratulation would be presented to him in public by the citizens, but the gallant General, with the modesty belonging to true merit, respectfully declined the honour.

Lieut. Colonel Holmes, Deputy Inspector-General of Constabulary in Ireland, died on Thursday se'nnight at his residence in Rathmines. By a painful coincidence it happened that his son, a fine boy, died of measles on the preceding day.

Lieutenant Rubidge, R.N., who conducted the emigration of Colonel George Wyndham's tenants for North America, states that they are all employed, and fully satisfied at the change.

The Lords of the Treasury have directed that the uniform penny rate of postage shall commence on 10th January next. The present scale of weight, namely, one rate of postage for each half ounce, will remain. Franking, both parliamentary and official, will cease on that day. Instructions have been issued for the preparation of the stamps for the purpose of collecting the postage revenue and they will be introduced as soon after the 10th as the necessary arrangements can be completed. Prizes of one hundred pounds are awarded to each of four out of the three thousand candidates who submitted plans to the Treasury.

Count Eugene Ney, son of the late Marshal, an attaché to the French embassy at this court, has arrived in Albemarle-st.

Sir James Graham will be opposed, at the next election for Pembroke, by Captain Child, of Begely House. The gallant Officer is supported by Sir R. B. Phillips and several other influential persons in the county.

We announce with regret, that Mr. James Smith, one of the authors of Rejected Addresses, died on Tuesday the 24th inst., at his house in Craven-st., Strand. He had been long, indeed almost from his youth, subject to gout, and since January last had been severely afflicted with that disease. His end was tranquil as his life had been respected.

Lady Emily Wellesley died at Boulogne-sur-Mer on the 22nd inst. She was the eldest daughter of Charles Sloane, first Earl of Cadogan; was born on 26th May, 1778, and married 2nd June, 1802, to the Hon. and Rev. Gerald Valerian Wellesley, D.D., Prebendary of Durham, and a younger brother of the Duke of Wellington. Lady Emily has left a numerous family. Her third daughter is married to Viscount Chelsea, eldest son of Earl Cadogan. Lady Emily was the sister of the present Marchioness of Anglesey.

Lady Warren, widow of the Right Hon. Sir Borlace Warren, G.C.B., died on Saturday last, at Stapleford Hall, near Nottingham. She was the youngest daughter of Lieut.-General Sir John Clavering, by Lady Diana West, daughter of John Viscount Earl Delawarr. Her ladyship is succeeded in her extensive estates by her grandson, Lord Vernon, who is now at Rome.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Davies Gilbert, so well known as the President of the Royal Society, and many years a member of the House of Commons. He died at Eastbourne on Tuesday morning. He was the author of several scientific and other works of reputation.

The British Queen Steam-ship, so expected for several days past from New York, reached Gravesend on Wednesday morning. She left on 2nd inst., and has not brought, as anticipated, the President's Message to Congress.

Explosion of a Powder Mill on Hounslow Heath.—On Tuesday, a jury was empannelled at Feltham, to enquire into the death of Joseph East, aged 30 years, who died from the effects of the serious injuries he received by an explosion of one of the mills on Wednesday se'nnight. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

On Wednesday morning, one of the "green charged" mills at Ospringe, near Faversham, suffered destruction. One man was severely mutilated.

The late Mr. Francis Coust, who was buried on Sunday in the Cemetery at Kensall-green, left behind him upwards of 150,000*l.* It is stated that he was nearly 100 years old. The situation of Chairman of the Middlesex Magistrates and the Westminster Sessions he held up to his death.

We understand that a first-rate, to be called the Albert, will be laid down at Plymouth Dock-yard, on the slip from which the St. George is to be launched on Her Majesty's birthday.

The veterans and inmates of Chelsea Hospital, amounting to about 600 persons, had each one pound of plum-pudding in addition to the usual allowance. This is the first time they have had plum-pudding on Christmas day.

Affair of Honour.—A meeting took place on Sunday morning, on Wimbledon Common, between Lord William Paget and Mr. Thomas Fiske, arising out of the examination of Mr. Poole, a tailor, before the Insolvent Debtors' Court, who stated that Mr. Fiske (the insolvent) informed him that he had advanced Lord William Paget a sum of money. On seeing this statement, Lord William wrote to Mr. Fiske, demanding, that as he (Mr. Fiske) had never lent his lord-ship a farthing, he should immediately contradict Mr. Poole's statement, in a letter to the editor of the Morning Herald, or otherwise appoint a friend, in order that arrangements might be made for a "meeting." Mr. Fiske adopted the latter alternative. Lord. Wm. Paget was attended by Capt. Baillie (late 16th Lancers), and Mr. Fiske by Mr. Nightingale. Mr. Fiske received his lordship's fire, and then fired in the air. Mr. Fiske then stated, that the demand to contradict Mr. Poole's statement having been made under a threat, he could not comply with it; but having received his lordship's fire, he had no hesitation in declaring, in the presence of Captain Baillie and Mr. Nightingale, that he had never lent any money to his lordship.

Elopement Extraordinary.—An affair of a singular nature has recently occurred in the county of Norfolk. It appears that the gentleman, Mr. ——, was informed by his domestics that his lady was a great admirer of an officer in the Lancers, now quartered in the city of Norwich; indeed, so well founded were the suspicions, and so strongly conveyed, that the injured husband determined to have proof positive, and to effect this invited a gentleman and brother officer to dine and sleep, omitting to say in the invitation that some gens d'armes were to be of the party. The lady and her husband had long occupied different apartments, and on this particular night, Mrs. ——, it was remarked, wished her husband good night more affectionately than usual. The police, however, were on the alert, and stationed about the mansion. At about three in the morning a figure appeared slowly and carefully wending its way through the passages, and finally escaped itself in the lady's bedroom, and turned the key. To make assurance doubly sure, the gentleman's room was searched, but no ghost nor shadow was discovered there. Armed with pistols, the police and husband were several minutes in effecting an entrance, and the gay Lothario jumped out of the window in his robe de nuit and one slipper. It was the merest chance in the world he was not killed on the spot, falling within two inches of a deep area; however, a run of three miles across ploughed fields proved that the gallant gentleman was more frightened than hurt. The end of this romance is, that Mrs. —— —— departed to her friends, the enraged husband to the French, and the officer to the English metropolis.—Evening paper

On Tuesday morning, at 8 o'clock, an affair of honour took place on Hampstead-heath, between Mr. Peter Dalton, a gentleman residing in Cadogan-place, Sloane-street, and Captain Phillimore Bargewell, an officer on half pay. Both fired without taking effect. Immediately afterwards the seconds interfered, and succeeded in effecting an amicable arrangement. The cause of the meeting arose from an alleged debt of honour due to Mr. Dalton at the late St. Leger Races.

The will of the late Miss Jane Innes, spinster, of Stow, North Britain, has just been proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The deceased was possessed of upwards of 800,000*l* in the funds, and property in different parts of Scotland to the amount of 1,200,000*l*, making together two millions, the whole of which she has bequeathed to be equally divided amongst all her relations who can be found. Notwithstanding her immense wealth, her habits were very penurious; and as a proof of it, one dark evening she had occasion to go up stairs, which she did without lighting a candle, and in consequence of her advanced age (nearly 80) she slipped down and broke her leg, which accident ultimately caused her death

The Pantomimes.—Covent Garden, Harlequin and the Merrie Devil of Edmonton, or the Great Red of Ware; Drury Lane, Harlequin Jack Sheppard, or the Blossoms of Tyburn Tree; Adelphi, Harlequin Mother Red Cap,—have afforded the annual feast of tricks, fun, and drollery. At Drury, the scenery is most attractive: we have a Diorama, representing Circassia, Armenia, Persia, and the overland journey to British India, in which several of the views are of the most romantic description, and are placed before the spectator with admirable fidelity. Those of the Plains and the Mount of Ararat, and of the taking of Ghuznee by the British, were warmly applauded. The latter is a splendid pictorial effort, grouped and massed with admirable skill, and full of that life-like buoyancy which belligerent bustle demands.—At Covent Garden there is a grand moving panorama of the Clyde from Glasgow to Eglintoun, en route to the tournament, affording some fine views of the picturesque scenery on the coast. At the Adelphi, every trick contains a palpable allusion, but the point most applauded was when the scene shifted to Windsor Castle, and the Castle Inn stared us in the face. The arrivals to dinner were a never-ending source of fun. A large "lamb" came first. "Come to dinner," said a card in the porter's hand. "Of course," said another ready written by the lamb. Then came a "carrion crow," jumping up and down, and making every now and then an abortive attempt to soar; the band struck up "Jim Crow," and the gallery shouted "That's Spring Rice!" but the "crow" was let in. Succeeding them was a worthy lawyer in a full-bottomed wig, and the gown of a chancellor: in vain did he knock for admission; the porters were proof against all his entreaties, and ultimately he was knocked down by his own broom and left for dead. Not was a "baker's peel" more fortunate in gaining admission; the audience hissed him outright, and the porters turned him from the door with scorn.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—On the 23d the Chambers were opened by the King in person, who pronounced the following discourse:—

Peers and Deputies of France,—Since the termination of your last session, the internal peace, to which your loyal assistance has so greatly contributed, has not been disturbed. I have been apprised by a witness who is very dear to me of fresh marks of affection and confidence of the French. The eldest of my sons, in visiting this year a great part of my kingdom, has observed, wherever he has been, a great supply of work, the progress of industry, respect for institutions, and obedience to the laws. My heart has been deeply touched on seeing in the national attachment which has surrounded my son, a fresh cause for his brothers and himself to devote themselves unceasingly, at all times and places, for the service of their country, and for the honour of France. My relations with Foreign Powers have preserved the pacific character which the common interests of Europe demand. Our flag, in concert with that of Great Britain, faithful to the spirit of that union, so advantageous to the interests of the two countries, has watched over the independence and the immediate security of the Ottoman empire. Our interests are always to secure the preservation and integrity of this empire, whose existence is so essential to the preservation of the general peace. Our efforts have at last succeeded in stopping those hostilities in the East, which we had wished to have prevented, and whatever may be the complications which may result from the diversity of interest, I hope that the agreement of the Great Powers will soon end in an equitable and pacific conclusion. A great change has been effected in the situation of Spain, and it I have to regret not being able to announce to you that the civil war which has so long desolated this kingdom is entirely at an end, still this war has lost its character of gravity, which would give rise to alarming apprehensions for the stability of the constitutional throne of Isabella the Second. The greatest part of the northern provinces is pacified, and we are allowed to hope that those of the east will not be long behandhand. This important result is owing, to the wise conduct of the Government of the Queen Regent, and to the persevering valour of the Spanish Army, supported by the assistance which my Government has given them, and that of her Britannic Majesty, by the faithful execution of the treaties of 1834. In America, the Mexican Government has fulfilled its engagement of the treaty which I have terminated with that republic. The blockade of the ports of the Argentine republic still retains one of our squadrons. Fresh forces have been directed to this distant point, in order to hasten the satisfaction which is due to us. In Africa, new hostilities call for a decided suppression. Our brave soldiers and our agriculturists, to whom my son, by his presence, had proved my solicitude towards them, have been treacherously attacked. The progress of our establishments in the province of Algiers and Constantine has been the cause of this unjustified attack, which aggression must be resented, in order that its re-occurrence may be impossible, and that nothing may interrupt the continuation of that prosperity obtained for it by France, which the French nation will never surrender. A fresh supply of troops has already arrived in Africa, and every possible means has been employed to shorten the duration of the war, by carrying it on with vigour that hereafter the inhabitants of Algeria, and those tribes who shall remain faithful to France, may everywhere find sure protection. The expenses ordered for that purpose will be placed before the Chambers, to be subject to their control. I have the hope that their assent will be obtained, which has never been refused when the honour of our arms and our permanent interests have been called in question. The state of our finances allows of such increased expenses. The question of the sugar trade, which the Chambers had left undecided last session, has, during their absence, been momentarily decided. A project of law will be placed before you on this subject, which will have for its object the protection of public and private interests. Measures for the amelioration of the situation of the subalterns and officers will be brought before you. Your attention will be required to the organization of a State Council, literary property and public instruction. Other proposals, having for their object the arrangement of a system for civil pensions, the execution of the principal railroad lines, the increased improvement of our naval power, the prison discipline, and the introduction of the penitentiary system, will be presented to you. In your different labours, your enlightened patriotism will search out what can most contribute to the increase of public prosperity, and the strengthening of conservative principles in our institutions. Those principles it is my duty to preserve within proper bounds;—the happiness of having performed my task will be the reward of my self-devotion. Ten years have already elapsed since the great act took place that established me on the throne, during which time you have surrounded me with that assistance which I again claim from you. It is with you, and in the midst of you, that I love to felicitate France on her happy improvements in civilization and legal liberty, which insatiable and turbulent spirits had endeavoured to interrupt. Thanks to God, and to your loyal assistance, their efforts have remained useless, and these last remnants of past disorders will disappear before public reason and the national will."

PORTUGAL.—From the Diario do Governo of 11th Dec.:—

"By notices received yesterday from Angola, the Government has had intelligence of an event in which the insolence and madness of an officer of the British Navy are conspicuous. By virtue of the convention of 29th May, 1839, between Vice-Adm. Noronha and Capt. Tucker, Capt. Elliot, Commander of the English brig of war Columbine, entered Zaire, and took several ships there, having perhaps found them to be in contravention of the decree of 10th Dec., 1836; but he did not meet with any motive or pretext for proceeding with the Portuguese brig Neptune of Lisbon, and the schooner Angerona of Angola, in the same way. Some days afterwards the brig Neptune was boarded during the night, and taken by the boats of the Columbine, which soon afterwards, having been fired upon by the blacks, havendo recebido algum fogo feito pelos pretos), took possession also of the schooner Angerona. After committing other acts of violence, the Columbine left together with the captured vessels, and meeting the Leander packet, compelled her to delay her voyage for twenty-four hours, transferred to her the crews both of the Neptune and the Angerona, and being within sight of the same packet, in order that the latter might witness the affront, placing itself between the two vessels, on one of which the Portuguese flag was hoisted, fired upon them until both were sunk. This fact, which is nothing more than the act of an individual, and which only proves the brutality of him who practised it, is nevertheless so scandalous, by the cowardly injury inflicted on the Portuguese flag, that the Government of her Majesty cannot fail to exact a full satisfaction on the part of the British Government, in redress of the national dignity. Her Majesty's Government expects that this satisfaction will be given, not only from the confidence which it feels in the rectitude of its ancient ally, but also because the dignity of the British Government itself requires that so great an excess committed by one of its subjects—who, violating the principles of justice, and the faith of conventions and treaties, constituted himself both judge and executioner in a manner so arbitrary and atrocious, and who, above all, ignobly insulted the flag of a friendly nation—should not remain unpunished."

The ravings of the Nacional are highly amusing. It says:—

"It will not be easy, in the whole annals of the perfidy, infamy, robbery, and violence of the British Government, to find a parallel to this case, and such an attempt, in the absence of any hope of a complete satisfaction exacted by our Government, ought to induce our commerce to arm corsairs in order to make use of just reprisals against a set of pirates, who, abusing their force, had the impudence to sink two Portuguese vessels, with the Portuguese flag flying. Our blood boils in our veins—our hearts beat with indignation—and we can scarcely trace these lines because pain restrains the pen. We weep with rage that we cannot instantly avenge so great an injury upon that perfidious and treacherous Lord Palmerston, and read a lesson to those proud islanders, who, forgetting what they were, and what they owe to Portugal, insult us and mock at us everywhere.

"If no act of reprisal takes place on the part of our Government against the pirates that have sworn to ruin us,—if it dare not assume the proper attitude in this case, we call upon our countrymen, resident whether in Portugal, Brazil, or the coast of Africa, to set about and arm ships to attack the English vessels, and sink them, with their flags flying, wherever they can meet with them. For our own part, we are ready to dispose of part of our property—of all, if it be necessary—to associate ourselves for the holy purpose of burning and sinking the British ships. Let the Portuguese come forward in such a noble enterprise, in a short time all would be ready to afford us the satisfaction of witnessing the sufferings of the scoffers, who consider us less worthy of respect than the Iroquezes, or the inhabitants of Otaheite.

"Our apathy is the only cause of the progressive insolence of the present English Government. As soon as we shall have placed ourselves in a condition to make war upon it—as soon as it shall have received notice that the Portuguese are disposed to sell their independence and liberty at a dear rate—you will see how those ignoble statesmen, who have millions of Englishmen enlisted as Chartists (those of Newport, not those of Belem), who have no O'Connell prophesying the independence of Ireland, in 1840, will take care to respect us, and to treat us with the consideration that we deserve."

CANADA.—The Governor-General arrived at Toronto on 21st November, and took the usual oaths as Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Upper Canada.

NEW ZEALAND.—The Baron de Thierry, a French nobleman (whose name is not unknown in this country) continues to assert the sovereignty of New Zealand, where he now resides with his family. The Baron is "a Sovereign Chief, King of Rahaheva," and acts in the name and on the behalf of the aborigines of the island. He has recently issued a decree, announcing that the tribes may continue to live on the lands which they occupy; that he will dispose of lands every three months at auction, the minimum price to be one dollar per acre; that 25 per cent. shall be devoted to local improvement, and 25 per cent. to the benefit of the aborigines. He will not oppose the settlement of the English in his empire, and their purchase of lands, with the condition that his Royal rights be acknowledged. In 1837, H. M. ship Beagle, Capt. Fitzroy, visited New Zealand. A controversy arose between the Baron and Capt. Fitzroy, on account of the refusal by the latter to recognise his sovereignty. In a protest addressed to Capt. Fitzroy by the Baron, he presented a history of his life and the claims which he preferred to the sovereignty of New Zealand and Nouheva. He states in this protest that he was born in England of noble parentage, his father being an emigrant of the French Revolution. Educated at Oxford, he there married the daughter of a prelate, who now shares with him the honours of his Royalty. He was at one time an attaché of the French Legation in London, and always had the protection of the Royal French exiles.

Literary Notices.

Up the Rhine. By Thomas Hood. Baily and Co.

Mr. Hood has varied the plan of his comic volume this year, and with much advantage. Perhaps the plan of his production may be best understood by the commencing paragraphs of his Preface :—

"To fanciful such Critics as are fond of climbing up a Mât de Cocagne for a Magpie's Nest at the top, the following work was constructed, partly on the ground-plan of Humphrey Clinker, but with very inferior materials, and on a much humbler scale. I admire the old mansion too much, to think that any workmanship of mine could erect a house fit to stand in the same row.

"Many persons will doubtless differ with me as to the inferences I have drawn from things seen and heard abroad. But we are all liable to mistakes; and I may have been as wrong in my speculations as was another Traveller in Germany, who, seeing a basketful of purple Easter Eggs, exclaimed, 'Good-a-day! what colour can their hens be!'"

The "family party" who go "up the Rhine," and to whom our prince of punsters and of humorists introduces his readers, consist of Mr. Frank Somerville—his "hypochondriacal old bachelor uncle," Mr. Richard Orchard, who, though in robust health, is always about to "die suddenly"—Mrs. Wilmot, a widow, the sister of Mr. Orchard—and Martha Penny, Mrs. Wilmot's favourite maid, as amusing a baggage as one would wish to meet on a long summer's day. The form of the work is epistolary, highly characteristic, and equally dramatic; all the abovementioned personages having their respective friends and correspondents at home—Gerard Brooke and Peter Bagster, Esqrs., Miss Wilmot, and Rebecca Page. From such material it will be readily inferred that a rich treat of fun and fancy, droll description and extraordinary views of men and things, seen by different persons through different media, awaits the reader. Wild legends of the Rhine, in prose and verse—amatory and non-amatory poems—and though last named, not least in consideration, numbers of Hood's own grotesque designs, carved in wood, illustrating and illustrated—encounter him at every turn. In short, the whole affair is as fresh and racy as any of Hood's former productions; and he tells us, that "should the members of the present family party be found agreeable or amusing by the great family circle of the public, he may be induced next year to publish their subsequent Tour in Belgium." We may, therefore confidently "calculate" upon again meeting our old friends and acquaintances.

The Spitfire. A Tale of the Sea. By Capt. Chamier, R.N. 3 vols. H. Colburn.

Captain Chamier's new novel, which we welcome with pleasure, under the above title, is better than "a tale of the sea"—it is a tale both of the sea and the land; a 'mingled yarn," though not of good and ill," for both woof and warp are good in their respective ways, and form together a tissue that will last as long as any of the gallant workman's manufactures of a similar kind that have yet proceeded from the literary loom.

"The Spitfire" opens on land, and there continues throughout a considerable portion of the first volume, telling a very exciting and strongly-wrought tale of a disputed inheritance—or rather of one diverted by mingled fraud and force, from its due course of succession; the rightful owner (the hero of the tale) being aware of every step of the fraud, yet rendered by circumstances utterly unable to defeat or oppose it. Fairly subdued, therefore, for the time being, to the base qualities of his fortunes, he enters on board ship as a common sailor, where, roused by the exciting nature of his new duties, and by the noble blood that is in him, he distinguishes himself nobly from the herd about. Still, circumstances are too much for him: he becomes reprobate and reckless as his companions; deserts, becomes the Pirate Captain of "the Spitfire," and passes through a varied succession of scenes and adventures, that are described with great spirit and force.

To pursue the plot farther in detail would be unfair to the Writer. Suffice it to say, that the work is crowded with interest and novelty, that a thread of love links the whole together with a consecutive interest, and that at last something like "poetical justice" is awarded to all parties.

The tale is a wild one, not concocted with any great degree of art, or carried out with much care or consistency. Sailor-like, the author dashes at all that his fancy pictures as feasible for the purposes of excitement and variety.

Referring to the Naval annals of 1801, we find it simply recorded that "on the 21st July of that year, the boats commanded by Lts. Keith, Maxwell, and Woodley Losack,—of the Doris, 36, Charles Brisbane—the Beaulieu, 40, S. Poynz—and the Uranie, 36, W. H. Gage, captured, by boarding, La Chevrette, 20, a French corvette, under the batteries in the Bay of Camaret, in sight of the combined French and Spanish Fleet." Of this exploit, Captain Chamier has given a sketch that will gratify every true sailor and lover of Old England.

"On the 20th of July, the boats of the Doris and Beaulieu left their ships, equipped for a desperate service; and such was the ardour of the men employed, that they strove one division against the other to near the corvette. In this effort to be first, the regularity which would better have been preserved by a little less enthusiasm, and a little more discretion, was disturbed; the two divisions separated, and those left behind, for some reason or other, turned round, and pulled back again, whilst those who had reached the entrance of the bay, not willing to meet a certain defeat by pushing alongside without the aid of their comrades, lay upon their oars awaiting their arrival. In this position they remained, until the first streak of daylight warned them of the necessity of returning; for to attempt the attack without the protection of darkness, was a madness none contemplated. With many a bitter curse against those who apparently had not done their utmost to reach the bay, the oars were again in motion, the boats discovered by the corvette, and any advantage derivable from a surprise evidently lost. Much useless recrimination took place. . . . . In the mean time, the Frenchmen were not slow to profit by the discovery. The corvette, about noon of the 21st, weighed, and ran further in under a strong battery, and there was moored. Some soldiers were embarked, her quarters were cleared, the guns loaded almost to the muzzles, and other precautions very gratifying to those on board the corvette, and very much the reverse to the attacking party, were taken. The more danger, the more honour; the greater the difficulty, the greater the merit. The Captain saw the corvette removed, but it did not for a second alter their determination; on the contrary, when the corvette in all pride of security, by way of laughing at her enemies, hoisted an English ensign under a French one, the crew of the Doris gave three cheers, and became the more anxious to try their strength; nor did they care one straw for the additional force, in the shape of a large gun boat, which was placed, at the entrance of the bay, to give timely notice of the approach, or the turning and twisting of the rammers, as the French artillery prepared the guns of the battery. The dark was anxiously expected, and when half-past nine came, the crew were in the boats, without awaiting the usual summons. Again, under the same leader, they left their ships; and with hearts and hands ready and willing, they approached the bay with more regularity than the preceding night. They mustered fifteen boats in all, containing two hundred and eighty officers and men—the Robust, a seventy-four, having added her barge and pinnace to the boats of the frigates. On leaving the shore, a boat was discovered; and the Commander of the expedition, judging it proper to secure it, went himself with five others in chase, leaving the rest to await his return, or slowly to progress towards the corvette, as they had still a distance of six miles to pull before they arrived alongside of the enemy. Some time elapsed, and the Commanding Officer did not return. The next in command, Mr. Maxwell, who was a Lieutenant of the Beaulieu, thought it just as well to get closer in shore, in order to be ready for an attack when the Commanding Officer should return. The force was diminished to one hundred and eighty men; but never were there more resolute hearts than in those boats, and not one surpassed Albert, who, to the common brute courage inherent in most men, joined the honourable feelings of a man of high family. There was no cheering; this was a business of silence and secrecy, to creep upon the enemy unawares and to capture the vessel, without bloodshed, by a surprise. As the muffled oars dipped silently in the water, and the boats as silently approached the object of attack, many a head many were the eyes which were uselessly turned in the direction of the other boats, the crews of which would have so materially assisted in the enterprise. But it was all in vain; the night was far spent; the corvette lay at anchor not a mile from the boats. . . . . Not a word was spoken; the seamen, as they rested on their oars, listened with intense anxiety to catch the sound of an oar, but time gradually elapsed, it was past midnight, and it wanted not more than two hours and a half to day-break. To delay was useless; to return foreign to the wishes of every man in the boats. The disparity of force was alarming; the determination of the men cheering. Maxwell now called the boats close together, and gave his instructions. It was a great risk for this officer to run; but he was confident of success. He knew the character of British seamen, and began in short address in the manner most likely to animate them. 'The more danger, my lads,' said he, 'the more honour. We must go on without the other boats. Thomson, Wilkinson, and Hervey, you are smart fore-topmen on board your own ship, let us see how quick you can be in loosing the corvette's fore-topsail, you need not be nice in casting off the gasket—a sharp knife and an easy conscience is what you most require. Now do you hear, you three fellows; don't stand talking to those Frenchmen on the forecastle, we'll make them comfortable; your duty is on the fore-topsail yard;—but let's see, we must pick out another.'—' Allow me, Sir,' said Albert, 'to volunteer; I dare say I shan't be behind-hand.'—' Well said,' replied Maxwell, 'what ship do you belong to?'—'The Doris,' replied Albert.—'I shan't forget you, my lad;—what's your name?'—' Mortimer, Sir.'—' A devilish good name, too. Now listen—in the Beaulieu boats you are to board on the starboard bow. Neville,' he continued, addressing the officer who commanded the Uranie's boats, 'you, with your own ship's boats, the one from the Robust, and the remaining one of the Doris, will board on the larboard bow, and Burke,' said he, 'you must make up in your boat for the loss of the other five belonging to your ship, which seems to have taken a long time to chase one boat; mind, two of your men will cut the cables—there's no use for any long winded yarn about this business. There she is, at present a French corvette, I am in hopes before two o'clock she will be clear of the anchorage, with an English Commanding Officer, get into your stations in two divisions, and stand by, directly we are discovered, to give way like British seamen, who are resolved to succeed in the enterprise.' The boats soon backed into their stations; and the word being given to give way, hastily, but quietly, the gallant fellows advanced to the attack. It was a little after one o'clock when the corvette was distinguished. The French, who expected the attack, had been equally vigilant; every preparation had been made; three hundred and thirty-nine men were on board of her; the guns had been loaded to the muzzles; and the confidence that they could protect their vessel from every boat attack, was general throughout the crew and the soldiers on board of her. They now saw the enemy advancing, and prepared to give them a warm reception. As a matter of caution—not that any doubt existed in the mind of the Commander of the corvette, as to the hostile intentions of the boats—he hailed them. It was answered by Maxwell, calling out to his brave companions—'Now then, my lads!' then dashed the oars in the water. The silence was broken by the cheers, which were heard far from the scene of action, whilst the animating words from each officer, as they said, 'Give way, my jolly dogs!'—hurrah for the first on board!'—was all that was requisite to make every man feel the importance of his best endeavours; and it seemed as if all hearts had felt the appeal, for each boat's crew, no longer tenacious about a discovery, bent their backs, and gave way with all their strength. No sooner was this done, than the contents of a broadside came in amongst them. The grape and canister shot fell like hail around them; and the water was dashed into the boats by the round shot, which came bounding along duck and drake fashion. This discharge, enough to have checked the advance of any foe, was received with a loud cheer—'Now's your time, lads, to get on board before they can load again; give way,' said Maxwell, as he stood up in his boat, and the words were re-echoed by Neville and Burke, who, imitating their leader, stood up and cheered their men. In the mean time, the French soldiers opened a steady, well-directed fire, with musketry from the shore; whilst the troops who had been embarked were not slow to imitate so good an example. Between each shot might be heard—'Give way—give way'—whilst the loud dash of the oars was heard on board the corvette. Each boat pulled to the station allotted her; and the crews made one simultaneous rush to board. The French, armed at all points, presented a bristling front of boarding pikes, backed up by the small-armed men, whilst those armed with tomahawks slashed away bravely to defend their ship. Every exertion was made to overcome this resistance, but without effect. The boats' crews were driven back, in spite of their clinging like cats to the ropes, and fighting like devils to gain the decks; whilst the French, who saw the first attempt of their enemies checked, gave a cheer of defiance, and actually boarded the boats. Never, since man to man coped in single warfare, was more desperate bravery exhibited on both sides. The Frenchmen, who had so gallantly followed up their success, never returned to their ship; a struggle ensued, and the intruders were thrown overboard. The fire-arms of the English were now perfectly useless, and abandoned; but, with their cutlasses only, they again endeavoured to board, again the Frenchmen bravely opposed them. But the assailant is ever more desperate than the assailed. Undaunted by the furious fire from shore and ship—undismayed by the forest of pikes which bristled round her bows—unappalled by the frequent death wounds dealt with savage fierceness from the boarding pikes, the British seamen, unused to a reverse, again and again made the desperate assault, and finally established a landing on the forecastle. 'Hurrah for the first aloft,' was heard from Mortimer, who, sweeping his cutlass to clear his way, jumped upon the rigging, dropped his cutlass on the deck, and springing aloft, was soon about to lay out on the fore topsail yard. Here he found another precaution had been taken. All the gear was stopped up along the yard—a second, the sharp knife remedied that advantage;—the foot-rope fell; he was the first on the yard! nay, so expeditiously was this effected, and so well did the seamen stationed to loose the sail obey their orders, that in the small space of three minutes, from the gaining the first footing on deck, the French corvette, known as the Chevrette, had her three topsails and courses cut adrift, and the sails hung down for sheeting home. The noise of the falling sails sounded more dreadful in the ears of the French than the rattling of small arms, or the clash of the tomahawks. They felt they were prisoners; for they knew, that once removed from the batteries, they had no confidence to bear up against their assailants. The first tremor of fear, which was communicated by one of the crew of the Chevrette jumping overboard, ran like an electric spark through all the rest. They threw down their arms, and jumping overboard, endeavoured to reach the shore; whilst the sight of the canvas animated the English, who rushed toward the quarter-deck, and notwithstanding the gallant opposition of some, who disdained to fly, succeeded in capturing it. The French still hoped to retrieve their disgrace. From the main deck, they opened a hasty-ing fire of musketry, but the cables were cut, the ship under canvas—an English seaman, named Henry Wallis, was at the helm, and in spite of his wounds, he stood true to his post, and was the first to call out with a steady voice—"She goes a-head now, Sir, for she answers her helm." Then was the cheer of victory heard!—and those below, who still valiantly clung to a last hope, finding that hope gone, surrendered and ceased firing. The firing from the shore, which was now confined to the large guns, put down the light air of wind which was favouring the prize, and she now became much harassed by the batteries; but she was a prize, and little did the crews of the different boats heed the Turkish salutes, which came well directed toward them. On the forecastle was John Brown, the boatswain of the Beaulieu. He had escaped by a miracle,—the boat in which he had been placed, finding how desperate the case was forward on the first of attack, dropped under the quarter, and Brown led the way to board, establishing a landing in the quarter gallery; but here all progress was impeded—the door had been barricaded up, and the boatswain kicked in vain, until finding all attempt fruitless, he clambered up to the taffrail, and got upon the quarter-deck. At this moment, he saw the landing was made good in the forecastle, and he knew that a boatswain's station was there. Sweeping his cutlass round his head, he roared out—'Make a line there, you d—d parlez-vous,' and rushing forward, succeeded in gaining his station. He then took his 'call out,' and at every order gave the regular pipe, as if he had been on board his own ship, the Beaulieu. As the shot came fast, and Wallis was severely wounded, Maxwell called another man to come to the helm, but the answer came from Albert, who, standing close to the Quartermaster, said—'I can assist him, Sir.' Again a light breeze sprang up, the sails were trimmed, the Chevrette was fast drawing from the land, when the six boats which had been absent returned, and Maxwell relinquished the command. Great was the satisfaction of the different Captains at the result of this gallant enterprise; warmly indeed were the seamen welcomed by their messmates; and many were the tears shed over their fallen friends. The slaughter had been proportionate to the resistance!—eleven had been killed, and fifty-seven wounded, whilst on board of the Chevrette eighty-five had been killed, and fifty-seven wounded.

"The great, the brilliant exploit above mentioned, found praise from every lip. It was a daring, well-planned, well-executed attack, and one pleasing to the cooling out of the Hermione. Albert had embarked in stirring times; Nelson's fame was high; the Navy was the bulwark of the nation; every action worthy of record found a poet ready to enhance its merit; the song passed from ship to ship, from barrack to barrack, and when the thoroughbred seamen talked over the fire on shore, and twisted the long yarn of strange adventures on a Saturday night,—then it was that the song went round, in which the great deeds of our profession were recorded, and the young and the old, the grave and the gay, caught an enthusiasm from the words, and felt anxious to try their powers against the inveterate enemy of Great Britain."

At a time when British troops are in possession of one of the strongest fortresses of the Rajpoots, and the last shadow of independence stripped from Maun Singh, the following brief account of Joudpoor cannot be otherwise than acceptable.

JOUDPOOR (Fullapoor, the city of war).—An important Rajpoot principality, in the province of Ajmeer, situate generally between the 25th and 27th degrees of north latitude. The ancient name was Marwar, the Raja of which is occasionally called the Marwar, or Rhatore Raja. On the north, his territories are bounded by Bikaneer and Jesselmeer; on the south, they are separated from Guzerat by a range of steep craggy mountains, of difficult access, which send out spurs and branches, the intervals of which are filled with jungle. On the south-east it has Odeypoor, on the east, the British district of Ajmeer, the Shekawutty country, and Jeypoor; and on the west, the territories belonging to the Ameers of Scinde. In 1600, Amerkote, on the borders of Scinde, was in his possession, it comprehended the town of Meerta, making altogether a distance not much short of 250 miles. The general soil of the Joudpoor territories is arid, but they do not, as was formerly supposed, excel the rest of Rajpootana in sterility. On account of the sandy quality of the soil, which renders the roads impassable for wheeled carriages, the merchandize is transported on camels and oxen, which are, more especially the latter, of a superior description, and in great demand all over Hindostan.

Jeswunt Sing, Raja of this State, was one of Aurengzebe's best Generals, yet when he died in command, near Cabool, in Afghanistan, Aurengzebe gave orders forcibly to convert his children, in defending whom most part of their Rajpoot attendants perished. He expelled the family from the fort, and compelled them to seek refuge among the hills and forests. The Raja's family, on the death of Aurengzebe, regained possession, his grandson, Ajeet Singh, having rebelled, and destroyed the mosques which the Emperor had erected.

In 1803 Raja Bheem Singh died, leaving his widow pregnant of a son, afterwards called Dokkul Singh. Before the birth, however, of this offspring, the throne was secured by his uncle, Raja Maun Singh, and the young child was conveyed by his party to the protection of Ubhi Singh, a Shekawutty, where he remained waiting for an opportunity to expel his uncle and rival.

In 1806, dissensions arose between the Rajas of Jeypoor and Joudpoor, each asserting his claim to espouse the daughter of the Raja of Odeypoor, while Sindia and Holkar, with extensible professions of amity, were privately extorting money from each of them, as the price of abstaining from assisting his rival. The Jeypore Raja having defeated the Joudpoor troops, took some towns, besieged the capital, and appeared in the high road to the accomplishment of his wishes, while the cause of his rival looked proportionately blank, mutinies broke out in the Jeypoor army, many Rajpoot chiefs forsook that standard, while Meer Khan, under pretence of a breach of pecuniary engagements, ravaged the Jeypoor territories, and compelled the Raja to retreat from Joudpoor with the utmost precipitation, his own capital being in imminent danger of experiencing the fate he had destined for that of his rival.

In this extremity the Jeypoor chiefs, with the view of distracting the leaders who supported Maun Singh, brought forward Dhokul Singh the legitimate heir of the elder branch of the family; but he made no progress, and in the end it was the subject of importance possessed by his adherents was the town of Nagore. In order to interest the British Government in his account, Dhokul Singh's party offered to pay twelve lacs of rupees in cash, cede five pergunnahs in perpetuity, and subsidize a British force, but this was rejected as inconsistent with the general policy of the British nation.

In conformity to a custom long established in Hindostan it was usual, when a powerful Raja succeeded his decea ed father, to solicit the Mogul to honour him with a tiica as a mark of investiture, which ceremony consists in having the forehead anointed with a preparation of bruised sandal wood, although this injunction had long ceased to be a necessary token of confirmation of the successor's right, it was still considered as gratifying a mark of distinction, that towards the close of 1807, Raja Maun Singh anxiously solicited the British Government to interfere with the Emperor of Delhi to obtain it for him. The British Government declined interfering, considering it an obsolete act of sovereignty, the revival of which was particularly objectionable. Of this the Raja was apprised, and the inutility of the act represented to him, as well as the folly of making an unnecessary reference of the validity of his title to a power which neither exercised a right to grant or withhold it.

Since the above, Maun Singh has maintained his seat on the Joudpoor throne, and has even extended his conquests, while the heart of his own country was ravaged by Sindia, Holkar, Ameer Khan, or any other depredator who could muster a sufficient number of followers. In 1805, the Joudpoor revenues were estimated by Mr. Metcalf at fifty lacs, but the insanity of the Raja, and the youth and inexperience of his son, for a long time combined to reduce the strength, and increase the desolation of this large principality. In this condition it remained until 1818, when it was the second of the Rajpoot States that entered into engagements with the British Government. Sindia was the only power that had legal demands for tribute, which nominally amounted to 180,000 rupees per annum; but seldom more than 108,000 were actually paid, and at this last amount the tribute to the British for protection was fixed by the treaty. The expulsion of all the Military posts placed throughout the country by Ameer Khan was the first benefit that resulted from these arrangements, which were conducted at Delhi, Jan. 6, 1818, the Raja engaged to furnish a contingent of 1500 horse, and his country ceased to be what it had so long been, a nursery for freebooters.

The insubordination of his chiefs had so greatly irritated Maun Singh, that he commenced the exercise of the authority to which he had been restored, by some violent proceedings against those chiefs, and also aggressions on the miserable district of Sarowy; but subsequently, on the interference of the British Government, he treated the first with more lenity, and abstained from plundering the last; but still his country cannot be considered as settled (1824), at least in the European sense of the word. Fortunately, however, Maun Singh is an efficient ruler, and has not required our Military interference. With reference to the defence of this portion of the north-western frontier of Hindostan, the Joudpoor dominions are of great importance, for although the city of Joudpoor lie above a hundred miles from Gujerat, its territories border on that province, and also on the Lonee River, outlets of great importance towards the defence of the British provinces.—Bombay Times, Oct. 26.

The following proclamation was issued by the Resident at Sattara, under the authority of the Hon. Sir J. P. Carnac, Bart., Governor of Bombay, dated Sattara, 5th Sept., 1839:—

"1. When the British Government was compelled, by the unprovoked hostility of Bajee Rao, to declare war against him, a proclamation, dated 11th Feb., 1818, was issued by the Hon. Mr. Elphinstone, sole Commissioner for the settlement of the territories conquered from the Peshwa, setting forth the circumstances which had rendered that measure imperative. In this it was announced as follows:—

"The Raja of Sattara, who is now a prisoner in Bajee Rao's hands, will be released and placed at the head of an independent sovereignty, of such an extent as may support the Raja and his family in comfort and dignity. With this view the Fort of Sattara has been taken, the Raja's flag has been set up in it, and his former subjects have been called into employment. Whatever country is assigned to the Raja will be administered by him, and he will be bound to establish a system of justice and order. The rest of the country will be held by the Hon. Company. The revenues will be collected by the Government, but all property real or personal will be secured. All annual stipends, and all religious and charitable establishments, will be protected, and all religious sects will be tolerated, and their customs maintained, as far as is just and reasonable.

2. The Raja of Sattara, having been rescued from captivity on the defeat of the Peshwa at Ashtee, was, pursuant to the above declaration, placed on the throne, and a treaty of alliance and friendship was concluded between His Highness and the British Government, dated 25th Sept., 1819. By the second article of this compact the Raja, for himself and for his heirs and successors, engaged to hold his territory in subordinate co-operation with the British Government, and to be guided in all matters by the advice of the British Agent at His Highness' Court. By the fifth article, the Raja, for himself, and for his heirs and successors, engaged to forbear from all intercourse with foreign powers, and with all Sirdars, Jaygeerdars, Chiefs, and Ministers, and all persons of whatever description, who were not rendered subject to his authority, and to abstain from all connexion or correspondence with them. It was further stipulated in the same article that any affairs that might arise with the aforesaid state and persons, relating to His Highness, should be exclusively conducted by the British Government, and that it (for the purpose of forming matrimonial connexions) His Highness should have occasion to communicate with persons not rendered subject to his authority, such communication should be made entirely through the Political Agent. Finally it was declared that this article was a fundamental condition of the agreement and that any departure from it on the Raja's part, would subject him to the loss of all the advantages secured to him by the said treaty.

3. Notwithstanding this solemn compact, it has been conclusively established to the conviction of the British Government, that the Raja, nominated of his obligations and of the generosity which restored him to liberty and conferred on him a throne, has, for a series of years, held clandestine communications, contrary to the stipulations contained in the fifth article of the treaty, that he has cherished ambitious designs, hostile to the British Government, that he has advanced claims and pretensions incompatible with the letter and spirit of the treaty, and that he has conducted himself in a manner subversive of the alliance formed between the two states.

4. Nevertheless, the British Government, willing to believe the Raja had been betrayed into these acts by the counsels of evil and intriguing men, and in the hope that the Raja would appreciate its clemency, and abandon the dangerous course into which he had been seduced, had resolved to overlook and forgive the past, on his agreeing for the future to act strictly and in good faith according to the treaty, to dismiss from his councils the minister who had been chiefly instrumental in creating the disunion between the two states, and to abstain from injuring those persons through whose information his violations of the treaty had been established.

5. With this view the Hon. Sir J. R. Carnac, Bart., Governor of Bombay, vested with full authority from the Right Hon. Lord Auckland, Governor-General of India, proceeded in person to Sattara, and having explained to the Raja the dangerous position in which he had placed himself, and having communicated both verbally and in writing, the conditions on which the British Government was willing to grant an amnesty for the past, urged him to the compliance with those terms, as the only mode by which relations of amity and friendship with him could be restored.

6. The Raja, after repeated conferences, and ample opportunity for reflection, and after having been explicitly warned of the consequences, rejected those conditions, and the British Government being, therefore, convinced that it is impossible any longer to maintain friendly relations with a Prince who has shown himself so regardless of a treaty entered into under the peculiar circumstances above recited, hereby declares the alliance between the two states dissolved, and its intention to enforce the penalty specified in the fifth article of the treaty entered into by the Raja, and dated 25th Sept., 1819.

7. The British Government, however, having no views of advantage and aggrandizement, has resolved to invest the brother and next in succession to the Raja, with the sovereignty of the Sattara state, according to the limits fixed by the treaty 25th Sept., 1819. He is, therefore, hereby proclaimed Raja of Sattara, under the title of Shreemunt Maharaj Shahjee Rajey Chutturpatee, of Sattara, and all persons residing within his territory are hereby required to render to him allegiance.

(Signed) C. OVANS, Resident at Sattara.

We understand that D. A. Blane, Esq., at present the Collector and Magistrate of Candeish, succeeds James Erskine, Esq., as Political Agent in Kattywar. Mr. Blane has had some experience as a diplomatist, having been resident in the Persian Gulf, some years since, and formerly filled the situation to which he is now to be permanently appointed, as locum tenens for Colonel Barnewell.—Bombay Times, Oct. 19.

Capt. Henry Timings, Bengal Horse Artillery, died at Cabul on the 12th September. This event promotes 1st Lieut. and Brev. Capt. E. Madden, and second Lieut. W. H. Delamain, and throws open the command of a troop of Horse Artillery, and Adjutancy of a battalion of Foot.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 2.

Colonel Macleane has resigned the appointment of Resident of Tanjore, and been succeeded by Capt. A. Douglas; thus the orders said to have been received from home to reinstate Capt. Douglas in his former appointment of Resident of Tanjore, have been carried into effect. Col. Macleane has been appointed pro tem. Resident at the Court of His Highness the Raja of Travancore. Major-General Fraser being appointed to other duty.—Madras Examiner, Oct. 7.

THE FROST. BY H. F. GOULD.

The Frost look'd forth one still, clear night,
And whisper'd, "Now I shall be out of sight;
So through the valley, and over the height,
In silence I'll take my way.
I will not go on like that blustering train,
The wind and the snow, the hail and the rain,
Who make so much bustle and noise in vain,
But I'll be as busy as they."

Then he flew to the mountain, and powder'd its crest;
He lit on the trees, and their boughs he drest
In diamond beads; and over the breast
Of the quivering lake he spread
A coat of mail, that it need not fear
The downward point of many a spear,
That he hung on his margin, far and near,
Where a rock could rear its head.

He went to the windows of those who slept,
And over each pane like a fairy crept;
Wherever he breathed, wherever he stepp'd,
By the light of the morn were seen
Most beautiful things: there were flowers and trees,
There were beasts of birds and swarms of bees;
There were cities with temples and towers, and these,
All pictured in silver sheen!

But he did one thing that was hardly fair—
He peep'd in the cupboard, and finding there
That all had forgotten for him to prepare,
"Now, Jack to set them a-thinking,
I'll bite this basket of fruit," said he;
"This comfy pitcher I'll burst in three,
And the glass of water they've left for me
Shall 'chick!' to tell them I'm drinking!"

Assist.-Surgeon Gallwey has just delivered a couple of popular lectures in Woolwich garrison, on the nature of the human body, and on the physiology of vision. The first lecture was delivered on Thursday the 12th, the second on Saturday the 21st. The theatre in which they were given was on both occasions crowded with a large and fashionable assemblage of the officers and their families, with many of the families from the surrounding. Mr. Gallwey delivered these lectures in a masterly style, which contained, with themselves, a degree of interest, which the public, by their deep attention and approbation, seemed fully sensible of.

Christmas Presents and New Year's Gifts.—The season having arrived, wherein, by exchange of presents, we confirm the stability of friendship, all classes of the community, who would successfully cultivate regard by acceptable offerings, will avail themselves of Rowlands's Macassar Oil and Rowland's Kalydor—each of infallible attributes. In creating and sustaining luxuriant silken tresses, the Macassar Oil is highly appreciated by rank and fashion, and patronized by all the Sovereigns of Europe; and Rowland's Kalydor is a preparation of unparalleled efficacy in purifying the skin, protecting it from the baneful effects of inclement weather, and characterising the complexion with transcendant brilliancy. No presents can be more recommendatory, or also now in more general use.

AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR-DYE.—Sole Proprietors, W. DAY and Co., 95, Gracechurch-street.—The extreme unsightliness of red, gray, or nearly white hair has been frequently felt as an irremediable inconvenience, for though numerous dyes are extant, professing to combine every required quality, it is well known that they almost invariably give immense trouble in the application. This imperfection is entirely obviated in the Circassian Dye, prepared only by W. Day and Co., Italian Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch-street, London, and sold by them in bottles of 5s., 10s., and 21s. each. Hannay, Oxford-street; and Bentley, High Holborn. All without the signature of Agid Hassan, and W. Day and Co., are counterfeit.

THE ELECTRICAL HAIR GLOVE, RENOVATORS, so successfully employed in all cases of Gout, Rheumatism, and Lumbago, and for shampooing, now so generally recommended by the heads of the Faculty, are manufactured under Colonel Rolt's instructions, after thirty years' experience, by Mr. Dinneford,
From the United Service Journal for April, 1829.
"We are enabled by personal experience to add our hearty recommendation of the "Renovators" to our gallant friend's lively and philanthropic exhortations for their use. We cannot say that we have practised the variety of frisky evolutions which he enjoins, but we are satisfied from the simple process of friction, of the benefits to be derived from the regular application of these we were going to say, electrical, gloves to the skin. In hospitals, and on board-ship, they must, we conceive, prove particularly useful. In fine, to judge by their inventor's confidence in their virtue, backed by the effects of which he produces testimony, we anticipate the same results from their general employment as we once saw advertised above a barber's shop near Beauvais, in France, viz.—'Ici on rajeunit les vieux, et embellit les jeunes.' Ed."
CAUTION.—To prevent disappointment, purchasers must be particular to ask for Colonel Rolt's Hair Glove Renovators, the only ones with the material possessing the "electrical quality," (derived from a peculiar process in preparing the hair) described by the Editor of the United Service Journal. Each pair should be sealed, have a prospectus enclosed, and signed
"CHARLES DINNEFORD,
"Chemist to Her Majesty the Queen Dowager,
"and His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge."

TO MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, SPORTSMEN, Gentlemen Hunting, Riding, Walking, suffering from Disease, Relaxation, Local Debility, &c.—WRAY'S IMPROVED SUSPENSORY BANDAGES, of superior workmanship, and made of the best materials; approved of and recommended by the late Mr. Abernethy for their excellent adaptation, as being superior to any hitherto used; and the extreme ease and comfort with which they are worn, together with the exceedingly low price at which they are charged, must ever ensure their general employment. Best jean, 4s. 6d.; knitted or wove silk, 3s. 6d.; ditto, with fronts, 3s. 6d.; India dimity, with real China net silk purses and elastic springs, 7s. 6d. May be had direct from the inventor, at 118, Holborn-hill, and 9, Agar-street, Strand. Steel spring trusses for hernia, properly adapted, single 7s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., double 15s. and 21s. each. Laced stockings and bandages for varicose veins. Ladies' umbilical belts, bandages, &c., for all surgical purposes.

MARSALA.—Woodhouse's Marsala, Great Imperial, 24s. per doz.; Marsala, old and crusted, 28s.; Port, four years in bottle, 24s. to 36s.; Ports of the highest class, old in bottle, 42s.; dinner Sherry, 21s. to 30s.; superior Sherry, pale or brown, 36s.; Sherries of very high character, 42s.
NOBLE and Co., Foreign Wine Merchants, 7, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square.

CHAMOIS LEATHER SHEETS, WAISTCOATS, &c., with every Article of Under Clothing, Merino and Lambs' Wool Waistcoats and Drawers, real Shetland and Scotch Hose and Half-Hose, brown Cotton with worked instep of Kid and Cashmere Gloves of the best make, Welsh and Saxony Flannels, Gentleman's Morning Gowns suited for the season. Every article is warranted to give satisfaction both in price and quality. Chamois Leather Sheets to be had only at CASTLE'S, 109, Oxford-street, four doors east of Regent-circus.—N.B. Many years with the late Mr. Longmate, of Regent-street.—Established 1812.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, produced by S. HIGGINSON, 1825, is now so well established as the Bouilli, Curries, and only remains to caution the public against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen is made to Venders. It is solely to excuse, as a proper allowance Welbeck-street; Fortnum and London by S. Higgins, Mrs. Rowls, Morel, Piccadilly; Veller, Strand;—Reilly and son, and Lazenby, Market-street; and most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom;—and

Also, HIGGINS'S SAUCE for HASH &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, or any other Sauce.

J. DELCROIX AND CO.,
Perfumers to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, &c. &c.,
155, NEW BOND-STREET, (opposite Stevens's Hotel.)

THE great superiority of J. DELCROIX and CO.'S PERFUMERY has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.—
BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared specially for Her Majesty.
HIS LATE MAJESTY'S (GEORGE IV.'S) PERFUME BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.
ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.
DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.
POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.
VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the Skin.
DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the Hair, &c.
PATE D'AMANDE à LA REINE, and PATE AU MAIS, justly esteemed for their healing and softening qualities.
The TRUE OPIATE of the Precessimadies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.
To Ladies.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hair.
DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.
To Gentlemen.—For the comfort of easy shaving, J. D. and Co., can with every confidence recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.
ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.
MECCA, CAMPHOR, and other FANCY SOAPS.
Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Spanish Atiquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the best description.
†‡† J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that particular attention be paid to the address upon their labels, No. 155, NEW BOND-STREET, none others being genuine; and they beg to suggest that the Nobility and Gentry will do well to return the articles seized upon them by other perfumers as the genuine productions of their long-established and highly-celebrated Perfumery Warehouse, 155, NEW BOND-STREET.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.
THE Efficacy of the INVALUABLE MEDICINE is attested by Testimonials
From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College.
"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks' Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the unpleasant effects of Copaiba." "Joseph Henry Green.
"46, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, April 14, 1835."
From Granby B. Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c.
"Mr. Granby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.
"New-street, April 13, 1835."
And from others of high and deserved repute in the Medical Profession as the most certain, safe, and speedy cure for Urethral Discharges, Gonorrhœas, Gleets, Spasmodic Stricture, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland.
Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 99, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.
CAUTION.—None is genuine unless "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," is engraved on the Government Stamp affixed to each Bottle.

The objects of this Institution are to grant adequate rates of Annuity to parties disposed to invest Capital in this manner, and to offer to others the means of obtaining a provision, at an advanced age, on fair and reasonable terms.

Not being restricted in regard to the investment of its capital, like the Government Office, which can only grant Annuities in exchange for transfers of Stock, and not being encumbered with the heavy responsibilities of Life Offices, on account of the immense sums invested by them, the "City of London" Company is enabled to present to the Public a much more equitable Scale of Rates than can be offered by either of those Establishments. This may be at once seen by reference to the printed Tables, which, with every requisite information, may be obtained by application at the Office.

By order of the Board of Directors,
William Barry, Secretary.

PROFITABLE SPECULATION.

THE MODEL OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO, which has been visited by nearly 160,000 Persons during the last 12 months, at the Admission price of One Shilling each, is now
FOR SALE BY PRIVATE CONTRACT;
the pursuits and professional duties of the Proprietor not admitting of his bestowing the attention required for the exhibition thereof in the provincial towns of Great Britain, throughout the Continent, and the United States of America, whence numerous pressing applications for its transmission and exhibition have been received, and where it would undoubtedly meet with the same unparalleled success which has attended its exhibition in London.

Particulars and Terms to be known by applying to Mr. Thomas at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, where the Model continues to be Exhibited as heretofore, from Ten in the Morning until Nine in the Evening.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,
FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,
originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dieterichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of the most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain and inconvenience, as the following will prove:—"Sheffield, Oct. 11, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I wrote last to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-st., Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, Sir, yours truly, "T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous; it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 68, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, & Chandler 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.
